Speaking for good.—A good man will desire to speak for the profit of others. He who knows God's truth will long to declare it to others. So great a treasure is not to be hidden. For Christ's sake and for the world's sake it must be made known far and wide. The Christian should feel that a serious obligation is upon him to lead others to share in those privileges of the gospel which all need, and which are designed for all. St. Paul felt an awful necessity laid on him, and exclaimed, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel!" (1 Cor. ix. 16). The lepers of Samaria felt they would be guilty of a great sin if they feasted in the camp of the Syrians, and did not let the starving city know that there was abundance of good outside the gates (2 Kings vii. 9). But not only is it a duty to preach Christ; it is a great joy. The body may be wearied by the effort, but the soul will be refreshed. There is a cheering and invigorating influence in making truth known; this is greatest when the work is to bring the knowledge of God's love in Christ to sorrowing men and women. — Pulp. Com.

"Christiansarelike the several flowers in a garden, that have on each of them the dew of heaven, which being shaken with the wind, they let fall at each other's roots, whereby they are jointly nourished, and become nourishers of each other."—Bunyan.

Not suppression, but expression, is the true life.—Phillips Brooks.

21, 22. (21) accept, etc., "he fears the anger of God more than the censure of men, the pain of being untrue more than the shame of rebuke."—Cox (22) flattering titles, wasting his time in the mere formalities of speech. would soon, he claims a Divine impulse to utter his message, and declares he has the feelings of a prophet.

but he will speak without partiality

Accepting persons (vs. 21).—The Hebrew word here used signifies to surname, or more properly to call a person by a name which does not strictly belong to him, and that generally in compliment or flattery. Mr. Scott on this passage informs us from Pococke, that "the Arabs make court to their superiors by carefully avoiding to address them by their proper names, instead of which they salute them with some title or epithet expressive of respect."—Burder.—The pope and his ambassador.—It is related of Pope Clement the XIV. (Ganganelli), that when he ascended the papal chair, the ambassadors of the several states represented at his court waited on him with their congratulations. When they were introduced, and bowed, he returned the compliment by bowing also; on which the master of the ceremonies told his highness that he should not have returned their salute. "O, I beg your pardon," said the good pontiff, "I have not been Pope long enough to forget good manners."—Cheever.

"Let us, then, be what we are, and speak what we think, and in all things keep ourselves loyal to truth, and the sacred professions of friendship."—Longfellow.

"Discretion of speech is more than eloquence; and to speak agreeably to him with whom we deal, is more than to speak in good words, or in good order."—Bacon.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-THIRD.

Elihu continued

he addresses Job

1—3. (1) Job, I pray thee, his words are directly addressed to Job, as an answer to his statements and inquiries. (2) open my mouth, a phrase always denoting careful, deliberate utterances. in my month, or palate,[a] which tastes. Elihu speaks with discrimination, after trying or tasting his words. (3) and my lips, etc., R. V., "And that which my lips know they shall speak sincerely." "Not distorting the truth through passion, as the friends had done." 1 Thes. ii. 3, 4.

Power of speech—"This day while I write (March 29, 1889) there is one tongue in Europe in a poor, sick mouth, whose sweet utterances are keeping Europe in Easter peace. A hundred words from that tongue would, in a hundred hours, change the values of all properties in Christendom, and in a hundred days array millions of human beings in hostility, and change the face of affairs in all the continents and islands of the world.— Deems. The proverb, "Speech is silver, but silence is gold," is sometimes true; but there are often cases where speech is gold, and silence is death. We should not commit the folly of the man who burned down his barn to get rid of the rats. We are to bridle our tongues, not put them in chains; convert them, and guide them, not destroy them. It is said that Pythagoras enjoined five years of preliminary silence on his pupils. Was it wise? — Peloubet.

[a] "The palate represents to the

Heb. the judgment of a sound mind, which examines a thought impartially and thoroughly before it allows it to pass the tongue." —Spk. Com.

he professes to be under Divine instruction

4, 5. (4) made me,[a] "the appeal is to common reason (ch. xxxiv. 2, 3), which is a divine illumination, but in his animated zeal for God against the charges of Job Elihu feels that this spirit of God is within him in a powerful degree and gives him a higher wisdom than ordinary." —Cam. Bib. (5) in order, array thyself before me, defend thyself as at a judgment seat.

Influence of teachers. — A certain philosopher was always talking very much to his friends about the garden in which he was in the habit of walking, and where he carried on his studies. At length one of them came to see him, and he found this extraordinary garden was a patch of ground about twice the size of the floor of his own room. "What!" said he, "is this your garden? It's not very broad." "No," said the philosopher, "it's not very broad; but it's a wondrous height!" And so I would say to you, Sunday-school teachers: your work in your class is not a very large one; but it's a wondrous height. It goes up to heaven; to conceive of it aright, it goes right out to eternity. — Scottish S. S. T. Mag.

[a] "In the exalted consciousness of having been originated by the Spirit of God, and being endowed with life from the inbreathed breath of the Almighty, Elihu stands invincible before Job."—Delitzsch.

and yet he will speak as a fellow-man

6, 7. (6) in God's stead, R. V., "I am toward God even as thou art."[b] I am a man like yourself. You need not fear to plead your cause before me to the utmost, though I am divinely inspired. formed . . clay, nipped from the clay, as when the potter nips off a piece of the clay to make a vessel. Elihu's idea is that instead of meeting Job's appeal by manifestations of terror,[c] God has sent him His message by a fellow-man.[d] (7) my terror, is only that of a fellow-mortal. I cannot terrify you as God would. Comp. vii. 14; ix. 34. hand, "pressure."

Need of sympathy. — There is a sort of sanctimonious spirituality which ignores humanity. This is disgusting to men, and it is the cause of much popular aversion to religion. We cannot help our fellow-men till we recollect we are human like them — frail, fallible, mortal; nay, sinful, fallen, ourselves needing a Saviour. Brotherly sympathy is the first essential for helpful religious influence. — Pul. Com.— Faithful friends. — "To-day," says Mr. Whitefield in the journal of his first voyage to Georgia, "Colonel C. came to dine with us; and in the midst of our meal, we were entertained with a most agreeable sight. It was a shark, about the length of a man, which followed our ship, attended with five smaller fishes called pilot-fish, much like our mackerel, but larger. These I am told, always keep the shark company; and, what is more surprising, though the shark is so ravenous a creature, yet let it be never so hungry, it will not touch one of them. Nor are they less faithful to him; for, as I am informed, if the shark is hooked, very often these little creatures will cleave close to his fins, and are often taken up with him." Go to the pilot-fish, thou that forsakest a friend in adversity, consider his ways and be ashamed. — Whitecross.

[b] LXX. "From clay am I formed as well as thou, and we are formed from the same."

[c] Job xiii. 21.

[d] He. iv. 15.

"Nature is not like a fossil that shows in its dead lineaments the traces of an old-world life; she is a mirror of the Divine activity." — Pul. Com.

"The end of wisdom is consultation and deliberation."—Demosthenes.

he says he has heard Job's self-vindication

8—11. (8) Surely, etc., Elihu expresses the utmost astonishment at what he had heard Job say, but he is sure that he heard distinctly.[e] (9) clean, ch. ix. 17, 21, 30.[f] (10) occasions against me, treats me as an enemy.[g] (11) stocks, ch. xiii. 27.

The unchangeableness of God. — God's unchangeableness is not that of a statue, which always wears the same countenance; nor of a cold, hard heart, which has no variation of emotion, but feels the same toward good and bad alike. His is the unchangeableness which belongs to the spirit, the soul, — with infinite variety of emotions and of actions, but with the same character, the same principles, the same knowledge, the same plans, the same love, forever unchangeable; and toward the same persons in the same circumstances, always acting and feeling the same. To men on earth the sun seems constantly changing. Sometimes it is in the east, sometimes in the west; sometimes at the horizon, again at the zenith; it makes each day of the year a different course through the sky; now it is high noon, and now it is midnight; now eclipsed, and now clouded. But what is it that changes? The earth changes, the seasons change, the clouds change, but the sun itself is the same through all these changes. So men change, their character changes, their actions change, their needs change, and hence their relations to God change; but God is always the same, always loves, always rewards faithfulness and punishes iniquity. He is the same in knowledge, for He knows all that is to be known. He is the same in His purposes and plans, and all His promises are sure, and just as good to-day as when first uttered, because they were made in all knowledge and all wisdom, and He has all power to execute them. — Peloubet.

[e] "I do not venture to charge thee on hearsay evidence or on suspicion, but on thine own words, spoken publicly."—Wordsworth.

[f] See also Job x. 7; xi. 4; xiii. 23; xvi. 17; xxiii. 10-13; xxvii. 6; xxix. 14.

[g] See Job. vii. 12, 20; xiii. 24, 27;

12, 13. (12) R. V., "Behold, I will answer thee, in this thou art not just; for God is greater than man." not just,[a] in thus regarding God's treatment of you. greater than man, i. e., "the moral loftiness of God's nature makes it impossible that He should act in the arbitrary, hostile manner charged against Him by Job (comp. xxxvi. 5)."— Cam. Bib. (13) strive, desire to argue the matter of His dealings with you.[b] giveth . . matters,[c] Job was fretted because God did not explain His dealings. Enough for man to know it is God who does it.

God's equity. — God is true and righteous and holy; He is perfect in His equity and in His standards. Instead of turning away from the judgment of God as a blemish on his character we ought to rejoice in it as another aspect of his benevolence. We must have in God the blooming valley full of beautiful flowers and with the purling streams of grace, and also the dark, frowning crags of Divine judgment, the very intensity of whose shadow implies an intensity of glory, for you never can get shadows without light. Prostrate yourself before an engine, and the very qualities which make it a blessing make it an engine of destruction. God moves on a track of absolute and perfect equity and holiness, and the same qualities that insure that you would be borne forward into the eternal ages if connected with God make it sure that you would be ground to powder if you place yourself before His wheels of judgment. — A. T. Pierson.

14. once,[d] in fact God does reveal His will not once, or in one way only, but twice, in many ways, — three of which are now to be named. perceiveth it not, and this is true even though men — you even — do not perceive it.

The philosophy and use of dreams. — I. Their philosophy. 1. What originates the dream? often the state of the body; 2. Why do thoughts take such grotesque forms in dreams? the mind in sleep is left uncontrolled by the will. II. Their uses. 1. They serve to throw some light on our spiritual constitution; 2. They are sometimes the organs of Divine communication. — Thomas.

God's voice. — Joseph's different dreams reiterated the same message (Gen. xxxvii. 9). Prophet followed prophet with warning and promise for Israel. The new Christian voice followed the old Jewish voice. God is speaking now, sending one message after another in His providence. We have all heard from God more than once. His was the voice that instilled the first eager desires for goodness in childhood, and His the voice that pleaded amid the passionate enthusiasms of youth. It has sounded in our ears repeatedly among the varied scenes of life, warning against sin and calling to Christian service. It is repeated whenever the Bible is read, whenever Divine truth is preached, whenever conscience is aroused. — Pul. Com. — The purpose of the Divine voices. — They are to guide and save. "To withdraw from his purpose," when that purpose is evil or dangerous. "To hide pride from man," i. e. to save man from his pride. Thus the voices are warning and deterrent They remind us of the "demon" of Socrates, which, he said, told him when he was not to do something, but did not prompt him to do anything. We know that God inspires for action, that heavenly voices summon to toil and battle. Yet perhaps we may perceive that the inner voice is more often a restraining than a stimulating voice. For the stimulus we look to the living Christ. Yet the restraint is sent in mercy. God warns, that He may save. — W. F. Adeney.

15—17. (15) dream,[e] one of the earliest modes of Div. communication. slumberings, the lighter sleep with which dreams are usually associated.

he asserts that Job is unreasonable

a Je. ii. 35.

b Job. xiii. 3; xvi. 21; xxiii. 3-7.

c Heb. "answereth not," to accept Job's challenge.

"Perhaps there is in wisdom, gentle wisdom, that knows our frailties, therefore can forgive, some healing comfort for a guilty mind, some power to charm it into peace again, and bid it smile anew with right affection." — Thomson.

that God has various modes of speaking d Ps. lxii. 11; Pr. i. 24.

"Souls are made sweet not by taking the acid fluids out, but by putting something in— a great Love, a new Love, a new Spirit, the Spirit of Christ" — Drummond

"Revelation never volunteers anything that man could discover for himself — on the principle, probably, that it is only when he is capable of discovering it that he is capable of appreciating it." — Drummond.

as by means of dreams

e Comp. Job. iv. 12-17.

xiv. 16, 17; xvi. 9; xix. 11; xxx. 21; xxxi. 4, 25, 26.

"There is an order of mortals on the earth who do become old in their youth, and die ere middle age." — Byron.

(16) sealeth their instruction, i. e. "the instruction is that communicated when the ear is opened, and a revelation given; and 'to seal' it is to confirm it and give it abiding efficacy. This is done partly by the impressive circumstances and manner of the dream." — Cam. Bib. (17) withdraw,[a] etc., this is quite a different explanation of suffering from that the friends had given, or Job had reached. Elihu says God teaches that it bears relation to moral training and culture. hide pride, "a peculiar expression for wearying a man of his pride, making him sick of the self-confidence by which he has so often been betrayed." — Cox.

Influence of a dream. — "A poor man," says the late Rev. Thomas Scott, "most dangerously ill, of whose religious state I entertained some hopes, seemed to me in the agonies of death. I sat by his bed for a considerable time, expecting to see him expire; but at length he awoke as from sleep and noticed me. I said, 'You are extremely ill.' He replied, 'Yes; but I shall not die this time.' I asked the ground of this extraordinary confidence, saying that I was persuaded he would not recover. To this he answered, 'I have just dreamed that you, with a very venerable-looking person, came to me; he asked you what you thought of me. What kind of tree is it? Is there any fruit? You said, No, but there are blossoms. Well, then, he said, I will spare it a little longer.' All reliance upon such a dream I should, in other circumstances, have scouted as enthusiasm and presumption; but it so exactly met my ideas as to the man's state of mind, which, however, I had never communicated to him, and the event, much beyond all expectation, so answered his confidence, by his recovery, that I could not but think there was something peculiar. On his recovery, this man for a time went on very well; but afterwards he gave up all attention to religion, and became very wicked; and when I reminded him of what has been now related, he treated the whole with indifference, not to say with profane contempt. But I have since learned, from very good authority, that, after I left that part of the country, he was again brought under deep conviction of sin; recollected and dolefully bemoaned his conduct towards me, and with respect to his dream, and became a decidedly religious character." — Whitecross.

a Comp. cases of midnight visions withdrawing men from their purposes, as Ge. xx. 3; xxi. 24.

"Tartini, a distinguished violin player, is said to have composed his 'Devil's Sonata' under the inspiration of a dream, in which the devil appeared to him and invited him to a trial of skill upon his own instrument, which he accepted, and awoke with the music of the sonata so vividly impressed upon his mind that he had no difficulty in committing it to paper."

and by afflictions

18—20. (18) soul,[b] i. e. "he keeps him from committing any deadly sin which would have brought destruction." (19) chastened,[c] this is another voice of God. In this thought of the discipline of pain Elihu far surpasses any conception of the friends. multitude, etc., R. V., "And with continued strife in his bones," i. e. constant pain as in a contest. (20) dainty meat, such as he specially loved. By reason of sickness it had become nauseous.

Various views of afflictions. — No man is more unhappy than the man who is never in adversity. In other words, the greatest affliction in life is never to be afflicted. "If my property had not perished," says an ancient philosopher, "I should have perished." Many of the servants of God have been enriched for eternity by being made poor for a time. Our bodies need physic; our trees need pruning; our metals need the furnace; and our minds need the discipline of affliction. Afflictions are blessings to us, when we can bless God for afflictions. Sanctified afflictions are spiritual promotions. Under the equitable Master whom we serve, we do not suffer a single affliction that hath not for its foundation either His justice, which corrects us for our sins, or His mercy, which would prevent the faults into which we are liable to fall. There is not one affliction, therefore, which is not either a just chastisement or a merciful preservation.

b Ps. xxx. 3.

c De. viii. 5; Ps. xciv. 12; cxiv. 67, 71; 1 Co. xi. 32; He. xii. 5-11.

Voltaire writes in review of a life of the world, without religion, "I wish I had never been born." The holy Halyburton on his death-bed said, "I long for God's salvation; I bless His name. I have found Him, and die rejoicing in Him, O blessed be God that ever I was born."

which may seem in their severity to threaten life

21, 22. (21) consumed away, this expression shows that Elihu was taking such a case of extreme suffering as was that of Job. "Such illness gives the sufferer time to review his life and conduct and consider his errors." cannot be seen, too painful a sight for any to look at. (22) near unto the grave, sickness may gain such a hold that life is despaired of. destroyers,[d] death and his attendants and precursors, the pangs preceding dissolution.

Faith in affliction. — We could take you to many scenes that would show the infinite profitableness of faith in God. We should take you to houses that have been desolated by misfortune, and show you the profitableness of religion in the sweet patience which it has wrought in sad hearts; we should take you to the house of affliction, where youth has been turned into old age by long-continued pain, and show how the fire has left the gold and only consumed the dross; we should take you to the chamber "where the good d "Angels of death commissioned by God to end man's life. (2 Sa. xxiv. 16; Ps. lxxviii. 49.) Or the death-pains personified."—Fausset.

The obedience that leads to the furman meets his fate," and as he smiles at the last enemy, and passes upward to the quiet and holy place, calm, fearless, exultant, we should say, "Behold the profit which comes of knowing and loving the Saviour of the world." — Peop. Bib.

Divinity taught by affliction. — A minister was recovering from a dangerous illness, when one of his friends addressed him thus: "Sir, though God seems to be bringing you up from the gates of death, yet it will be a long time before you will sufficiently retrieve your strength, and regain vigor enough of mind to preach as usual." The good man answered, "You are mistaken, my friend; for this six weeks' illness has taught me more divinity than all my past studies and all my ten years' ministry put together."

nace of fire will find in the end that it is a bed of roses.

If you would be miserable, look within. If you would be distracted, look around. If you would be happy, look up.

23, 24. (23) messenger, R. V., "an angel;" any man is so called "who can show his fellows what is right and fair and good." — Cox. Elihu's primary reference is to himself as Divinely sent to explain God's ways with Job. interpreter,[a] one able to explain the meaning of the affliction, and the way of improving it. among a thousand, one of the many messengers and influences God uses for the good of men. uprightness, R. V., "what is right for him." (24) Then he, God is gracious. God, not the angel, is the speaker in the rest of the verse. God commands that he be delivered from his affliction and saved from death. ransom, "may be the sinner's repentance and return to rectitude, or possibly the words may mean nothing more than that God is pleased of His goodness to hold the sinner as ransomed and delivered from the consequences of his sin." — Cam. Bib.

the Divine ransom

Comp. Hag. i. 13; Mal. ii. 7; Re. i. 20.

The benefit of visiting the sick. — I. The office of those who visit the sick. It is to show the righteousness of God — 1. In punishing sin; 2. In His way of pardoning sin. II. The benefit arising from the faithful discharge of this office. 1. Even to the bodies of men; 2. More especially to their soul. Reflections: — (1) How honorable an office is that of a visitor to the sick; (2) How blind are they who are averse to having such pious instructors introduced to their sick and dying friends. — C. Simeon.

[a] Ge. xlii. 22; 2 Chr. xxxii. 31, marg.; Isa. xliii. 27.

Theory of atonement. — Christ did not die to make God willing to save, — He was more than willing, — but to enable God to be righteous in His forgiveness and salvation, so that His very forgiveness should not increase unrighteousness both in the one forgiven and in the world. This a real problem and cannot be ignored. The thoughtful mind will not be satisfied till it can see some way in which the sacrifice of Christ might accomplish this end. I have never yet seen anything that so well suggests the truth as the oft-repeated story of Zeleucus, the king of the Locri. He enacted a law against adultery, the penalty of which was the putting out of both the eyes. The first one found guilty was the king's own son. But, out of love to his son, the king had one of his own eyes put out, and one of his son's. Thus he saved his son from blindness, but at the same time so honored his law that no one would imagine they could break it with impunity. It touched the heart of the son to see what his father had suffered for him, and led him to repentance and a new life. So the sufferings of a divine Saviour so express God's righteous hatred of sin, and also of His righteous love for man, that forgiving men in this way increases the righteousness of the world. — Peloubet.

The superintendent of the Inebriate Asylum at Binghamton, N. Y., says: — "No man ever has gone from this asylum cured of his inebriety unless there was some one — a sister, a mother, a wife, a maiden — who prayed for him, hoped for him, wept for him, at home." The great redemptive power in life is the power of a suffering heart.

25, 26. (25) flesh, mentioned bec. Job's was a disease of the skin and flesh. a child's, or childhood.[b] days . . youth, "by this various Divine teaching, man, if he profit by it, is made a new creature; he is restored to health both of body and soul; his youth is renewed."—Cox. (26) favorable, Job had complained that he prayed in vain.[c] see . . joy, rejoice in the Div. favor and fellowship; shall not even seem to be under a frown. his righteousness, deal with him according to his conduct.

the renewal of youth

[b] Comp. Naaman, 2 Ki. v. 10-14; see also Jno. iii. 3-7.

[c] Job xxiii. 3, 8, 9.

Strength of man. — The greatest strength of man comes from using the powers of God. The difference between the power of animals and of civilized men lies chiefly in the fact that man uses the powers of nature. Weak in himself, he is strong in God. By using the powers around him one man can do the work of a thousand and can exert the strength of a million men. It is the same with the power of man in spiritual things. Only in using God's spiritual powers, His wisdom, His providence, that makes even the wrath of men to praise Him. His Holy Spirit convincing, converting, inspiring, His power that compels even the "stars in their courses" to fight for His children — — only thus can man be made strong. — Peloubet. Studying the laws of health.

"The Master's work may make weary feet, but it leaves the spirit glad."

"Auspicious health appear'd on zephyr's wing; she seem'd a cherub most divinely bright, more soft than air, than blushing morning light. Hail! blooming goddess! thou propitious power, whose blessings next to life implore; with so much lustre your bright looks endear, that cottages are courts when these appear. Mankind, as you vouchsafe to smile or frown, finds ease in chains or anguish in a crown."—Garth.

— The written Bible is not the only volume that God has given us. There are two Bibles. One is a printed book, and the other is nature. And the laws of God in nature are as much laws as those in the printed book. You are as much bound to find out and obey the former as the latter. The pains and penalties of violation are just as certain in the one case as in the other. And if God has imposed upon you the duty of educating a child for another world, and if that education is associated with the child's bodily condition, you are bound to know how to bring the child up healthily. Much attention should be given by parents to this subject, for many of the infelicities of children spring from their physical state. Many and many a child has been spoiled by reason of wrong training in this regard. The life of many a child has been a fruitless endeavor to overcome the mischiefs done to his health through the ignorance of parents.—H. W. Beecher.

God waits for human penitence

27—30. (27) He, R. V., "He singeth before men and saith," i. e. the restored penitent. profited me not, lit. "he has not requited me according to my deserts."[a] (28) will deliver, R. V., "He hath redeemed my soul," this is a part of the song. his life, R. V., "my life." see the light, the light of life, for he is redeemed from the darkness of the pit. (29) oftentimes, R. V., "Twice, yea thrice." (30) his soul,[b] in love and not in anger. to be enlightened, this is God's purpose in afflicting men; He aims at enlightening their understandings, and so enabling them to comprehend His ways, and clearly see the path which it is their true wisdom to walk in.— Rawlinson.

God waiting to discover repentance, and to accept the penitent (vs. 27).— I. The first truth that meets us in these words is this, that God's eye is fixed upon every individual in the family of man. II. That for which God especially looks upon men is to discover the full confession of sin. True contrition includes — 1. An acknowledgment of sin's essential guilt; 2. It will explicitly confess the fact of sin; 3. It will confess its disappointing and deceptive folly. Learn — (1) To view confession of sin as a duty of the first importance; (2) That each one has reason to make the confession of sin in the text his own.— R. Eden.

Delayed repentance (vs. 27).— "Ah! Mr. Hervey," said a dying man, "the day in which I ought to have worked is over, and now I see a horrible night approaching, bringing with it the blackness of darkness forever. Woe is me! When God called I refused. Now I am in sore anguish, and yet this is but the beginning of sorrows. I shall be destroyed with an everlasting destruction. The source of redemption.— God himself brings about the new, happy condition of the restored penitent. He could not restore himself; no creature in the universe could give him what he needs. For the evil was death, and the requirement was a gift of life. Only He who first created life, and whoever lives in all His creatures, can renew life. Regeneration implies a Divine energy. Those forms of religion which are satisfied with man as he is, may dispense with any very marked activity on God's side, in religion; but when the ruin of man is acknowledged, the chief element in religion must be, not man's devotion, but God's salvation. Now, this is what we see in the Bible. There man appears in his sinfulness and helplessness, utterly unfit for heaven, or even for earthly life in its beauty and fruitfulness, and there God is seen as the mighty Deliverer, coming to the rescue of His helpless child.— Pul. Com. Repentance. — There is a popular impression abroad, that repentance is simple sorrow for sin. A man may be sorry for sin, simply because of the consequences of sin which he has experienced, or because of the consequences which some other person whom he loves may have experienced; and yet he may not be so sorry for sin but that as soon as those consequences are removed, or even before, he will commit that very same sin again and with delight. Pharaoh was sorry for sin, yes, bitterly sorry for disobeying God, every time one of those dreadful plagues came down upon him and his household and nation: and yet the moment the plague was removed, Pharoah was the same as before and his heart was as hard against God as it had ever been. Whatever repentance may be, it is not simply sorrow for sin. — Jas. M. Gray.

[a] "It has not been recompensed to me according to my deserts, favor instead of right is come upon me."—Delitzsch.

[b] Is xxxviii. 17; Ps. lvi. 13.

"Try what repentance can — what can it not? Yet what can it, when one cannot repent? O wretched state! O bosom, black as death! O limèd soul; that, struggling to be free, art more engaged. Help, angels, make assay! Bow stubborn knees! and, heart, with strings of steel, be soft as sinews of the new-born babe; all may be well!"—Shakespeare.

"Upon our removal hence, there will be no place for repentance, nor any possibility of returning unto God by penitence. In this life, or nowhere, must be laid the hope of eternal life; here, or nowhere, must our adoration of the true God, and the fruits of our faith, secure to us an interest in the kingdom of heaven."—Tertullian.

Elihu professes to wish to justify Job

31—33. (31) Mark well, this expression indicates a division in the speech: a break, which may afford Job an opportunity of reply. hold thy peace, "here the effect of Elihu's speech on Job is indirectly portrayed. He may have stirred, or lifted a hand, or opened his lips, as if about to reply, — but checked himself."— Cox. (32) desire to justify thee,[c] do thee justice; do not therefore misconstrue my words. (33) teach thee, by yet further explanations. wisdom,[a] the true view of the character and dealings of God: and the true submission to Him.

[c] "Job had sought to justify himself

Repentance not censurable. — If a man has murdered his friend and benefactor, and if, when brought to repentance, we find him laboring under the heaviest sorrow, it is not his repentance that we condemn, but the crime which brought this distress upon him. In like manner the griefs of the penitent are to be charged, not to the account of religion, as so many drawbacks from its felicity, but to the account of sin, as so many additions to the dreadful catalogue of its mischiefs, and pains, and plagues. In repentance itself, considered as contrition for sin and hatred to it, arising from a timely discovery of our guilt and danger, there is no ground for pain, but much for gratitude and satisfaction. It never needeth to be repented of. — Bunting. Repentance. — He who would be most like Christ must pay the cost. As God reckons jewelry, there is no gem that shines with more brilliancy than the tear of true penitence; yet God only knoweth what heart-pressure and what crushing of wilful pride may have been necessary to force the tear to the cheek of a stubborn sinner.— Theodore L. Cuyler. Death-bed repentance. — Not long since, a Congregational preacher, who had been forty-one years in the ministry, said: "I have never in all my experience as a pastor, known of a single instance in which a repentance on what was supposed to be a death-bed proved to be of any value whatever after the person recovered." This was strong language. We involuntarily exclaimed, "Have you known many such cases?" "More than I dare remember." "And as many more, perhaps, where the person died." "Yes, fully as many more." "Then did not the bitter failure of these death-bed repentances to bear the tests of time shake your confidence in their value under the tests of eternity?" "It did — it does," said the clergyman, with tears in his eyes. The conversation made a deep impression on our mind. It was strong evidence, from a quarter in which we least looked for it, of the utter paltriness and insufficiency of fear as a motive when brought to bear upon decisions in spiritual things.— S. S. Messenger.

[a] Ro. x. 3; Phil. iii. 7–9.

[a] 1 Co. i. 30.

"While music flows around,
Perfumes, and oils, and wine, and wanton hours;
Amid the roses fierce repentances rears
Her snaky crest; a quick-returning pang Shoots through the conscious heart."
—Thomson.

"'Tis ever thus with noble minds, if chance they slide to folly; remorse stings deeper, and relentless conscience pours more of gall into the bitter cup of their severe repentance."— Mason.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FOURTH.

1—3. (1) Furthermore, Elihu at once renewed his address, as Job showed no disposition to make a reply.[b] (2) ye wise men, not simply Job and his friends, but those in the circle of spectators and listeners, which, as is assumed, has assembled round the disputants.[c] have knowledge, the practical knowledge of experience. (3) mouth, or palate: ch. xxxiii. 2.

A word in season.— A minister was some time ago speaking of one whom he had many years known as a consistent and exemplary Christian, and observed that the first serious impressions were made on his mind by a word dropped from the lips of a stranger. In his youth he was driving a number of cattle to a fair, when some of the animals becoming unruly, he uttered a profane exclamation, and swore in a manner that is, alas, too common. A stranger, on horseback, who happened to be passing by at the moment, said to him, "My friend, those brutes have no souls, they are not capable of damnation; but you have an immortal soul, and your curses must fall on yourself." The stranger rode off; but his words were riveted in the mind of the youth, and proved the means of awakening a train of thought and feeling the most salutary and profitable. He sought the means of grace and the way of salvation, and became sober, circumspect and useful. Perhaps the stranger may never know, in this world, the good effects of his well-timed reproof; but let others be encouraged thus to drop a word which may prove as "bread cast upon the waters, to be seen after many days."

4—6. (4) choose, lit. prove by means of a touchstone,[d] find out what is right. good, i. e. befitting to the occasion; what view of this difficult matter may worthily be taken.[e] (5) righteous, in respect of the accusations made by the friends against him. my judgment, R. V., "my right."[f] The right of the righteous to temporal prosperity. Job regarded God as acting towards him in mere sovereignty. (6) lie, R. V., "Notwithstanding my right I am accounted a liar; my wound is incurable, though I am without transgression," i. e. when I affirm my rectitude God's treatment of me belies my affirmations by making me guilty, and this against my right (Comp. ch. ix. 20; xvi. 8).— Cam. Bib.

the ear trieth words

[b] "Some of the language of Elihu in this chap. has been censured as harsh and unfeeling towards Job. The words of truth, though they might seem to be stern, were also words of love."— Wordsworth.

[c] 1 Co. x. 15.

Our repentance is far from being the condition of God's forgiveness; the fact is our tears need washing in the blood of Christ before they can be acceptable. God was in Christ putting away the obstacles to our communion with him. A. J. Gordon.

Job charged with self-righteousness

[d] Jno. vii. 24; Ro. xii. 2; 1 Co. vi. 5; Phil. i. 10.

[e] "The wise man will contend not for victory but for truth."—Robinson.

[f] Comp. Job xiii. 18; xxiii. 10; xxvii. 2.

wound, lit. arrow: fig. for disease with which he was smitten. without transgression, as an immediate and adequate cause for such smiting.[a]

Repentance and self-righteousness (a Persian legend). — Jesus, while on earth, was once entertained in the cell of a dervish of eminent reputation for sanctity. In the same city dwelt a youth sunk in every sin, "whose heart was so black that Satan himself shrunk back from it in horror;" he appearing before the cell of the monk, as smitten by the very presence of the Divine Prophet, began to lament deeply the wickedness of his life past, and shedding abundant tears to implore pardon and grace. The monk indignantly interrupted him, demanding how he dared to appear in his presence and in that of God's holy prophet; assured him that for him it was in vain to seek forgiveness; and in proof how inexorably he considered his lot was fixed for hell, exclaimed, "My God, grant me but one thing, that I may stand far from this man on the judgment day." On this Jesus spoke, "It shall be even so: the prayer of both is granted. This sinner has sought mercy and grace, and has not sought them in vain — his sins are forgiven; his place shall be in paradise at the last day. But this monk has prayed that he may never stand near this sinner — his prayer, too, is granted; hell shall be his place. for there this sinner shall never come." — Saadi. Social unity forbids lying. — Let not the eye lie to the foot, nor the foot to the eye. If there be a deep pit, and its mouth covered with reeds shall present to the eye the appearance of solid ground, will not the eye use the foot to ascertain whether it is hollow underneath, or whether it is firm and resists? Will the foot tell a lie, and not the truth as it is? And what again if the eye were to spy a serpent or a wild beast, will it lie to the foot? — Chrysostom. Self-righteousness. — Men are sometimes self-righteous because all they see in the law is an outward formal keeping of its precepts to which they can attain; as a child, seeing a star rising over the hills, may think it but a street-lamp and that he can easily reach it; but whosoever sees the spirit of the law, as the expression of God's holy character, will be convicted of sin, for he will see how high and great and radiant that law is; as to the astronomer, the child's star is known to be infinitely above him, a measureless world of light. — Peloubet.

and with being a scorner

7—9. (7) drinketh up, an image taken from the camel.[b] "Job had in no respect scorned God; and if he had occasionally poured some scorn upon his 'comforters,' must it not be admitted that they had deserved it?" — Rawlinson. scorning,[c] to Elihu, Job's language seemed daring and irreverent. (8) goeth in company, makes common cause with, by taking up their sentiments. (9) profiteth, etc., Job had meant so far as the providences of this world are concerned. This seemed to intimate that God did not actually govern righteously.[d]

Thirsting for scorn (vs. 7.) — Of a man who does not care for contempt or hatred, it is said, "He drinks up their hatred like water." When a man is every way superior to his enemies, "Ah, he drinks them up like water." "He is a man of wonderful talents, for he drinks up science as water." Thus, Elihu wished to show that Job had hardened himself, and was insensible to scorn, for he had swallowed it as water. — Roberts. False friendship. — A great deal of evil comes from false friendship. The danger is doubly great because it comes under the guise of friendliness, — a wolf in sheep's clothing. "Give me," says one, "a roaring devil rather than a sleeping one; for a sleeping devil makes me slumber, but roaring ones provoke me to run to my master." How many young people are ruined by bad companionship! How large a part of drunkenness comes from the custom of social drinking! How many are kept away from Christ and heaven by fear of their friends! Beware of the Jonadab friendship, whose test is that it is willing to lead you or join you in sin. — Peloubet.

what one sows he shall reap

10—12. (10) far be it, i. e. it is a thing profane even to think of. wickedness, injustice.[e] "Elihu's argument in these verses is the truest answer that can be given: injustice on the part of God is inconsistent with the idea of God. The three friends combined it with their other theory that good and evil befell men solely according to the principle of retribution, and that this latter principle was that according to which God's actual providence was entirely administered. Job could not consent to this reasoning." — Cam. Bib. (11) the work, "recompense is exactly proportioned to man's deeds."[f]

The sword of justice. — When the Son of God was made of a woman, and made under the law, there was heard the most awful voice that ever was a Job xvi. 17.

---

"What! will this penitence not move thee? Know there is a rose-lipp'd seraph sits on high, who ever bends his holy ear to earth to mark the voice of penitence, to hear her solemn sighs, to tune them to his harp, and echo them in divine music up to the throne of grace." —Mason.

"To love truth for truth's sake is the principal part of human perfection in this world and the seed plot of all other virtues." — Locke.

"Earnestly observe the uncompromising condemnation, by the Gospel, of all kinds and phases of dishonesty. Nothing untruthful can possibly be holy. A pious fraud is, in the light of true Christianity a most grievous sin."—Moule.

b Job xv. 16.

c Scorn. fr. Fr. écorner, to break off the horn. Fr. L. ex. from; cornu, horn. Extreme and passionate contempt. See Ps. i. 1.

d Job ix. 22, 30; xxi. 7; xxiv. 1; Mal. iii. 14.

"Falsehood is the natural outgrowth of every other crime, as an attempt at defense from discovery and punishment."

e Ge. xviii. 25; De. xxxii. 4; Ro. ix. 14; Ja. i. 13.

f Ps. lxii. 12; Je. xxxii. 19; 2 Co. v. 10; Re. xxii. 12.

" Trans. vs. 10. 'Far be it from heard in the universe yet: "Awake, O sword, against the Man that is My fellow, and smite the shepherd" — smite Him! When there was a Man in the world that was Jehovah's fellow there was some one who could magnify the law, in smiting whom justice could obtain its demands. The sword of justice smote Him, struck Him, cut Him. The sword of justice had a commission to smite the Man that was Jehovah's fellow; it smote Him in Bethlehem; it smote Him all along the highway of His life, even to Calvary. On Calvary the strokes of the sword fell heavy; the glances of that sword then darkened the sun; the strokes of the sword shook earth, shook hell; it kept smiting and smiting the Man that was God's fellow, till at last He cried, "It is finished." Then the sword fell down at the foot of the cross, hushed, lulled, pacified; and it lay there till the third hallowed morning, when it was found changed into a sceptre of mercy; and that sceptre of mercy has been waving among mankind ever since. — Beaumont. God's wisdom. — Yea, surely God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty pervert judgment. Then wait: He will bring forth judgment as the morning, and righteousness as the noonday. Such doctrines establish the heart in gracious confidence. They do not blind men to the tumult and confusion which are so manifest on all the surface of life; such doctrines enable men to cultivate and exemplify the grace or virtue of patience; they acknowledge that appearances are against their doctrine, but they claim time for the Almighty: they reason analogically; they say, look at nature; look at human life; look at any great enterprise entered into by men; what digging, what blasting of rocks, what marvelous confusion, what a want of evident form and shape and design! Yet when months have come and gone, and architects and builders have carried out their whole purpose, they retire, and say, behold what we have been aiming at all the time, — then in great temple, or wide, noble bridge spanning boiling rivers, we see that when we thought all things were in confusion, they were being carried on to order and shape and perfection and utility. — Peop. Bib. Justice the foundation of life. — The one Divine work, the one ordered sacrifice, is to do justice; and it is the last we are ever inclined to do. Anything rather than that! As much charity as you choose, but no justice. "Nay," you will say, "charity is greater than justice." Yes, it is greater; it is the summit of justice — it is the temple of which justice is the foundation. But you can't have the top without the bottom; you cannot build upon charity. You must build upon justice, for this main reason, that you have not at first charity to build with. It is the last reward of good work. Do justice to your brother (you can do that, whether you love him or not), and you will come to love him. But do injustice to him because you don't love him, and you will come to hate him. It is all very fine to think you can build upon charity to begin with, but you will find all you have got to begin with begins at home, and is essentially love of yourself. — Ruskin.

13—15. (13) given him a charge,[a] so as to make Him a servant who could prove unfaithful. God has sole authority, and He himself created the world and arranged things as they are. (14) upon man, it should be upon Him; i. e. if God thought only of Himself all things that have breath would perish, for all depend on Him.[b] But absolute power in God is joined with unselfish love. (15) All flesh, etc., bec. by the breath of God alone man lives. God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life.[c]

God's power. — People used to speak of God as a tyrant, and as if to be in His hands was to be next to all that was miserable and terrible. The hands that bled for me on the cross mean only to bless me. O hands of the Crucified, shall I dread to intrust my life to you? Nay; the misery of life will not be to be in the hand, but to be outside the hand of God. Never be afraid of God, unless you are sinning against him; always believe that behind what seems difficult and mysterious there is a heart as true and tender as the heart of the sweetest, gentlest woman that ever pressed her child to her bosom. Nay; all the love in all women's hearts together, compared to the love of His heart, is as a glow-worm's torch compared to the sun at noontide. — F. B. Meyer.

Justice from God. —

What wouldst thou have, good fellow?
Justice, madam.
Oh, ambitious beggar, wouldst thou have that
That lives not in the world?

God to do evil, and the Almighty to act wrongfully.'" —Delitzsch.

"That which the air is in the elementary world, the sun in the celestial, the soul in the intelligible, justice is the same in the civil. It is the air which all afflicted desire to breathe; the sun which dispelleth all clouds; the soul which giveth life to all things." — N. Caussin.

"Sophistry may perplex truth, ingenuity may warp the decrees of justice, and ridicule may raise an undeserved laugh, but where free inquiry prevails, errors will be corrected, justice will be revered, and ridicule will be retorted on those who have abused its influence."—Ennius.

"God deigns not to discuss
With our impatient and o'erweening wills,
His times, and ways of working out through us Heaven's slow but sure redress of human ills."
—Meredith.

none can limit the Almighty

a "Committed the earth to his charge, as a superior commits a charge to a subordinate." — Robinson.

b Our version gives a sense out of harmony with the context. "If God regarded man with enmity, he would certainly perish."

c Ps. xc. 3-10; civ. 39; Ge. ii. 7; Ac. xvii. 28.

"The tree that bears the choicest fruit stands continually in the sunshine, without which the fruit can never evenly ripen and mature. So he who bears heavenly

Why, all the undelved mines cannot buy
An ounce of justice, 'tis a jewel so inestimable.
I tell thee God hath engross'd all justice in His hands,
And there is none but what comes from Him.— Kyd.

16—19. (16) hear this, the further matter of fact that God does deal with men impartially. (17) govern, marg. bind. "Is it also possible that an enemy of right should govern?" most just, R. V., "just and mighty," "shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" comp. Rom. iii. 5; Mat. xii. 25. (18) Is it fit, or becoming. princes, regarded as king's representatives. (19) accepteth, etc., is therefore infinitely above the persuasions that may influence kings to unjust deeds,[a] and is strictly impartial.

Fidelity to conscience. — Hugh Latimer was very outspoken to King Henry VIII., feeling that he must tell him his duty. "You that be of the court, and especially, ye sworn chaplains," he said long afterwards, "beware of a lesson that a great man taught me at my first coming to court. He told me for good will; he thought it well. He said to me, 'You must beware, howsoever ye do, that ye contrary not the king; let him have his sayings; follow him; go with him!' Marry! out upon such counsel! Shall I say as he says? Say your conscience, or else what a worm shall ye feel gnawing! What a remorse of conscience shall ye have when ye remember how ye have slackened your duty! Yet a prince must be turned not violently, he must be won by a little and a little. He must have his duty told him, but with humbleness, with request of pardon, or else it were a dangerous thing." — Old Test. Anec.

Justice impartial. — A striking instance of the stern and impartial administration of justice is afforded in the history of one of the kings of Acalhuacan, a province which composed a part of the Mexican Empire. There was a law which forbade, on pain of death, the speaking of indecent words in the royal palace. One of the sons of this king, for whom he had felt a more particular attachment than for any of the rest, on account of his disposition and his virtues, violated this law. The words made use of by the young prince were rather the effect of youthful indiscretion than of any bad intention. The king was informed of it, and understanding that the word had been spoken by the prince in the presence of his tutors, he sent to examine them. They, being afraid of experiencing some punishment if they concealed the truth, confessed it openly, but at the same time endeavored to exculpate the prince by saying that he did not know the person to whom he spoke, nor that the language was improper. Notwithstanding all this, he ordered the young prince to be arrested immediately, and the very same day pronounced sentence of death upon him. The whole court was astonished at the rigor of the king, and interfered with their prayers and tears in behalf of the prince; but no remonstrance could move the inflexible mind of the king. "My son," said he, "has violated the law. If I pardon him, it will be said the laws are not binding on every one. I will let my subjects know that no one will be pardoned a transgression, as I do not even pardon the son whom I dearly love." The punishment was accordingly executed. The king shut himself up for forty days in a hall, without letting himself be seen by any one. He vented his grief in secret; and to conceal from his sight everything that might recall his sorrow, he caused the door of his son's apartment to be closed up by a wall. He showed his subjects that, although he was incapable of repressing the feelings of a father and sealing up the fountains of his grief, yet he would never permit them to overcome his zeal for the laws, and the most rigid impartiality in their execution. — J. Todd.

20—23. (20) R. V., "In a moment they die, even at midnight; The people are shaken and pass away," etc. they die, God has full control over them. Their lives are altogether in His hands. people, the poor of vs. 19. at midnight,[b] the time of security and helplessness. without hand, i. e. man's hand[c] or interference. The life of both poor and rich is in God's absolute control. (21) eyes, etc., God's omniscience equals His omnipotence.[d] (22) shadow of death, poetic fig. for exceeding thick darkness.[e] (23) R. V., "For he needeth not further to consider a man, that he should go before God in judgment."[f] God beholds all, and His insight and judgment operate simultaneously. — Cam. Bib. Hence there is no need to enter into judgment with God.

God's control — Christ had control of all things, and could and would do fruit must continually live in the light of the 'Sun of righteousness.'" — C. W. Bibb

the impartiality of God

"One of the grandest things in having rights is that, being your rights, you may give them up." — George MacDonald.

"How would you be,
If He, which is the top of judgment, should But judge you as you are? O, think on that;
And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man new made."
— Shakespeare.

a De. x. 17; 2 Chr. x. 7; Ac. x. 34; Ro. ii. 11; Ga. ii. 6; Eph. vi. 9; Col. iii. 25; 1 Pe. i. 17.

When great presents were sent to Epaminondas, the celebrated Theban general, he used to observe: "If the thing you desire be good, I will do it without any bribe, even because it is good; if it be not honest, I will not do it for all the goods in the world." He was so great a contemner of riches, that when he died he left not enough to discharge the expenses of his funeral.

God has full control over all men

b Ex. xii. 29, 30; 1 Sa xxv. 37, 38; 1 Th. v. 2.

c Da. ii. 34, 44, 45.

d God has no need to watch, or set watch, as Job had supposed, ch. vii. 12.

2 Chr. xvi. 9; Je. xxxii. 19

e Je. xxiii. 24; Am. ix. 2, 3; He. iv. 13.

f "A single thought of God's is what was best. It was not for want of goodness or power that things were not done differently. Jesus held the helm of the ship of Zion, and would guide it safely to the desired haven, in spite of tempests, or darkness, or rocks. We do not know the way, but the Captain does. We are weak, but He is strong. We are on no derelict vessel, lost in the wide, wide sea. "Zola, of whose books it is said that enough have been sold to build a pile as high as Eiffel Tower, wrote a novel called La Bête Humaine," which closes with "the description of a railway train, crowded with soldiers, dragged by an engine whose driver has been killed, dashing at headlong speed into the midnight. The train is the world; we are the freight; fate is the track; death is the darkness; God is the engineer; who is dead?" — Henry Van Dyke. Trouble at midnight. — The providence of God has been often remarkably displayed in the discovery of murder. A respectable publication at Basle relates the following instance: "A person who wrought in a brewery quarreled with one of his fellow-workmen, and struck him in such a manner that he died upon the spot. No other person was witness to the deed. He then took the body and threw it into a large fire under a boiling vat, where it was in a short time so completely consumed that no traces of its existence remained. On the following day, when the man was missed, the murderer observed very coolly that he had perceived his fellow-servant to have been intoxicated, and that he had probably fallen from a bridge, which he had to cross on his way home, and been drowned. For the space of seven years after no one entertained any suspicions of the real state of the fact. At the end of this period the man was again employed in the same brewery. He was then induced to reflect on the singularity of the circumstance that his crime had remained so long concealed. Having retired one evening to rest, one of the other workmen who slept with him, hearing him say in his sleep, 'It is now full seven years ago,' asked him, 'What was it you did seven years ago?' 'I put him,' he replied, still speaking in his sleep, 'under the boiling vat.' As the affair was not entirely forgotten, it immediately occurred to the man that his bedfellow must allude to the person who was missing about that time; and he accordingly gave information of what he had heard to a magistrate. The murderer was apprehended, and though at first he denied that he knew anything of the matter, a confession of his crime was at length obtained from him, for which he suffered condign punishment." — Whitecross.

enough to summon the whole world to judgment. Job had craved for leave to enter into judgment with God. Elihu replies that God, of His own accord, finds out men in a moment, without any effort, and summons them to judgment." — Wordsworth.

"As the rainbow would never be seen were it not for the clouds and the rain, the beauties of holiness would never shine so brightly were it not for the trials which the spirit of God employs to promote them." — Tweedie.

"All things that are on earth shall wholly pass away, except the love of God, which shall live and last for aye." — Bryant.

24—26. (24) without number,[a] R. V., "in ways past finding out;" without such processes as belong to human judgments. set others, as Ps. lxxv. 7; 1 Sam. ii. 7; Dan. ii. 21. (25) destroyed, or crushed God makes short work with them. (26) open sight, lit. in the place of beholders: their punishment is publicly seen.[b]

God has no need to search after a human fashion

Inflexibility of justice. — When a prince of the royal blood of France disgraced himself by committing robbery and murder in the streets of Paris, Louis XV. would not grant a pardon, though eagerly solicited to do so by a deputation from the Parliament of Paris, who tried him and suspended their sentence until the royal pleasure should be known. "My lords and counsellors," said the king, "return to your chambers of justice, and promulgate your decree." "Consider," said the first president, "that the unhappy prince has your majesty's blood in his veins." "Yes," said the king, "but the blood has become impure, and justice demands that it should be let out; nor would I spare my own son for a crime for which I should be bound to condemn the meanest of my subjects." The prince was executed on the scaffold in the court of the grand Chatelet, on the 12th of August, 1729. — Cheever.

Justice. —

If the deed were ill,
Be you contented, wearing now the garland,
To have a son set your decrees at naught;
To pluck down justice from your awful bench;
To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person;
Nay, more, to spurn at your most royal image,
And mock your workings in a second body?
Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours;
Be now the father, and propose a son:
Hear your own dignity so much profaned, a Heb. cheker, digging the earth to find out.

b 2 Sa. xii. 12; 1 Ti. v. 20.

"Who painted Justice blind, did not declare what magistrates should be, but what they are; not so much 'cause they rich and poor should weigh in their just scales alike; but because they, now blind with bribes, are grown so weak of sight, they'll sooner feel a cause, than see it right." — Heath.

"This is the bitterest of all,—to wear the yoke of our own wrong-doing." — George Eliot.

See your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted,
Behold yourself so by a son disdain'd;
And then imagine me taking your part,
And, in your power, soft silencing your son. — Shakespeare.

"He is miserable once who feels it, but twice who fears it before it comes."—Oriental Prov.

the disobedience of men

27, 28. (27) turned back, fallen away from Him.[a] Following God is obedience to His commands, and consecration to His service. his ways, either of providence or precept. (28) cause, etc., by their oppressions and neglect.[b] heareth, etc., "God's ears are ever open to the cry of the oppressed, and his hand is ever heavy upon those who 'afflict' the weak and defenseless."

Obedience, as Robertson puts it, is the spiritual organ of knowledge, and if any man refuses to obey what he knows, he shall know no more; whereas if any man obeys what he knows, he shall be led swiftly in the path of truth. — Schauffler. The Bible rings with one long demand for obedience. The key word of the book of Deuteronomy is, 'Observe and do." The burden of our Lord's farewell discourse is, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." We must not question or reply or excuse ourselves. We must not pick and choose our way. We must not think that obedience in one direction will compensate for disobedience in some other particular. God gives one command at a time; if we obey this He will flood our souls with blessing, and lead us forward into new paths and pastures. — F. B. Meyer.

[a] Ps. cxxv. 5; Prov. i. 24-32; 2 Ki. xvii. 15, 16; 2 Pet ii. 22.

[b] Ex. ii. 23, 25; xxii. 23; Ps. xii. 5; Ja. v. 4.

"If we refuse to 'Observe and do' the commandments of the Lord, we shall remain stagnant and waterlogged, without progress in Christian experience, and lack both power and joy." — Meyer.

when God gives peace who can hinder?

29, 30. (29) quietness, peace and security from oppression. make trouble, R. V., "condemn." Comp. Ro. viii. 31-34. hideth his face, as in anger. behold him, as a friend; enjoy his favor. whether . . only affirming God's ways to be regulated by principles of impartiality and righteousness which apply equally to one, or to many. (30) hypocrite, "that the godless man reign not; that the people be not ensnared." — Cam. Bib. be ensnared,[c] deceived by seeing the wicked prospering.

Salem. — The heart of man pants after peace. I. It is the prerogative of God to give quietness. Man makes war. God concludes peace. 1. It is so in the nation; 2. It is so in the heart; 3. It shall be so the world over. II. The particular quiet that He gives to the soul. 1. Describe it negatively: it is not solitariness, nor insensibility, nor constrained silence, nor inactivity, nor temporary, nor unsatisfactory; 2. Describe it positively: it is the quiet of sweet satisfaction, of full assurance, of conscious safety, of confiding love, of hallowed devotion, of meek dependence. III. The impossibility of its being destroyed. Is there an arm stronger, a will more potent, attraction greater than His? Learn: — (1) Beware of false peace; (2) Fear not thou shalt lose true peace; (3) Peace is to be had for the asking.

[c] "That godless people reign not, that they be not nets to the people." —Delitzsch.

"A visitor to the Royal Hospital for Incurables is struck with the spirit of peace that pervades it. What is outwardly a palace of pain is found to be in fact a home of peace. The sufferers have been drilled by suffering into patience; into more than patience, indeed, for a cheerfulness is seen among the hopeless sufferers. Long endurance has brought forth wonderful fruits which we scarcely see among the happy and heedless." — Pul. Com.

The secret of success. — A young sailor boy was remarked for his serenity and presence of mind in his first battle. "How was it, my boy," the mate asked, "that you were ready for everything, and yet as quiet as if by your mother's fireside?" "Because," said he, "I was alone with my God for an hour before the fight began."—Oxenden. Peace. — An aged Christian, lying on his death-bed in a state of such extreme weakness that he was often entirely unconscious of all around him, was asked the cause of his perfect peace. He replied, "When I am able to think, I think of Jesus; and when I am unable to think of Him, I know He is thinking of me." — Spurgeon. The martyr. — I never saw a long-faced Christian that amounted to anything. It is worse to meet such a man than to face an east wind in March. What we want is the spirit and confidence of the old martyr who said to a king who threatened to banish him, because he would not give up testifying for Christ, "I am not afraid of that, for you cannot banish me from where Christ is." The king said, "Well, I will take away your property." The man replied, "No, you can't; my treasure is laid up in heaven; it is hid with Christ in God." The king said hotly, "I will kill you then." "You can't do that either; I have been dead these forty years," exclaimed the martyr. "What are you going to do with such a fanatic?" asked the king. You can't do anything with him; he has a security and peace which all the kings on earth cannot disturb. — D. L. Moody.

"When the tale of bricks is doubled, Moses comes."—Hebrew Prov.

speaking to God in the time of affliction

31—33. (31) meet, R. V., "For hath any said unto God," i. e. any of those whom God has so punished, have they acknowledged His justice and promised amendment? have borne, so as to be humbled and learn by it.

(32) teach, the expression of a humble and submissive spirit, such as should follow sanctified chastisements. (33) R. V., "Shall His recompense be as thou wilt, that thou refusest it? For thou must choose and not I," i. e. shall God proceed to judgment with you (Job) just as you may wish? choose, you may choose such a conclusion concerning God, I will not. speak, etc.," your conclusion.

The future resigned to God. — I. Some errors reproved. 1. A desire to choose for ourselves; 2. A disposition to murmur at our earthly lot; 3. Envy at the circumstances of others; 4. Confidence in our own judgment. II. Doctrines to be established. 1. The absolute sovereignty of 2. God; The universal extent of His holy providence. III. Consolations supplied. 1. Faithfulness of Divine promises; 2. Comfort of submission to His will; 3. Certainty of final perfection of all believers in Divine presence.

"Should it be according to thy mind?" — We are all very apt to believe in Providence when we get our own way; but when things go awry, we think, if there is a God, He is in heaven and not upon the earth. The cricket, in the spring, builds his house in the meadow, and chirps for joy because all is going so well with him. But when he hears the sound of the plow a few furrows off, and the thunder of the oxen's tread, then his sky begins to darken, and his young heart fails him. By-and-by the plough comes craunching along, turns his dwelling bottom-side up, and as he goes rolling over and over, without a house and without a home, "Oh," he says, "the foundations of the world are breaking up, and everything is hastening to destruction." But the husbandman, as he walks behind the plough, does he think the foundations of the world are breaking up? No. He is thinking only of the harvest that is to follow in the wake of the plough; and the cricket, if it will but wait, will see the husbandman's purpose. My hearers, we are all like crickets. When we get our own way, we are happy and contented. When we are subjected to disappointment, we become the victims of despair. — A. B. Jack.

Man would have God govern (not only himself, but) the whole world according to his mind. Man hath much of this in him. Luther wrote to Melancthon, when he was so exceedingly troubled at the providence of God in the world, "Our brother Philip is to be admonished that he would forbear governing the world." We can hardly let God alone to rule that world which Himself alone hath made. — Caryl. Payson's happiness. — "Christians might avoid much trouble and inconvenience," says Dr. Payson, "if they would only believe what they profess — that God is able to make them happy without anything else. They imagine, if such a dear friend were to die, or such and such blessings to be removed, they should be miserable; whereas God can make them a thousand times happier without them. To mention my own case — God has been depriving me of one blessing after another; but as every one was removed He has come in and filled up its place; and now, when I am a cripple, and not able to move, I am happier than ever I was in my life before, or ever expected to be; and if I had believed this twenty years ago, I might have been spared much anxiety."

Wordsworth prefers to put these sentences as a series of questions, "Hath the ungodly said to God," etc.

Le. xxvi. 40–42; Je. xxxi. 18, 19; Da. ix. 7–14.

Ps. xix. 12; xxxii. 8; Eph. iv. 25, 28; 1 Pe. iv. 3.

a If you think to order God, tell what your principles are.

"Men grumble because God put thorns on roses; would it not be better to thank Him because He put roses on thorns?"

"There is no such way to attain to greater measures of grace, as for a man to live up to that little grace he has."— Thomas Brooks.

"Men are born to trouble at first and exercised in it all their days. There is a cry at the beginning of life, and a groan at its close."— Arnot.

34–37. (34) Let . . me, R. V., "Men of understanding will say unto me, yea, every wise man that heareth me;" he is now about to give the verdict of all wise men on Job's words and conduct. (35) hath spoken, in his intense and agonized utterances. All wise men will admit that Job's speech is the utterance of ignorance and folly. Let him be tested to the utmost. (36) for wicked men, like them, such as they might give.[b] (37) rebellion, a stubborn spirit that will not be humbled. clappeth, as expression of scorn and triumph.

Trials. — Trouble is not like a tunnel, from which there is no exit except at its ends. It is a burden which may be lifted whenever God sees fit. The object of trial may be obtained by other means, and it is possible that gentler methods may bring about the same results. Thus God leads to repentance by His goodness as well as by purgatorial afflictions. Therefore we should not live as though some iron fate held us to a certain amount of trial. God is a living Spirit and a loving Father; and He will not permit His children to suffer, when peaceable methods of discipline will do the desired work for them. Our part is to take patiently what God sends, and to use it profitably, trusting God to cut short the trouble or lengthen it as He sees best. — W. F. Adeney.

words without wisdom

b "Since Job will not give way, Elihu feels that he has no alternative but to wish that the trial may go on until it has done its work."— Spk. Com.

"We may see the cunning and curious work of nature, which hath barred and hedged nothing in so strongly as the tongue, with two rows of teeth, and therewith two lips, besides she hath placed it farre from the heart."—Lyly's Euphues.

Words. —

Words are the notes of thought and nothing more.
Words are like sea-shells on the shore; they show
Where the mind ends, and not how far it has been.
Let every thought, too, soldier-like, be stripped,
And roughly looked over. — Bailey.

"The worthiest people are the most injured by slander, as we usually find that to be the best fruit which the birds have been pecking at."—Swift.

The slanderer. —

Slander, the foulest whelp of Sin. The man
In whom this spirit entered was undone;
His tongue was set on fire of hell;
His heart was black as death;
His pillow was the peace of families
Destroyed, the sigh of innocence reproached, Broken friendships, and the strife of brotherhoods,
From door to door you might have seen him speed,
Or placed amidst a group of gaping fools,
And whispering in their ears with his foul lips.
Peace fled the neighborhood in which he made His haunts; and, like a moral pestilence,
Before his breath the healthy shoots and blooms
Of social joy and happiness decayed.
The prudent shunned him and his house
As one who had a deadly moral plague. — Pollok.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FIFTH.

the charge of self-righteousness reiterated

1—4. (1) moreover, after another brief pause. "Elihu states Job's complaint that godliness avails a man nothing, and undertakes to answer it."[a] (2) more than God's, or as LXX., "I am just before God." From the statement that his righteousness exceeded God's we may well suppose Job would have shrunk. (3) advantage, present temporal good. profit . . sin, R. V., "What profit shall I have, more than if I had sinned."[b] But Job declares this position to be the judgment of evil men and concludes, "the counsel of the wicked be far from me." (4) answer, lit. return to thee words. companions, such as may take the same imperfect views.

Man's character. — I. Selfishness is an evil in man's character. 1. Some take up even religion for mere worldy gain: 2. Some for eternal gain. II. God is independent of man's character. Divine sovereignty is — 1. The reason of all law; 2. The source of redemption; 3. The ground of rewards. III. Society is influence by man's character. It may hurt, or it may profit. Three things give to every man some influence. 1. Relationship; 2. Dependence; 3. Affection. — Thomas.

Is goodness profitable? — Although the question is natural, we ought to be able to rise above it. After all, our chief concern is not with results, but with duty. Our part is to do the right, whether it leads to failure or to success. Obedience is our sphere: results are with God. We sow and water; He it is who gives the increase. It is difficult to learn this lesson, for we all gravitate to selfish and material ends unless we are lifted out of ourselves. Still, the lesson must be learnt. If a man is only virtuous on account of the rewards of virtue, he is not really virtuous at all. He who does not steal simply because he is persuaded that "honesty is the best policy," is a thief at heart. Conscience is independent of advantage, and true goodness is only that which rests on conscience. — Pul. Com.

[a] Comp. Job. ix. 30-35; x. 13-15.

[b] "The idea is, that as to good treatment, or securing the favor of God under the arrangements of His government, a man might just as well be wicked as righteous. He would be as likely to be prosperous in the world, and to experience the tokens of the Div. favor." — Barnes.

"To do God's will not because it is God's will, but because you want to be happy, is neither to do God's will nor to be happy."

the clouds as reminders of greatness, etc., of God

5—7. (5) heavens, "if God be so high, how can aught that man do reach up to Him? Neither their goodness nor their wickedness extend to Him; they cannot affect the determinations of the Divine Ruler and Judge!" — Cox. (6) against him, thy sin hurts thyself, it cannot reach to Him.[c] (7) what givest thou? so as to have any kind of claim upon Him.

A heathenish idea. — The huge mistake of heathen worship is that it consists for the most part in attempts to buy off the anger and secure the favor of the gods by means of gifts and sacrifices. We meet with the same heathenish idea in all religious exercises that aim at being really profitable to God, not for His own sake, but to purchase His favor.—Pul. Com. Access to God.—

[c] "The drift of this is that there is no such relation between God and man as to make happiness a reward due to right-

We must not make God too imperious. There is a conception of God which represents Him as keeping men at the staff-end, allowing them to approach so far, but not one step beyond. That conception could be vindicated up to a given point, but there is the larger conception which says: We have boldness of access now; we have not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire; we have come unto Mount Sion, where with reverent familiarity we may look face to face upon God, and speak to Him, as a man speaketh with his friend, mouth to mouth, and return to our daily employment with the fragrance of heaven in our very breath, and with the almightiness of God as the fountain of our strength.— Peop. Bib.

eousness. When granted, it is a matter of favor and grace; when withdrawn, complaints imply a wrong conception of our position before God."—Spk. Com.

1 Ch xxix. 14; Ps. xvi. 2, 3; Pr. viii. 36; ix. 12; Je. vii. 19; Ro. xi. 35.

God gives songs in the night

8—11. (8) hurt a man, a fellow-man, who belongs to your sphere; it cannot affect God, who is so infinitely exalted above thee.[a] (9) Elihu admits that there are instances where godliness does not seem to advantage men, where oppressed innocence cries in vain for redress. The reason is that the cry is merely the natural voice of suffering; it is no true devout appeal to heaven.—Cam. Bib. oppressions, introducing the case Job had stated,[b] in order to present Elihu's explanation of it. they make, etc., R. V., "they cry out: They cry for help by reason," etc. mighty, the violence of tyrants and ungodly rich people. (10) none saith,[c] i. e. they cry, but do not cry to God; or if they do, not in a right spirit. songs . . night,[d] fig. for comfort in time of distress. (11) more, i. e. better. beasts, who cry only through animal instinct.[e] a Elihu does but touch one side of the truth; the sin of man does affect God by becoming a matter of compassionate interest to Him.

b Job. xxiv. 12.

c Ps. xliii. 2; lvi. 1, 2.

d Ps. xli. 8; cxlix. 5; Ac. xvi. 25.

e Ps. civ. 27; viii. 5, 6.

Dr. Ryland and his hymn. — Dr. Ryland was the author of that beautiful hymn, which he wrote under singular circumstances:

"O Lord, I would delight in Thee,
And on Thy care depend;
To Thee in every trouble flee,
My best, my only Friend."

He was at Bristol Academy, engaged to be married to a young lady whom he fondly loved. She was taken with a dangerous sickness, from which it was feared she would not recover. Filled with anguish, he called to inquire about her, and was told by the servant if he would call in half an hour he would hear the opinion of the doctors, who were then holding a consultation on the case. He retired to an empty house, then under repair, sat down on a large stone, and taking a piece of slate wrote thereon that beautiful hymn, which has been the comfort of thousands of the tried children of God:

"When all created streams are dried,
Thy fulness is the same:
May I with this be satisfied,
And glory in Thy name!

"No good in creatures can be found
But may be found in Thee;
I must have all things, and abound,
While God is God to me."

He called, and received a favorable report. The lady recovered, they were married, and lived most happily together for seven years, when she was removed by death. Thus out of trial came a song, even as out of the lion came honey. — Old Test. Anec.

"In trial, character is shaped and beautified and brightened."—S. Coley.

"If thou art wise, thou knowest thine own ignorance, and thou art ignorant if thou knowest not thyself."—Luther.

Songs.—

"Our lives are songs; God writes the words.
And we set them to music at pleasure;
And the song grows glad, or sweet, or sad,
As we choose to fashion the measure.

"We must write the music, whatever the song,
Whatever its rhyme or meter;
And if it is sad we can make it glad,
Or if sweet, we can make it sweeter."

"Be loving, and you will never want for love; be humble and you will never want for guiding."—D. M. Muloch.

Job exhorted to trust in God

12—14. (12) they cry, "they cry because of the pride of evil men, but none giveth answer."—Cam. Bib. because, etc lit, "from the face of the pride of wicked men."[a] "Too often it is the mere tyranny of wicked men against which they cry out, not the wickedness."— Cox. (13) vanity, vain, hollow, heartless petitions.[b] Now he argues that if God does not hear man's prayers it is because he asks amiss. (14) thou sayest, R. V., "How much less when thou sayeth thou beholdest Him not, the cause is before Him, and thou waitest for Him!" much less will God hear a man who complains that he cannot see God, and fails to discover His righteous dealings in the world. therefore trust,[c] that word is meant to sum up the spirit towards God wh. Job should cherish: trust, including submission, humility, and patience.

A check to despondency.—

There's not a star the heaven can show,
There's not a cottage hearth below,
But feeds with solace kind the willing soul:
Men love us, or they need our love;
Freely they own, or needless prove
The curse of lawless hearts, the joy of self-control.

Then rouse thee from desponding sleep,
Nor by the wayside lingering weep,
Nor fear to seek Him farther in the wild, Whose love can turn earth's worst and least
Into a conqueror's royal feast;
Thou wilt not be untrue, thou shalt not be beguil'd. — F. Keble.

Trust in trial. — In one of the German picture-galleries is a painting called "Cloud-land." It hangs at the end of a long gallery, and, at first sight, it looks like a huge, repulsive daub of confused color, without form or comeliness. As you walk toward it, the picture begins to take shape. It proves to be a mass of exquisite little cherub faces, like those at the head of the canvas in Raphael's "Madonna San Sisto." If you come close to the picture, you see only an innumerable company of little angels and cherubim. How often the soul that is frightened by trial sees nothing but a confused and repulsive mass of broken expectations and crushed hopes! But if that soul, instead of fleeing away into unbelief and despair, would only draw up near to God, it would soon discover that the cloud was full of angels of mercy. — T. Cuyler.

15, 16. (15) R. V., "But now because he hath not visited in his anger,[d] Neither doth he greatly regard arrogance;" "because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, and God seems as if He took no knowledge of wrong and oppression, therefore Job draws the futile conclusion (vss. 2, 3) that there is no advantage in being righteous more than in sinning." — Cam. Bib. (16) in vain, or for uttering vain things, i. e. that there is no advantage in being righteous more than in sinning. without knowledge, spoken foolishly.

Suitable words. — The following anecdote is told of Richard Weaver. In a railroad carriage a navvy was swearing terribly. The guard, knowing Richard's habit of speaking to every one, whispered to him, "Better let him alone; he is so violent that he would strike you if his passions were raised." Richard got close to him, and said, "Give me your hand, my friend." He then whispered into his ear, "Why are you calling on my father?" "I know nothing of your father," answered the swearer. "I'll tell you his name and character," said Richard; and then he repeated the text, "God so loved the world," etc., and enlarged upon it. As if struck by some sudden conviction, the man answered, "These were the last words my mother said to me." "Then let us pray," said Richard, "that God may make them the means of your salvation." They did so: and Richard met him not long after a changed man. Patience. — James declares that if a man has perfect patience he has a perfect character. I wish I had a voice that could ring over our run-mad country in this end of the nineteenth century, when men are tumbling over one another, rushing after nothing and finding it. I would like to proclaim this lesson: whoever has perfect patience has a perfect character.— Broadus.

[a] "The sense is, None giveth answer to deliver them from their oppressors. And why? Because they do not ask in faith."—Wordsworth.

[b] Pr. xv. 8; Jas. iv. 3.

[c] Compare Job's own words, ch. xiii. 15.

"Luther's strength lay in the way in which he laid the burden of the Reformation upon the Lord. Continually in prayer he pleaded, 'Lord, this is Thy cause, not mine. Therefore, do Thine own work: for if this gospel do not prosper, it will not be Luther alone who will be a loser, but Thine own name will be dishonored.'"—Spurgeon.

words without knowledge

[d] "The connection of thought may be, 'And now bec. God hath not visited Job in wrath, as he deserved, and hath not taken full account of his insolence, his spirit is unbroken, and he continues to speak rebelliously against God.'" Spk. Com.

"Blessings may appear under the shape of pain, losses, and disappointments, but let him have patience and he will see them in their proper figure."—Addison.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-SIXTH.

1—4. (2) Suffer, bear with me in prolonging my speech.[a] yet to speak, Heb. "these are yet words for God." (3) from afar, i. e. I will not utter mere commonplaces, but from my wide range of travel and study I will speak. will ascribe, etc., setting his first principle, to regard God as righteous, whatever happened, against Job's complaints. (4) perfect in knowledge,[b] prob. he means that he is absolutely certain of the things concerning which he is about to speak. Of them he has perfect knowledge.

The preacher. — The words may be used to represent some of the words of the true preacher. I. They represent the side he has to take. 1. He has to defend the procedure of God; 2. He has to vindicate the character of God; 3. He has to enforce the claim of God; 4. He has to offer the redemption of God. II. They represent the knowledge he has to communicate. He has to fetch his knowledge from afar. 1. From afar in relation to the intuitions of men; 2. From afar in relation to the philosophical deductions of men; 3. From afar in relation to the natural spirit of men. III. They represent the purpose he has to maintain. Ascribe righteousness to God. He will show— 1. That no suffering falls on any creature more than he deserves; 2. That no work is demanded of any creature more than he can render. — Thomas.

The ministry. — The advantage of the ministry is that a man's whole life can be thrown into the carrying out of that program without any deduction. Another advantage of the ministry is that it is so poorly paid that a man is not tempted to cut a dash and shine in the world, but can be meek and lowly in heart like his Master. It is enough for a servant to be like his master, and there is a great attraction in seeking obscurity, even isolation, if one can be following the highest ideals. — Drummond.

Pursuit of knowledge. — Let us arise by sanctified meditation to the survey of the immense field spread out before us. Let us view science in all its aspects. Let us also stand on a holy mountain whence we may see the land which the Lord has given us to conquer and possess. Let us keep near to the river, and then, if necessary, let us pursue its whole extent. Let us glance up to its source and follow its current afar off. Let us distinguish its forms, its secondary streams, its principal branches from the accessory branches. Let us examine the marsh in which its pure water is corrupted, because the impulse of the former stream is wanting. Let us contemplate it when its fructifying waters are flowing along shores enriched by its gifts, and when its foaming waves rush on with impetuosity. Let us consider the tributary streams that bring foreign waters to it, and the various soils over which it rolls, that we may be well acquainted with the elements it derives from them. It is by all these branches of knowledge that science is formed. We must weigh all the influences, discern all the combinations that we may derive from the Christian system, and construct sacred theology, which is man's noblest science, since it is the science of God. — D'Aubigne.

5—7. (5) despiseth not, doth not act scornfully. Therefore He cannot have scorned Job, as he too easily assumed.[c] strength . . wisdom, Heb. strength of heart; in Heb. heart is often used to denote the intellectual powers. (6) poor, afflicted, humble, the poor in spirit.[d] (7) his eyes, i. e. His favor and regard is never removed from them. with kings, etc.,[e] R. V., "But with kings upon the throne He setteth them forever," etc., i. e. He raises to the loftiest positions those who are righteous.

The eye of God on the righteous (vs. 7). — Many good things do others receive from the hand of God; but with these good things the saints have also His good-will, which good-will sweetens all their comforts, and sanctifies all their afflictions, turns their afflictions into blessings, and makes their blessings blessings indeed! "He withdraweth not His eyes from the righteous." Common comforts come from the saints as a fruit of covenant-love, and God's severest chastisements are the effects of His paternal affection. Those things that are not good in themselves work for their good; and dispensations, grievous at the time, are salutary in their issue, for they produce the "peaceable fruits of righteousness." — B. Beddome.

8—10. (8) fetters, fig. for cast into prison.[f] "If life often appears to present a different picture and men are seen in affliction, this is for discipline, a "The Hebrew commentators remark that the word 'added,' or 'proceeded,' is used bec. this speech is added to the number which it might be supposed he would make. There had been three series of speeches by Job and his friends, and in each one of them Job had spoken three times." — Barnes.

Elihu professes to urge not ordinary reasons

Word suffer in Heb. means to surround, in a hostile sense. In Syriac and Chaldee, it means, to wait, prob. from the idea of going round and round.

b Co. ii. 17; 2 Pe. i. 16.

"Only add deeds to thy knowledge answerable; add faith, add virtue, patience, temperance; add love, by name to come called charity, the soul of all the rest. Then wilt thou not be loth to leave this paradise, but shalt possess a paradise within thee, happier far." — Milton.

the mighty God regards even the poor

c Job x. 3-7, 13-16.

d Mat. v. 3.

e Comp. Eph. ii. 6; Re. iii. 21.

If you hear the loud thunders of God's wrath rolling over you in the terrors of the law, be sure you listen to the still small voice of the gospel.

and teaches those who are in affliction

f "The words wh. describe afflictions

wh. befall the righteous are purposely chosen to indicate their direct object viz., to arrest and chastise them when they are going wrong." —Spk. Com.

"This word tribulation is derived from the Latin 'tribulum,' the threshing instrument whereby the Roman husbandman separated the corn from the husks, and 'tribulatio' was the act of this separation." —Trench.

needful to warn them and bring their evil before them."—Cam. Bib. (9) Then, while in the affliction. work, the true character of their actions. have exceeded, R. V., "behaved themselves proudly;" encouraging inward evils of presumption and self-sufficiency. (10) discipline, correction, teaching that reveals inner secret evils. commandeth, affliction being the voice that calls to repentance and change.

Scripture interpreted by affliction.—What an interpreter of Scripture is affliction! How many stars in its heaven shine out brightly in the night of sorrow and pain which were unperceived or overlooked in the garish day of prosperity! What an enlarger of Scripture is any other outer or minor event which stirs the depths of our hearts, which touches us near to the core and centre of our lives. Trouble of spirit, condemnation of conscience, sudden danger, strong temptation, when any of these overtake us what evils do they take away, that we may see what hitherto we saw not! What new domains of God's Word do they bring within our spiritual ken! How do promises, which once fell flat upon our ears, become precious now; psalms become our order, which before were aloof from us! How do we see things now with the eye, which before we knew only by the hearing of the ear; which before men had told us, but now we ourselves have found, so that on these accounts also the Scripture is fitted to be our companion and to do us good all the years of our life.—French.

the happy fruit of obedience

a Job iv. 20, 21; Ho. iv. 6.

Impenitence changes affliction, wh. is intended to be a means of rescue, into total destruction; yet there are some who will not be warned and affrighted by it.

"That the Christian religion is favorable to human happiness, is, I believe, the secret conviction even of many who may not openly confess it; hence it is no uncommon thing to hear even the openly wicked say, 'I believe that the real Christian is the happiest man in the world.' I recollect the remark of a certain sceptic, made to myself, in the hour of affliction, 'Oh, sir, you Christians have the advantage of us.'"—From "Addresses to Young Men," Daniel Baker.

the fate of the hypocrite in heart

b "By premature decrepitude brought on by sin." —Wordsworth.

c Heb. Kedeshim. See De. xxiii. 17. The literal meaning is consecrated, i. e. devoted to the 11, 12. (11) obey, R. V., "hearken," to this voice of God in affliction. serve him, with a new spirit of consecration. in prosperity, lit. in good. pleasures, delights. "Such teachings are common in O. T., but in the N. T. when any such promise is made, it is carefully guarded (Mk. x. 30) while in many passages the promise is of an opposite character — the righteous are told to expect tribulations and persecutions (John xvi. 33).—Rawlinson. (12) perish, pass away. sword, sudden Div. judgments. without knowledge,[a] on account of their wilful ignorance of God's purpose in chastising them.

Affliction is profitable.—Affliction is very useful and profitable to the godly. The prodigal son had no thought of returning to his father's house till he had been humbled by adversity. Hagar was haughty under Abraham's roof, and despised her mistress; but in the wilderness she was meek and lowly. Manasseh lived as a libertine at Jerusalem, and committed the most enormous crimes; but when he was bound in chains in the prison at Babylon, his heart was turned to seek the Lord his God. Bodily pain and disease have been instrumental in rousing many to seek Christ, when those who were in high health have given themselves no concern about Him. The ground which is not rent and torn with the plough bears nothing but thistles and thorns. The vines will run wild, in process of time, if they be not pruned and trimmed.—Daniel Rowlands.

Cyrus's two feasts.—When Cyrus the Great desired to enlist the Persian warriors to join in his plans he assembled the army on a certain day and place and provided each with an axe. He marched them into the forest and made them toil all day in cutting down trees, with coarse food and little rest. The next day he brought them to a great banquet, with abundant meat and rich wines in profusion, and bid them feast and be merry. They enjoyed it all the more after the hard fare of the previous day, and joined in merry songs and tales and dances. At evening Cyrus called them together and asked which service they liked best. Then he said to them, "If you follow me you will enjoy ease, abundance and luxury. If you refuse you must toil on in privations and hardships as you do now and so end your days."—Abbott's Cyrus the Great. So we must choose the service of God or the service of sin.

13, 14. (13) heap up wrath, R. V., "they that godless in heart lay up anger;" the godless ones cherish anger at the Divine discipline. —Davidson. cry not, in prayer to Him. bindeth, with cords, as vs. 8. (14) in youth, prematurely.[b] among the unclean,[c] R. V., "perisheth among," etc., comp. Deut. xxiii. 17; like the unclean. Allusion to the sins of Sodom.

A ruined life the fruit of selfish pursuit of pleasure.—In Rochester, N. Y., there is a little picture hanging in an art gallery which represents a young man riding very swiftly on a horse. Out in front of him is floating what seems to be an angel, holding in her hands a crown. The young man is reaching out his hands to get the crown. He is trampling under his feet, flowers and helpless children. He almost touches the crown, but just one more leap of the horse and he will go over the precipice in front of him. Suppose he does reach the crown, he will have it in his hands only for a moment, and then he is lost. That is the way it is with many who are bound to have pleasure, whether they have to sin in obtaining it or not. They just reach out their hand and catch hold of the pleasure, and, like the bubble, it bursts, and they have ruined themselves.— C. H. Tyndall.

15—18. (15) in his affliction, R. V., "the afflicted by his affliction,"[a] it being the means of leading him to repent of that which brought this suffering upon him. openeth their ears, to receive admonition. in oppression by suffering. (16) Even so, if thou, Job, hadst but cherished a right spirit under the chastisement. set on thy table, Heb. the rest, or setting down on thy table: what is laid upon the table.[b] (17) fulfilled the judgment, experienced the punishment wh. comes on the wicked, bec. of the wrong spirit you cherish. take hold, join in punishing thee. (18) beware, etc., R. V., "beware lest thou be led away by thy sufficiency; neither let the greatness of the ransom turn thee aside."[c] sufficiency, i. e. self-satisfaction. ransom, i. e. the suffering which rightly endured would obtain his pardon and peace.

Solemn warning.—These words are applicable to all impenitent sinners. They contain—I. An important assertion. "Because there is wrath." 1. This assertion must be explained; 2. It must be confirmed. II. They contain an affectionate admonition. "Beware." It enjoins—1. The exercise of caution; 2. The pursuit of salvation. The text urges—III. An impressive argument. 1. The sinner's punishment; it is inevitable: 2. It is irremediable.

Affliction.—In itself, of course, it is undesirable. But its "peaceable fruits of righteousness" may be so wholesome and profitable that, on the whole, the affliction must be accounted a good thing. We should judge of any experience by its results, not by its passing phases. We have to learn that the pain that blesses is really itself a blessing. The black cloud that brings a refreshing shower is not a threatening storm. The spur that drives us from the desert where we would perish to the streams of living water is not a cruel instrument of torture. The heavy blow that awakens us when we are sleeping in the snow the sleep that would end in death is nothing less than an angel of mercy. When God sees that His scholar has learnt the desired lesson, He can close the book. No more of the scorching lines need be spelt out with tearful eyes. The student has graduated. Henceforth he is free from the old drudgery. Therefore the true way to escape from dreaded suffering which God sends as discipline is not to murmur against it, but to make the best use of it, in order that, being purified by fire, we may become vessels fit for the King's use.— Pul. Com.

19—21. (19) R. V., "Will thy riches suffice, that thou be not in distress, or all the forces of thy strength?" i. e. of what service is any earthly means?[d] forces of strength, such as age, wisdom, reputation, authority and rank. (20) the night, of death; to this Job had looked:[e] but Elihu says the future life can bring no joy to him save as he is right-hearted. (21) this, etc.,[f] the iniquity of complaining against God. rather than affliction,[g] bearing affliction in a spirit of true resignation.

The trial of faith.—Faith is tried (1) by means of those things which tempt men to deny their faith, to lose or diminish their faith, such as persecutions, loss of property, reproaches, aversion of friends, for adherence to Christ; (2) by sudden and overwhelming assaults; (3) by a worldly, malarial atmosphere, deadening the soul; (4) by prosperity; (5) by the little trials and vexations of life; (6) by the absence of definite rules as to what is right and wrong, and the necessity of deciding by general principles; (7) by attacks on the foundations of faith; (8) by the uncertainties and doubts which arise in the progress of truth through discussion and investigation.— Peloubet.

Result of affliction.—It is wonderful how the vision is broadened by the experience of sorrow. Although at first it may be cramped and confined to the immediate present by the absorbing influence of pain, when deliverance comes, this is followed by a wonderful mental expansion. No one knows the depth and breadth of life who has not been through the waters of affliction. The broad place is open to the fresh air and the bright sunshine. Delivered from dank and dreary narrow regions, we can rejoice in our God-given liberty. This bliss is partly enjoyed on earth; it will be perfect in heaven, the large place of life and liberty.— Pul Com.

service of Astarte, an ancient form of the most hideous of all superstitions."—Spk. Com.

God delivers the poor

a Job xxxiii. 15-28; Ps. cxix. 67, 71; He. xii 11.

b "The tables of the Orientals in ancient times were prob like what they are now—easily movable; trays set on short feet, raising them a few inches from the ground."—Rich.

Ps. xxiii. 5.

c "Let not anger entice thee to scorning."—Delitzsch.

"The truth is, when we are under any affliction, we are generally troubled with a malicious kind of melancholy; we only dwell and pore upon the sad and dark occurrances of Providence; but never take notice of the more benign and bright ones."—Bp. Hopkins.

God regards not the wealth and power of man

d Delitzsch trans. this verse,—"Shall thy crying place thee beyond distress, and all the efforts of strength?"

e Job iii. 3-14; vi. 8, 9; vii. 1; x. 18; xiv. 13; xvi. 22; xxiii. 3; xxxi. 35.

f "Thou has not acquiesced in afflictions, wh. are means of spiritual health, but hast perverted them into occasions of sin."—Wordsworth.

g He. xi. 25.

Divine teachings are plain to all a "Because He, as a sovereign, explains not all His dealings, Job has presumed to teach Him."—Fausett.

b See Job xxxiv. 13.

c "Concerning which men sing."—Vulg.

Ps. xxxiv. 3.

d Ps. xix. 1-4.

"Aquaint thyself with God, if thou wouldst taste
His works. Admitted once to His embrace,
Thou shall perceive that thou wast blind before:
Thine eye shall be instructed; and thine heart
Made pure shall relish, with divine delight Till then unfelt, what hands divine have wrought."
—Cowper.

We don't know of the Divine mind in matter, bear in mind.

God is great in His works, the rain and the clouds e "At this point it is supposed Elihu beholds the approaching tempest. As he catches sight of it he breaks off from his argument to give a voice to the storm, to describe and interpret it."—Cox.

f 1 Co. xiii. 12.

g Ps. cxlviii. 8.

the clouds and the light

h Lit. crashing.

i Ps. xviii. 11, Isa. xl. 22.

j Fig. for lowest depths.

Elihu appears to represent the lightning as so intense that it will illuminate the very depths of the sea.

22–25. (22) exalteth, R. V., "doeth loftily in his power," exalts Himself in the exhibition of His power. who . . him? this is called by some the keynote to Elihu's discourse.[a] Life is a school; God teaches by His Providence. (23) Who,[b] etc., comp. Isa. xl. 12–14. (24) magnify his work, by submission, by learning well the moral and spiritual lessons He would teach thereby. behold, R. V., "Whereof men have sung,"[c] i. e., celebrated in hymns of praise. (25) Every man,[d] R. V., "All men have looked thereon." man may, etc., they behold His works with awe.

Admiring God's works. — It is a miserable thing to sink into that cynical pessimism that can only criticise adversely and can never see and enjoy merit. It passes for cleverness, but it is really a form of dulness, for it is the result of a want of capacity to perceive the good points of that which only arrests attention on account of its real or supposed defects. This habit of mind prevents us from rising to any true greatness ourselves, because men are drawn upwards by admiration. When, however, we have learnt to admire the works of God, it is only fitting that we should go on and adore their great Artificer. The praise of the picture is the praise of the artist. Yet there are lovers of Nature who seem to forget her Author. — W. F. Adeney.

Reception of power.— When a lecturer on electricity wants to show an example of a human body surcharged with fire he places a person on a stool with glass legs. The glass serves to isolate him from the earth, because it will not conduct fire, the electric fluid. Were it not for this, however much might be poured into his frame, it would be carried away by the earth; but, when thus isolated from it, he retains all that enters him. You see no fire, you hear no fire; but you are told that it is pouring into him. Presently you are challenged to the proof; asked to come near, and hold your hand close to his person; when you do so a spark of fire shoots out towards you. If thou, then, wouldst have thy soul surcharged with the fire of God, so that those who come nigh to thee shall feel some mysterious influence proceeding out from thee, thou must draw nigh to the source of that fire, to the throne of God and of the Lamb, and shut thyself out from the world — that cold world which so swiftly steals our fire away; then the fire shall fill thee; and, when thou comest forth, holy power will attend thee.— W. Arthur.

26–28. (26) know him not,[e] cannot fully, or even adequately, apprehend Him.[f] number of his years, Ps. xc. 2; cii. 27. (27) maketh small, R. V., "For he draweth up the drops of water, which distil in rain from his vapour."[g] (28) abundantly, better "upon the multitude of mankind," i. e. everywhere.

God's power over nature.— Prof. Tyndall has said that to answer a prayer for rain would require as great a change in the laws of nature as it would to roll the St. Lawrence up the Falls of Niagara. But there is no need of changing the laws of nature to answer a prayer for rain. All that is necessary is to use the laws, not to break them. If I need a shower on my lawn, I turn the water on to the hose and produce a shower. Cannot God do on a large scale what any of us can do on a small scale? A child is caught in the machinery of a great factory; to reverse that machinery by its own laws would be a great cost and labor. But the owner can turn off a band and rescue the child in a moment. Cannot God do as much with the machinery of the universe?— Peloubet.

29–31. (29) spreadings, the wondrous way in wh. they cover the heavens, and lie fold on fold. noise,[h] etc., R. V., "The thunderings of his pavilion," the noise of thunder reverberating in the clouds. God is poetically said to have His pavilion amidst dark clouds.[i] (30) light, lightning, seen against the dark clouds. upon it, R. V., "around him." bottom, marg. roots.[j] God's power seen not only in the waters of the clouds, but also in the waters of the sea (Gen. i. 9). (31) by them, by His clouds God works two opposite effects. He executes judgment upon the peoples, destroying their crops with His thunderbolts. he giveth meat, restoring to the parched earth its fertility by means of copious and refreshing showers. — Rawlinson.

The shadowing of light. — Light makes some things invisible. Were it not for darkness and the shadow of the earth, the noblest part of creation had remained unseen, and the stars of heaven as invisible as on the fourth day, when they were created above the horizon with the sun, and there was not an eye to behold them. The greatest mystery of religion is expressed by adum-bration; and in the noblest part of Jewish types we find the cherubim shadowing the mercy-seat. Life itself is but the shadow of death, and souls departed but the shadow of the living. All things fall under this name. The sun itself is but the dark simulacrum, and light but the shadow of God. — T. Browne. Light of God. — What folly it is to imagine that I cannot expect God to be with me every moment! Look at the sunshine! Have you ever said, "Oh, how can I keep that sunlight, and be sure that I shall have it to use while working?" Is not God, who made the sun to shine, also willing and able to let His light and His presence so shine through me that I can walk all the day with God nearer to me than anything in nature? Praise God, He can do it.— Andrew Murray. The transforming power of light. — The most entrancing vision of beauty I ever beheld was the view from the Eiffel Tower, looking down at night upon the enclosure of the Exposition buildings in Paris. The architecture of the buildings themselves was outlined in golden and silver light. The very trees bore fruit of electric lights. The groups of statuary were illuminated. The lawns were like immense emeralds surrounded by frames of golden light. The illuminated fountains, not from light thrown upon them but from light underneath, threw up their waters in a glorious changing harmony of brilliant colors, like variegated fireworks. It was like a dream of Paradise, a vision of fairy-land. Then it came to me that all this beauty was made from the grass and water and light of our common, every-day life, and that so God can take the materials now in our souls, and in society, and transform them into the glories of His new Jerusalem. Vision of the dawning light. — Aristotle, in one of his works, fancies the feelings of one who, having lived in darkness all his life, should for the first time behold the rising of the sun. He might have some idea of the world from the light of candles, or of the stars, but when the sun rose, what new glories would burst on his vision. The dangers, too, would be shown in clearer light, as well as the safe roads. So Christ was the dayspring from on high.

32, 33. (32) clouds, R. V., "He covereth his hands with the lightning: and giveth it a charge that it strike the mark." [a] (33) The noise, of thunder following the lightning flash. concerning it, R. V., "concerning him." vapour, R. V., "the storm that cometh up." Even the cattle hear with terror his awful voice.[b]

God's power over nature. — All nature is a magazine of means prepared by the Almighty, to be employed by Him, either in judgment or in mercy. His goodness is exhibited in the copious or softly falling shower; his terrible majesty and awful displeasure against sin, in the forked lightning and crashing thunder. Even the irrational creatures are gladdened by the one, but alarmed and terrified by the other. All the elements of nature are under the Almighty's control. The lightning-flash or thunderbolt has its commission from the Creator. "He commandeth concerning it where it shall strike." Alexis, the friend of Luther, is struck dead by a flash of lightning, while Luther himself, close by his side, remains unhurt. — Hom. Com. Light in darkness. — It was out of the cloud that the deluge came, yet it is upon it that the bow is set! The cloud is a thing of darkness, yet God chooses it for the place where He bends the arch of light! Such is the way of our God. He knows that we need the cloud, and that a bright sky without a speck or shadow would not suit us in our passage to the Kingdom. Therefore He draws the cloud above us, not once in a lifetime, but many times. But lest the gloom should appall us, He braids the cloud with sunshine — nay, makes it the object which gleams to our eye with the very fairest hues of heaven. Yes, it is not merely light, after the darkness has fled away. That we shall one day know — how fully! But it is light in darkness; light beaming out of a ray produced by that darkness! Water from the rock, wells from the sand, light from the very cloud that darkens — life in the very midst of death! This is the marvel — this is the joy. Peace in trouble, gladness in sorrow; nay, peace and gladness produced by the very tribulation itself; peace and gladness which nothing but that tribulation could have produced! Such is the deep love of God; and such is the way in which He makes all things work together for good to us. — Horatius Bonar.

the shadowing of the light

"When Alexander the Great visited the Greek philosopher, Diogenes, he asked him if there was anything that he could give him. He got this short answer, 'I want nothing but that you should stand from between me and the sun.' One thing there is which should never satisfy and content us; and that is, 'anything that stands between our souls and Christ.'" — J. C. Ryle.

"So have I seen the sun with a little ray of distant light challenge all the powers of darkness, and without violence and noise, climbing up the hill, hath made night so to retire that its memory was lost in the joys and sprightliness of the morning."— Bishop Taylor.

a "He clotheth His hands with lightning, and giveth it command whom it shall reach." — Spk. Com.

"Both hands He covereth over with light, and directeth it as one that hitteth the mark." — Delitzsch.

"His hands he covereth with lightning, and He giveth it command against the enemy." — Revised Eng. Bib.

b "Some animals give various intimations that they are sensible of the approach of a storm."—Fausset.

"Flesh is translucent to inner light. A face is lighted by a thought, by a joy. Much more by Him who is the Light of the World." — Bp. Warren.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-SEVENTH.

1, 2. (1) At this, the thunder Elihu had just spoken of; ch. xxxvi. 33. This part of the discourse may have been delivered amid the loud thunder-claps. trembleth,[a] palpitates with terror and admiration. (2) attentively,[b] Heb. hear in hearing. noise,[c] or roar. the sound, or murmuring; so we speak of the muttering of the thunder.

The voice of God in nature (Arab legend). — Nimrod attempted the life of the child Abraham, because the soothsayers announced that he would prove formidable to the gods. His mother concealed him for fifteen years in a cave. When she thought that the danger was past she led him forth from the cave for the first time. It was a wild, stormy night. The angel of the wind was flapping his mighty wings; one solitary star peeped through a rift in the clouds. Abraham saw nothing but darkness, heard nothing but the sighs of the bride of the wind. Then he thought that the pure light which looked down so calmly amid the war of nature's elements must be the Supreme Power which had given unity and order to the universe. He fell down and worshiped it. But when the star faded away, Abraham saw his error, and cried, "I will never worship that which fadeth away." The bright moon now arose resplendent with light. Abraham cried, "This is not my God; I will not worship that which fadeth away." Then the sun arose in all his majesty and power; and the wonders of creation, illuminated by his rays, unfolded themselves to Abraham's astonished gaze. "This is my Lord and my God," he cried in a transport of delight, as he threw himself on the ground to worship. But the sun also finished his course and sank beneath the western horizon. "This is not my Lord and my God," cried Abraham; "I will not worship that which fadeth away. I look up to Him who has created the small and the greatest light, to the Lord of heaven and earth. He is my Lord and my God." — Franke.

3—5. (3) directeth, or sendeth it forth. ends, Heb. wings, or skirts. Earth was sometimes compared to a bird with wings spread out; sometimes to an extended garment.[d] (4) of his excellency, R. V., "majesty." "As once more the peal follows the flash he bids them listen to the voice which thunders out its challenge against iniquity and mark how nothing is held back, but the whole contents of the sky — rain, hail, wind,— all discharged on the troubled earth." — Cox. (5) marvellously, thunder in Arabia is sublimely terrible.

The storm. —

'Tis listening fear, and dumb amazement all,
When to the startled eye, the sudden flame Appears far South, eruptive through the cloud;
And following slower, in explosion vast,
The thunder raises his tremendous voice.
At first heard solemn, o'er the verge of Heaven,
The tempest growls; but as it nearer comes,
And rolls its awful burden on the world,
The lightnings flash a larger curve, and more
The noise astounds: till overhead a sheet
Of lurid flame discloses wide; then shuts
And opens wider, shuts, and opens still Expansive, wrapping ether in a blaze.
Follows the loosened aggravated roar,
Enlarging, deepening, mingling; peal on peal Crush'd horrible, convulsing heaven and earth. — Thomson.

6—8. (6) snow, "the fall of snow is always portentous to the mind of an Eastern." Be thou, or fall thou. small . . great, ordinary gentle rains, and the severe rains attending thunder-storms. (7) sealeth up, stops, brings to a standstill. This is true of storm-times, but more so of winter-time, and to it Elihu may be here referring. his work, and so realize their continued dependence on Him.[e] (8) places, lairs. Some require sheltering, some become torpid, hibernate.[f]

the voice of the Lord

a Comp. Shakespeare in "Macbeth." "And make my seated heart knock at my ribs, against the use of nature."

b Ps lxxxix. 7; Je. v. 22.

c "The word means commotion, that which is fitted to produce perturbation or disquiet." — Barnes.

"Nature is avariciously frugal; in matter, it allows no atom to elude its grasp; in mind, no thought or feeling to perish. It gathers up the fragments that nothing be lost." — David Thomas.

the noise of the storm

d De. xxii. 12; Nu. xv. 38.

"The universe is the realized thought of God." — Carlyle

"Nature's self, which is the breath of God, or His pure word by miracle revealed." — Wordsworth.

"Wise is Nature's plan,
Who, in her realm as in the soul of man,
Alternates storm with calm, and the loud noon
With dewy evening's soft and sacred lull." — Paul H. Hayne.

the snow, the rain,— winter

e "God seals the works of men in winter, in order that they may recognize His work, and may adore Him, who enables them to work, and also disables them fr. working when He wills." — Wordsworth

f "The desolation of the fields, at

The teaching of snow. — It is well to mark the ways of God in nature as well as in grace. I. We see the wisdom and goodness of God in the formation of snow, as indeed we do in all the varied productions and operations in the natural world. II. But let us look at the uses of snow for a further exemplification of this wisdom and goodness of God. 1. Snow-water is peculiarly purifying; 2. Snow waters the earth. III. The evanescent nature of snow. IV. Snow may teach the power of God and the impotency of man. — J. S. Broad.

Snow in Switzerland. — In a work, Voyages aux Alpes, which has recently been published in Paris, a curious account is given of an avalanche which occurred in Switzerland many years ago. During the absence of a Swiss farmer, his cottage and stable were, by the fall of the avalanche, inclosed in snow; his wife and daughter were at the time in the stable. Six weeks afterwards, the snow having melted a little, an opening was effected, and the two females were found alive, having been supported by the milk of the cow during that long period. The space left free from the snow was sufficient for air, and there was a good winter's stock of provisions for the cow near the stable. — Whitecross.

God's bidding, is poetically graphic." — Fausset.

Ps. civ. 22; cxl. 2.

Ridge of the mountain wave, lower thy crest!
Wail of Euroclydon, be thou at rest!
Sorrow can never be, darkness must fly,
Where saith the Light of light, Peace! It is I!

9, 10. (9) south, lit. chamber.[a] The term "chamber" is most probably used in the sense of "treasury." "He bringeth the wind out of His treasuries." The meaning probably is, out of its (or, His) chamber cometh the whirlwind."[b]—Cam. Bib. north, Heb. scattering winds; "cold from the cloud-sweepers." — Delitzsch. (10) breath, gentle influence in the still night, not by violent wind. straitened, congealed; held in from flowing.

Whirlwinds in the east (vs. 9). — It was about this time when the wind began to be felt by us, coming in short and sudden puffs, which, instead of cooling and refreshing, oppressed us even more than the calm; each of those blasts seeming like the hot and dry vapor of an oven, just at the moment of its being opened. The southern desert was now covered with a dull red mist, not unlike the sunrise skies of our northern climates on a rainy morning; and soon afterwards we saw large columns of sand and dust whirled up into the air, and carried along in a body over the plain with a slow and stately motion. One of these passed within a few hundred yards of us, to the northward, having been driven over a large tract of stony land, to a distance of perhaps twenty miles from the place of its rising. It was apparently from eighty to a hundred feet in diameter, and was certainly of sufficient force, by its constant whirling motion, to throw both men and animals off their legs, so that if crossing a crowded caravan, and broken by the interruption of its course, the danger of suffocation to those buried beneath its fall would be very great, though, if persons were prepared for it, it might not perhaps be fatal. — F. S. Buckingham.

the winter and the frost

a Compare Job ix. 9.

b "Savary says of the south wind, wh. blows in Egypt from Feb. to May, that it fills the atmosphere with a fine dust, rendering breathing difficult...Sometimes it appears in the form of a furious whirlwind, which advances with great rapidity, and which is highly injurious to those who traverse the desert. It drives before it clouds of burning sand; the horizon appears covered with a thick veil, and the sun appears red as blood." — Barnes.

11—13. (11) by watering, R. V., "Yea, He ladeth the thick cloud with moisture; He spreadeth abroad the cloud of His lightning." bright cloud,[c] returning brightness figured as if it were a cloud scattering the rain-clouds. (12) it, the cloud of light, or lightning. counsels, lit. steering.[d] on the face, refreshing the thirsty surface of the earth. the world, etc., R. V., "the habitable globe." (13) He causeth,[e] God sends it, God controls it. "He has different purposes in directing the rain hither or thither. Sometimes His object is to punish by violent or excessive rainfall; sometimes it is to fertilize His own special land; sometimes it is out of kindness to men generally." —Rawlinson.

rains exhaust the clouds

c The burst of lightning shattering the clouds appears to be described.

d Pr. xi. 14.

e For correction, as Deluge; for mercy, as in yearly overflow of the Nile.

The power of rain. — Rain is most potential, not when it is yet rain, but when it is in the lion's paw; when it is in the foot of the deer; when it is in the horn of the unicorn; when it is in the hand and brain of man; when it has been organized and exists in some invisible latent form, giving to life its potency. Not printed truth is the most potential form of the truth. When it has disappeared as truth and reappeared as life, then it is the truth of God, as rain and snow, which, coming down in visible forms, lose their life, find it again, and are more mighty than ever. — Beecher. The rain storm governed by God. — The clouds seem to pass over the heavens in wild confusion. We can see no reins to hold them in, nor any whip to drive them on. The science of meteorology is about the most backward of all the sciences, because it is so difficult to reduce the phenomena of the weather to their place in an orderly scheme, on account of their ceaseless variations and apparently boundless irregularities. But we are already seeing that there are laws behind the weather, and some of them are already known. Hence our weather prognostications in the newspapers. Now, the Scripture view of the weather, as much as that of the most orderly and changeless phenomena, attributes all its movements to the will of God. God is in what looks to us most conflicting and purposeless. If He is steering it, we can trust to Him to bring it to a happy end.— Pul. Com.

Ps. cxlviii. 8: Joel ii. 23.

"The more a man follows Nature, and is obedient to her laws, the longer he will live; the farther he deviates from these, the shorter will be his existence."— Hufeland.

Rain. —

The clouds consign their treasures to the fields;
And, softly shaking on the dimpled pool
Prelusive drops, let all their moisture flow
In large effusion o'er the freshen'd world. — Thomson.

the wondrous works of God

14, 15. (14) this, i. e. the lessons conveyed by such things. stand still, be calm and quiet; cease from restless complainings. (15) disposed them,[a] if Job could not compass, and fitly explain God's work in nature, how could he expect to explain the more difficult questions of Div. Providence? light, lightning. Some have referred this also to rainbow. shine, or flash.

[a] 1 Sa. ii. 3; Pr. iii. 19, 20; Je. x. 12, 13.

God's greatness in nature.— God's greatness and our own littleness are never more realized than in the intelligent contemplation of the arrangements in nature in relation to the earth, and of the mechanism of the heavens, of which the earth forms a part. Of God's work in creation we understand but little; still less of His secret purposes and providential procedure; least of all, of Himself. The origin of the universe, except as God reveals it, is entirely hidden from our knowledge. Science, of itself, is able to teach nothing as to the fact of creation, or of the first great cause, except that there is one — an intelligence infinite in power and wisdom. The distance of the time when God first "disposed," or put His Almighty hand to the work, is far beyond man's conception, millions of years being revealed in the earth's strata as antecedent to man's existence.— Hom. Com.

"What throbbings of deep joy pulsate through all I see; from the full bud whose unctuous sheath is glittering in the moon, up through the system of created things, even to the flaming ranks of seraphim." — Alford.

God in nature.—

A present Deity in all.
It is His presence that diffuses charms
Unspeakable o'er mountain, wood, and stream;
To think that He who hears the heavenly choir
Harkens complacent to the woodland song;
To think that He who rolls yon solar sphere,
Uplifts the warbling songster to the sky.
To mark His presence in the mighty bow
That spans the clouds, as in the tints minute
Of tiniest flower; to hear His awful voice
In thunders speak, and whisper in the gale;
To know and feel His care for all that lives;
'Tis this that makes the barren waste appear
A fruitful field, each grove a paradise.— Grahame.

"Do not let the empty cup be your first teacher of the blessings you had when it was full. Seek, as a plain duty, to cultivate a buoyant, joyous sense of the crowded kindnesses of God in your daily life."— Alexander Mc-Laren.

the mysteriousness of a cloudy firmament

16, 17. (16) balancings, poisings; attemperings of weight; arrangements by which they are upheld, or fall as vapor, and rain.[b] (17) garments are warm, through the changed atmosphere giving warmth to thy body.

God's works are "wondrous." They are stamped with the impress of thought. The most advanced science is but man's blundering attempt to spell out God's hieroglyphics written in the great book of nature. The very difficulties of nature spring from its vast complexity. The Architect of the universe is an infinite Artist, Mathematician, Physiologist.— Pul. Com.

[b] "The phenomena of the clouds would be among the first that would attract the attention of man, and in the early times of Job it is not to be supposed that the subject could be explained." —Barnes.

Spirit of nature.—

And I have felt
A presence that disturbs me with the joy
Of elevated thoughts; a sense sublime
Of something far more deeply interfused,
Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns,
And the round ocean, and the living air,
And the blue sky, and in the mind of man:
A motion and a spirit, that impels
All thinking things, all objects of all thought,
And rolls through all things.— Wordsworth.

18—20. (18) spread out, "firmament" is regarded as a solid body spread out, Gen. i. 6, 7.[a] strong, etc., "wh. for firmness is like a molten mirror." looking glass, mirror, wh. was made of plates of metal highly polished.[b] The sky was regarded as a solid bright expanse, so like a mirror. (19) order, frame; carefully and fittingly arrange. darkness, of mind; ignorance. Elihu again intimates that Job's hurried and intense speeches were unworthy; and he demands of Job with what words of man such a Being is to be addressed, if one sought to contend with Him. (20) if . . up, more correctly, "shall one wish to be destroyed?" as Job had done.[c]

The pleasure of surveying the heavens.— I invariably experience a variety of sensations when I "survey the heavens" on a calm, clear night, about the end of the month of May. I can then inhale the sweets of the woodbine and other flowers, whose fragrance is drawn out by the gentle dews of evening. The nightingale breaks the silence by his sweet and varied notes; and the full moon "walking in brightness," and rendered still more beautiful by the lustre of so many shining stars, which appear in the wide-extended firmament, completes the loveliness of this nocturnal scene. Then I begin to reflect upon my own insignificance, and to ask myself what I am, that the great Author of the universe should be mindful of me. His mercy, however, then presents itself to me, as well as His majesty, and the former affects me more than the latter. I listen to the bird which appears to be pouring forth his little tribute of gratitude and praise, and my heart prompts me to do the same. The very perfume of the flowers seems to be an incense ascending up to heaven; and with these feelings I am able to enjoy the calm tranquillity of the evening. — Jesse.

21—24. (21) now, while the storm-cloud hung so thick and low. So there was a darkness about the spirit of Job wh. kept him fr. discerning God's gracious ways. cleanseth them, cleareth them; so that the sunlight comes again to view. (22) fair weather,[d] R. V., "golden splendor," sunshine.[e] terrible majesty, R. V., "God hath upon him terrible majesty," therefore there should be cherished holy awe of Him. (23) find him out, so as fully to know the mystery of His ways. excellent,[f] excelling others; and beyond our thought. not afflict, not in mere punishment, only as chastisement.[g] (24) fear him, with reverent, godly fear. wise, i. e. in their own conceits.[h]

The bright light in the clouds. — Here appears to be a figurative allusion to the occurrences which are under the control of Divine Providence under the similitude of clouds, and the bright design which is sometimes beyond the reach of the human mind to understand. I. These occurrences resemble the clouds sometimes —1. In their sudden appearance; 2. In their various magnitude; 3. In their happy effects. II. There is a bright light in every cloud, or something cheering in all the dispensations of Providence. 1. The character of God is a bright light; 2. The promises are a bright light in the clouds: 3. The past conduct of God is a bright light in the clouds. III. There are, however, various causes which frequently prevent us from seeing the bright light in the clouds. 1. Constitutional or physical dejection will do this; 2. There are, however, other causes, both intellectual and moral, such as —(a) Defective views of Divine truth; (b) Want of faith in the wisdom and goodness of God.

God veils His glory in clouds. — The day often begins with clouds about the sun. Then we can look at the splendor of the dawn, because the ever-shifting panorama of crimson and gold that heralds in the day is visible to us in colors that our eyes can endure to look at. God begins the education of his children in a light that is tempered to suit their feeble vision. But a common mistake is to forget that God is condescending to our weakness, and to limit our conception of God to the measured revelation. Thus we form partial and human ideas of God. If His cloud is thick and dark we do not see His glorious light, and then we accuse Him of the darkness, and narrow and unjust thoughts of God spring up in our hearts. Difficulties in nature and Providence trouble us. Vexatious thoughts about the apparent imperfection of God's works fill our minds with doubt. And all the while the simple truth is that God is merciful and considerate, veiling Himself in clouds for the very purpose of sparing us.— Pul. Com.— The Sun of Righteousness. — "I have seen a picture that I used at one time to think a good deal of, but now that I have come to look at it more closely, I would not put it in my house except I turned the face to the wall. It represents Christ standing at a door knocking and having the strength and beauty of the sky

a "Elsewhere the hemispheric firmament is likened to a clear sapphire (Ex. xxiv. 10); a covering (Ps. civ. 2); a gauze (Isa xl. 22)."—Delitzsch.

b "Specimens are found in Egyptian monuments of extreme antiquity."—Spk. Com.

c "Durst a man speak before Him, that he is, without cause, being destroyed?"—Umbreit.

the bright light in the cloud

d LXX., "clouds shining like gold."

e "O, wait! wait patiently for Him and you shall see. A breath from Him will clear all mysteries from your life, just as a wind from Him sweeps the darkness from the sky and suffuses it with golden light."—Cox.

f "All God's attributes harmonize with each other, and find their perfect manifestation in love."—Spk. Com.

g La. iii. 32, 33; He. xii. 10.

h Mat. xi. 25; 1 Co. i. 26.

"If a man whose body was radiant and bright as the sun were walking through a land of Egyptian darkness, all who followed him would actually walk in the light, and the closer they kept to him the clearer their light would be and the safer their road. He who follows Christ follows One from whom light streams upon the road we are to go —an illuminated Man—laying bare its hidden pitfalls, discovering its stumbling-stones, showing all its turnings and windings, and enabling us to walk safely, surely, and cheerfully on our way (John viii. 12.)"—G. S. Bowes.

a big lantern in his hand. Why! you might as well hang up a lantern to the sun as put one into Christ's hand. He is the Sun of Righteousness, and it is our privilege to walk in the light of an unclouded sun." — D. L. Moody.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-EIGHTH.

God speaks to Job out of the whirlwind

1—3. (1) the Lord answered, by a voice heard: no form was seen. "Jehovah, even when condescending to speak with men, must veil Himself in the storm cloud, in which He descends and approaches the earth. His revelation of Himself to Job, at least, was pastly to rebuke him, for he had sinned against His majesty, and He veils Himself in terrors." — Cam. Bib. Job, not the friends; not Elihu. (2) darkeneth counsel, makes the subject darker.[a] (3) Gird, etc., for contending the matter with God, as He had desired to do.[b] like a man, boldly, courageously; as one entereth upon a battle.

The discourses of Jehovah. — At length, in answer to the repeated appeals of Job, the Almighty appears, not to crush and overwhelm, as fear had often suggested, but to reason with his servant; to appeal to his spiritual intelligence, rather than to smite him into lower prostration by some thunderbolts of rebuke. "Come now, and let us reason together," is the gracious invitation of him who is Eternal Reason amidst the wild clamors of our passion and despondency. At the same time, this revelation of the majesty of God humiliates and purifies the recipient of it, teaching him his own littleness and limitation in presence of this fulness of might and of wisdom. God, as the Almighty and only Wise, with whom no mortal may contend in judgment, may appoint the sufferings of the righteous for their probation and purification. And thus the great problem of the book, and the enigma of life, receives from the highest Source its long-delayed solution. — Pul. Com. — The power of the Word. — All human speculations have alloy about them — that Word is perfect. All human speculations fail — that Word abideth. The Jew hated it — but it lived on, while the veil was torn away from the shrine which the Shekinah had forsaken, and while Jerusalem itself was destroyed. The Greek derided it — but it has seen his philosophy effete, and his Acropolis in ruins. The Roman threw it to the flames — but it rose from its ashes, and swooped down upon the fallen eagle. The reasoner cast it into the furnace, which his own malignity had heated "seven times hotter than its wont," but it came out without the smell of fire. The Papist fastened serpents around it to poison it — but it shook them off and felt no harm. The infidel cast it overboard in a tempest of sophistry and sarcasm — but it rode gallantly upon the crest of the proud waters. And it is living still — yet heard in the loudest swelling of the storm — it has been speaking all the while — it is speaking now. The world gets higher at its every tone, and it shall ultimately speak in power, until it has spoken this dismantled planet up again into the smiling brotherhood of worlds which kept their first estate, and God, welcoming the prodigal, shall look at it as He did in the beginning, and pronounced it to be very good. — W. M. Punshon.

a "Obscureth and distorteth the wise and gracious counsel of God in afflicting him, by words without knowledge, in which he presumptuously asserts his own righteousness, and impugns God's justice." — Wordsworth.

b Job. ix. 34, 35; xiii. 22; xxiii. 3, xxxi. 35.

"When George Stevenson was trying to pass his bill for railways in England, a peer said to him, 'Suppose that a cow were to get on the line when one of your new-fangled engines was on the road?' 'So much the worst for the cow,' said he. If you get into a collision with God, it is so much the worse for you. Woe to the man that striveth with his Maker."—F. B. Meyer.

human life a modern thing in the creation

4, 5, (4) Where, etc., ironical allusion to the comparison between Job's short life and God's eternity. To understand the cause of things man should have been present at their origin. Questions such as these would most effectively humble the spirit of Job. laid the foundations, lit. "when I founded it;" created or established it. hast understanding, art capable of judging. (5) laid the measures, as the architect. stretched the line, as the carpenter and builder.[c] Were you there to see? can you tell from your own observation?

The insignificance of a man as a creature. — This subject implies two facts. 1. That God has made special communications to man; 2. That man should pay special attention to them. Adopting a somewhat paraphrastic method of treatment — I. What is thine intellect to Mine? II. What is thine age to Mine? III. What is thy power to Mine? IV. What is thy independency to Mine? For He is — 1. Independent in being; 2. In action. This subject serves — (1) To rebuke all disposition to pronounce an opinion upon the ways of God; (2) To suggest that our grand effort ought to be to cultivate a loving trust in the Divine character, rather than to comprehend the Divine procedure; (3) To enable us to appreciate the glorious service of Christianity. — Thomas.

c Ge. i, ; ii. 4; He. i. 10.

"We talk of human life as a journey; but how variously is that journey performed! There are those who come forth girt and shod and mantled to walk on velvet lawns and smooth terraces, where every gale is arrested and every beam is tempered.

Man's work and God's.— We find no difficulty in distinguishing between the works of God and the works of man. God's works are absolutely perfect; man's are only relatively so. The most perfect needle may be perfect for the work to which it is adapted; but make it a microscopic object, and the smooth hole appears ragged and the needle becomes a honey-combed poker. Take, on the contrary, a hair from the leg of a fly or the dust from a butterfly's wing. Magnify these, and they are seen to be absolutely perfect. — F. Hudson Taylor.—Man — a late creation. — Who can read all these questions without feeling that man came very late into the field of creation? No deference is paid to his venerableness. The Lord does not accost him as a thing of ancient time as compared with the creation of which he is a part. Everything was here before man came: the earth was founded, the stars shone, the seas rolled in their infinite channels; the Pleiades were sprinkled on the blue of heaven, and the band of Orion was a fact before poor Job was born. It would seem as if everything had been done that could have been done by way of preparation for him! He brought nothing with him into this creation, not even one little star, or one tiny flower, or one singing bird: the house was furnished in every chamber for the reception of this visitor. This is scientific according to the science of the passing time. — Peop. Bib.

There are others who walk on the alpine path of life, against driving misery, and through stormy sorrows, over sharp afflictions; walk with bare feet and naked breast, jaded, mangled, and chilled." — Sydney Smith.

6, 7. (6) fastened, or sunk.[a] corner stone, wh. sustains the principal weight of the building.[b] (7) morning stars, they, as it were, sang a song of loud acclaim on witnessing the new marvel. Their priority to the earth is implied, since they witness its birth. Their song is, of course, that silent song of sympathy, whereof Shakespeare speaks when he says, "Each in its motion like an angel sings." — Pul. Com. sons of God, the angels.[c] For Biblical doctrine of "angels" comp. Gen. xxviii. 12; xxxii. 2 ff.; Deut. xxxiii. 2. shouted, in chorus.[d]

The creation of the earth is likened to the rearing of a great edifice, whose extent was determined by line, whose pillars were sunk in their bases, and its corner-stone laid with shoutings and songs of rejoicing among the heavenly hosts (comp. Ezra iii. 10 seq.; Zech. iv. 7).

> Such music, as 'tis said,
> Before was never made,
> But when of old the sons of morning sung,
> While the Creator great
> His constellations set,
> And the well-balanced world on hinges hung;
> And cast the dark foundations deep,
> And bid the weltering waves their oozy channel keep.
> — Hymn on the Nativity.

the morning stars singing at the creation

a "Reference is to a foundation-stone that sinks or settles down into clay or mire until it becomes solid." — Barnes.

b Ps. cxviii. 22; Zec. iv. 7.

c "This repres. of creation is a poetical development of the first chap. of Gen., full, however, of personifications and metaphors of wh. no trace is to be found in that document. The singing and shouts are, so to speak, an echo of the Creator's declaration, 'God saw that it was good.'" — Spk. Com.

d Comp. Ezr. iii. 10–13; Zec. iv. 7; Lu. ii. 9–13; Re. xix. 1–6.

8—11. (8) with doors, gates, such as shut up water in a dam; flood-gates. Such are the shores, holding back the ocean.[e] brake forth, at the uplifting of the mountains, the swirling waters were set in place by God. The mighty sea "under the figure of a vast Being, born of Chaos, full of proud ambition, but submissively in the power of God." — Genung. (9) garment, of this ocean-babe. thick darkness, mist as its swaddling clothes. (10) brake up for it, R. V., "And prescribed for it my decree,"[f] given in next verse. (11) proud waves, a beautiful poetic figure. The waves seem as if they would overwhelm, but God's rugged rocks and ribbed sand effectually quell their pride.[g]

The ocean. —

> "Thou glorious mirror, where the Almighty's form > Glasses itself in tempests; in all time; —
> Calm or convulsed, in breeze, or gale, or storm, > Icing the pole, or in the torrid clime
> Dark-heaving — boundless, endless, and sublime,
> The image of eternity, the throne
> Of the Invisible; even from out thy slime
> The monsters of the deep are made; each zone > Obeys thee: thou goest forth, dread, fathomless, alone."
> —Byron.

the boundaries of the ocean

e Ge. i. 9, 10; Je. v. 22.

f "The shore, with its broken precipices and rugged rocks, is God's decree, wh. He has set to restrain the raging of the sea." — Wordsworth.

"Then I broke its course with My barrier." — Luther.

Vulg., "I surrounded it with My limits."

LXX. "I placed boundaries to it."

g Ps. lxxxix. 9; Mar. iv. 39.

12—15. (12) morning, to arise and appear. since thy days, since thou wast created. dayspring, dawn,[h] aurora. know his place, the point of the day-dawn

h Lu. i. 78.

sky in which morning first appears differs through the year. Yet perfect order controls the variety. (13) ends, wings; extremities. wicked, etc., whose evil schemes are spoiled by returning light.[a] (14) R. V., "It is changed as clay under the seal,[b] and all things stands forth as a garment." All things with clear-cut impression as clay under the seal and vivid coloring stand forth under the light, and together form a various, many-colored garment, in which the earth is robed. they stand, the objects of earth; grass and flowers stand out, radiant with the rich hues. (15) their light, the light that the wicked prefer is night and darkness.[c] high arm,[d] of the wicked. broken, by losing its opportunity; the night in wh. it works.

Turned as clay to the seal (vs. 14).— The birds pillage the granary of Joseph extremely, where the corn of Egypt is deposited that is paid as a tax to the grand seignior, for it is quite uncovered at the top, there being little or no rain in that country; its doors, however, are kept carefully sealed, but its inspectors do not make use of wax upon this occasion, but put their seal upon a handful of clay, with which they cover the lock of the door. This serves instead of wax, and it is visible; things of the greatest value might be safely sealed up in the same manner. — Harmer.— Surrender to God's will. — The clay has no option but to be what the potter would make it; but somehow you and I possess the marvelous power of saying "Yes" and "No" to God. If you say "Yes," then you have the blessedness of the beatitudes; if you say "No," 'Woe to him that striveth with his Maker!" God wants to make you, but you have the power to resist and you have used it. A great Christain worker, when dying, was asked the secret of his saintliness. He modestly disclaimed any title to saintliness, but he said, "The secret of my life is that I have said 'Yes' to Christ." I think I hear that clay saying "Yes" to the potter every time he touches it. With all your heart say "Yes" to Jesus Christ, and let Him have a chance to make you over again. — F. B. Meyer.

[a] "This has a special reference to Job's discourse, ch. xxiv. He there represented the evil-doers as working with impunity, in darkness; here he is told that the light, which they hate and dread, has a direct mission to overthrow them." — Spk. Com.

[b] "The expression turned may poss. refer to the rolling cylinder seal, such as is found in Babylon, which leaves its impressions on the clay as it is turned about." — Fausset.

[c] Pro. xiii. 9.

[d] Eze. xxx. 22.

the size of the earth

16—18. (16) entered, so as either to understand or control. springs,[e] i. e. sources, origins, "canst thou go to the bottom of anything, explore its secrets, explain its cause and origin."—Rawlinson. search, or recesses: deep places, caverns.[f] (17) gates of death, Sheol, or Hades, the abodes of the dead. shadow of death, ch. x. 21. (18) perceived, R. V., "comprehended," do you even know the earth, the extent of it and its contents?

The unknowable (vs. 16).— Some things in nature must remain a mystery to the most intelligent investigator. Universal knowledge for God alone. Why then be curious about things I cannot understand? What I cannot gain by intellect, I can possess by affection. — Spurgeon.— Mysteries. — A Bible that man can comprehend, or anybody else can comprehend, is not very much of a Bible. Infinite things cannot be grasped by the human mind. The Bible opens with three great mysteries; the mystery of time, the mystery of being, and the mystery of creation. We cannot understand them; they are past our finding out. — Alexander McKenzie. The great canon of interpretation, that spiritual things are spiritually discerned, cannot be too strongly insisted on. One cannot interpret Scripture by mere intellect any more than a mathematician can interpret the oratorio, "The Creation," by his multiplication table, or a shop-keeper can comprehend "Paradise Lost." with his yard-stick. Only the Spirit that inspired the Word of God can give us the key to that Word.— A. J. Gordan.

[e] Ge. vii. 11. "The gushing forth."— Gesenius.

[f] Ps. lxxvii. 19. "To a vain, boasting fellow, it is said, 'Yes, yes; the sea is only knee-deep to thee.' 'It is all true; thou hast measured the sea.'"— Roberts.

"Mystery such as is given of God, is beyond the power of human penetration, yet not in opposition to it." — Mme. De Stael.

the way of the light

19—21. (19) way, R. V., "way to the dwelling of light." Light and darkness are here personified and regarded as having each its own abode. (20) bound, can Job determine the bounds or limits of light and darkness? (21) knowest . . born, R. V., "doubtless, thou knowest, for," etc. "Job, of course, is as old as the Almighty, or, at any rate, coeval with creation; otherwise he could not presume to take the tone which he has taken, and arraign the moral government of the Creator."— Rawlinson.

"You have noticed the lighting of the streets or of a public building — how when the first lamp is lit it is plainly seen, and disperses in part the surrounding darkness; but when the second, third, fourth, and all the lamps are lit, the light meets light, ray blends with ray, until the whole

Light. —

Hail, holy light, offspring of Heaven firstborn.
Or of th' Eternal co-eternal beam.
May I express thee, unblamed? Since God is light,
And never but in unapproached light,
Dwelt from eternity, dwelt then in thee,
Bright effluence of bright essence increate.— Milton.

Light.— The business of Christians is to hold up the true Light, to be as a lamp set upon its stand (Matt. v. 14–16), to let the light shine over the world, to kindle other souls that they may shine, too, till the whole world is flooded with the light of heaven. "It has been pointed out," says Professor Henry Drummond in The Programme of Christianity, "as a blemish on the immortal allegory of Bunyan that the Pilgrim never did anything — anything but save his soul. The remark is scarcely fair, for the allegory is designedly the story of a soul in a single relation, and besides he did do a little. . . . Christ's conception was heavens removed from that of a man setting out from the city of Destruction to save his soul. It was rather that of a man dwelling amidst the Destructions of the City, and planning escapes for the souls of others, escapes not (merely) to the other world, but to purity and peace and righteousness in this." Bunyan's object was to save souls, because only saved souls could save others. He wanted more lamps burning, and his work was to kindle them, that they might kindle others, as his whole life showed. In a neighboring city is an immense electric light manufactory. If I were describing that I would not tell what the electric light was doing in churches and libraries and homes and streets. I would only describe how the lights were made, and he would wholly misunderstand the description and the factory who should imagine that the factory was an end in itself, and not for the very purpose of giving light. Let us not make this mistake in thinking of our salvation. We are saved to save others: our hearts are lighted that we may light others.— Peloubet.

place is illuminated. Thus it is with the spread of Christian light. The light of life shining from one believer joins and blends with that of another; the light of one neighborhood with an adjoining one; the light of nation with nation, until the whole world becomes filled with the light of the glorious Gospel of the blessed God." — John Bate.

"Against the darkness outer God's light his likeness takes,
And He from the mighty doubter
The great believer makes."
—Gilder.

22, 23. (22) treasures, that is, the treasuries, the magazines. Snow and hail are represented as having been created and laid up in great store-houses in the heavens or above them, from whence God draws them forth for the moral ends of His government. — Cam. Bib. (23) time of trouble, to use as agents in the chastisement of men. Hailstones have been employed by God in connection with battle.[a]

the treasures of the snow

[a] Ex. ix. 22-26; Jos. x. 11; Ps. xviii. 13, 14; Is. xxviii. 17-21; Re. xvi. 21.

Napoleon's defeat at Moscow.— Napoleon was defeated at Moscow by the soft-falling snow. "Earthly state had never reached a prouder pinnacle than when Napoleon, in June, 1812, gathered his army at Dresden — that mighty host, unequaled in all time, of 450 thousand, not men merely, but effective soldiers — and there received the homage of subject kings. And now, what was the principal adversary of this tremendous power? By whom was it checked, and resisted, and put down? By none, and by nothing, but the direct and manifest interposition of God. I know of no language so well fitted to describe that victorious advance to Moscow and the utter humiliation of the retreat, as the language of the prophet, with respect to the advance and subsequent destruction of the host of Sennacherib, 'When they arose early in the morning, behold they were all dead corpses,' applies almost literally to that memorable night of frost, in which twenty thousand horses perished, and the strength of the French army was utterly broken." — Thomas Arnold.

"In ancient times, when the bow held the place in war wh. is now occupied by the rifle or the musket, a heavy hailstorm, striking full in the face of the combatants on one side, while it only fell on the backs of their adversaries, must often have decided a battle." — Rawlinson.

The architecture of the frost. —

Down swept the chill wind from the mountain peak,
From the snow five thousand summers old;
The little brook heard it, and built a roof
'Neath which he could house him, winter proof;
All night, by the white stars' frosty gleams,
He groined his arches, and matched his beams;
Slender and clear were his crystal spars,
As the lashes of light that trim the stars;
He sculptured every summer delight,
In his halls and chambers out of sight;
Sometimes his tinkling waters slipt
Down through a frost-leaved forest crypt, Long sparkling aisles of steel-stemmed trees
Bending to counterfeit a breeze:
Sometimes, the roof no fretwork knew,
But silvery mosses that downward grew;
Sometimes it was carved, in sharp relief,
With quaint arabesques of ice-fern leaf,
Sometimes it was simply smooth and clear
For the gladness of heav'n to shine through; and here

"The frost is God's plough, which He drives through every inch of ground in the world, opening each clod, and pulverising the whole."— Fuller.

"Silently, like thoughts that come and go the snow flakes fall, each one a gem."— W. H. Gibson.

"The silent falling of the snow is to me one of the most solemn things in nature." — Longfellow.

"I think better of snow-storms since I find that if they keep a man's body indoors, they bring his mind out."—Prescott.

He had caught the nodding bulrush tops,
And hung them thickly with diamond drops,
Which crystaled the beams of moon and sun,
And made a star of every one;
No mortal builder's most rare device
Could match this winter palace of ice;
'Twas as if every image that mirrored lay
In his depth serene through the summer day, Each flitting shadow of earth and sky. — Lowell.

the mystery of light

24. light, of day, not here lightning. parted, distributed over the earth. Light appears to start from a point in the east, and then spread over all the earth and sky; can Job fully explain how this is done? which, etc., R. V., "Or the east wind scattered upon the earth?" The inquiry is made concerning two things, light and wind.[a] east wind, spoken of as a kind of personification of all winds, which, beginning at some point, diffuse themselves over the earth.

Divine mysteries.—I. The question here proposed. It concerns two familiar things, the light and the wind. Though familiar, they are little understood even at this time. II. What this question suggests. If there are mysteries in the world of nature, should we be surprised to find mysteries in the world of revelation, or in the kingdom of grace? Nay, should we not much more expect to find mysteries there than in nature? See the words of our Lord, Jo. iii. 7–13. Do we exclude things from our belief because they are mysteries? How little shall we believe if we believe only what we fully comprehend!

Mystery.— What is mystery to many men, what feeds their worship and at the same time spoils it, is that area around all great truth, which is really capable of illumination, and into which every earnest mind is permitted and commanded to go with a light. We cry "mystery," long before the region of mystery comes. True mystery casts no shadows around. It is a sudden and awful gulf, yawning across the field of knowledge; its form is irregular, but its lips are clean-cut and sharp, and the mind can go to the very verge and look down the precipice into the dim abyss

"Where writhing clouds unroll Striving to utter themselves in shapes."— Drummond.

Nature unsympathizing.—

A comely face hath Nature, but no heart.
None! Are you sad? she smiles. Is your grief past,
And gladness come? Her skies are overcast.
In your chameleon moods she hath no part.
Praise her — your warmest words will ne'er impart
A ush the more to her full loveliness —
Flout her, and she will offer you, no less,
Flowers, fruitage, all the effluence of her art.
Die, she will send her merriest birds to sing
Outside your window, and upon your brow
Shed showers of sunbeams, in bright overflow:
Go down into your grave — no cloud will fling
Its shade, in sorrow that your tale is told:
She is a comely mother, but stone-cold.— A. L. Westwood.

"Light from the native East
To journey the airy gloom began, Spher'd in a radiant cloud: for yet the sun was not."
— Milton.

"The best way to see Divine light, is to put out thine own candle!"—Quarles.

the lightning, the rain, and the dew

25—28. (25) divided a watercourse, R. V., "Who hath cleft a channel for the waterflood," i. e. "Who has furrowed and seamed the ground (in Western Asia) with deep gullies, or "watercourses."[b] — Rawlinson. way for the lightning, which is the usual precursor of heavy rains in the East.[c] (26) no man is, the tenantless steppe: lonely wastes.[d] (27) To satisfy, etc., the desolate parts are figured as thirsty, and crying to God for refreshing. (28) a father, i. e. a human father; "does any man, Job perhaps, beget the rain or the drops of dew? They are marvels of God's creative power."— Cam. Bib.

The spiritual rain and dew (vs. 28).—I. What is this question about? The "rain" and the "dew." The rain is an emblem of the word, and the dew of the spirit of God. Hath any mortal man been the origin and cause of the mighty doctrines that are set forth in scripture concerning the wisdom of God, etc? "My doctrine shall drop as the rain." II. What is the question itself? Has any mortal man created the one or the other?— W. Nunn.

"The light and the east wind are thus associated together, as both come from one quarter, and often arise together."—Fausset.

"The causes of the propagation of light which seems to proceed from a center, and to spread rapidly in every direction, are perhaps as little known now as they were in the time of Job."—Barnes.

"We should render thanks to God for having produced this temporal light, which is the smile of heaven and joy of the world, spreading it like cloth of gold over the air and earth, and lighting it as a torch, by which we might behold His works."—Caussin.

[a] "A channel for the heavy rains which descend like a torrent through the riven atmosphere." — Spk. Com.

[b] Job xxviii. 26; Zech. x. 1. marg.

[c] Ps. cvii. 35; Is. xliii. 19, 20; Ps. cxlvii. 7, 8.

Rain and Grace.— A lady traveling in Palestine writes: "Rain began to fall in torrents. Mohammed, our groom, threw a large Arab cloak over me, saying, 'May Allah preserve you, O lady! while He is blessing the fields.'" Oh, how pleasant are the effects of rain to languishing plants, to make them green and beautiful, lively and strong, fragrant and delightful! So the effects of Christ's influence are most desirable to drooping souls, for enlightening and enlivening them, for confirming and strengthening them, for comforting and enlarging them, for appetizing and satisfying them, transforming and beautifying them. God's care for creation. — This should tend to humble human pride; humanity is not the only creature that God careth for. Man is not the centre and pivot of the world. God cares for oxen, birds, insects, and everything that lives. He works the mystic machinery of heaven to water meadows untrodden by the foot of man. No flower is born to blush unseen and waste its sweetness; for God sees it, and that is enough. The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, and man is but one servitor out of the many which are created for God's pleasure. Let him take his place as one among many servants, and no longer dream that all things are made for him, and that they are wasted if he does not derive some benefit from them.

"The earthward direction assigned to the waterspouts is likened to an aqueduct coming downwards from the sky."— Delitzsch.

"New mercies give new meaning to old praises. Words hallowed by having borne the gratitude of many generations are the best vehicles for today's praise."— Alex. McLaren.

29, 30. (29) whose womb, who is the mother of ice and frost?[a] It is not only creation itself, but the transformations of created things, that transcend the scientific intellect and are inexplicable. — Rawlinson. (30) are hid, or lie hidden; the appearance of water is lost, the ice looks like stone: they are hid as with a covering of stone.

the ice and the hoar-frost

a Job. xxxvii. 10; Ps. cxlvii. 16.

The suggestions of the ice. — I. God has made nothing in vain. A use for, a purpose in each of His works. So, no doubt, in the ice and hoar-frost. II. There are lands where snow, frost, ice, are unknown; where, if we described them, our truth would be doubted. Why should we doubt things that are outside our knowledge or experience? Thus the love of God, and the new birth, may be facts in the experience of some men, though we are not experimentally acquainted with them. A central African would surely believe that there might be ice, etc., on reliable testimony: and have you not reliable testimony to the facts of the spiritual life? An African who travels may have the witness of his own eyesight: and you, by traveling the way of prayer, may have the witness in yourself.

"These questions refer not to the analysis of phenomena or of natural laws, but to the inner principles, of wh. science now professes to know nothing."— Spk. Com.

Hoar-frost (vs. 29). — The hoar-frost is generated in a way analogous to the snow; for the latter is vapor frozen aloft, and the former vapor frozen near the surface of the earth. Bodies have a tendency to throw off their heat, so that it is sometimes cooler in their immediate vicinity than at a short distance from them. This occasions a deposition of moisture upon their surface from the surrounding atmosphere, independently of the mists that float in it. The natural tendency of bodies to cool themselves might seem, at first sight, to be a defect, since warmth is so necessary for the health of plants. But observation teaches us that there has been no mistake, for they often get a covering of hoar-frost by it which protects them from cold. Thus God displays His wisdom and benevolence in spreading over the vegetable creation a beautiful mantle, serving both for protection and beauty. — The Visitor.

"When storms lower, and wintry winds oppress thee, Nature, dear goddess, is beautiful, always beautiful! Every little flake of snow is such a perfect crystal, and they fall together so gracefully, as if fairies of the air caught waterdrops and made them into artificial flowers to garland the wings of the wind."— Mrs. L. M. Child.

31. Canst, etc.,[b] "Dost thou bind the bands of the Pleiades, or loose the cords of Orion."— Cam. Bib. sweet influences, R. V., "cluster." Probably they are allusions here to mythological ideas now unknown: nor is the meaning of all the names certain. The name of Orion, the fool-hardy giant, seems to have come from some such myth. — Genung. Pleiades, seven stars[c] so closely set together as to seem bound in sisterly union. Orion, or the giant. It is the pioneer of winter, as the Pleiades are the spring.[d] "The main import of the question is 'Canst thou bring back the gracious, fruitful warmth of spring, and release the frozen earth from winter's sterile bands.'" — Cox.

Pleiades

b "Canst thou not arrange together the rosette (chain) of diamonds of the Pleiades?"— Biegel.

c Am. v. 8.

d "Orion and the Pleiades are visible in the Syrian sky longer in the year than with us, and there they come about seventeen degrees higher above the horizon than with us."— Delitzsch.

The influences of Pleiades. — By the Greeks this cluster of stars was called Pleiades from pleein, to sail, because it indicated the time when the sailor might hope to undertake a voyage in safety; it was also called Vergiliæ, from ver, the spring, because it ushered in the mild vernal weather favorable for farming and pastoral employments. Job therefore would understand the question as meaning "Canst thou hinder or retard the spring?" The attention of astronomers had for years been directed to the question of the sun's stationary or movable condition, and it is now supposed by many that the sun has itself a central point around which it with its system revolves. M. Mädler, of Dorpat, after many intricate calculations and laborious observations, came to the conclusion that this central point is Alcyone, the brightest star of the Pleiades group, and that it is the center or axle of our solar system. Influences of the heavenly bodies. — We are subject to influences from the heavenly bodies. We have given up astrology as a delusion. But we are entirely dependent for life itself upon one heavenly body, the sun. This earth is not self-sufficient. It would be frozen to death if the sun were to cease to pour into it his streams of heat. Some have connected sun-spots with social and financial crises! Although this may be but a survival of an ancient superstition, perhaps it is not wise to affirm that it must be nothing more. Now the physical heavens have always been to us a type of the spiritual heavens. Spiritually our life is not self-contained. Astrology had this in its favor, that it taught a certain largeness of view. It did not permit a parson to confine his attention to his own parish. It compelled him to look up, and to look to distant things. — Pul. Com.

"Canst thou tie the Pleiades in a knot?" —Wordsworth.

"The Greenlanders call the Pleiades Killukturset, a name given to them because they appear to be bound together." —Barnes.

"Stately spring, whose robe-folds are valleys, whose breast bouquet is gardens, and whose blush is a vernal evening."—Richter.

the ordinances of heaven

32, 33. (32) Mazzaroth,[a] some think this refers to the twelve constellations, or signs of the Zodiac; but neither that nor any other proposed explanation is free from difficulty. Arcturus, R. V., "the bear with her train," around the pole star.[b] his sons, the three stars in the tail of Arcturus. "The force of this question is, Canst thou command the seasons of the year, leading them in each in its turn with their rich and varied blessings for mankind." — Cox. (33) ordinances, refers to the astrological ideas "that the heavens and the stars exercise an influence over the earth and the destinies of man." — Cam. Bib.

The ordinances of heaven. — I. The place whence they are promulgated. Suggestive of power, holiness, righteousness, wisdom, mercy, love. II. The sphere of their operation. The earth. III. Their superiority to and independence of, all human control: "canst thou set," etc. IV. Their various effects. Day and night, the seasons, etc.

A lesson from the stars. — God's sky has many stars, though differing from one another in glory. A glory belongs to Christ, the central sun, that none of us may claim as our own. Another glory belongs to the church, the moon, that none of us may inherit, a borrowed splendor that covers the whole company of Saints. But there is glory that belongs to the individual "glitterers" of the firmament different in degree; and it is ours so to turn many to righteousness as that neither Alcyone's sheen, nor the stars that burn in Orion's belt, shall surpass our brightness in the resurrection of the just. What a miracle of splendor that will be when sun, moon, and stars all shine in the firmament at the same time! We shall each have our own peculiar glory while yet lost in the "Greater Light" who rules that golden day; for "the righteous shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." — Nathaniel West.

a Delitsch explains as "lodging-houses, or strongholds," in wh. one after another the sun lodges as it describes the circle of the year.

b "The Great and Less Bear are called by the Arabs 'Daughters of the Bier,' the quadrangle being the bier, the three others the mourners." — Fausset.

Dillmann connects with the root zahar, to be bright, and refers to a star of peculiar brightness.

"The innumerable stars shining in order, like a living hymn written in light."—Willis.

34, 35. (34) thy voice, commanding the clouds to send down rain. (35) send lightnings,[c] "If Job cannot command the clouds, much less can he send (or rather send forth) lightnings — those marvellous and terrible evidences of almighty power."

Two worlds united by the Atlantic cable (vs. 35).— I. The first thought this subject suggests is, that we should give thanks to God for the success that crowned the labors of our fellow-men engaged in this work. II. I look upon this achievement as a most happy illustration of the power of mind over mind, and of mind over matter. III. As one that will have a great moral result. IV. The termini of the telegraph are every shop, counting room, and fireside on both continents. V. The text is connected with a time of trouble, such as there never was since there was a nation; and yet, at that time, the prophet says, Jehovah shall deliver His people. VI. There is something our savants are not able to explain in the working of the electric current.— W. A. Scott.

Lightning and light.— "Professor Kohlbranch, who has been making some curious experiments with lightning, finds that the amount of electricity in an ordinary flash is so small that it would require 37 flashes to keep a common incandescent lamp burning one hour." — Boston Journal. So it takes much more grace and faith, a stronger hold on the promises, and more piety, to go on steadily doing God's work, and building up His kingdom, than to flash for a time with great enthusiasm, or to do some great deed in a moment of excite-man cannot command the rain, or rule the lightning

c "Even now, with all our command of electricity, our savants would, from the best electrical machines, find it difficult to produce the effects which often result from a single flash of lightning." —Rawlinson.

vs. 34. "This probably refers to thunder, and its effects in producing rain. It is said, 'Why, fellow, are you making such a noise? Are ment. Wires and electricity.— Joseph Parker, in a sermon preached while they were putting the electric light in his church in London, said, "I see before me at this moment certain pieces of cord. What is wanted is but to connect these cords with a motive power, but until the connection is established they are but dead, useless things. Connect them, set the engine going, let it cause the necessary rotations to fly, and presently an arrangement may be made by which from these cords we shall receive a dazzling glory. They are nothing in themselves, and yet without them, the engine might go for a thousand ages and we should get no light. It is even so with us. We are here, men educated, intelligent, well-appointed, and what is it that we need but connection with the heavens, direct communication with the source of light and fire?"

36—38. (36) inward parts, R. V., marg. "dark clouds."[a] Th translation of the A. V. may be certainly set aside, because the introduction of a reference to the "inward parts" and "heart" of man in the middle of a description of celestial phenomena is not to be thought of.— Cam. Bib. heart, in harmony with the previous clause, "celestial phenomena." "These, fulfilling the purposes of God, seem themselves endowed with wisdom." (37) number the clouds, wh. are so broken up, and in so many layers. stay, R. V., "pour out."[b] "Who can slant the bottles of heaven? i. e. tip up the clouds so that they discharge their contents?"— Cox. (38) dust, etc., R. V., "When the dust runneth into a mass." Effect of rain on loose dust.

Riches and wisdom. — We are reminded of the luckless king of Persia who, when the Moslems overran his empire, and made him prisoner, was left to starve in his own treasury. All round that Persian monarch were heaped diamonds and emeralds and topazes and pearls of inestimable value. Wherever he turned, he saw nothing except gold and silver and precious stones; but with the wealth of Ormuz and the East about him, the wretched man perished of hunger and thirst. — W. H. Stead. Such are those who seek riches without wisdom. But the riches that flow from wisdom are rather like those which Siddârtha scattered among the people, building libraries and hospitals and schools and giving work to many. The power of doing good, of enjoying and helping others to enjoy, is the test of true riches. — Peloubet.— God-given wisdom. — A Watt and an Arkwright were enabled to produce machines by which, with a little water and fuel, one man is able to do the work of twenty or a hundred, and the strength of draught-horses can be entirely dispensed with. By a simple apparatus, provided through the human intellect, man is enabled to employ the lightning to convey his messages, and to hold almost immediate fellowship with distant countries and continents. As a co-worker with his Maker, he is enabled, by the faculties which God has given him, to convert the wilderness into a fruitful field, and to cause the desert to "rejoice and blossom as the rose." If God thus puts wisdom and understanding into man, and endows him with so much power, how great the wisdom and power of the Creator Himself! — Hom. Com.

who is the giver of wisdom, etc.?

a Umbreit trans. "Who hath put wisdom in the dark clouds, and given understanding to the meteor."

b "The clouds are called the 'urns,' or water-skins of heaven, in several passages of Arabian poets; and by the utres, bladders, or water-skins, are always meant the more bulky clouds." — Schultens.

vs. 38. "As we moved northwards, we came upon some ploughed fields, where there was a man with an axe cleaving the baked soil — 'breaking up the fallow ground,' or rather, cutting up the ground when brought by rain and sun into that state described in the Book of Job." — Bonar.

39—41. The next chapter should begin here where the animal world is introduced. (39) thou hunt, etc., the instincts of animals are as far beyond human control as the forces of nature.[c] lion, "lioness," in search of prey for her whelps. (40) abide, etc., lurk, the attitude of the lion in its lair.[d] (41) raven, a carnivorous bird; bird of ill omen, which men dislike, but for which God cares. Throughout this chapter Job is made to feel that there is even greater mystery around him than the mystery of God's dealing with him.

God's tender care for the lower creation. — I. How much more will He care for man? II. How much more for His children? (Matt. vi. 26.) III. Does not this Divine example teach us to have a proper regard for dumb creatures? IV. He provides for the ravens through the instrumentality of instinct, and for man by use of reason. V. The raven's instinct teaches it where to find its food; and our reason should guide us to the house of God, and the throne of grace, for the nourishment of our higher life.

Francke's school at Halle. — The conduct of the eminent and justly celebrated Francke, in the establishment of the hospital and school for the poor, at Halle, in Saxony, is well known. Having no permanent funds to meet the expenses, it may be easily supposed that the good man would frequently be reduced to great difficulties: at such times the interpositions of the providence of God were truly remarkable. About Easter, 1696, he knew not who is the guardian of animated nature?

c Ps. civ. 21.

d Ps. x. 9, 10; xvii. 12.

vs. 39. "To a man who is boasting of the speed of his foot, or his prowess, it is said, 'Yes, there is no doubt thou wilt hunt the prey for the tiger' When a person does a favor for a cruel man it is asked, 'What! give food to the tiger?' 'O yes; give milk to the serpent.' 'Here comes the sportsman; he has been hunting prey „for the tiger." — Roberts.

"Do good by stealth, and blush to find it fame." — Pope.

"God sendeth and giveth, both mouth and the meat." — Tusser.

where to obtain money for the expenses of the ensuing week; but when their food was reduced to the very last morsel, one thousand crowns were contributed by some entirely unknown person. At another time all their provisions were exhausted, and the good minister wisely presented his request to the God of mercy, who careth even for the ravens when they cry. When prayer was over, just as he was taking his seat, a friend from a distance arrived with fifty crowns, which was shortly followed by twenty more.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-NINTH.

who determines the increase of animals?

1—4. (1) wild goats,[a] lit. rock-climbers; the ibex or mountain-goat. hinds, fawns; most timid and defenseless animals. calve? Ps. xxix. 9. (2) Canst . . forth? are all the mysteries of breeding within man's control[b] (3) bow themselves, in the pain of giving birth to their young. A time of exceeding peril, in wh. God preserves them. sorrows, "infants are called 'pangs' by the Arab poets." (4) good liking, well-conditioned, though no man cares for them. with corn, R. V., "in the open field."[c] "These shy, solitary creatures, inhabiting the rocks, are without care in bearing their young; yet they grow up in the desert and rapidly provide for themselves The care of God suffices for them." — Cam. Bib.

Man's need greater than that of animals. — Why should man, because he can think of the providence of God, be alone suspicious of the justice and wisdom on which all creatures rely? Is not his power of thought given to him that he may pass beyond the animals and praise the Divine Provider on their behalf and his own? Man needs more than the raven, the lion, the mountain goat, and the eagle. He has higher instincts and cravings. Daily food for the body will not suffice him, nor the liberty of the wilderness. He would not be satisfied if, like the hawk and eagle, he could soar above the hills. His desires for righteousness, for truth, for fulness of that spiritual life by which he is allied to God Himself, are his distinction. So, then, He who has created the soul will bring it to perfectness. Where or how its longings shall be fulfilled may not be for man to know. But he can trust God. That is his privilege when knowledge fails. Let him lay aside all vain thoughts and ignorant doubts. Let him say: God is inconceivably great, unsearchably wise, infinitely just and true; I am in His hands, and all is well. — Exp. Bib. God's care for us. — "I need oil," said a monk; so he planted him an olive sapling. "Lord," he prayed, "it needs rain," and the Lord sent a gentle shower. "Lord, my tree needs sun;" and the sun shone. "Now frost," my Lord; and behold the little tree stood sparkling with frost. But at evensong, it died. Then the monk sought a brother monk and told his strange experience: "I, too, have planted a little tree," and see, it thrives well; but I prayed: "Lord, send it what it needs, storm or sunshine. Thou hast made it and Thou dost know." — Christian Age.

a "Observation of nature is a special characteristic of Heb. poetry and thought." — Dillmann.

b "It inhabits exclusively the more rocky and desolate parts of the country."—Tristram.

1 Sa. xxiv. 2; Ps. civ. 18.

c "The young forsake their dams very early."—Spk. Com.

vs. 4. Liking: the Anglo-Saxon lician to "please," gave rise to the impersonal "it likes me," "an it likes your majority," and the idea of "pleasing" is no doubt an ingredient in the noun.

the wild ass

5—8. (5) wild ass, two Heb. words are used for this animal — ferâ, the swift-footed; and arôd, the shy, or untamable. Both names are employed in the verse. Its speed is beyond that of the fastest horse. (6) barren land, or the salt wastes, incapable of culture.[d] (7) scorneth, so will not come near. driver, "the Arab driver of a long line of camels, or other animals." He is altogether beyond restraint. (8) range, the region he freely finds for himself. It especially loves desolate hills as its abode.[e]

The wild ass. — Every natural historian has recorded the extreme wildness of this animal. He is so jealous of his liberty that on the slightest alarm or the first appearance of danger he flies with amazing swiftness into the desert. His senses are so acute that it is impossible to approach him in the open country. But, in spite of all his vigilance, the hunter often incloses him in his toils, and leads him away into captivity. Even in this unhappy state he never submits his neck to the yoke of man without a determined resistance. "Sent out free" by Him that made him, he is tenacious of his independence, and opposes, to the extraordinary methods which his captors are forced to employ, the most savage obstinacy: and for the most part, he baffles all their endeavors to tame him; still he "scorneth the multitude of the city, neither regards he the crying of the driver." — Paxton.

d "The wild ass gladly licks the salt or natron of the desert; all wild animals that feed on plants have a partiality, which is based on chemical laws of life, for licking salt."—Delitzsch.

e "The main emphasis of the poet is laid on the most characteristic features of this beautiful creature: its intractable temper, its disdain of man, its wide and incessant quest of the food it loves." — Cox.

the unicorn

9—12. (9) unicorn, R. V., "wild ox," often represented in Assyrian sculpture.[f] thy crib, as the domestic oxen will. (10) bind, so that he will work

f "The word unicorn ought to be at ploughing and harrowing the fields. (11) trust him, as you do the horse or ox: trust him to work steadily. strength is great, and so would be very useful to you if you could only tame it. thy labour, or the results of thy labor, i. e. thy harvest. (12) believe him, "the point of the passage lies in the contrast between him and the tame ox, which he externally resembled. Who is the author of this strange diversity of disposition in creatures so like in outward form?" — Cam. Bib.

Strength. — The urus is wild, senseless, untamable, and not susceptible to educative influences: therefore he cannot use his strength for profitable work. Human strength needs Divine guidance. So long as the soul is wild and self-willed, the powers of mind and body cannot be spent fruitfully. The humble ox looks a less noble beast than the wild and daring bison, with his shaggy mane, his flashing eye, his powerful neck, his thunderous charge; yet the former is useful because it is obedient. The first lesson we have to learn in life is to obey; this, too, is the last lesson. As the ox looks to its master, we have to look to our Master; and when we follow His guidance, whether our strength be great or small, it will not be fruitless. — Pul. Com.

Creation of beasts. —

"God said,
Let the earth bring forth soul living in her kind,
Cattle and creeping things, and beast of the earth,
Each in their kind." The earth obey'd, and straight Op'ning her fertile womb, teem'd at a birth.
The cattle in the fields and meadows green;
Those rare and solitary, these in flocks,
Past'ring at once, and in broad herds up-sprung.
The libbard, and the tiger, as the mole Rising, the crumbled earth above them threw
In hillocks: scarce from his mold
Behemoth, biggest born of earth, upheaved
His vastness; fleeced the flocks, and bleating rose;
As plants ambiguous between sea and land,
The river-horse, and scaly crocodile. — Milton.

"Nature's great law, and law of all men's minds? —
To its own impulse every creature stirs;
Live by thy light, and earth will live by her's!" — Matthew Arnold.

"Nature — the living visible garment of God." — Goethe.

13—15. (13) peacocks, R. V., "The wing of the ostrich rejoiceth. But are her pinions and feathers kindly?"[a] Here also is a strange creature. "How interpret the wisdom that would see fit to create a bird at once wonderfully swift, to escape her enemies, and yet so foolish as to leave her young at the mercy of every hostile foot." — Genung. (14) leaveth,[b] etc., it is the natural habit of the ostrich to make its nest in the sand, with layers of eggs, about thirty; these the sun's rays aid in their incubation. (15) foot, of passing rider. wild beast, such as the jackal.

Compensations. — Things are not so bad with the ostrich as they appear to us at first sight. Although the ostrich-eggs are left in the sand, they do not perish as the eggs of most birds under ordinary circumstances would do. Beneath the tropical heat of the sun they can be deserted during the day, the bird returning to sit on them at night. Thus by the wonderful balancing of influences in nature the careless maternity of the ostrich does not seriously endanger its offspring. If God has not given the bird wisdom, it does not need it. So long as we keep to the lines that God has laid down, we shall see that most defects have ample compensation in other directions. The culpable carelessness is that which goes against the laws of God; the fatal folly is that which departs from His ways. This carelessness and this folly are not found in the ostrich; they are only seen in man. — Pul. Com. — The ostrich. — The ostrich, too, has goodly feathers, and is yet a foolish bird; for wisdom does not always go along with beauty and gaiety. Other birds do not envy the peacock or the ostrich their gaudy colors, nor complain for want of them; why, then, should we repine if we see others wearing better clothes than we can afford to wear? God bestows His gifts variously, and those gifts are not always the most valuable that make the finest show. Who would not rather have the voice of the nightingale than the tail of the peacock? the eye of the eagle, and her soaring wing, and the natural affection of the stork, than the beautiful wings and feathers of the ostrich, that can never rise above the earth, and is without natural affection. — M. Henry.

expunged fr. our version in all places where it occurs. (Nu. xxiii. 22; xxiv. 8; De. xxxiii. 17; Is. xxxiv. 7)." — Wordsworth.

"After discussing the claims of the oryx, buffalo, rhinocerous, and supposed unicorn, the Bib. Dict. decides in favor of a gigantic species of urus, or wild ox. 'Beyond all doubt the Beëm is the Urus of Cæsar, i. e. the Auerochs.'" — Tristram.

the ostrich

a "She makes a great display of her flaunting plumage, but does she use her wings for purposes of natural affection for her offspring?" — Wordsworth.

b "Leaving does not here mean forsaking. The female incubates alone by day, but at night she is joined by the male." — Spk. Com.

The word rendered peacock, means "a wild, tremulous cry," and denotes the female ostrich.

16—18. (16) hardened, etc., for at a slight disturbance she will quite forsake her nest; and it seems that she also lays some eggs on which she never sits.[a] without fear, R. V., "though her labour be in vain, she is without fear;" i. e. "though she is often disappointed of her immediate hope of offspring, yet she grows no wiser, she does not fear for the future." (17) God,[b] etc., i. e. here is a mystery, like yours, Job, of which you can only say, God has done it. For it, however, there is wise reason. (18) lifteth up herself, by the aid of her pinions skimming swiftly along. scorneth, etc., distancing the very swiftest rider. "Its speed has been calculated at twenty-six miles an hour by Dr. Livingstone."

The ostrich. — The natural science of the Book of Job has been criticised, because in the reply of the Lord to Job we are told of the ostrich that she "leaveth her eggs in the earth, and warmeth them in dust, and forgetteth that the foot may crush them, or that the wild beast may break them;" "she is hardened against her young ones, as though they were not hers," — whereas it has long been familiarly known that, though the eggs of the ostrich are, at least in the hotter regions, left buried in the sand during the day, where the heat of the sun retained in the sand is sufficient to continue the process of incubation, yet that at night the ostrich does incubate, and will, on occasion, vigorously defend its young. But it has only recently been ascertained that the ostrich has this peculiarity in common with the other struthious or wingless birds of South America and Australia, as the rhea, emu and cassowary, that it is only the male parent which performed domestic duties; that the female, so soon as she has deposited her eggs, does neglect and utterly ignore her offspring. Here, then, we find the language of the oldest book in the world in strict accordance with a fact of natural history which remained till yesterday unknown. — Tristram.

10—20. (19) horse, it should be understood here that the reference is to the war-horse, under all the excitement of approaching battle. At the time of Job the horse was probably used for war rather than for domestic purposes.[c] thunder, Cam. Bib. "trembling." The word "trembling" hardly refers to the mane alone, but rather describes the quivering of the neck, when the animal is roused, which erects the mane.[d] (20) afraid, R. V., "to leap as a locust," referring to the terrible rush of the moment of charging. nostrils, R. V., "snorting."[e]

The Arabian war-horse. — Here we arrive at one of the most glorious descriptions in the Book of Job — a description which no translation has been able to disfigure, and which in all translations has been admired. It is unnecessary to explain the figures employed, the force and beauty of which will be felt by every reader. There is a well-known description of the horse in Virgil, which is unquestionably the finest in classical antiquity. It is exceedingly noble, but is not comparable to that which the sacred text offers. The following is Sotheby's translation:

> "But at the clash of arms, his ear afar > Drinks the deep sound and vibrates to the war;
> Flames from each nostril roll in gathered stream;
> His quivering limbs with restless motion gleam:
> O'er his right shoulder, floating full and fair, > Sweeps his thick mane and spreads his pomp of hair:
> Swift works his double spine; and earth around > Rings to the solid hoof that wears the ground." — Kitto.

21—23. (21) paweth, reference is to the restless movement of the restrained horse. valley, or plain, which alone is suitable for the evolutions of cavalry or chariots. armed men, heavy armed infantry. (22) at fear, that which one would expect to affright him. (23) quiver, etc., the arms or weapons of its rider may be referred to.[f] shield, javelin or lance.

Note on vs. 23. — The poet does not seek to describe the actual conflict; it is a picture of the horse that he gives, and the movement before the conflict is that at which the animal's extraordinary attributes are most strongly exhibited. "Although docile as a lamb, and requiring no other guide then the halter, when the Arab mare hears the war-cry of the tribe (cf. vs. 25), and sees the quivering spear of her rider (cf. vs. 23), her eyes glitter with fire, her blood-red nostrils open wide, her neck is nobly arched, and her tail and mane are raised and spread out to the wind (cf. vs. 19). A Bedouin proverb says, a La. iv. 3.

b The Arab proverb is, "Foolish as an ostrich."

"The poor wren, the most diminutive of birds, will fight, her young ones in her nest, against the owl." —Shakespeare.

"Our sweetest experiences of affection are meant to be suggestions of that realm which is the home of the heart."— Beecher.

Hang the sweetest grass around a pig's neck, it will still go and wallow in its native mire.

the war-horse

c "This passage is at once the most ancient and the most beautiful description of the noblest of quadrupeds."—Delitzsch.

d "The point wh. struck those who saw for the first time the mighty war-horse in battle must have been the terror of the neck with its quivering muscles and tossing mane, and the word here used denotes, most probably, that impression."—Spk. Com.

e Jer. viii. 16.

the war-horse

f "The rattling of the quiver was caused by the fact that the arrows were thrown somewhat loosely into the case or the quiver, and that in the rapid motion of the warrior they were shaken against each other."—Barnes.

Pr. xxi. 31; Je. viii. 6.

that a high-bred mare when at full speed should hide her rider between her neck and her tail." — Layard.

Enthusiasm. — The life of the picture is its enthusiasm. The horse is impatient for the rage of the battle, excited by the distant sound of it to a strong desire to rush into it. That is the spirit which will give him strength and courage to go right into the midst of the danger. Nothing succeeds like enthusiasm. Nothing is so beautiful, so inspiring, so full of life and hope. It needs guidance or it may plunge into disaster; it is not enough without the direction of wisdom. But wisdom is vain without enthusiasm. In the Christian life men are uplifted and borne onward when they are reached by a wave of enthusiasm. Christ inspires the "enthusiasm of humanity," because He first inspires an enthusiasm for Himself. Now, the first essential in a worthy enthusiasm is the perception of a worthy object. The horse scents the battle, and the horse knows its master. We see the great battle of sin and misery, and we have a glorious Captain of salvation. The need of the world calls us to the fight; the presence of our Lord gives us strength and courage, and ensures the victory. — Pul. Com.

"I can't understand how any man can realize his standing before God and not be on fire 365 days in a year." — D. L. Moody.

"The time vesture of God, that reveals Him to the wise, and hides Him from the foolish." — Carlyle.

24, 25. (24) swalloweth, etc., so rapid is his motion it is as if the ground were swallowed. A common Arabic figure. "He seemed in running to devour the way." — Shakespeare. believeth he, Pul. Com., "He standeth not still when the trumpet soundeth." (25) ha ha, R. V., "As oft as the trumpet soundeth he saith, Aha!" Imitation of his neighing response to the trumpets. smelleth, snuffeth, discerneth. thunder, thundering voice of command.

the war-horse

The war-horse. — We read in the Book of Job a good deal concerning horses, and surely no better or more faithful description can we find anywhere than that given in this chapter. Whether in or out of battle, the horse loves not only the sound of the trumpet, but also the quivering of the sword and spear, and all the martial accoutrements. A circumstance of not uncommon occurrence was witnessed by the writer. A cavalry regiment was going through its manœuvres, when a soldier in the foremost ranks was thrown. The troops seemed to pass over him; but as the dust cleared off he was discovered unhurt. Where was his horse? In its place, at the head of the regiment, going through all the manœuvres, answering to the trumpet and the "thunder of the captains." It was a curious sight to see this sensible animal as he trotted, galloped and charged — all in time and place. Strength. — There are two kinds of strength — mere brute strength of muscle, and the strength that is vitalized by nervous and mental influence. The urus is an instance of the former. In simple contractility of muscle he may exceed the horse. But the strength of the horse is nervous strength. It cannot well be measured, for it is continually fluctuating. It varies in degree according to the extent to which the sensitive animal is excited. We meet with the two kinds of strength in men, and especially in women. When the mind fires the body, unheard-of feats are performed. In moments of heroism naturally feeble people seem to have the strength of a giant. God gives strength through spiritual influences. — Pul. Com.

"I will not change my horse with any that treads on four pasterns. When I bestride him I soar, I am a hawk, he trots the air; the earth sings when he touches it." — Shakespeare.

"Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful neighs, piercing the night's dull ear." — Ibid.

Action. —

> In peace, there's nothing so becomes a man
> As modest stillness, and humility:
> But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
> Then imitate the action of the tiger;
> Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood. — Shakespeare.

"Nature is the essential properties of a thing, or that by which it is distinguished from all others. It is used, also, for the system of the world, and the Creator of it; the aggregate powers of the human body, and common sense (Rom. i. 26, 27; 1 Cor. xi. 14). The word is also used in reference to a variety of other objects." — C. Buck.

the hawk and the eagle

26, 27. (26) hawk,[a] a migratory bird of prey. fly, the hawk's strength of wing is extraordinary, and one of the greatest of natural marvels.[b] south, as to warmer clime. Moved by an instinct wholly unconnected with human wants. (27) mount up, high flying is the characteristic of the eagle. nest on high, on some inaccessible piece of rock,

A hint from the birds. — I. Consider the wonderful fact that they migrate annually. This is not by thy wisdom: i. e. reason akin to human; but by instinct. As surely as there is the instinct compelling the southern flight, so surely there is the southern land. II. Consider what that fact teaches. Hope, like a Divine and irrepressible instinct, urges us to seek a far-off clime. Does not hope point as unerringly to another world as the birds' instinct to a warmer clime?

a "Heb. netz. prob. a generic term, including the various species of the falcon or hawk tribe, as as the jer-falcon, the goose-hawk, the sparrow-hawk, the lanner, the sacre, the hobby, the kestril, and the merlin." — Barnes.

b "A falcon wh. belonged to Henry

IV. of France, having escaped from Fountainebleau, was found 24 hours after in Malta, the space traversed being not less than 1,350 miles, being a velocity of about 57 miles an hour, on the supposition that the bird was on the wing the whole time." — Barnes.

The captive set free. — Many years had a noble eagle been confined in such a manner that no one had seen it even attempt to raise a wing. Perfectly subdued, unconscious now of its native power, it remained inactive and apparently contented. But its owner was about to leave for a far country, never to return. He could not take the eagle with him. "I will do one act of kindness before I go," said he, and unloosed the chain from the captive bird. His neighbors and children looked on, with regret that they should see the eagle no more. A moment, and it would be gone for ever! But no; the bird walked the usual round, which had been the length of his chain, unconscious that he was free. The gazers looked on in wonder and in pity. The slow rustling of a wing was heard. It was stretched, and then folded. Anon it was stretched to its full expansion, and then folded softly again. Now, slowly and cautiously, the eagle expands both wings and looks up into the blue sky. One effort to mount, then another, and the wings have found their lost skill; and upward, higher, and speedier he mounts his way, until lost to view. Hast thou, O child of God, been pinioned long to the cares and toils of earth, so that thy wings of faith and love have lost all power to rise? Once thou couldst soar, and thou mayest soar again. His "grace is sufficient for thee." — Old Test. Anec.

the eagle's flight

28—30. (28) abideth, term carries the idea of securely, safely (Ps. xci. 1). crag, Heb. shen, tooth.[a] strong place, kind of citadel or fastness. (29) seeketh, looks out for. afar off, the eagle discerns its prey by sight rather than by smell. (30) blood, brought to the eyries by the mothers. slain, etc., man's battle-fields provide the eagle's prey.[b]

The eagle's prey. — Sir Robert Sibbald relates that a woman in the Orkney Islands, having left her child of about one year old in a field, while she went to some distance, an eagle passing by took up the infant by its clothes, and took it to her nest on a neighboring rock; which being observed by some fisherman, they instantly pursued the eagle, attacked her nest, and brought back the child unhurt. — Whitecross.

The Eagle. —

He clasps the crag with hooked hands;
Close to the sun in lonely lands,
Ringed with the azure world, he stands.
The wrinkled sea beneath him crawls;
He watches from his mountain walls,
And like a thunderbolt he falls. — Tennyson.

a 1 Sam. xiv. 4.

b "Thus does God work exceeding strangely, but wondrously, apparently by contradictions, but in truth most harmoniously and wisely, in the natural world." — Delitzsch.

"Souls want wings. We can only live our fullest life when we rise. The hawk mounts in a spiral. We cannot reach the altitude of spiritual experience at a bound; and we, too, may have to work our way up laboriously." — Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE FORTIETH.

contending with God

1, 2. (1) Moreover, this expression introduces the point or application of the speech. the Lord, Heb. Jehovah. (2) contendeth,[c] R. V., "Shall he that cavilleth contend with the Almighty? He that argueth with God, let him answer it." answer it, viz., the many questions asked concerning the inexplicable arrangements of Div. providence in nature. "God's ways are not man's ways, nor within his competence to judge."

The sin of reproving God. — As it may be thought that there are none at this day so presumptuous as to "reprove God," I will inquire — I. Who they are that are obnoxious to this charge. Impious as such conduct is, there are multitudes who are guilty of it. 1. Those who dispute His word; 2. Those who arraign His providence; 3. Those who condemn His grace. Seeing, then, that so many are obnoxious to the charge here exhibited, I will show — II. What is meant by the warning here given to them. God, in reply to Job's challenge, bids the offender, if he can, to answer Him. There are only two ways in which any answer can be given. 1. In the way of self-approving vindication; 2. In a way of self-abasing humiliation. It was in this way that Job replied. — C. Simeon.

Trusting God. — We are not left with the doleful prospect of simply submitting to the inevitable. Although we cannot see the good in God's action, if we only have faith in Him we may rest assured that He is doing just the very best thing for us and all His creatures. This assurance depends on His nature and character. He is a just God and a Saviour, and therefore He cannot be acting unjustly and injuriously. Our indictment of God's goodness is a huge blunder from beginning to end. Let us but trust His goodness in the dark

c "Contending shall the reprover of God contend with the Almighty." — Gesenius.

Job xxiii. 3-7; xxxiii. 13; Is. xlv. 9

"Pride slays thanksgiving; but a humble mind is the soil out of which thanks naturally grow. A proud man is seldom a grateful man; for he never thinks he gets as much as he deserves. When any mercy falls, he says 'Yes; but it ought to be more. It is only manna and in the face of the most distressful events, and in the end we shall see that our safety lies in submission. — Pul. Com.

I know He holds my hand;
So, whether led in green or desert land,
I trust, although I may not understand. — H. H. Barry.

The worth of humility. —

Oh! I would walk
A weary journey, to the farthest verge
Of the big world, to kiss that good man's hand
Who, in the blaze of wisdom and of art, Preserves a lowly mind; and to his God,
Feeling the sense of his own littleness,
Is as a child in meek simplicity.
What is the pomp of learning? the parade
Of letters and of tongues? Even as the mists
Of the gray morn before the rising sun,
That pass away and perish. Earthly things
Are but the transient pageants of an hour;
And earthly pride is like the passing flower,
That springs to fall, and blossoms but to die. — H. K. White.

as large as a coriander-seed, whereas it ought to be like a baker's loaf.' "— Beecher.

"The sufficiency of my merit is to know that my merit is not sufficient."—Augustine.

"The Christian should be like a little bird, which sits on its twig, and sings, and lets God think for it." —Martin Luther.

3—5. (3) Lord, Heb. Jehovah. (4) vile,[a] R. V., "of small account." Job recognizes his humble position. But "it is to be observed that he does not retract what he has said: he simply returns with humility and awe, to let it remain before God just as it was spoken."[b] — Genung. answer thee, however he felt he could answer the three friends, it was altogether a different thing to answer God. lay . . mouth,[c] a familiar mode of expressing proposed silence. (5) Once . . twice, a figure for "oftentimes," as Ps. lxii. 11.

Job confesses he is vile

A threefold estimate of a good man's character.— Taken in connection with i. 8 and i. 11. I. Job's character estimated by God. 1. God estimated his character; 2. Regarded it as perfect; 3. As upright note the blessedness of this character: it included domestic protection, business prosperity. II. Job's character estimated by Satan. 1. His test was severe; 2. He was deceived and defeated. III. Job's character estimated by himself. 1. He calls attention to his vileness; 2. He takes the blame of his vileness.— J. S. Exell.

Silent humility is a preparation for exaltation.— At the end of the book we discover that God exalts Job and loads him with favor and prosperity. But he must be humbled first. The later honor is only possible after Job has abased himself. So long as he justified himself and arraigned the justice of God, he could not be restored and exalted. Thus the poem shows to us the way in which God disciplines his servants and prepares them to enjoy his goodness. Humility is the door to honor. This is a very Christian truth. It is taught by Christ: "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." It is gloriously illustrated in the life and death and exaltation of Christ. —Pul. Com. I used to think that God's gifts were on shelves, one above another, and that the taller we grew in Christian character the easier we should reach them. I find now that God's gifts are on shelves one beneath the other, and that it is not a question of growing taller, but of stooping lower, and that we have to go down, always down, to get his best gifts.— F. B. Meyer. A word from Robert Hall. —When a monument was erected at Leicester in memory of the Rev. Thomas Robinson, the late Rev. Robert Hall went, accompanied by a friend, to see it. Mr. R. is represented in a standing position, receiving a Bible from the hands of the Saviour. Mr. Hall's friend expressed his admiration of the figure. Mr. Hall replied, with his usual promptitude and discrimination, "No, sir, he ought to have been prostrate at the Redeemer's feet."

a "The first effects are humiliation and submission: but silence and submission are not enough. What is wanted is teachableness, and perfect trust, of wh. this first confession of Job does not give any clear indication: hence the occasion for a second address."— Spk. Com.

b Comp. Ge. xxxii. 10; Ezr. ix. 6; Ne. ix. 33; Ps. li. 3-5; Is. liii. 6, lxiv. 6; Da. ix. 5-8; Lu. xv. 21, xviii. 13.

c Job xxi. 5; Jud. xviii. 19; Ps. xxxix. 9; Ro. iii. 19.

He who has other graces without humility, is like one who carries a box of precious powder without a cover, on a windy day.

6, 7. (6) whirlwind, "Job had not only presumed to contend with God, he had charged Him with unrighteousness in His rule of the world and in His treatment of himself. This is the point to which the second speech from the storm is directed."—Cam. Bib. (7) gird, etc., ch. xxxviii. 3. demand, "Since Job has accused Him of injustice, God challenges him to try: could he govern the world, as God by His power doth, and punish the proud and wicked?" — Fausset.

God speaks from the whirlwind

"This second time Jehovah speaks, not in wrath, but in the profound condescension of His majesty, in order to deliver His servant fr. dark imaginings, and to bring him to free and joyous knowledge. . . . It becomes manifest that God is much more forbearing and compassionate then men."— Delitzsch.

"Not all the whispers that the soft winds utter speak earthly things. There mingleth there, sometimes, a gentle flutter of angels' wings."— Amy Loterop.

Humility. — In proportion as the Christian grows in grace, he grows also in humility. Humility is, indeed, the vital principle of Christianity; that principle by which, from first to last, she lives and thrives, and in proportion to the growth or decline of which she must decline or flourish. This first disposes the sinner in deep self-abasement to accept the offers of the Gospel: this, during his whole progress is the very ground and basis of his feelings and conduct, in relation to God, his fellow-creatures and himself, and when at length he shall be translated into the realms of glory, this principle shall still subsist in undiminished force. He shall "fall down and cast his crown before the Lamb, and ascribe blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, to Him that sitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb for ever and ever." The practical benefits of this habitual lowliness of spirit are too numerous, and at the same time too obvious, to require enumeration. It will lead you to dread the beginnings, and fly from the occasions of sin, as that man would shun some infectious distemper who should know that he was predisposed to take the contagion. It will prevent a thousand difficulties and decide a thousand questions concerning worldly compliances, by which those persons are apt to be embarrassed who are not duly sensible of their own exceeding frailty, whose views of the Christian character are not sufficiently elevated, and who are not enough possessed with a continual fear of "grieving the Holy Spirit of God," and of thus provoking Him to withdraw His gracious influence.

and asks Job to answer truly

8, 9. (8) disannul,[a] set aside; render void. judgment, decisions and arrangements in the government of the world. condemn me, make sweeping accusations.[b] righteous, "This was the real sin of Job, that he claimed his righteousness as his own; and that, in order to maintain his own righteousness, he had dared to call in question the righteousness of God, condemning Him to clear himself."— Cox. (9) arm, art thou omnipotent? for this is necessary in the Ruler of all men, that He may keep evil in check.[c]

Happy influence of dangers. — A friend of mine happened to be in a boat, by which a poor simple-hearted man from St. Kilda was advancing, for the first time in his life, from his native rock to visit the world. A person in the boat asked him if he ever heard of God in St. Kilda. Immediately he became grave and collected. "To what land do you belong?" said he; "describe it to me." "I," said the other, "come from a place very different from your barren rock; I come from the land of flood and field, the land of wheat and barley, where nature spreads her bounty in abundance and luxuriance before us." "Is that," said the St. Kilda man, "the kind of land you come from? Ah, then, you may forget God, but a St. Kilda man never can. Elevated on his rock, suspended over a precipice, tossed on the wild ocean, he never can forget his God — he hangs continually on His arm." All were silent in the boat, and not a word more was asked him regarding his religion. — McLeod.

Reverence. — Your true-hearted, fine-grained man puts off his shoes at the door of a mosque, as devoutly as any Moslem; he treads the aisles of a cathedral as softly as any Romanist; he despises no incense, he sneers at no idol. He may deny, but he will not jest. The sneer is crucial; being one who indulges in it, to the test, and you will find him crude in thought and coarse in feeling. . . . I like to hear one pronounce the name of God with a subdued awe and to see the cast of thought overspread the features when eternal things are named. I like to see a delicate and quiet handling of sacred truths, as you speak the name of your mother in heaven. I might say that this is the way a gentleman bears himself towards religion, but I would rather have you feel that it is the treatment due to the majesty of the subject. — T. T. Munger.

and say if he has power and majesty

10, 11. (10) Deck thyself, etc., at thy very best canst thou compare with the majesty of God?[d] glory, etc., R. V., "honour and majesty." (11) rage of thy wrath, R. V., "Pour forth the overflowings of thine anger;" see if you can produce such effects as God does. behold, with a withering glance.[e] These sentences must be read as a Divine challenge, intending to humble the presumptuous Job.

The assumption of man. — When the force of the current had carried away the temporary bridge which Xerxes had caused to be thrown over the Hellespont, on his grand expedition into Greece, he was so enraged, that he not only ordered the heads of the workmen to be struck off, but, like a madman, inflicted lashes upon the sea, to punish it for its insolence: he, moreover, a From Lat. annullare; made up of ad, to; nullum, nothing; to make of no effect, specially applied to laws.

b Job xiii. 24; xvi. 9; xix. 12, 22.

"Let us call to mind these words of God, when it pleases Him to visit us with loss of children or estate, or bodily sickness; for none of these things can happen to us without the just judgment of God."— Origen.

Ro. iii. 4, c Is. liii. 1.

"Who best
Bears his mild yoke, they serve him best; His state
Is kingly, thousands at his bidding speed,
And post o'er land and ocean without rest."— Milton.

d Ps. civ. 1; 1 Chr. xxix. 11.

e Ex. xviii. 11; Is. ii. 12, 17.

"Pride is not a bad thing when it only urges us to affected to hold it in future under his control by throwing fetters into it. God's resistance of pride. — Nimrod thought that Babel should get him a name, but God resisted his pride, and the name of the building was called Confusion ever since. Shebna builded a sepulchre for his memorial (Isa. xxii.), but God resisted his pride, and buried him in another country. Herod hoped when the people cried at his words, "It is the voice of God," that he should be worshipped ever after as God; but God resisted his pride, and before he descended from his throne, the worms so defaced his pomp, that none which called him God would be like unto him. But God resisteth their pride. As Balaam was stopped and knew not who stopped him; so they are resisted, and know not who resisteth them. They please not God, for God resisteth them; they please not the humble, for the humble are contrary to them; they please not the proud, for the proud do envy them which strive to be as proud as they; they please not themselves, because that they cannot be so proud and brave as they would be. — Venning.

hide our own hurts, not to hurt others." —George Eliot.

Pride. —

Know that pride,
Howe'er disguised in its own majesty
Is littleness; that he who feels contempt
For any living thing, hath faculties
Which he has never used; that thought with him
Is in its infancy. The man whose eye
Is ever on himself, doth look on one,
The least of nature's works, one who might move
The wise man to that scorn which wisdom holds Unlawful ever. O, be wiser thou, Instructed that true knowledge leads to love;
True dignity abides with him alone
Who, in the silent hour of inward thought,
Can still suspect, and still revere himself,
In lowliness of thought. — Wordsworth.

"As thou desirest the love of God and man, beware of pride. It is a tumour in the mind that breaks and poisons all thy actions; it is a worm in thy treasure, which eats and ruins thy estate; it loves no man—is beloved of no man; it disparages virtue in another by detraction; it disrewards goodness in itself by vain glory; the friend of the flatterer, the mother of envy, the nurse of fury, the sin of devils, and the devil of mankind; it hates superiors, it scorns inferiors, it owns no equals; in short, till thou hate it, God hates thee."—Quarles.

12—14. (12) low, as God did Nebuchadnezzar.[a] in their place, where they are standing in their confidence and pride. "Let Job manifest himself as a power among men. Then he may claim to be heard with respect to the moral government of God." — Rawlinson. (13) dust, of the grave. bind their faces,[b] as those of mummies ready for the tomb. (14) confess unto thee, "praise thee," if Job will shew himself worthy of that place to which he aspires when he reproves the rule of God in the universe, then even Jehovah Himself will admit his independent might, and laud him as one whose own right hand can save him. — Cam. Bib.

or if he can humble the proud, etc.

a Da. iv. 37.

b "Or it may refer to the custom of binding a cloth over the faces of persons about to be executed, Job ix. 24; Est. vii. 8." —Fausset.

The conditions of salvation by self. — I. What are those conditions? The possession of Divine qualities — wisdom (vs. 8), power (vs. 9), moral majesty (vs. 10), holy indignation against sin (vs. 11), the will and power to detect and punish crime (vs. 12). II. These conditions are wanting to man. His right hand (symbol of power, wisdom, etc.) is perishing, weak, etc., and therefore cannot save. III. God possesses these conditions; He alone is the hope of Israel and Saviour.

Is. lix 16; lxiii. 5.

Humbling the proud. — God humbles the proud man because he loves him. The abasement is not a vindictive act, but a merciful preparation for salvation. The goodness of God leads him to cast down all pretense and self-importance, so that he may raise up a new and more stable structure of solid merit in place of these empty shows. The proud but useless forest is cleared that the precious grain of wheat may be sown in its place. God cuts down man's pride to make room for Christ's grace. — Pulp. Com.

"There is no creature on Earth that does not fulfil its mission except man; none but what promotes God's love, except the one that boasts His image." — H. Gill.

15, 16. (15) behemoth, an Egyptian name (Hebraized,) for the water or river-ox.[c] Some however, think the term should be regarded as a poetical personification of the great Pachydermata.[d] eateth grass, this struck attention as remarkable in a creature living so much in the water. This animal feeds on herbage, roots, etc. (16) strength, the characteristic of this creature. navel, R. V., "muscles." The skin of that part being even thicker than of other parts through dragging over the stones of the river-beds.[e] d So called bec. of their thick skins.

behemoth

c De. xxxii. 24; Ps. xlix. 12, 20, l. 10; Je. xii. 4.

The strength of animals. — The loins are the seat of strength in every animal; hence, in the language of Scripture, to strengthen the loins denotes an augmentation of power. A very decisive instance occurs in the second chapter

e "The belly of the elephant is the weakest and most vulnerable part owing to the comparative thinness and softness of the skin." — Kitto.

"It is clear that the description suits the hippopotamus exactly, and it alone." — Tristram.

"My sandals are his strength And his great love
The staff that helps me toward
The home
above."
—Millie Colcord.

of Nahum: "Make thy loins strong;" fortify thy power mightily. The same idea is involved in the prayer of the Psalmist, that the power which the wicked had so greatly abused might be diminished, till it became consistent with the peace and safety of others, or entirely taken away: "Make their loins continually to shake." Strength.— There is a great difference between strength and power. Strength implies ability; but power implies activity and efficiency. A man may be a strong man, even a giant, and yet be powerless because he is bound by fetters — unable to exercise his strength. The great lack in our entire spiritual life is want of power: We cannot do the things that we would. Rom. 7: 19, is too often the experience not only of the Christian but of every man: "the good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do." Therefore the great requirement of man is power. — Power in two directions: power to overcome evil; power to help others to effect the same thing.— A. T. Pierson.

"Father, hear the prayer we offer;
Not for ease that prayer shall be,
But for strength that we may ever Live our lives courageously."

17—19. (17) moveth, or setteth rigidly up. The hippo.'s tail is but short, about half a cubit in length. The point of comparison appears to be the bending of this short, thick, and apparently firm tail. sinews, etc., the clause should be read, "the sinews of his thighs are twisted together like a rope." (18) strong pieces, R. V., "tubes." bones . . iron, these may be his ribs, as contrasted with the hollow bones of the limbs. (19) chief, "the masterpiece, as it were, of creation;" better, he . . approach, "He that made him hath furnished him with a sword;" referring to his great, sharp, sword-like teeth.[a]

The lessons of created strength. — I. The strength of the strongest is derived from God. This true not only of kings among beasts, but of kings of men. The strength of arm, will, intellect, is from God. II. God has strength to overmaster the strong The folly of fighting against God. Who has done this, and prospered? God has a sword. The wicked are His sword. He, too, wields the sword of the Spirit. The hand that holds the sword is Omnipotence. He knows when, where, how, to strike.

The bones of animals. — The idea of his prodigious strength is increased by the account given of his bones, which are compared to strong pieces of brass, and bars of iron. Such figures are commonly employed by the sacred writers to express great hardness and strength, of which a striking example occurs in the prophecies of Micah: "Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion; for I will make thy horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass; and thou shalt beat in pieces many people." So hard and strong are the bones of the hippopotamus. The cutting, and particularly the canine teeth of the lower jaw, says Buffon, are very long, and so hard and strong that they strike fire with steel; a circumstance which probably gave rise to the fable of the ancients, that the hippopotamus vomited fire.— Paxton.— Strength. — To those who "wait upon the Lord" there is always given strength to meet the trials of the day, and there ought to be no anxiety as to the trials of the morrow. O the peace which a true Christian might possess if he would take God at His word and trust Him to make good His promises! It is hard to say what could then ruffle him, or what at least, could permanently disturb. Day by day his studies might be more arduous, his temptations stronger, his trials more severe; but he would ascertain that the imparted strength grew at the same rate, so that he was always equal to the duties, victorious over the temptations, and sustained under the trials. — Anon.

a The sickle-like teeth with wh. he cuts down grain.

"According to the A. V. the sense is that God had power over him, notwithstanding his great strength and size, and could take his life when he pleased." — Barnes.

"If I can only place one little brick in the pavement of the Lord's pathway, I will place it there, that coming generations may walk thereon to the heavenly city." —Phillips Brooks.

"O, it is excellent To have a giant's strength, but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant."
—Shakespeare.

"I follow Nature as the surest guide, and resign myself with implicit obedience to her sacred ordinance." —Cicero.

20—22. (20) mountains, "to satisfy his hunger the animal depastures whole mountains." play, not frightened by him, though he was so great.[b] (21) shady trees, the wild lotus tree, wh. grows abundantly on the hot banks of the Upper Nile. The habits of the hippo. are lazy. (22) willows, wh. flourish in marshy places. brook, Heb. wady, or river bed.[c]

The hippopotamus. — Around the hippopotamus the beasts of the field may sport in safety; for although he feeds on fishes, crocodiles, and even cadaverous flesh, he is not known to prey on other animals. It is not even difficult to drive him away from the cultivated fields, for he is more timid on land than in the water. His only resource in danger is to plunge into the deep, and travel under it a great way before he ventures again to appear. The Indians, according to Dampier, are accustomed to throw him a part of their fish when he comes near their canoes, and then he passes on without doing them any harm. The same voyager relates an anecdote which remarkably displays the mildness of his disposition. As their boat lay near the shore he went under her, and with his back lifted her out of the water and overset her, with six men on board, but did them no personal injury. These facts prove, at once, his incredible strength and his habitual gentleness. — Paxton.

b "He searches the rising ground near the river for his sustenance, in company with the animals of the land."— Tristram.

c Is. xxxv. 7.

"The singularity of the land habits of our aquatic animals may account for their being specially noticed."—Kitto.

23, 24. drinketh, etc., R. V., "Behold, if a river overflow, he trembled not; he is confident, though Jordan swell even to his mouth."[a] The fig. is of a large animal swimming against a flooded river, with only its head above water. (24) He . . eyes, R. V., "Shall any take him when he is on the watch, or pierce through his nose with a snare?" Can he be captured when on his guard: or shall any one lead him around with a ring in his nostrils? Referring to the almost insuperable difficulty of capturing the behemoth.[b]

Note on vs. 24. — The inspired writer thus concludes his description: — "He taketh it with his eyes: his nose pierceth through snares." Bochart renders the words, "who shall take him in his sight, and perforate his nose with hooks? that is, who shall come before him, and attack him with open violence?" It is found extremely difficult to subdue him in fair combat, and therefore the Egyptians have recourse to stratagem. They watch near the banks of the Nile, till he leaves the river to feed in the adjacent fields; they then make a large ditch in the way by which he passed, and cover it with thin planks, earth and herbage. Passing without suspicion on his return to the flood over the deceitful covering, he falls into the ditch, and is immediately despatched by the hunters, who rush from their ambush and pour their shot into his head. — Paxton.— Harmony in God's works. — Behemoth is suited to his home among the coarse grasses of the Nile. There his voracious appetite can find ample sustenance. God provides for all His creatures, and He suits all His creatures for the spheres in which He has called them to live. Behemoth is naturally of a low and stupid nature, and he has all that his nature requires. Man is of a higher nature. He must not be content to dream his existence away in the sleepy land where soul-life is stifled. The true "lotus-eaters" are not refined sybarites, but hippopotami. — Pul. Com.

behemoth

[a] "The quiet confidence with wh. the heavy brute bears the rush of the formidable inundation may be contrasted with the terror and flight of beasts of prey."— Spk. Com.

[b] "They take him before his eyes, his nose is pierced with cords."— Ewald.

Representations of the capture of the hippo. are common on Egyp. monuments of the remotest age. The trident of the hunter was hurled against the nose of the hippo.

"It is a hard climb, my child, sunshine and shadow; but at the darkest always He has fulfilled His promise, 'At evening time it shall be light.'"— Rose Porter.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-FIRST.

1, 2. (1) leviathan,[c] a generic term, implying a large, lithe, marine animal with closely serried scales. Of such creatures the crocodile[d] may be regarded as the type. hook, as you would a fish. tongue, R. V., "Or press down his tongue with a cord," i. e. tie a rope around his lower jaw, fastening down the tongue. Many savage animals are represented in the Assyrian sculptures as led along by a rope attached to their mouths." — Rawlinson. (12) bore . . thorn,[e] "the Nile fishermen first put a ring through the gills or nose of valuable fish; they then draw a cord made of rushes through it, in order to put them thus bound into the river."

The crocodile. — The crocodile is the natural inhabitant of the Nile and other Asiatic and African rivers. It is of enormous voracity and strength; it swims very swiftly, and does not hesitate to attack either man or the largest animals. Its form is that of the common lizard of our own fields. Its mouth is proportionally larger than that of most other animals, consisting of an immense opening between two jaws, which move both ways, up and down. The lower jaw has commonly as many as thirty-eight sharp, large teeth; the upper, forty; these teeth are speedily renewed, in case by accident any of them should be lost. The neck and back and sides, down to the extremity of the tail, are covered with thick, firm-set, and almost impenetrable scales. The animal is amphibious; swimming, when in the water, for the most part considerably below the surface, except when looking for prey, and then it may be seen on the surface, with its back raised above the water and floating with the stream, as if desirous of being taken, by an unwary victim for a log of wood, from which it is not needful to attempt to escape.

leviathan

[c] Job. iii. 8, marg.; Ps. lxxiv. 14; civ. 26; Is. xxvii. 1.

[d] "It is generally admitted that whatever be the animals specially referred to in other places, in this place it does mean and can mean no other than the crocodile."—Kitto.

Egypt. name of the crocodile is Emsah, Arab, temseh, from a root meaning, to draw out.

[e] Is. xxxvii. 29.

3, 5. (3) supplications, as a captive begging for his life.[f] (4) covenant, submit himself to conditions; yield himself to be tamed. servant, as you do

leviathan

[f] "As dolphins are said to do, with a plaintive sound." —Lee.

the domestic animals. It is wholly an untamable animal. (5) play . . bird? trained to thy pleasure. for thy maidens?[a] like household cat or dog.

Note on vs. 5. — "Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens?" It cannot be; he is a truculent animal, and particularly hostile to children of both sexes, that, by approaching the banks of the Nile without sufficient circumspection, fall a prey to this vigilant devourer. He will even rush upon a full-grown person, and drag him in a moment to the bottom of the stream. Maximus Tyrius mentions an Egyptian woman who brought up a young crocodile of the same age with her son, and permitted them to live together in the most familiar manner. The crocodile was gentle and harmless during his early youth, but his natural disposition gradually unfolded as he advanced to maturity, till at last he seized upon his unsuspecting associate and devoured him. Ancient authors record many instances of crocodiles entering the houses of the inhabitants near the Nile and destroying their children. These are are sufficient to justify the interrogation of the Almighty, and to show that the terrible animal in question never can be completely tamed, nor safely trusted. — Paxton.

[a] "Nothing could be more incongruous than the idea of securing so rough and unsightly a monster for the amusement of tender and delicate females."—Barnes.

Vs. 3. "An elegant prosopopœia, which expresses, with great force and beauty, the difficulty with which he is overcome."—Paxton.

6—8. (6) companions, R. V. "shall the bands of fishermen make traffic of him?" i. e. selling him as they sell fish in their markets.[b] merchants, Heb. cenaanim, lit. Canaanitish merchants.[c] "The Canaanites, or Phœnicians, were the typical merchants of antiquity; so that the words Canaanite and merchant became almost synonomous."— Genung. (7) his skin, which is too thick to be pierced. Fish were, and still are, sometimes taken with the spear. barbed, from barba, beard. The barb is the point that stands backward in an arrow or fish hook. Reference here is to the harpoon. (8) Lay, etc., take hold of him once; you will never do it again! battle, the fierce struggle that will ensue.

Nature is advancing in beauty and joy. — Both behemoth and leviathan — the idealized hippopotamus and the idealized crocodile — are survivals of a more ancient order of creatures than those which now inhabit our globe. Geology teaches us that once such creatures, and greater ones, were the chief if not the sole inhabitants of the earth. They are really akin to the huge mastodon, a monster that would dwarf an elephant; and the dinosaurus and ichthyosaurus, in comparison with which the most tremendous reptile of our own day is an insignificant animal. While these monsters crashed through the forests or plunged in the rivers the world was no fit place for man. But since their time God has peopled the earth with a fairer and more docile fauna. At all events, with such animals as now inhabit it, He has made it possible for so weak a being as man to rule the world. The older ugly and fearful creatures remain to bear witness to the past. But by their contrast with the general life of the present they show how God is improving the earth — Pul. Com.

[b] Comp. Is. xxiii. 8; Pr. xxxi: 24; Zec. xiv. 21.

[c] "As the man is to the animal in the slowness of his evolution, so is the spiritual man to the natural man." — Drummond.

9, 10. (9) the hope, of catching him by any ordinary means. even at the sight, there is, perhaps, scarcely any animal whose appearance would be more likely to deter one from attacking him. (10) so fierce, or courageous; he will daunt even the hardiest hunter. before me,[d] the point God would impress is this. If Job cannot restrain one of God's creatures, how can he presume to set conditions upon God Himself?

The fierceness of the crocodile. — When the crocodile is satiated with prey he leaves the deeps to repose on the banks of the river, or on the shore of the sea. At such a time none are so bold as to disturb his slumbers, or provoke his vengeance; or if any one, disregarding the dictates of prudence, or eager to display his intrepidity, ventures in such circumstances to attack him, it is at the imminent hazard of his life, and is for the most part attended with fatal consequences. Diodorus assigns this as the reason that he was worshiped by the Egyptians, that their enemies, for fear of him, durst not cross the river to attack them. — Paxton.

[d] Je. xii. 5.

"We ought to be thankful to nature for having made those things which are necessary easy to be discovered; while other things that are difficult to be known are not necessary."—Epicurus.

11, 12. (11) prevented me,[e] R. V., "first given unto me," who has bestowed anything upon me? done me a favor first; anticipated me with service.[f] mine,[g] God possesses all things, even man himself. (12) parts, R. V., "I will not keep silence concerning his limbs." A new and more elaborate description is now entered on. comely proportion, lit. the comeliness of his apparatus, or armor. Attention being directed to his weapons of offense and defense;[a] his mouth, teeth, scales, eyelids, nostrils, neck, and heart.

[e] Fr. Lat. prævenire, to be beforehand with; to get the start of.

[f] Ps. xxi. 3.

[g] De. x. 14; Ps. l. 12; Ro. xi. 34, 35; 1 Co. x. 26.

All creation belongs to God. — I. Therefore man is His creature. II. Therefore he should regard himself as the property and servant of the Most High. III. Therefore he should treat the rest of creation as the property of another, and should use as not abusing the things that are God's. IV. Therefore he should try to discover the best uses and application of created things for the glory of the Creator. V. Therefore he should live and act as one that shall give account.

God's rule over the physical universe. — All nature is as much under the hand and power of God to-day as when it first appeared at the dawn of creation. Even the disorder and confusion that have entered into nature have not been able to tear it away from the rule of God. God rules through terror and confusion and death as truly as through beauty and life. God does not confine Himself to what we call the spiritual. He is not only concerned with that which, in the narrow sense of the word, we understand as "the religious." He is the great Architect, Mechanic, Engineer, of the universe.— Pul. Com.

a The grace of his armature.

"To every man who truly studies Nature there is a God. Call him by whatever name—science has a God, and he who believes in this, in spite of all protest, possesses a theology."— Drummond.

13, 14. (13) discover the face, R. V., "who can strip off his outer garment? Who shall come within his double bridle?" i. e. who can detach his tough, scaly covering? double bridle, the double row of teeth. Heb. resen, his bit or curb.[b] (14) doors, the two enormous jaws. teeth, R. V., "round about his teeth is terror."[c]

The jaws of the crocodile (vs. 14).— The doors of his face are his immense jaws, which he opens with a great and horrible hiatus. This feature of the crocodile has been mentioned by all naturalists. On the land his motions are slow, but in the river he springs eagerly on his prey, and either knocks it down with his tail or opens a wide mouth for its destruction, armed with numerous sharp teeth of various lengths, with which, like the shark, he sometimes severs the human body at a single bite. Peter Martyr saw one whose mouth was seven feet in width. Tatius affirms that, in seizing the prey, he becomes all mouth, and Albert, that the opening of his mouth extends as far back as his ears. Leo Africanus and Scaliger affirm that he can receive within his mouth a young heifer. The vast capacity of his jaws is attested also by Martial. "His teeth are terrible round about:" or, in every respect, calculated to inspire the beholder with terror. They are sixty in number, and larger than the proportion of his body seems to require. Some of them project from his mouth like the tusks of a boar; others are serrated and connected like the teeth of a comb; hence, the bite is very retentive, and not less difficult to cure than the wound inflicted by the teeth of a mad dog. All the ancients agree that his bite is most tenacious and horrible.— Paxton.

b "The crocodile's jaw, with its double row of jagged teeth, is so called on account of their sharpness, which gall and wound as a curb in a horse's mouth."—Wordsworth.

c "It has 60 teeth; some of these stand out, some of them are serrated, or like a saw, fitting into each other when the mouth is closed; and some come together in the manner of a comb, so that the grasp of the animal is very tenacious and fearful."— Bochart.

Pr. xxx. 14; Da. vii. 7.

15—17. (15) His scales are his pride, better "the rows of his shields are a pride." Each of his scales is a shield, and they are disposed in rows, or courses. Of these rows there are said to be seventeen.— Cam. Bib. shut up, fitting as close as if sealed with wax. (16) so near, so exactly fitted to its neighbor scale. (17) joined, there is no natural fastening, but they lie so close and compact they seem as if fastened. "A musket-ball cannot penetrate him, save in the eye, throat or belly."

The mysterious sovereignty of God in the formation of His creatures. — The same Divine hand was the former of the harmless dove and the terrible dragon. The Creator of the lamb pleased also to produce the leviathan. The useful ox and the destructive crocodile were made to inhabit the same locality. Why God should have formed creatures of such terrible aspect and ferocious dispositions, clothed them with such impenetrable armor, and furnished them with such destructive weapons are among the secrets of His Divine wisdom. All things are made for Himself; even the wicked for the day of evil. For His pleasure all things are and were created. There is no creature but is made to show forth, in some way or other, the glory of His divine perfections, and to secure some purpose or other in His all-comprehensive government. Variety is everywhere displayed in the works of the Creator's hands, and that variety, directed by infinite wisdom, goodness and justice.— Hom. Com.

"The back of the crocodile," says Thevenot, "is covered with scales, resembling a door studded with large nails, and so hard that it cannot be pierced with a halberd." Betram says "that the whole back of the crocodile is covered with horny flakes, or scales, which no musket-ball can pierce." Burder.

"Learn hence for ancient rules a just esteem: to copy nature is to copy them."—Pope.

18—21. (18) neesings, or sneezings, snortings. R. V., "His neesings flash forth light." Reference is supposed to be that the sun's rays making the creature sneeze, the sunlight flashes on the breath he sends forth.[d] (19) burn-

d "Ref. may, however, be to the fact that the crocodile, rising fr. the water, gives notice of his approach by his sneezings and snortings, wh. shed a bright light on the foam and spray of the water, raised by his puffing it upwards in his rising to the surface. And next his glaring eyes appear and alarm the beholder."—Wordsworth.

"Nothing in nature, much less conscious being,
Was e'er created solely for itself."
—Young.

ing lamps, fig. for the long suppressed breath which rushes out like flames from his mouth and nostrils. (20) smoke, a thick vapor. seething, boiling. or caldron, R. V., "and burning rushes." The water which he blows from mouth and nostrils when coming up from under the water is like steam or smoke, which suggests the further idea of fire within.

Note on vss. 19—21. — Tatius gives a similar account of the hippopotamus. His nostrils are very broad, and emit an ignited smoke, as from a furnace of fire. The very same remark is made by Eustathius: He has a broad nose, expiring an ignited smoke as out of a furnace. These two animals live in the same element, and have the same mode of respiration. The longer they continue under water without breathing, they respire the more quickly when they begin to emerge. As the torrent rushes along with greater impetuosity when the obstacle which opposed its progress is removed, so their breath, long repressed, effervesces and breaks out with so much violence, that they seem to vomit flame from their mouth and nostrils. The language of the inspired writer is highly figurative and hyperbolical, painting in the most vivid colors the heat and force with which the breath of the crocodile rushes from his expanded nostrils. — Paxton.

22—24. (22) remaineth, permanently resideth. sorrow, "Terror danceth before him." R. V., in his presence everything starts up affrighted and seeks to escape. (23) flakes, the softer muscles, which in most animals are yielding, in the crocodile are, as it were, soldered together. they are firm in themselves; fused upon him, like detached pieces of metal, which are melted one into another. they cannot be moved, his whole body is so firmly compacted together that it is all one piece; the separate parts cannot be moved separately.—Rawlinson. (24) firm, "the heart of the great saurians is not liable to sudden contractions and expansions."[a] nether,[b] wh. does not move fr. its place, and is especially hard.

The muscles of leviathan. — As the scales of leviathan present a coat of mail nearly impenetrable to the attacks of his enemies, so his flesh, or as it is rendered by some, the prominent parts of his body, are like molten brass, the particles of which adhere so closely, that they cannot be separated. In all creatures, the heart is extremely firm and compact; in the leviathan it is firm as a stone; and to give us the highest idea of its hardness, Jehovah compares it to the nether millstone, which, having the principle part of the work to perform, is required to be peculiarly hard and solid. Some writers imagine that the Almighty refers not so much to the natural hardness of the heart, as to the cruel temper of the animal, or to his fearless intrepidity; he feels no pity, he fears no danger, he is insensible to external impressions as the hardest stone. — Paxton.

a "In large beasts wh. are less acute in feeling, there is great firmness of the heart, and slower motion."—Bochart.

b Matt xxiv. 41.

"Nature will be reported. All things are engaged in writing their history. The planet, the pebble, goes attended by its shadow. The rolling rock leaves its scratches on the mountains; the river, its channel in the soil: the animal its bones in the stratum; the fern and leaf, their modest epitaph in the coal. The falling drop makes its sculpture in the sand or the stone."—Emerson.

25—27. (25) raiseth up himself, to make an attack. breakings, R. V., "by reason of consternation they are beside themselves." They know not where to turn, they flee away with alarm. (26) R. V., "If one lay at him with the sword, it cannot avail." cannot hold, get any hold in the tough, scaly skin. habergeon, some kind of missile weapon,[c] perhaps the harpoon or trident. (27) iron as straw, snapping the iron weapons with his teeth.

Note on vss. 26–29. — In this glowing description it is plainly the design of the Almighty to show that the skin of the crocodile is impenetrable to these offensive weapons. This entirely accords with the accounts which natural historians give of that animal. Peter Martyr asserts that his skin is so hard it cannot be pierced with arrows; and according to other writers, he can be wounded only in the belly. The back is defended by an impenetrable buckler of large, extremely hard, and closely compacted scales. On this armor of proof the edge of the sword is blunted, and its point is broken; the spear falls harmless to the ground, and the dart rebounds from his impenetrable covering. A shower of arrows makes no impression upon him; and the blow of a stone, slung by the most powerful hand, is no more to him than the stroke of a feather, or bit of stubble. Nor do the more dangerous weapons which the warrior hurls from his military engines depress his courage or interrupt his assault; for he laughs at the shaking of a spear, he regards it not, when, in token of defiance, it is brandished before him. — Paxton.

c The root of the word is sharah, to shine, to glitter.

vs. 25. "They feel a secret horror shoot through the whole soul; they become as it were incapable of reflection and know not whither to turn, when they see the monster emerging from the deep thirsting for blood, and displaying the terrors of his opening jaws."—Paxton.

28—30. (28) slingstones, wh. were a formidable weapon in the East.[d] (29) Darts, clubs. (30) R. V., "His under parts are like sharp potsherds: he spreadeth as it were a threshing wain upon the mire." "The scales of the belly are sharp, particularly those under the tail, and leave an impression on the mire where he has lain as if a sharp threshing-sledge with teeth has stood on it or gone over it." — Cam. Bib.

d Ju. xx. 16; 1 Sa. xvii. 40, 49.

Note on vs. 30. — What is extremely incommodious, or even painful to other creatures, occasions no uneasiness to him. Criminals were punished among the ancients by being compelled to lie on sharp stones; but so insensible is he to pain, that he can stretch his enormous bulk upon them without inconvenience. "Sharp stones are under him; he spreadeth sharp-pointed things upon the mire." Such a place of repose is his choice, not his punishment. Or the words may refer to the scales of leviathan, which are hard and sharp as a potsherd; and to his skin, which resembles a board set with sharp stones, or iron spikes. So rough is the skin of the crocodile, so hard are his scales, and so high and pointed the protuberances which rise on his back, that a more apt similitude could not be chosen than the tribula, or sharp thrashing instrument with iron teeth, to represent in the liveliest manner the appearance of this terrible animal, as he lies reposing in the mud of the Nile. — Paxton.

"Nature never deceives us; the rocks, the mountains, the streams, always speak the same language; a shower of snow may hide the verdant woods in spring, a thunderstorm may render the blue limpid streams foul and turbulent; but these effects are rare and transient; in a few hours, or at most in a few days all the sources of beauty are renovated." — Sir H. Davey.

31—34. (31) deep to boil, the waters swirl as he moves through them. the sea, "the Nile is still called a sea by the Arabs, and its inundations often give it that appearance." ointment, like a foaming mixture. (32) to shine, the white foam catching the sunlight. hoary, or silver hair. Agitated water takes a silvery look. (33) who, i. e. being one who is made without fear. (34) He beholdeth, looks them boldly in the face without terror. children of pride, all animals regarded as being bold, proud, courageous, such as the lion, panther, etc. All sorts of mighty beasts of prey.

God is king of kings. — It would be a fearful thing if the power and supremacy that are entrusted to the larger animals had been given to them without limits or restraints. But the kingly animals, the lion and the eagle, as well as leviathan himself, are all obedient subjects of the Lord, who rules over all the works of nature. They could not rebel against their suzerain if they would. Their kingdoms are but satrapies of the grand empire of nature which God rules absolutely. Hence the order of the world in spite of the power of these monstrous creatures. Man alone is able to rebel. Yet God overrules the rebellion even of the human world, and brings kings to do His will although they may recognize Him as little as leviathan recognizes his lord and maker. —Pul. Com.

leviathan

Ex. v. 2; Eze. xxix. 3; Re. xx. 2, 3.

"To humble the pride of man, and to teach implicit submission, is the aim of Jehovah's speech, and of the book; therefore with this reference to leviathan, the type of God's lordship over creation, He closes."— Fausst.

"Verily, methinks wisdom is ofttimes nearer when we stoop than when we soar."—Wordsworth.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-SECOND.

1—3. (2) do everything, therefore man ought to be submissive unto God.[a] no thought, R. V., "And that no purpose of Thine can be restrained." Job felt that he had taken a wrong attitude in attempting to resist the Divine will, or question the Divine righteousness. His wrong lay not so much in the things he had said as in the spirit he had cherished. (3) Who is he that hideth, "that is, that obscures counsel. As one that obscured counsel Job had uttered that which he understood not. The reference is to his former judgments regarding God's operations in the world, and the rashness of his own language." — Cam. Bib.

Lack of perception. — A lady once said to Turner when he was painting. "Why do you put such extravagant colors into your pictures? I never see anything like them in nature." "Don't you wish you did, madam?" said he. It was a sufficient answer. He saw them if she did not. So believers see many divine wonders which worldlings cannot perceive. — Spurgeon. — Kingdom of God. — The world will never be right till the mind of God is the measure of things, and the will of God the law of things. In that kingdom of heaven nothing else is acknowledged, and till that kingdom come the mind and will of God must, with those who look for the kingdom, override every other way of feeling, thinking and judging. — Geo. MacDonald. — God's mysterious dealings. — There is a striking passage in which a great philosopher, the famous Bishop Berkeley, describes the thought which occurred to him of the inscrutable schemes of Providence, as he saw in St. Paul's cathedral a fly moving on one of the pillars. He says: "It requires some comprehension in the eye of an intelligent spectator to take in at one view the various parts of the power and knowledge of God unlimited a "Job does not learn a different truth fr. that wh. he held previously, but he learns it in a different way; he realizes it spiritually, together with its consequences."— Spk. Com.

Ge. xviii. 14; Je. xxxii. 17; Mar. xiv. 36; Lu. xviii. 27.

"I saw not long since a sign in the heavens. I was looking out of my window at night, and beheld the stars and the whole majestic vault of God held up without my being able to see the pillars on which the Master had caused it to rest. Men fear that the sky may fall. Poor fools! Is not God always there?" — Luther.

the building in order to observe their symmetry and design. But to the fly, whose prospect was confined to a little part of one of the stones of a single pillar, the joint beauty of the whole or the distant use of its parts, was inconspicuous. To that limited view, the small irregularities on the surface of the hewn stone seemed to be so many deformed rocks and precipices." That fly on the pillar, of which the philosopher spoke, is the likeness of each human being as he creeps along the vast pillars which support the universe. — Dean Stanley.

God in everything. —

"God does not live in the Bible or in the closet, alone. He lives wherever you go; He lives in your soul, and His providence is manifest in your daily experience." —H. W. Beecher.

One Spirit — His
Who wore the plated thorns with bleeding brows — Rules universal nature. Not a flower
But shows some touch, in freckle, streak, or stain,
Of His unrival'd pencil. He inspires their hues,
And bathes their eyes with nectar, and includes,
In grains as countless as the seaside sands,
The forms with which He sprinkles all the earth.
Happy who walks with Him; which what he finds
Of flavor or of scent in fruit or flower,
Or what he views of beautiful or grand
In nature, from the broad majestic oak,
To the green blade that twinkles in the sun,
Prompts the remembrance of a present God. — Cowper.

Job humbles himself before God

4—6. (4) Hear, etc., Job still quotes God's words; ch. xxxviii. 3; xl. 7. Translate: "Hear now." Thou sayest "And I will speak; I will ask thee; and inform me thou;" He recites the challenge only to put it humbly away from him. "I did not know and cannot answer Thee." (5) hearing of the ear, all that I knew was but hearsay. Now I have seen Thee. mine eye, the inward eye of faith.[a] (6) abhor myself, R. V., marg. "I loathe my words;" the rash speeches I have made. dust and ashes, already humbled by affliction to sit in dust and ashes, I further repent and humble myself spiritually. Job now bewails not his suffering, but his sin.[b] Still note that he does not retract his statements concerning his integrity. It is his mistaken speech which now causes his sorrow and shame.

A view of God's glory humbling to the soul. — I. Illustrate and confirm the proposition that clear discoveries of God lead to repentance. 1. It brings to light the hidden evils of the heart; 2. It points out the evil of sin — its aggravations — and strips of all excuses; 3. It points out the danger of sin; 4. It sets forth God's infinite mercy. II. Practical improvement. 1. Learn the force of those passages of Scripture in which religion is described as the "knowledge of God;" 2. The great danger of a state of ignorance; 3. See the necessity of regeneration; 4. Observe that as men grow in religion, they grow in humility. — Witherspoon. — The second-hand and primary knowledge of God. — I. Here is implied a second-hand knowledge of God. I have heard, etc. 1. It is very common; 2. It is very worthless. II. Here is implied a primary knowledge of God. 1. It silenced all controversy; 2. It subdued all pride. — C. Calloway.

Seeing God in nature. — One of the saddest conditions of a human creature is to read God's word with a veil upon the heart, to pass blindfolded through all the wondrous testimonies of redeeming love and grace which the Scriptures contain. And it is sad, also, if not actually censurable, to pass blindfolded through the works of God, to live in a world of flowers, and stars, and sunsets, and a thousand glorious objects of nature, and never to have a passing interest awakened by any of them. — Dean Goulbourn.—A hearsay knowledge of God. — This is what Job possessed in the old days. Not that he was without any religious experience in those prosperous times. But the shallowness of it in comparison with what he has now attained makes it look of little worth. Most of us begin in this way. We hear of God "by the hearing of the ear." This is especially true in a Christian country. Here we seem to breathe a Christian atmosphere, and Christian ideas float in upon us unsought. But the faint perception of God that is acquired in this way cannot be of very great value to us. Historical facts can only be known by testimony, and the facts of the gospel must reach us through "the hearing of the ear." But we have got a very little way when we have only come to understand and believe in the historical character of those facts. We are still [a] "We are not to suppose that Job means to say he actually saw God, but that his apprehensions of Him were clear and bright as if he did. There was no evidence that God appeared to Job in any visible form." —Barnes.

[b] Is. vi. 5; Eze. xx. 43; xxxvi. 31; Jno. iii. 5, 10; Ja. iv. 7–10.

Job xxix. 11; Ps. xlviii. 8.

"Besides his literal seeing of God in the symbol of the tempest, Job now saw spiritually what he had indistinctly taken on hearsay before, even God's infinite wisdom." — Fausset.

The dying prayer of William Tyndale, the martyr, uttered "with a fervent zeal and a loud voice," was this; "Lord, open the King of England's eyes."

"God is like the sun at noon, that casts down straight rays, and so throws down the shadows upon the ground underneath each tree; but He never, only among the antiquarian relics at a museum. There is no life in such a knowledge, and it has little influence over us. — Pul. Com.

The unsearchableness of God. —

O Thou eternal One! whose presence bright
All space doth occupy, all motion guide;
Unchanged through time's all-devastating flight, Thou only God! for there is none beside;
Being above all things! mighty One Whom none can comprehend, and none explore;
Who fill'st existence with Thyself alone,
Embracing all, supporting, ruling o'er;
Being whom we call God, and know no more!

like the sun, goes westward towards his setting, turning all shadows from under the trees, and slanting them upon the ground. God stands in eternal fulness, like a sun that knows neither morning nor evening nor night, but only noon, and noon always." — H. W. Beecher.

7—9. (7) right,[a] Job was right on the whole, in his steadfast truthfulness, his hope in God however desperate it seemed, and his indignant scorn of the friends' willingness to believe evil of him, and their misinterpretation of Providence. my servant, used several times of Job to intimate his gracious reconciliation with God. (8) seven, etc., a patriarchal rather than a Levitical sin-offering.[b] him, lit. his face, his person. folly, a term used in the Bible with idea of wickedness. (9) did, as vs. 8. They being also humbled under God's mighty hand.

Note on vs. 7. — The three friends had really inculpated the providence of God by their professed defense of it. By disingenuously covering up and ignoring its enigmas and seeming contradictions, they had cast more discredit upon it than Job by honestly holding them up to the light. Their denial of its apparent inequalities was more untrue and more dishonoring to the divine administration, as it is in fact conducted, than Job's bold affirmation of them. Even his most startling utterances wrung from him in his bewilderment and sore perplexity were less reprehensible than their false statements and false inferences. — Green, Book of Job.

Job intercedes for his friends

a "The difference was that the friends spoke to defend a tenet, Job spoke what he believed to be true. Their great fault was their breach of charity." — Spk. Com.

b Nu. xxiii. 1.

10, 11. (10) turn the captivity, restored him. A proverbial expression. Amply indemnified him for all that he had lost.[c] when he prayed, etc., for this also was a revelation of Job's character and temper of mind. His willingness to forgive them was followed by the evidence of divine forgiveness. gave, etc., as marg. Added all that he had been to Job unto the double, as vs. 12. (11) came . . sisters, brothers and sisters, all had deserted him (xix. 3) in his poverty and sickness. Now they flock about him again. eat bread, the E. sign of reconciliation. piece of money, Heb. kesitah,[d] a much more ancient word than shekel. ear-ring,[e] R. V., "a ring."

The prayer of Job (vs. 10). — I. The text reminds us of the manifold blessings of prayer. 1. Hereby Job was restored to health and prosperity; 2. Hereby his friends were restored to the Divine favor. II. Of the salutary influence of prayer. 1. This exercise tended to purge Job's heart of all resentment towards those he prayed for; 2. It also prepared him for the return of fortune. III. The testimony of this prayer. 1. Job showed affliction had not soured his nature; 2. Affliction had ennobled his heart.

God's blessing. — Job's fortune is doubled. God never blesses imperfectly. He does not simply mend and patch up the broken life. He heals and renews and blesses with superabundant kindness. Job's fortune was but external. This was according to the ideas of primitive times. Christ has led us to look for higher blessings. The Christian Job may never recover his property or his health; and yet in his afflictions he may receive his greatest heritage of blessing from Heaven. But whatever be the form of God's blessing, it is great and wonderful. The Christian has more than a Paradise regained. The second Adam brings a kingdom of heaven that is more precious than the lost Eden. The soul that has been tried by fire has a richer inheritance in God than it ever had in the old days of peace. The discipline of sorrow is the key to wonderful treasures of heavenly joy. — Pul. Com. — Discipline — a blessing. — There is a story told in the Choir Boy of York Cathedral of a man named Theodorus, who went to Athens, and fell asleep in the temple of Minerva. He dreamed that he went to another place, where there was a Palace of Destiny. This was in the form of a pyramid. Each story represented a world. Theodoras saw a friend of his, "called Sextus, in each one of the three stories, or worlds." In one world he was prosperous and good;

the return of prosperity to Job

c Ps. xiv. 7; lii. 6; cxxvi. 4.

d This word is used Ge. xxxiii. 19; Jos. xxiv. 32.

e Ge. xxiv. 47. xxxv. 4; Ex. xxxii. 3.

"Presents are usual in visiting a man of rank in the E., especially after a calamity."— Fausset.

"I ask thee for a thoughtful love,
Through constant watching wise,
To meet the glad with joyful smiles
And wipe the weeping eyes;
A heart a leisure from itself,
To soothe and sympathize."
— Anna L. Waring.

"Whoever has learned to see in suffering a proof of God's love, and beyond the darkness of death a land of light, in which all wrongs shall be redressed, and all virtue meet its due reward,—a land, in fine, in which the varied discipline of this world shall issue in a life conformed to its fair and high ideal,—he has a solution of the great problem in which he may rest and rejoice." —Samuel Cox.

in another, he was contented with a very humble lot; in still another, he was a king, and a good king, too. Finally, Theodorus entered the highest apartment of all, and was so delighted that he nearly fainted for joy. But here he saw Sextus, a wicked man, and ruined forever. "This," said his guide, "is the very best world of all;" but Theodorus was puzzled to know how it could be the best, and yet make his friend Sextus worse off in it than in any of the others. "It is the best possible world," said his guide, "and Sextus might have made the best out of it." "The best possible world" is best only for those who have learned to love and obey God perfectly. Adam was driven from Paradise because it was not the best place for him. A world of discipline is the best then. But when men are fully redeemed from sin, then they can also dwell in Paradise Regained, the glorious city of God. — Peloubet.

Job's possessions and family

12, 13. (12) latter end, closing period of his life. more, by giving him double measure of prosperity. fourteen,[a] etc., comp. ch. i. 3. (13) seven sons, etc.,[b] the same number that he lost in the time of his calamities; ch. i. 2.

The end of a good man's life better than the beginning. — I. For the beginning was like that of all men — sinful. II. For the course was overruled by Divine grace, and a sense of Divine discipline. III. For the end manifests Divine mercy, and is in the beginning of joys unspeakable and full of glory. Application: — Many are at the end of life, without being at the beginning of anything better.

Spiritual poverty. — Think what God is trying all the while to do for us, and see if it is not beyond our greatest thought. Christ is more than teacher. He is our divine Lord and Saviour, able to save to the uttermost. Oh, if the world were willing to take what He is so ready to bestow! If we desired more, we should receive more. It is because our prayers are too narrow, because we want only to fill the cup within an inch of the top, that we are poor. When we are willing that the cup shall run over, there comes a springing out from heaven, a pouring down from above, of that which fills the cup from the great wealth and mercy of God. — Alexander McKenzie.

a "The exact doubling of Job's former possessions shows that we are not reading literal history here." — Cam. Bib.

b Ps. cvii. 41.

"The merchant who towards spicy regions sails, smells their perfume far off, in adverse gales; with blasts which thus against the faithful blow, fresh odorous breathings of God's goodness flow."— Bishop Ken.

Job's daughters

14, 15, (14) Jemima, dove. Kezia, cassia, sweet and gracious as this favorite plant. Keren-happuch, a horn or vase of pigment, such as was used for enhancing the beauty of the eyes.[c] (15) inheritance, this was unusual in the case of daughters. "The Hebrew practice was that the daughters inherited only when there was no son, Numb. xvii. 1 seq. The disposition of his property made by Job would retain the sisters in the midst of their brethren even after marriage, and allow the affectionate relations existing among Job's children to continue." — Cam. Bib.

Names of Job's daughters. — These names are very characteristic, and are exactly of the same class as are at the present day given to women in the East. The first name, Jemima, may probably have the signification of "turtle" or "dove," which it bears in the Arabic language. The second is cassia — the aromatic of that name. And the third appears to be correctly rendered by the Vulgate, cornu-stibii — "the horn or vessel of stibium," that is, of paint, such paint as the eyes were adorned with. All these names are in exact conformity with the present usages, in which the names of females are taken from whatever is considered agreeable and beautiful — flowers, fruit, gums, perfumes, precious stones, and the like. The last name is the most singular. It is one of the characteristics of the Orientals that they do not keep in the background the materials and instruments of personal adornment, but obtrude them on every occasion, as objects calculated to suggest agreeable ideas. Hence the vessels containing paints, unguents, and perfumes, give names to females, supply images to poetry; and painted representations of them, with their names inscribed upon them, occur, equally with representations of flowers, on the walls of palaces in the East. It is also remarkable that this custom of painting the eyes should have existed at so very early a period as the name of Job's daughter intimates. Yet we know that it existed in the time of the kings (see 2 Kings ix. 30); as also among the ancient Egyptians, as appears from their paintings and mummies, as well as from the fact that vessels with remains of the black powder, and the probes or pencils for applying it to eye, have often been found in the ancient tombs. — Kitto.

c "The names indicate great beauty and grace both of person and of character."— Spk. Com.

"The names of the daughters but not of the sons of Job are given. Some have supposed that certain districts of Arabia derived their names fr. these daughters of Job." — Wordsworth.

Ps. cxliv. 12.

"A small circle of usefulness is not to be despised. A light that doesn't shine beautifully around the family table at home, is not fit to take a long way off to do a great service somewhere else."— J. Hudson Taylor.

16, 17. (16) lived . . years, some have concluded from this that he was 70 when his calamities came upon him. But the inference is not necessary. Prolonged life, length of days, was another sign of gracious Div. acceptance.[a]

The evening of life. — Amid life's varied streams and sources of transport and pain, often mingled and often alternating, we learn at last to prefer those milder and more certain or enduring pleasures which calmly soothe us, to the bustle, the labor, and the excitement that engage and animate our youth and maturer strength. Agitation and emotion at length lose their charm; they disturb more than they amuse us. As age advances to its sober evening, we perceive and appreciate the value of conscious life without pain; of sedative tranquillity; of reposing, yet not inactive thought; of sensibility without perturbation; of patient hope; of resting movability; of sensations that please, but do not agitate; of intellectual rumination; and of those solemn aspirations of sacred foresight, of prospective gratitude, and of humble reliance on the great mediatoral Benefactor, which close our mortal days with true dignity and make even dissolution an inestimable blessing. — Sharon Turner.

The value of life depends on the use that is made of it. In Christ the poorest earthly life is rich; and the most unfortunate life is well worth living when it is given to God. But the Old Testament blessedness of long life is enlarged in the New Testament, and appears as the gift of eternal life — the greatest blessing enjoyed by God's redeemed children. — Pul. Com.

the death of Job

[a] Ge. 1. 23; Ps. cxxviii. 6; Pr. xvii. 6.

Ps. xci 16; He. ix. 27; Jno. xi. 25.

"The translators of the LXX. add 'And it is written that He will rise again with those whom the Lord will rise up, etc.'" — Barnes.

"Life is the thing we seek, and man finds it in the fulfilment of his life by Jesus Christ." — Brooks.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

[447]

Introduction.

I. Title. BOOK OF PSALMS. (1) Called in the Heb. Sepher Tehillim, i. e. Bk. of Hymns, or Praises; (2) called in the LXX. Psalmoi, the Psalms = odes adapted to music (psallo, to strike a chord); (3) called in Syriac Ver. "the Bk. of the Psalms of David, the king and prophet." II. Authors. VARIOUS. In our English Bibles the supposed names of the writers are given in connection with many of the Pss. But these titles are of later date than the Pss. themselves and in many cases are not correct. Seventy-three of the Pss. are by the titles attributed to David "Few scholars, however, now claim for him more than 45; and most are content with less."—(Barton). But he was the "most gifted poet of his people," the sweet singer of Israel and "the father of sacred music," and it is in accordance with both ancient and modern custom that the book is named from its leading author and is called the "Psalms of David." The "sons of Korah," to whom a number of the Pss. are attributed, constituted a musical company, or choir, connected with the temple worship, and may have continued from generation to generation. Asaph (Pss. l. lxxiii.–lxxxiii.) was also leader of a choir (Neh. xii. 46; 2 Chr. xxix. 30). III. Canonicity. Has never been disputed. "They are freq. allud. to in the O. T., and are oft. cited by our Lord and His Apos. as the work of the Holy Spirit." (Horne.) IV. Arrangement. They are div. into 5 Bks. in the Heb. and LXX. (1) Pss. i.–xli., chiefly ascribed to David. (2) xlii.–lxxii: ascribed to sons of Korah, xlii–xlvii.; to David, li.–lxv., lxxii. (3) lxxiii.–lxxxix; to Asaph, lxxiii.–lxxxiii.; to Korah, lxxxiv.–lxxxix., mostly. (4) xc.–cvi And (5) cvii.–cl. Liturgic, inclu. Hallelujah Pss. and songs of degrees, chiefly coll. for service of 2d temple. V. Special value. (1) Models of devotion; here man is speaking to God; in other parts God is speaking to man; (2) Prophetic character, esp. in relation to the Messiah. VI. Literary excellence. As national ballads of Jews, comp. with other national ballads. "An epitome of the Bible" (Athanasius, Luther). "Not in their Divine arguments alone, but in the very critical art of composition they may be easily made to appear over all the kinds of lyric poesy incomparable" (Milton). "In lyric flow and fire, in crushing force and majesty, the poetry of the anc. Scriptures is the most superb that ever burnt within the breast of man" (Sir. D. K. Sandford). "David yields me every day the most delightful hour. There is nothing Greek, nothing Roman, nothing in the west, nor in the land towards midnight, to equal David, whom the God of Israel chose to praise Him higher than the gods of the nations" (Müller).

Synopsis.

(According to Bickersteth.)

I.—Didactic Psalms.

1. Human character, happiness and misery, i., v., vii. ix.–xii., xiv., xv., xvii., xxiv., xxv., xxxii., xxxiv., xxxvi., xxxvii., l., lii., liii., lviii., lxxiii., lxxv., lxxxiv., xc., xcii., xciv., cxii., cxix., cxxi., cxxv., cxxvii., cxxviii., cxxxiii.
2. Excellency of the Divine Law.... xix., cxix.
3. Vanity of human life.....xxxix., xlix., lxix.
4. The duty of rulers.....lxxxii., ci.
5. Humility .....cxxx.

II.—Psalms of Praise and Adoration.

1. God's goodness, mercy, and providential care of the good... ...xxiii., xxxiv., xxxvi., xci., c., ciii. cvii., cxvii., cxxi., cxlv., cxlvi.
2. God's power, glory, etc .....viii., xix., xxiv., xxix., xxxiii., xlvii., l., lxv., lxvi., lxxvi., lxxvii., xciii., xcv.–xcvii., xcix., civ., cxi. cxiii.–cxv., cxxxiv., cxxxix., cxlvii., cxlviii. cl.

III. Psalms of Thanksgiving.

1. Mercies to individuals.....ix., xviii., xxii., xxx., xxxiv., xl., lxxv., ciii., cviii., cxvi., cxviii., cxxxviii., cxliv.
2. Mercies to Israel... xlvi., xlviii., lxv., lxvi., lxviii., lxxvi., lxxxi., lxxxv., xcviii., cv., cxxiv., cxxvi., cxxix., cxxxv., cxxxvi., cxlix.

IV.—Devotional Psalms.

1. Penitence...vi., xxv., xxxii., xxxviii., li., cii., cxxx., cxliii,
2. —Trust under affliction.....iii., xvi., xxvii., xxxi., liv., lvi., lvii., lxi., lxii., lxxi., lxxxvi.
3. Extreme dejection, but not without hope, xiii., xxii., lxix., lxxvii., lxxxviii., cxliii.
4. Prayers in distress..iv., v., xi., xxviii., xli., lv., lix., lxiv., lxx., cix., cxx., cxl., cxli., cxliii.
5. Prayers when deprived of public worship.....xlii., xliii., lxxiii., lxxxiv.
6. Prayers seeking help in uprightness.... vii., xvii., xxvi., xxxv.
7. Prayers in time of persecution, etc..... xliv., lx., lxxiv., lxxix., lxxx., lxxxiii., lxxxix., xciv., cii., cxxix., cxxxvii.
8. Prayers of intercession.....xx., lxvii., cxxii., cxxxii., cxliv.

V.—Psalms Eminently Prophetical..ii., xvi., xxii., xl., xlv., lxviii., lxix., lxxii., xcvii., cx., cxviii., mostly Messianic.

VI.—Psalms Historical..lxxviii., cv., cvi.

The Psalms as related to Jewish History.

Rev. W. E. Barton, D. D., in The Psalms and their Story, (Boston, 1898), assigns the several Psalms to the periods in which they may probably have been written. He is careful to claim no certainty for his results, but believes they are as nearly accurate as thorough study of all the evidence will allow. His classification is here given.

I.—The One Pre-Davidic Psalm.
Psalm xc.

II.—The Early Life of David as Reflected in the Psalms.
Psalms viii., xix., xxix.

III.—Psalms of David's Exile.
Psalms xi., lix., lii., lvi., liv., vii., xiii., xxxv., lvii.

IV.—Psalms of David's Middle Life.
Psalms xviii., li., xxxii., ci., xv., xxiv.

V.—Psalms Connected with Absalom's Rebellion.
Psalms lxii., xli., xxxviii., lv., iii., iv., xxiii.

VI.—Other Songs of David.
Psalms xxi., lx. 6–8, cviii. 7–9, cxliv. 12–14, cx.

VII.—From Solomon to Ahaz.
Psalms ii., lxxii., xlv., xii., xxxix., vi., xxx.

VIII.—Psalms of Sennacherib's Invasion.
Psalms xlvi., xlvii., xlviii., lxxv., lxxvi., lxv., lxvi., lxvii.

IX.—From Ahaz to Josiah.
Psalms v., xxxvi., lxiv., cxl., cxli., cxlii., lxi., lxiii., xxvi., lviii., xxvii., l., i.

X.—The Beginning of the End.
Psalms xx., xxxi., ix., x., xxxvii.

XI.—Psalms of the Decline and Fall of Judah.
Psalms xxii., xlii., xliii., xxv., xxxiv., lxxxiv., xxvii.

XII.—The Harp on the Willows.
Psalms xiv., liii., xl., lxx., lxxi., lxix., cix., xciv., lxxxvi., lxxvii., lxxxii., lxxxviii., lxxxix.

XIII.—Later Psalms of the Exile.
Psalms cii., lxxiii., cxxx., cxx. cxxiii., cxxxi., cxliii., xlix., xvi., xvii., xci., cxxxix.

XIV.—Early Psalms of the Restoration.
Psalms cxxiv., cxxv., cxxi., cxxii., cxxvi., cxxxvii., xcii., cxxix., cxxxiii., cxxxiv., lxxxv.

XV.—Songs of the Rebuilt Temple.
Psalms lxxxi., cxxvii., cxxviii., cxxxii., cxxxviii., lxxxvii., xxxiii., lxviii.

XVI.—Later Psalms of the Restoration.
Psalms cxliv., lxxviii., cv., ciii., civ.

XVII.—The Hallel and Other Restoration Song Groups.
Psalms cxiii-cxviii., cxxxv., cxxxvi., cvi., cvii., xciii. xcv.-c.

XVIII.—Late Acrostic Psalms.
Psalms cxi., cxii., cxlv., cxix.

XIX.—Maccabaean Psalms.
Psalms xliv., lxxiv., lxxix., lx., lxxx., lxxxiii.. cviii., cxlvi.-cl.

PSALM THE FIRST.

1—3. (1) Negatively stated. Blessed, abrupt and exclamatory, lit., "Felicities of the man," etc. counsel,[a] i. e. according to the plan, purpose, design, advice of. ungodly,[b] turbulent, R. V., "wicked." scornful, not found elsewhere in the Psalter. mockers. walketh, the outgoings of the life, liveth. standeth, submissive, inactive. sitteth, settling permanently into. (2) The positive picture. But, on the other hand. delight, pleasure, choice, or business by inclination. law, precepts, instruction, teachings of God, written or unwritten, of the portion of the Bible then written, or truth personally revealed. meditate, dwell upon, ponder. (3) planted,[c] set. rivers, streams, brooks, natural or artificial. his, R. V., "its." season, appropriate time. Rom. iv. 22. Matt. xii. 33. doeth, produceth, yieldeth, continuing the figure of the tree; the fruit of the life in action and influence. prosper, bring to perfection.

The word of God (vs. 2).— I. The word of God in the authority with which it comes to the believer. 1. It is law to the life in its mode of acting; 2. To the mind in its mode of thinking; 3. To the heart in its mode of loving. II. The Word of God in the feeling with which it is regarded by the believer. He delights in it—1. Because of the life which it reveals to him; 2. Of the counsel by which it guides him; 3. Of the promises by which it cheers him. III. The Word of God in the attention which it receives from the believer. 1. He privately studies and meditates upon it, 2. He speaks of it, — this is Luther's translation. — Study.— A good man like a fruitful tree. — It is spring time. Around us are orchard trees in bloom, or with fruit about to form. A sight full of beauty, full of promise. See what the text says of the fruitful tree. I. Where it grows. Rivers of water. Needful to life of tree. The Bible, a well of water. The Gospel, a running stream. "There is a river whose streams make glad the city of God." The Sabbath, a quiet lake. The sanctuary, a pool of Bethesda. The good man will be near all these. II. How it came there. Planted. This is the work of another. "Ye are God's husbandry." Providence plants us near the river. III. What it yields. Fruit. Such a tree should not bring forth leaves only. Fruit in his season. Different kinds of fruit in different times of life. But all good fruit. IV. How to be like it. Ask God to plant us by the river; to make us thirst for the water; to teach us to drink of the living stream. Then we shall presently be transplanted to the margin of the river of life. — Stoughton.

Not in the way. — According to a custom which is generally recognized in Central Africa, whenever a caravan mistakes its way and is obliged to retrace its steps and return to a road from which it has deviated, a bough is thrown across the wrong path, and a furrow is scratched in the ground by means of the feet, so that no succeeding caravan may fall into the same error. Thus the generations which have gone astray have declared that the ways of ungodliness and sin are ways of bitterness and disappointment, and they have left their emphatic and sorrowful testimonies as boughs and furrows across these false ways, to demonish us to seek another and a truer path. — Hom. Com.

4—6. (4) wind, of temptation, trial, judgment. driveth away, scattereth. (5) Therefore, because they are not like the righteous, firmly set, planted, vs. 3. stand, continue, endure. judgment, here, or hereafter, sifting the wicked from the righteous. congregation, company, assembly. (6) knoweth, respecteth, approveth. way, career, course of life. perish, vanish, disappear, be undone

Results.— I. The destinies of men are various. II. The destinies of men are decided by their moral character and conduct. III. The destinies of men are as widely contrasted as their character. — Spurgeon.

Chaff. — "What is in yonder vessel?" I inquire of a passing stranger. "Chaff," he replies, turning a hasty glance in the direction to which I point, and passes on. His answer is all that you could expect him to give, and yet it is not correct. The vessel was filled with wheat and chaff, mingled together as they were threshed from the sheaf; but it has been shaken from side to side for some time, and the wheat has all sunk to the bottom, while the chaff has all risen to the top. In like manner many real, though not perfect Christians, are set down as hypocrites by careless observers, because the things of the Spirit gravitate downward, lie unseen, while the vanities that perish in a "Three kinds of wickedness descr. — active participation in evil counsels,—quiet acquiescence in sin,—association with scoffers."—Spk Com.

author,— uncertain

b Job. xxi. 16.

c Jer. xvii. 7, 8.

"A well-governed mind learns in time to find pleasure in nothing but the true and the just." — Amiel.

"Honor must grow out of humility, freedom out of discipline, righteous joy out of righteous sorrow, true strength out of true knowledge of our own weakness, sound peace of mind out of sound contrition."—Chas. Kingsley.

"Where the word blessed is hung out as a sign, we may be sure that we shall find a godly man within."—Sir Richard Baker.

"The Lord's trees are all evergreens. No winter's cold can destroy their verdure; and yet, unlike evergreens in our country, they are all fruit bearers." — C. H. Spurgeon.

"Righteousness is God's first requirement and our first need. For this the hypocrite toils as he clothes his nakedness with filthy rags; for this the humble hunger and thirst; for this the law rages like the sea in a storm; and this in Divine perfection the Lord Jesus has wrought out, and brought in and offered free."—Arnot.

the using occupy almost all the visible surface of the life. That which is Christ-like in Christians should not be small, but large and full-grown; should not sink out of sight, but stand forth visible to all. — Anec. Illus. of O. T. Texts.

PSALM THE SECOND.

author, — prob. David

1–3. The plot. (1) heathen, nations, non-Israelite races. rage, "tumultuously assemble." people, R. V., "peoples." imagine, meditate, Ps. i. 2. (2) set themselves,[a] oppose, take a stand. (3) The conspiracy in the supposed words of the rebels. bands,[b] i. e., of Jehovah and the Messiah; bands of justice, love, mercy.

The second Psalm. — We shall not greatly err in our summary of this sublime Psalm if we call it The Psalm of Messiah the Prince; for it sets forth, as in a wondrous vision, the tumult of the people against the Lord's anointed, the determinate purpose of God to exalt his own Son, and the ultimate reign of that Son over all His enemies. Let us read it with the eye of faith, beholding, as in a glass, the final triumph of our Lord Jesus Christ over all His enemies. — Spurgeon.

"A vain thing." — A medal was struck by Diocletian, which still remains, bearing the inscription, "The name of Christians being extinguished." And in Spain, two monumental pillars were raised, on which were written: — I. "Diocletian Jovian Maximian Herculeus Cæsares Augusti, for having extended the Roman Empire in the east and the west, and for having extinguished the name of Christians, who brought the Republic to ruin." II. "Diocletian Jovian Maximian Herculeus Cæsares Augusti, for having adopted Galerius in the east, for having everywhere abolished the superstition of Christ, for having extended the worship of the gods." As a modern writer has elegantly observed: "We have here a monument raised by Paganism, over the grave of its vanquished foe. But in this, 'the people imagined a vain thing;' so far from being deceased, Christianity was on the eve of its final and permanent triumph, and the stone guarded a sepulchre empty as the urn which Electra washed with her tears. Neither in Spain, nor elsewhere, can be pointed out the burial place of Christianity; it is not, for the living have no tomb." — Spurgeon.

4–6. The plot thwarted. (4) He . . heavens, quietly, and with dignity on His throne, watching and controlling all; the serene power of heaven contrasted with the weak turbulence of men. laugh,[c] fig. of the opposition of the Eternal God. Lord . . derision, He allows the devices of wicked men to work out their infinite folly to their own shame and derision. (5) Then,[d] when they see the outcome of their folly. wrath, God's righteous indignation at their presumptuous wickedness. vex, marg. "trouble." (6) Jehovah's words. king, his earthly representative. upon . . Zion, lit., "upon Zion, the hill of my holiness." "Zion is mentioned as the royal seat of the Anointed One." — Delitzsch.

Christ's government in and over His people (vs. 6). — I. Jesus Christ is, by designation of the Father, a King to rule and govern all whom He hath redeemed. 1. He reigns in us, giving laws of life, working grace in the heart, imparting new supplies of the Sacred Spirit, purifying the heart, creating peace, etc.; 2. He reigns over us, subduing all enemies, bestowing all blessings, sanctifying all conditions, settling all ecclesiastical polity. II. The kingdom of Jesus Christ shall be firmly established notwithstanding all opposition; there are three kingdoms opposed to it — Sin, Satan and Antichrist; but Jesus can plant His sceptre where no earthly king can set his foot. — T. Temple.

The wrath of God. — Of thirty Roman emperors, governors of provinces, and others high in office, who distinguished themselves by their zeal and bitterness in persecuting the early Christians, one became speedily deranged after some atrocious cruelty, one was slain by his own son, one became blind, one was drowned, one was strangled, one died in a miserable captivity, two committed suicide, five were assassinated by their own people or servants, five others died the most miserable and excruciating deaths, several of them having an untold complication of diseases, and eight were killed in battle, or after being taken prisoners. Among these was Julian the apostate. In the days of his prosperity he is said to have pointed his dagger to heaven defying the Son of God, whom he commonly called the Galilean. But when he was wounded in

[a] As Goliath, 1 Sa. xvii. 4–10.

[b] Isa. x. 27; Jer. xxx. 8; Nah. i. 13.

"Blessed is the man whose will and life are thoroughly identified with the Divine law; for the law shall stand for ever, and none shall suffer loss who enjoy its shelter!" — Watkinson.

"Falsehood is in a hurry, it may be at any moment detected and punished; truth is calm, serene; its judgment is on high; its King cometh out of the chambers of eternity." — Jos. Parker.

[c] Ps. xxxvii. 13.

[d] Deut. xxix. 19, 20.

"He that believeth truly in Christ, succoreth the poor members of Christ, He leaveth no man comfortless. He goeth about to hurt no man, but studieth to profit all men. He wisheth and procureth no less goodness to others than he doth to himself. For out of sincere faith cometh charity, insomuch that he which believeth truly in God can never be without it." — Bacon.

"Queen Mary was so much attached to her beautiful Calais, that when in the exigencies of war, she lost it, she affirmed in her grief that the name would be battle, he saw that all was over with him, and he gathered up his clotted blood, and threw it into the air, exclaiming, "Thou hast conquered, O thou Galilean." Voltaire has told us of the agonies of Charles IX. of France, which drove the blood through the pores of the skin of that miserable monarch, after his cruelties and treachery to the Huguenots. — W. S. Plumer.

7—9. The decree. (7) 2 Sam. vii. 12 ff. I, the Anointed One. decree, by which the plot (vss. 1–3) should be wholly overthrown through the institution of the Messianic kingdom. Thou . . thee,[a] "the speaker wishes to make known: (1) That he and no one else, is the one to whom this appointment applies; (2) That he has not been made the son by it for the first time, but declared to be the son; (3) that this declaration was in time and not in eternity, and has the meaning of a historical recognition." — Lange. (8) Ask,[b] "inheritance is the natural night of sonship." heathen, R. V., "nations." (9) break, crush, shatter. rod, staff, flail, sceptre. dash . . pieces, the utter overthrow of the plot, vss. 1–3.

The reign of Christ. — I. Its sovereignty. II. Its authority. III. Its universality. IV. Its irresistibility. V. Its graciousness. — Hom. Com.

Christ the power of God. — Christ is called the power of God as well as the wisdom of God (1 Cor. i. 24). Not only in the fruits of the gospel upon the hearts of men, but in His office, wherein was manifested the power of God in redeeming the world. It was in Him God overthrew the false conceits of the world, knocked off the fetters of their captivity, demolished the power of death, prepared everlasting mansions; the foundations of a happy eternity in the misery, afflictions, death, blood of His only Son. By a crucified man, and a weak flesh encompassed with infirmity, the God of heaven subdues the god of the world, destroys the empire of the proud spirits, and subdues principalities and powers under His feet. It is seen in raising Christ from the dead, after he had sustained the weight of the sin of the world upon Him, and bringing Him forth with success and glory after that great encounter with the powers of hell; in powerfully raising a church to Him from the seed of His blood, in spite of all spiritual and secular enemies, defending it and supporting it under the most terrible waves of the world, that He might be acknowledged, adored, and praised in this world, and that which is to come. — S. Charnock.

10—12. Address of Psalmist who has heard the words of Jehovah and Messiah. (10) wise, prudent, considerate. kings . . judges, all ruling powers and authorities. (11) Serve, "labor for." rejoice, variously rendered, "exult," "tremble," "worship," "submit yourselves." (12) Kiss, R. V., marg. "some ancient versions render, Lay hold of (or, receive) instruction; others, Worship in purity." "Adopt a modest demeanor, lest He be angry, and ruin seize you!" — Polychr. Bib. "Pay homage." — Delitzsch. lest . . angry, not the Son, but Jehovah. from . . way, R. V., "in the way." when . . little, R. V., "For His wrath will soon be kindled."

Reconciliation to Christ (vs. 12). — I. The exhortation. It implies — 1. Submission to Christ's authority (1 Sam. x. 1); 2. Love to His Person (Luke vii. 38); 3. Devotion to His service (1 Ki. xix. 18; Hos. xiii. 2). II. The arguments by which the exhortation is enforced. 1. The danger of disobeying it (Rev. vi. 15–17); 2. The benefit arising from obedience to it. — G. Brooks.

Dash in pieces. — I remember, away up in a lonely Highland valley, where, beneath a tall black cliff, all weather-worn, and cracked, and seamed, there lies at the foot, resting on the greensward that creeps round its base, a huge rock that has fallen from the face of the precipice. A shepherd was passing beneath it; and suddenly, when the finger of God's will touched it, and rent it from its ancient bed in the everlasting rock, it came down, leaping and bounding from pinnacle to pinnacle — and it fell; and the man that was beneath it is there now! "Ground to powder." Ah, my brethren! that is not my illustration — that is Christ's. Therefore I say to you, since all that stand against Him shall become as "the chaff of the summer threshing-floor," and be swept utterly away, make Him the foundation on which you build; and when the storm sweeps away every "refuge of lies," you will be safe and serene, builded upon the Rock of Ages. — Maclaren.

found written on her heart. The precious name of Christ will be found on every Christian's heart."

a Ac. xiii. 33; Heb. i. 5.

b Ps. lxxii. 8.

Bishop Butler, the great thinker, was lying on his deathbed; and, so lying, he looked at his chaplain and said, "I know that Jesus Christ is a Saviour, but how am I to know that he is a Saviour to me?" The chaplain answered simply, "My lord, it is written, 'Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out.'" The dying bishop was silent for a minute, and then he said, "I have often read and thought of that scripture, but never till this moment did I feel its full power, and now I die happy."

"Fools do that at last which wise men do at first."

"The fear of God promotes spiritual joy; it is the morning star which ushers in the sunlight of comfort." — T. Watson.

"Kiss," a sign of love among equals. Gen. xxxiii. 4; Rom. xvi. 16. Of subjection in inferiors; 1 Sam. x. 1 Of religious adoration in worshipers; 1 Kings xix. 18; Job xxxi. 27. — John Richardson.

Jesus sat at meat with publicans and sinners; those whose sins came from the baser passions, and were abominable to all men, so that no man should say that it was not for such that He came.

PSALM THE THIRD.

author,— prob. David

A morning Ps. for one in distress, associated with David, on the occasion of Absalom's rebellion.

1—5. (1) increased, the Ps. seems inspired by hearing of one and another joining the rebellious party of Absalom.[a] (2) of my soul, Heb. idiom for "of me." help, lit. "salvation." in God, the strongest reliance of the Psalmist, indicating his utter helplessness. Selah, a musical sign not understood.[b] (3) shield,[c] Gen. xv. 1. for me, R. V., "about me." glory, riches, majesty, abundance, an enlargement of "reward," in Gen. xv. 1; see De. xxxiii. 29. lifter, cf. 2 Sam. xv. 30. (4) cried, R. V., "cry." he heard me, lit. "he answers me." out . . hill, i. e. Zion, the seat of the ark, 2 Sa. xv. 24–29. (5) I, emphatic. This is my experience. slept, even the very night of the flight from Jerusalem. sustained me, better, sustaineth, does so continually.

Mistaken verdicts. — I. The verdict of sense. 1. This verdict was popular; 2. Plausible; 3. Confident. II. The judgment of faith. Lessons: 1. Human judgments are not infallible; 2. Despair not of the worst of men; 3. Despair not of yourselves in life's darkest moments. — Hom. Com.

"Selah." — This a musical pause, the precise meaning of which is not known. Some think it simply a rest, a pause in the music: others say it means, "Lift up the strain — sing more loudly — pitch the tune upon a higher key — there is nobler matter to come, therefore retune your harps." Harp-strings soon get out of order and need to be screwed up again to their proper tightness, and certainly our heart-strings are evermore getting out of tune. Let "Selah" teach us to pray

> "O may my heart in tune be found, > Like David's harp of solemn sound."

At least, we may learn that wherever we see "Selah," we should look upon it as a note of observation. Let us read the passage which precedes and succeeds it with greater earnestness, for surely there is always something excellent where we are required to rest and pause and meditate, or when we are required to lift up our hearts in graceful song. "SELAH." — Spurgeon.

The Lord a shield. — Luther, when making his way into the presence of Cardinal Cajetan, who had summoned him to answer for his heretical opinions at Augsburg, was asked by one of the cardinal's minions where he should find a shelter, if his patron, the elector of Saxony, should desert him? "Under the shield of heaven!" was the reply. The silenced minion turned round and went his way. — Whitecross.

All right by and by. — A woman, with sad face and doleful voice, was once complaining bitterly of her hard lot in life, and of the trials and misfortunes which she was called to pass through, when the sweet voice of a child, of only five years, broke in with: "It will all come right by-and-by, mother." Those words, coming as they did from childish lips, made an impression on my mind which will never be erased. Many times since, amid the conflicts of life, I have seemed to hear a childish voice saying, "It will all come right by-and-by." Oh, that we might always have the love and confidence of a little child. Then we should ever trust in our heavenly Father's tender care, feeling that He will bring us safely through all the troubles of this life, and that all things shall work together for our good and the glory of God. — S. W. W.

6—8. (6) set themselves, arrayed themselves for battle. This verse is "a quiet, meek expression of believing confidence. That God will protect him is pledged by the protection of the night." (7) arise, etc., confidence taking shape as prayer. smitten . . bone, denoting violence and humiliation.[d] broken the teeth, fig. taken fr. wild animals.[e] (8) salvation, fr. all kinds of trouble. blessing is, R. V., "thy blessing be upon thy people."

Minorities and majorities. — I. Do not always trust in the verdict of majorities. II. Do not confide in majorities. III. Do not fear to be in a minority with God. IV. Remember that the majority will be against you when God is. V. The way to conquer majorities is through penitence and prayer.—Hom. Com.

Salvation. — The text is true in respect to salvation in every sense of the term. I. Temporally. II. Spiritually, the soul's salvation is of the Lord. 1. He is its author, prompted by His goodness, planned by His wisdom, wrought out by His power; 2. He is the finisher of it; 3. He is the preacher of it. III. Physically, in the resurrection.—The Study.

---

[a] 2 Sa. xv. 12; xvi. 15.

[b] "A word of doubtful origin, probably meaning a sweep of harp strings marking a pause." — Spk. Com.

[c] "The hero accustomed to battle and victory lives and breathes in warlike thoughts and associations." —Ewald.

"The title of this Psalm is as a key hung ready at the door, to open it and let us into the entertainments of it. When we know on what occasion this Ps. was penned we know the better how to expound it." — M. Henry.

"The French Protestants, in the time of their persecution, had psalms adapted to their varied circumstances. The 3d Psalm was for the stationing of sentinels to keep watch against sudden attack; when the danger was over, and they could worship in safety, they sang Psalm 122d." —Ker.

Dav.'s extreme danger was past when Absalom's pursuit of him was delayed.

[d] 1 Ki. xxii. 24.

[e] "To break the teeth of any one means to out an end to their power of doing harm." — Jennings and Lowe.

From certain early fathers of the Christian Church it would seem that in their times the

The Book of Psalms.— The Psalms is a theatre where God allows us to behold both Himself and His works; a most pleasant green field; a vast garden, where we see all manner of flowers, a paradise, where we see the most delicious flowers and fruits; a great sea, in which are hid costly pearls; a heavenly school, in which we have God for our teacher; a compend of all Scripture; a mirror of Divine grace, reflecting the lovely face of our heavenly Father, and the anatomy of our souls.— Gerhard.

Psalter was generally committed to memory; and that it was particularly expected ministers would be able to repeat the same.

PSALM THE FOURTH.

1—4. (1) Hear me, R. V., "Answer me." God of my righteousness, or my righteous God.[a] enlarged, R. V., "set me at large."—Polych. Bib. "In the throng of afflictions Thou makest room for me."[b] (2) sons of men, the Heb. term used signifies "men in high station," the leaders among his enemies. how . . shame, R. V., "how long shall my glory be turned into dishonor?"—Polych. Bib. "How long will ye be obstinate?" my glory, both royal dignity and personal honor, which had been affronted. leasing, R. V., "falsehood." (3) But, strong antithesis, the eternal law of the Divine government absolutely opposed to the conduct of his enemies. hath . . him, Perowne says, "hath marvelously chosen; for the notion of something wonderful is found in the root." godly, O. T. designa. of the pious. (4) stand, cf. Eph. iv. 26. If they appreciated God's character they would be afraid of His chastisement.

Man appealing to God.— I. He appeals to the Divine righteousness. II. To the Divine faithfulness. III. To the Divine mercy. Observe:— 1. The blessedness of appealing to God. 2. The condition of appealing to God.— Alexander.

Vanity.— Chrysostom said once, "That if he were the fittest in the world to preach a sermon to the whole world, gathered together in one congregation, and had some high mountain for his pulpit, from whence he might have a prospect of all the world in his view, and were furnished with a voice of brass, a voice as loud as the trumpets of the archangel, that all the world might hear him, he would choose to preach upon no other text than that in the Psalms, O mortal men, 'How long will ye love vanity, and follow after leasing?'"

author,— David

This Ps. was prob. composed as an evening Ps., on the same occasion as Ps. iii.

a "Thou, who maintainest my right and my cause. But not to be confined to this; it also means, Who knowest the righteousness, the sincerity of my heart and life."— Perowne.

b "A common salutation in Arabic is 'Space and ease to thee.'"—Spk. Com.

5—8. (5) offer, etc., this is best regarded as Dav.'s advice to his followers.[c] sacrifices, used here generally for relig. worship.[d] (6–8) A calm expression of David's joy in perfect trust in God. Who . . good? apply to Dav.'s followers, whose condition many regarded as desperate.[e] the light, etc. wh. would abundantly cheer despondent hearts. (7) more . . increased, R. V., "more than they have when their corn and their wine are increased."— Polych. Bib. "More than in time of the harvests of grain and of wine." corn and wine,[f] this is said bec. shortness of provision was a chief cause of their distress. (8) in peace, even in the face of all the dangers of another night. Both should be rendered at once; as soon as I lie down calm sleep will come. only, R. V., marg. "in solitude."

The light of God's countenance (vs. 6). — What is the meaning of this prayer? I. That the mind is decided in seeking happiness in God alone. II. A desire to have a full manifestation of the Divine favor. III. That the mind seeks for clearer evidence of its reconciliation to God. IV. That the soul has already had such a taste of the blessing sought as to regard its full bestowment as the highest enjoyment. — Evang. Preacher. The two cries and the two answers (vs. 6). — I. The cry of the sons of men. It is the cry of — 1. Emptiness; 2. Weariness; 3. Darkness; 4. Helplessness; 5. Earnestness; 6. Despair; 7. It is loud and universal. II. The cry of the sons of God. It is the cry — 1. Of the few and not of the many; 2. It is a certain and definite cry; 3. It is a cry to go; 4. It is a cry for right; 5. A cry which will be answered. — Bonar.

Safety. — When one asked Alexander how he could sleep so soundly and securely in the midst of danger, he told him that Parmenio watched. Oh, how securely may they sleep over whom He watcheth that never slumbers nor sleeps! Safety. — Happy is the Christian, who having nightly with this verse, committed himself to his bed as to his grave, shall at last, with the same words resign himself to his grave as to his bed, from which he expects in due time to arise, and sing a morning hymn with the children of the resurrection. — George Horne. Providential Interpositions. — The goodness or

c "Though now excluded from the privilege of access to God's altar on Mount Zion, you may still offer the sacrifice of the heart."— Wordsworth.

d Comp. 2 Sa. xv. 7-9; and for the general application, Ps. l. 14; li. 19; De. xxxiii. 19.

e "The situation gives this the character of a despondent question arising from a disheartened view of the future."— Delitzsch.

f For joy of harvest and vintage seasons, see Is. ix. 3; Je. xlviii. 33.

The answer of a Christian sailor, who was not sure that he could swim, when asked why he remained so calm in a fearful storm, was, "Though I sink, I mercy of God is seen when it interposes for the help of man. The ravens, in a time of famine, bring Elijah bread and flesh (1 Kings xvii. 6). The story is known how Du Moulin, during the massacre of the Huguenots, in Paris, was cherished for a fortnight by a hen, which came constantly and laid her eggs where he was concealed. Also how at Calais an Englishman, who crept into a hole under a staircase, was there preserved by means of a spider, which had woven its web over the hole, and so the soldiers slighted the search there. Camerarius relates how, in the time of a siege, when the inhabitants, who were sorely pressed by the Turks, placed a large store of bee-hives on the walls of the besieged place, and furiously tumbling down the hives on their enemies, the latter were so desperately stung, that in a pang of indignation they gave up the siege, to the inexpressible joy of the besieged Christians, who were holpen by these new and wonderful recruits!—Crane.

The bell of the angels.—

It is said that in heaven at twilight a great bell softly swings,
And man may listen and hearken to the wondrous music that rings,
If he put from his heart's inner chamber all the passions, pain, and strife, Heart-ache and weary longing that throb in the pulses of life—
If he thrust from his soul all hatred, all thoughts of wicked things—
He can hear in the holy twilight how the bell of the angels rings.

. . . . . .

So, then, let us ponder a little—let us look to our hearts and see If the twilight bell of the angels could ring for you and me.
—Atlanta Constitution.

PSALM THE FIFTH.

1—4. (1) meditation, a word used of thoughts expressed in low tones, or "but spoken in the heart."[a] (2) cry, when heart-thought gains utterance in prayer. my King, God was true King of Israel.[b] David only vicegerent. will, R. V., "do." (3) in the morning, i. e. early, repeated for emphasis. Sign of pious earnestness.[c] direct, R. V., "order," indic. careful preparation. look up, R. V., "keep watch," i. e. "watching unto prayer."[d] (4) God, El, a mighty being, like the fetich deities the heathen worship. dwell, as if under Div. protection. "Evil cannot be guest of Thine."

True prayer.—I. True prayer is passionate—1. It begins with words; 2. It deepens into sighs; 3. It rises into cries. II. True prayer is personal. III. True prayer is resolute. IV. True prayer is obedient. V. True prayer is expectant.—Hom. Com.

Look up! (vs. 3).—"Look up!" thundered the captain of a vessel, as his boy grew giddy while gazing from the topmast. "Look up!" The boy looked up, and returned in safety. Young man, look up and you will succeed. Never look down and despair. Leave dangers uncared for, and push on. If you falter, you lose. Look up! Do right, and trust in God.—"Neither shall evil dwell with thee."—Many would teach us that God does tolerate evil—that He employs it to perfect man, to develop the universe. No; He cannot dwell with it, cannot tolerate it. Remember this in the church. History relates that Redwald, King of East Anglia, built a church, at one end of which was an altar for the sacrifice of the mass, and at the other end an altar for sacrifice to the old British idols How frequently the church is in danger of making analogous compromises allowing certain evils to exist within its borders for the sake of gold, or popularity, or peace. It must not be, or God will not dwell with us. And we must remember this in our personal life.—Hom Com. In the morning.—"In the days of our fathers," says Bishop Burnet, "when a person came early to the door of his neighbor, and desired to speak with the master of the house, it was as common a thing for the servants to tell him with freedom, 'My master is at prayer,' as it is now to say, 'My master is not up.'"

5—7. (5) foolish,[e] R. V., "arrogant." stand,[f] as courtiers in presence of the King of kings. in . . sight, Heb. "before thine eyes." workers of iniquity,[g] Mat. vii. 23. (6) leasing, Ps. iv. 2. abhor, regard with detestation.[h] bloody, R. V., "bloodthirsty." Ref. may be to Ahithophel, the adviser of the Absalomic revolt. (7) house, or tabernacle. Trans. "in the shall only drop into the hollow of my Father's hand; for He holds all these waters there." Another says. "My life hangs by a single thread; but that thread is in a Father's hand."

"Since every day by Thee we live,
May grateful hearts Thy gifts receive!
And may the hand be pure from stain
With which our daily bread we gain!"—Samuel Longfellow.

"It was wise advice of Sydney Smith, when he said that those who desire to go hopefully and cheerfully through their work in this life should 'take short views;' not plan too far ahead; take the present blessing, and be thankful for it."—Boyd.

Nehiloth:—an accompaniment of flutes.

a 1 Sa 1. 13; Ps. xxxix. 3.

b Ps. x. 16; comp. 1 Sa. viii. 7.

c "Every one that eateth and drinketh, and after that says his prayers, of him the Scrip. saith, 'But Me thou hast cast behind thy back.'"—Talmud.

d Eph. vi. 18.

"Rest assured, Christ will not live in the parlor of our hearts if we entertain the devil in the cellar of our thoughts."—Spurgeon.

e Ps. lxxiii. 3; lxxv. 4, 5

f Pr. xxii. 29.

g "Men who make evil their business or trade."—Spk. Com.

h Fr Lat. abhorrere, to bristle, abundance of thy loving kindness I will come into thy house." temple, applied to the sanctuary before Sol.'s temple was reared.[a]

The psalmist's resolution in regard to the house of God (vs. 7).—I. Observe the singularity of the resolution. II. Mark the object of the resolution: it regards the service of God in the sanctuary. III. The manner in which he would accomplish the resolution. 1. Impressed with a sense of the Divine goodness; 2. Filled with holy veneration. — W. Jay.

"Thou shalt destroy them that speak leasing," etc. — In the same field wherein Absalom raised battle against his father, stood the oak that was his gibbet. The mule whereon he rode was his hangman, for the mule carried him to the tree, and the hair wherein he gloried served for a rope to hang. Little know the wicked how everything which now they have shall be a snare to trap them when God begins to punish them. — William Cowper.

8—12. (8) Lead me, as a shepherd.[b] righteousness, "wh. is pledged to succor those who worship Him, and seek His guidance." enemies, lit. watchers. way straight, the way of Thy providential leadings make plain. (9) faithfulness, met worthiness, marg. "stedfastness." inward part, the seat of life and all its springs. wickedness, Heb. is plural. throat, etc., out of it comes moral putridness. flatter, lit. make their tongue smooth.[c] (10) Destroy . . them, R. V., "Hold them guilty." by, lit. "from," i. e. on account of.[d] cast . . out, or "thrust down." (11) defendest, marg. "thou coverest over, or, protectest them." (12) wilt bless, lit. dost bless. shield, tsinnah, Heb. for the large shield wh. covered the whole body.

The righteous (vs. 11).—I. Observe the character of the righteous. 1. They are men of faith; 2. They are men of love. II. The privileges of the righteous. 1. They have joy — great, pure, satisfying, triumphant, and constant; 2. They have defense by power, providence, angels, and grace. — Spurgeon.

God's promise fulfilled. — The Reformed churches in France, whose history exhibits a series of the most atrocious perfidy on the part of their oppressors, were yet, whilst in the possession of the city of Rochelle and the free institutions of Protestantism, always too formidable for their enemies either to suppress their religion, or to subdue them as a body. The papacy made various attempts, through its tools, the reigning monarchs of France, to dispossess the Reformed churches of this their stronghold; and consequently it underwent several memorable sieges, the last of which occurred in the years 1627 and 1628, when, after a noble resistance, it finally surrendered to the besiegers, who demolished its fortifications, and confiscated its municipal rights. During this siege there were numerous examples of great and liberal generosity among the inhabitants. The following example is narrated: "The Sieur De la Goute, an honorary king's advocate, had a sister, the widow of a merchant named Prosni, who, being a very religious and benevolent woman, at the time when the famine became more severe than it had before been, freely assisted the poor with her present surplus. Her sister-in-law, the wife of her brother De la Goute, being differently inclined, reproved her for her conduct, asking her in anger, 'What she would do when her all should be expended?' Her reply was, 'My sister, the Lord will provide for me.' The siege was continued, and the famine increased its fearful ravages, and poor widow Prosni, who had four children, found herself in a great strait — all her store of provisions being exhausted. She applied to her sister for relief, who, in the stead of comforting, reproached her for her improvidence; tauntingly adding that as she had done mighty well to be so reduced under all her great faith and fine words that 'the Lord would provide for her,' so in good time He might provide for her. Wounded to the heart by these words, poor widow Prosni returned to her house in sad distress, resolving, nevertheless, to meet death patiently. On reaching her home, her children met her with gladdened hearts and joyous faces, and told her that a man, to them an entire stranger, had knocked at the door, it being late, and, on it being opened, he threw in a sack of about two bushels of wheat, and then, without saying a word, suddenly departed. By means of this unexpected relief, conveyed to her so opportunely, she was enabled to support herself and family until the end of the seige, and she never knew to whom she was instrumentally indebted for this timely and merciful assistance."

shiver from or at the presence of any one.

[a] 1 Sa. i. 9; iii. 3; 2 Sa. xxii. 7.

"Save us, O God, from having our hearts hammered to the hardness of steel by sin; and daily keep us by Thy grace sensible and tender before Thee, trembling at Thy word." — Spurgeon.

[b] Ps. xxiii. 2, 3; xxxi. 3.

[c] "The climax appears to be, — their inner parts are a very place of destruction, their throat is a yawning sepulchral passage to it, their tongue is a smooth and easy entrance." — Jennings and Lowe.

[d] 2 Sa. xv. 31; xvii. 14, 23.

There is a peculiar manifestation of the power of God in those that believe. All creatures manifest His creative power. Angels display His power to govern and uphold in unsullied holiness. But only those who believe know the exceeding greatness and mighty working of His power to recover from a fallen state, and then to maintain.

A poor widow was weeping in the room where lay the body of her husband. Their only child came in, and said, "Why do you weep so, mother?" The mother told him of their loss, and especially referred to their poverty. Looking into her face, the little fellow said, "Is God dead, mother?"

PSALM THE SIXTH.

author,— unknown

a sick man's prayer

Sheminith : —with a bass accompaniment.

1—5. (1) O Lord, Heb. Jehovah. rebuke . . anger, the Psalmist asks the entire removal of God's chastisement. Some comp. with Jer. x. 24. (2) Have mercy, be gracious. weak, R. V., "withered away." heal me, cf. Jer. xvii. 14; Job v. 18. vexed, shaken, see ii. 5. (3) My . . vexed, "mind as well as body, the inner self as well as the outer organism is dismayed." — Kirkpatrick. how long? the sentence ends abruptly; feelings too strong for words. (4) Return, to my relief. In suffering God seems to be absent, but is not.[a] mercies, R. V., "loving kindness." (5) death, the climax of sickness.[b] The state after death was generally regarded by the Heb. as one of utter inactivity. grave, Sheol, the unseen world.

This psalm might have a history to itself. It has a wail of pain and sorrow, deepening into anguish, running through it; but comfort dawns at the close, like an angel turning the key of the prison. It is the first of the seven penitential psalms, the others being the 32d, 38th, 51st, 102d, 130th, 143d. One of the strangest things, though not the happiest, in its records is, that, along with Psalm 142d, it was the choice of Catherine de Medici, the Jezebel and Athaliah of the French monarchy. She was irreligious and superstitious, profligate and devoured by ambition; and the fact that she had no children, seemed likely to deprive her of the control which she hoped to gain in the counsels of the kingdom. The psalm was the expression of mere worldly disappointment. She became at last the mother of Francis II. (the first husband of Mary Stuart) and of Charles IX., whose character she corrupted by ministering to his vices, and whom she urged to the massacre of St. Bartholomew. "Her desire was realized," says a French historian, "for the misery of France; and that family, which then took pleasure in Psalms, put to death thousands of the Reformed for singing them." — Ker.

a Matt. xxvii. 46.

b Compare Isaiah xxxviii. 18, 19.

"I indeed confess that I deserve nothing but destruction; but because I could not endure the severity of Thy judgment, deal with me after my deserts; yea, rather forgive the sins whereby I have provoked Thine anger against me." —Calvin. "Soul-trouble is the very soul of trouble."—Spurgeon.

6—10. (6) all the night, or every night. bed to swim, a strong fig. for the his constant weeping. water, drench, or flood. (7) consumed,[c] R. V., "wasteth." "The look of the eye is a sure indication of the state of health mental and bodily." — Cam. Bib. (8) workers, etc., Ps. v. 5. hath heard, this change of tense indicates a renewal of confidence and hope. (9) will receive, the Psalmist felt sure that hearing pledged acceptance. Receive means favorably accept and regard. (10) Let all, or better, I know that all, etc. return, R. V., "be turned back." Certain that his prayer is heard, he no longer fears his enemies.

c Job xvii. 7; Ps. xxxi. 9.

A priest, by the name of John, is mentioned as having been rejected from the bishopric of Ravenna, for inability to repeat the Psalms without a book.

A man of prayer. — Of Mr. Thomas Hooker, of New England, his biographer says, "He was a man of prayer;" which, indeed, was a ready way to become a man of God. He would say, "that prayer was the principal part of a minister's work: it was by this that he was to carry on the rest." Accordingly, he devoted one day in a month to prayer, with fasting, before the Lord, besides the public fasts, which often occurred. He would say, "that such extraordinary favors as the life of religion and the power of godliness, must be preserved by the frequent use of such extraordinary means as prayer, with fasting, and that if professors grew negligent of these means, iniquity would abound, and the love of many wax cold." When he lay dying, a friend standing by his bed said, "You are going to receive the reward of all your labors." He replied, "Brother, I am going to receive mercy."

"Let us pray, with our whole hearts, for mercy; and if the answer to our prayers be tardy, because we have deeply transgressed, let us knock; for to him that knocketh it shall be opened when prayers, groans and tears beat at the door." —St. Cyprian.

PSALM THE SEVENTH.

author,— prob. David

1—6. (1) put my trust, lit. "have I taken refuge." persecute, R. V., "pursue;" an expression connecting the Ps. with the time of the enmity of Saul. lest he,[d] one person stood out prominently as leader among his enemies. Prob. Saul is meant but Dav. respectfully avoids naming him. soul, i. e. life. like a lion, whose habits Dav. knew; 1 Sam. xvii. 34–37. (3) done this,[e] some specific charge was brought ag. him; prob. treason ag. Saul. (4) delivered, perhaps reference 1 Sam. xxiv. 4–7; xxvi. 9.[f] (5) my life, i. e. "me."

d Ps. xxxv. 15.

e 1 Sa. xxiv. 12, 13; xxvi. 18; Comp. 2 Sa. xvi. 7, 8.

f "And if I have plundered him who is without cause my enemy." — Delitzsch.

The extremity and asylum of God's people.— I. Their extremity. 1. The enemies of the righteous are multiplied; 2. These enemies are malign; 3. These enemies are resistless. II. Their shelter. 1. The security of this shelter; 2. The condition of its enjoyment. (1) A personal relationship to God. (2) A constant faith in God.— Hom. Com.

"Mine honor in the dust."— When Achilles dragged the body of Hector in the dust around the walls of Troy, he did but carry out the usual manners of those barbarous ages. David dares in his conscious innocence to imprecate such an ignominious fate upon himself if indeed the accusation of the black Benjamite be true. He had need have a golden character who dares to challenge such an ordeal.— C. H. Spurgeon.

6—9. (6) Arise, etc., I appeal fr. their slanders to Thee, as judge.[a] because of, R. V., "against." awake, etc., R. V., "awake for me, thou hast commanded judgment." (7) so shall, R. V., "and let," in that case, the case of granting me public vindication. compass thee, coming round Thee to acknowledge Thy righteousness. return . . high, R. V., "and over them return thou on high" to Thy judgment-throne.[b] (8) shall judge, R. V., "ministereth judgment to." judge me, only conscious integrity could make such an appeal. Dav. refers to the crime with wh. he was charged, not to any absolute sinlessness.[c] (9) wickedness, of slander and plotting. just, righteous. trieth, in specific sense of testing, assaying. hearts, the seat of thought and volition. reins, the seat of the emotions, both words including the whole man.

Christian integrity. — An interesting instance of Christian integrity is recorded in the life of the late Rev. John Cooke, of Maidenhead. The circumstance has reference to property which had originally belonged to Mr. Cooke's mother, but had been illegally alienated from him by his father: — "A gentleman of very respectable appearance called at his house rather early one morning, and requested to see the Rev. Mr. Cooke. As soon as Mr. Cooke entered the room, he said, 'Sir, I am an entire stranger to you; and it is business of no very pleasant or ordinary kind that has brought me to Maidenhead. Some years ago, an estate was purchased by my father, for which an adequate value was given at the time; but,' continued the gentleman, 'I find on looking over the deeds, that although it has been in the possession of my family for many years, the sale is not valid, nor my title good, until it is signed by one John Cooke, who was, at the time of the sale, a minor. After much search, by the aid of my legal advisers, I have ascertained that you are that John Cooke; and now it depends on you, whether what my father honorably purchased, but your father dishonestly sold, shall continue in the possession of my family or not.' The gentleman then most frankly opened and exposed to Mr. Cooke a bundle of parchments containing all the particulars of the sale, with the deeds that had been executed. It is believed that the estate had greatly increased in value, and at the time of his application was worth between three and four hundred pounds per annum." Pardon. — A legal writer says: "So completely does a pardon of treason or felony extinguish the crime, that when granted to a man, even after conviction or attainder, it will enable him to have an action of slander against another for calling him traitor or felon; because the pardon makes him as it were a new man, and gives him a new capacity and credit. In the eye of the law, the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense." So completely does the blood and righteousness of Christ absolve us from sin. — Hom. Com.

10—13. (10) My defence, R. V., "my shield is with God," i. e. it is for God to defend me.[d] which, who. (11) judgeth the righteous, better as marg. "God is a righteous judge." and . . day, R. V., "Yea, a God that hath indignation every day."[e] (12) If he, R. V. "If a man." turn not, in penitent submission. whet, sharpen.[f] ready, aiming it in act of shooting. (13) instruments of death, military weapons. he . . persecutors, R. V., "He maketh his arrows fiery shafts," i. e. lightning bolts.

God's indignation against the wicked (vss. 11–13). — We see the conduct of God — I. In His moral government here. 1. The righteous are the objects of His tender care; 2. The wicked are the objects of His merited displeasure. II. In His judicial proceedings at the last day. 1. Then He will approve and reward the righteous; 2. He will consign the wicked to merited shame and punishment. Learn — (1) The importance of ascertaining your real character; (2) The blessedness of having God for your friend. — C. Simeon.

A sure defence (vs. 10.) — During the seventeenth century, while the Rev. John Cotton was minister of Boston, in America, intelligence reached that a Ps. xciv. 2; Is. xxxiii. 10.

"The phrases 'tread down,' 'lay in the dust,' refer to a death of ignominy." - Hengstenberg.

"The door is closed to prayer unless it is opened with the key of trust."— Calvin.

b "Vindicate Thy dignity by no longer allowing it to appear as though the wicked were to have the upper hand." — Jennings and Lowe.

c Ps. xviii. 20, 24; xxvi. 1; Job xxix. 14.

The French proverb says, "The tongue cuts deeper than the lance," and David felt it to be so.

"Hitherto Dav. has protested his innocence; now in the full consciousness of that innocence he comes before the very judgment seat of God, and demands the fullest and most public vindication."— Perowne.

"And awake for me: Thou hast indeed enjoined the maintaining of right."— Hupfeld.

"When Thou hast delivered Thy judicial sentence, return on high above the gathering of Thy people to Thy heavenly throne." —Wordsworth.

d "He bears my shield, has undertaken to defend me."—Jennings. Ps. lxii. 7.

e "The word means not merely that God feels, but that He manifests wrath, not by occasional outbursts, but by continuous indications of His intent to punish those who continually provoke Him."— Spk. Com.

f De. vi. 7, marg., xxxii. 41.

"The sword of Heaven is not in haste to smite, nor doth it linger."

town of the distress of the poor Christians of Sigatea, where a small church existed, the members of which were reduced to great extremity by persecution. Mr. Cotton immediately began to collect for them, and sent the sum of £700 for their relief. It is remarkable, that this relief arrived the very day after they had divided their last portion of meal, without any other prospect but that of dying a lingering death; and immediately after their pastor, Mr. White, had preached to them from Psalm xxiii. 1, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want."

14—17. The plans of the wicked frustrate themselves. (14) travaileth, etc., fig. indic. that the bad resolves of the wicked man's heart, he was at this time trying to work out in mischievous acts. falsehood, "Heb. word includes the meanings of emptiness and failure." [a] (15) digged it, or hollowed it out, i. e. made it deep. is fallen, etc., historically illus. in Saul's personal peril in the cave (1 Sa. xxvi. 7–12), and in case of Haman. (16) return, etc., the very scoopings out of the pit shall tumble down on him as he lies in the pit. pate, top of the head.[b] (17) righteousness, shown in his own vindication and in the judgment of the wicked.

Retribution. — That was a very remarkable instance of Dr. Story, who, escaping out of prison in Queen Elizabeth's days, got to Antwerp, and there thinking himself out of the reach of God's rod, he got commission under the Duke of Alva to search all ships coming thither for English books. But one Parker, an English merchant, trading to Antwerp, laid his snare fair (saith our chronicler), to catch this foul bird, causing secret notice to be given to Story, that in his ship were stores of heretical books, with other intelligence that might stand him in stead. The Canonist conceiving that all was quite sure hastened to the ship, where, with looks very big upon the poor mariners, each cabin, chest and corner above-board were searched, and some things found to draw him further on: so that the hatches must be opened, which seemed to be unwillingly done, and great signs of fear were showed by their faces. This drew on the doctor to descend into the hold, where now in the trap the mouse might well gnaw, but could not get out, for the hatches were down, and the sails hoisted up, which, with a merry gale, were blown into England, where ere long he was arraigned, and condemned of high treason, and accordingly executed at Tyburn, as he had well deserven. — Trapp.

a "He conceives trouble or mischief, and when it is brought forth it turns out to be but a deception which does but mock its would-be perpetrator."—Jennings and Lowe.

b Etymology uncertain. Possibly Sanscrit patri, top of a vessel.

"To bless God for mercies is the way to increase them; to bless Him for miseries is the way to remove them; no good lives so long as that which is thankfully improved; no evil dies so soon as that which is patiently endured." — William Dyer.

PSALM THE EIGHTH.

author, — prob. David

A Ps. of praise to Jehovah, suggested by the sight of the starry skies. Comp. by David, prob. during his shepherd life. Compare Ps. xx. 29; Ps. civ.

1, 2. (1) our Lord, the Psalmist speaks in the name of the nation. excellent, lit. bright, glorious: like the stars. who . . heavens, lit. "set Thy glory upon the heavens." Who hast covered the heavens with Thy glory.[c] (2) babes, children able to play.[d] sucklings, unweaned infants.[e] Hebrews weaned at three years old. ordained, R. V., "established." "Thou hast built up a bulwark, a defence." enemy, etc., the opponents of the Div. sovereignty. avenger, "one who thirsts or breathes revenge."

The glory of God as seen in nature is: 1. Unspeakable. "How excellent!" No poet, no saint, can adequately speak of it. It fills us with a wonder and joy too deep for words. 2. Gracious. "How excellent!" The earth, so far as its primitive and essential arrangements are concerned, declares the loving God. The glory of God is His goodness. 3. Universal. "In all the earth." Everywhere, under the whole heavens, we see the glory of God. — Watkinson.

Children's prayers. — It is remarkable how at great crises the children have become defenders of Christ and His cause. Notably, Matt. xxi. 16; and again in the Reformation. When Melancthon was greatly depressed about the fortunes of the Reformation, one day he passed a house in which he found some young people praying for the Protestant cause. Coming to Luther, he exclaimed triumphantly, "We are saved: the children are praying for us." And again, in the great revival of religion under Wesley and Whitfield. — Hom. Com.

c "Thou has set Thy glory, i. e. hast stamped the image of Thine infinite majesty upon the heavens, and yet dost condescend to reveal Thyself to man by near and, to some, less significant tokens." — Spk. Com.

d Jer. vi. 11; ix. 21; La. iv. 4; 1 Cor. i. 18-21.

e Matt. xxi. 16.

3—5. (3) When, or as often as. moon and stars, absence of reference to the sun fixes this as a night meditation. The glory of an oriental night would inspire such feeling in the Psalmist's heart. (4) man, lit. frail man.[f] (5) lower than the angels, Heb. Elohim, wh. is never used in the sense of angels. R. V., "God." glory and honour, the attributes of royal dignity;

f "The term points to the impotence and mortality of man being placed in authority over God's creation,[a] and to this is to be referred the comparison "but little lower than God."

The dignity of human nature. — I. The apparent weakness of human nature. II. The essential greatness of human nature. 1. In the quality of his being. 2. In the extent of his dominion. III. The source of the greatness of human nature. — Watkinson.

The heavens. — There is much in the scenery of a nocturnal sky to lift the soul to pious contemplation. That moon, and these stars, what are they? They are detached from the world, and they lift us above it. We feel withdrawn from the earth, and rise in lofty abstraction from this little theatre of human passions and human anxieties. The mind abandons itself to reverie, and is transferred in the ecstasy of its thought to distant and unexplored regions. It sees Nature in the simplicity of her great elements, and it sees the God of Nature invested with the high attributes of wisdom and majesty. — Chalmers.

"What is man?"—

How poor, how rich, how abject, how august,
How complicate, how wonderful is man!
How passing wonder HE who made him such!
Who centred in our make such strange extremes!
From different natures marvelously mix'd,
Connexion exquisite of distant worlds!
Distinguish'd link in being's endless chain!
Midway from nothing to the Deity!
A beam ethereal, sullied and absorb'd,
Though sullied and dishonor'd, still divine!
Dim miniature of greatness absolute!
An heir of glory! a frail child of dust!
Helpless, immortal! insect infinite!
A worm! a god! I tremble at myself,
And in myself am lost.—Edward Young.

6—9. (6) works . . hands, those summed up in the earthly sphere of creation.[b] (8) passeth . . seas,[c] creatures of the deep not classed with fish. All are subject to man. paths, cf. Homer's "watery waye," Il. i. 312. (9) O Lord, etc., repetition of vs. 1, as the impression wh. the meditation had left.

Dominion of the Messiah. — He who rules over the material world is Lord also of the intellectual or spiritual creation represented thereby. The souls of the faithful, lowly and harmless, are the sheep of His pasture; those who, like oxen, are strong to labor in the church, and who, by expounding the Word of Life, tread out the corn for the nourishment of the people, own Him for their kind and beneficent Master; nay, tempers fierce and untractable as the beasts of the desert, are yet subject to His will; spirits of the angelic kind, that like the birds of the air, traverse freely the superior region, move at His command; and those evil ones whose habitation is in the deep abyss, even to the great leviathan himself, all are put under the feet of King Messiah. — George Horne.

PSALM THE NINTH.

1—5. (1) praise . . Lord, R. V., "give thanks unto the Lord. shew forth, recount, or declare.[d] marvellous works, the gracious ways in wh. God saves and protects His people. (2) rejoice, R. V., "exult." Wellhausen translates the future tenses as present. sing, as the expression of joyfulness. (3) When, or because. This is the reason for the resolve. they shall, or because they fall, etc. at thy presence, on account of Thine angry countenance. (4) maintained, lit. executed my judgment. cause, as a legal case. judging right, R. V., "righteously," Prov. xx. 8; Ps. vii. 7. (5) the heathen, R. V., "nations." their name, as independent nations, and so the individual memory of them.[e]

Praise.— All God's works praise Him, but man is to be the leading singer in the great choir. The Esthonians have a beautiful legend to explain the origin of song. The god of song descended on the Domberg, on which stands a sacred wood, and there played and sang. All creatures were invited to listen, and they each learnt some fragment of the celestial sound; the listening wood learnt its rustling, the stream its roar; the wind caught and learnt the creature who has been thus honored." — Jennings and Lowe.

a Ge. i. 28.

Ps. cxliv. 3-9

"Oh, the grandeur and littleness, the excellence and the corruption, the majesty and meanness of man."—Pascal.

"When we behold the light and brightness of the sun, the golden edges of an evening cloud, or the beauteous bow, we behold the adumbrations of this glory and goodness; and in the blue sky, of His mildness and gentleness."—Jonathan Edwards.

b 1 Cor. xv. 24-27; Eph. i. 22.

c Ge. i. 20-25.

"When I gazed into these stars, have they not looked down on me as if with pity from their serene spaces, like eyes glistening with heavenly tears over the little lot of man!"—Carlyle.

author,— unknown

Resembles Ps. x. in style, language and form, and some versions arrange them as one Ps.

d Ps. xix. 1.

e Comp. De. ix. 14; xxv. 19; 2 Sa. xii. 31.

"As a vessel by the scent thereof tells what liquor is in it, so should our mouths smell continually of that mercy wherewith our hearts have been refreshed; for we are called vessels of mercy."—William Cowper.

to re-echo the shrillest tones, and the birds the prelude of the song. Man only grasped it all, and therefore his song pierces into the depths of the heart, and upwards to the dwellings of the gods. As this legend pictures, man's song is the fullest and the deepest; and whilst creation with her thousand voices praises God, from man comes the music which is sweetest to the throne of God. And each of us ought to find a tongue to bless God. "I will praise Thee." "I will be glad." "I will sing praise." We must not leave the organist and chorister to praise God for us, and ourselves stand dumb images in the pews. No proxy here. He has blessed me, and I will glorify Him. Gratitude ought to make musicians of us all.— Watkinson.

6—10. (6) O thou enemy, R. V., "The enemy are come to an end, they are desolate forever: And the cities which thou hast overthrown, their very memorial is perished."[a] (7) endure, better, is calmly, securely seated. R. V., "sitteth as king." prepared, firmly established. (8) And he, none other than He, for He only is above all things. judge . . righteousness, or righteously judge.[b] in uprightness, or equity; with impartiality. (9) refuge, R. V., "high tower."[c] times of trouble, lit., "at times of desperation, i. e. on occasions when all hope is cut off."— Perowne. (10) know, etc., so know as to find full basis of trust (Jno. xvii. 3). for thou . . thee, experience is the best exegesis of these words.

Knowledge.— I. All-important knowledge — "know thy name." II. Blessed result — "will put their trust in thee." III. Sufficient reason — "for thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that seek thee."— T. W. Medhurst.

Judgment. — The guilty conscience cannot abide this day. The silly sheep, when she is taken, will not bleat, but you may carry her and do what you will with her and she will be subject; but the swine, if she be once taken, she will roar and cry, and thinks she is never taken but to be slain. So of all things the guilty conscience cannot abide to hear of this day, for they know that when they hear of it, they hear of their own condemnation. I think if there were a general collection made through the whole world that there might be no judgment day, then God would be so rich that the world would go a-begging and be a waste wilderness. Then the covetous judge would bring forth his bribes; then the crafty lawyer would fetch out his bags; the usurer would give his gain, and a double thereof. But all the money in the world will not serve for our sin, but the judge must answer his bribes, he that hath money must answer how he came by it, and just condemnation must come upon every soul of them; then shall the sinner be ever dying and never dead, like the salamander, that is ever in the fire and never consumed.— Henry Smith.

11, 12. An invitation to praise the Lord for His mercy. (11) in Zion, this express. proves the Ps. to have been written after Dav. removed the Ark to Zion.[d] From Zion Jehovah's salv. is to be proclaimed to all the world. his doings, His deeds. acts. (12) inquisition, requisition. for blood, Job xxiv. 2 ff. God will surely avenge and rescue His persecuted church, if persecuted even to martyrdom.[e] The verb used means "to demand back fr. any one that wh. he has destroyed, and therefore to demand a reckoning, indemnification, satisfaction for it." humble, R. V., "poor," humbled by affliction.

Humility in prayer (vs. 12). — The Times of June 23, 1858, in recording petitions presented to the House of Lords, remarked of one that it was rejected on the ground of an omission, — after all but a simple one, — the word "humble" was left out. Say, how many petitions to a higher tribunal are rejected for lack, not perhaps of humility in the words employed, but in the heart of the individual employing them?

13—16. (13) Have mercy,[f] the cry of the afflicted. gates, or regions; gates being the entrance, is put for the bounds. (14) gates . . Zion, as the place of public concourse. (15, 16) History proves God's righteousness in judgment. heathen, etc., comp. Ps. vii. 16. is known, hath made Himself known. by . . executeth, R. V., "he hath executed judgment." is snared, R. V.; marg. "He snareth." Higgaion, the mark of an interlude: or the indic. of a joyous outburst of the stringed instruments.

"The wicked is snared in the work of his own hands." — Not only do we read it in the Word of God, but all history, all experience, records the same righteous justice of God, in snaring the wicked in the work of their own a "The enemy is cut off—they are perpetual ruins; and cities which Thou hast rooted out,—the very memorial of them is perished."—Trans. by Perowne.

Comp. Ex. xv. 4-6.

b Ac. xvii. 31.

c "A fort on the summit of an inaccessible rock, such as often afforded a refuge to David in early days of exile, Comp. 2 Sa. xxii. 3; Ps. xci. 2."—Spk. Com.

"Five scholars of Lausanne, devoted to the Reformation, were taken in France, A. D. 1553, and burned in the Place des Terreaux at Lyons. As they were being carried to execution, they sang with a loud voice this psalm."—Ker.

d Comp. Ps. ii. 6; Ps. lxxvi. 3

e Re. vi. 10; Ge. ix. 5.

"Lit. He who requireth, demandeth, satisfaction for bloodshed; like the Goel, the next of kin, who was bound to avenge the murder of his kinsman, so God calls the murderer to account."—Perowne.

f vss. 13, 14. A model prayer for Divine compassion.

"The man who can pray truly, though languishing in extremest indigence, is richer than all beside, whilst the wretch who never bowed the knee, though hands. Perhaps the most striking instance on record, next to Haman on his own gallows, is one connected with the horrors of the French Revolution, in which we are told that, "within nine months of the death of the queen Marie Antoinette by the guillotine, every one implicated in her untimely end, her accusers, the judges, the jury, the prosecutors, the witnesses, all, every one at least whose fate is known, perished by the same instrument as their innocent victim." "In the net which they had laid for her was their own foot taken — into the pit which they digged for her did they themselves fall." — Barton Bouchier.

17—20. (17, 18) By contrast history also proves the righteousness of God's mercy. turned, or turned back.[a] hell, Sheol: not the place of punishment, but more generally, the place of departed spirits; so a fig. for their death.[b] not alway, comp. Is. liv. 7, 8. (19) man prevail, "there is an antithesis bet. the word man, wh. means weak, and his act of prevailing, wh. implies strength."— Spk. Com. (20) Put them in fear, make them realize their frail nature.[c]

The destiny of the wicked (vs. 17). — Who are the wicked? I. Where else can they go? 1. Would themselves or the world be better by their living always on earth? 2. Is it possible that they can be annihilated? 3. Can they go to heaven? II. What else can they expect? 1. Consider, if one act of sin draw down the wrath of God, what must a life? 2. Consider His judgments on whole communities. III. What else do they deserve? 1. Did God ever prevent their seeking His forgiveness? 2. Has He not called, and they refused?— Stems and Twigs.

The Greenland missionaries. — When the Moravian missionaries first went, in the last century, to labor in Greenland, they were called to endure the most painful and distressing trials, both in reference to the indifference of the heathen, and the want of food. Famine, of the most afflictive kind, almost constantly threatened them. But in the darkest hours God always appeared, in some way or other, for their help. On one occasion He disposed a Greenlander, a perfect stranger to them, to travel forty leagues to sell them some seals, the flesh of which, with oatmeal and train oil was a delicacy to them compared with the old tallow candles on which they sometimes lived. When they had just returned from a toilsome excursion, in which they could obtain no food, a Greenlander brought them word that a Dutch ship was lying at some distance to the south, the captain of which had letters for them. On sending to the ship, they found a cask of provisions sent them by a kind friend at Amsterdam, with the proposal to send more if they needed. Thus did God keep them alive for their future extensive usefulness.— R. T. S.

proudly sitting as monarch of all nations, is of all men most destitute."— Chrysostom.

"While the thought of God's searching, judgments gives confidence to the afflicted, it brings hidden sins to remembrance." — Spk. Com.

a Ge. iii. 19; Ps. xc. 3.

b "The meaning is, that even now, before the eyes of men, God's righteousness shall be seen in cutting off the wicked by a sudden and premature end, and helping and exalting the righteous." — Perowne.

c "Place terror over them." — Jerome.

V. Hugo says concerning the sea, "Beware of the gale that has been long delayed. It was Angot who said that 'the sea pays well old debts.'" Sinner, beware of the wrath long delayed; justice pays well old debts.

PSALM THE TENTH.

1—3. (1) Why, etc., remonstrance for apparent neglect. afar off, seeming unmindful of the crimes and troubles in the Psalmist's own land. why . . trouble, "veiling thine eyes in times of distress."— Polychr. Bib. (2) the wicked, etc., trans. "By reason of the haughtiness of the wicked, the afflicted burns," either with indignation, or with sorrow.[d] (3) boasteth, singeth praises, i. e. the complaint justified by the character of the wicked. blesseth the covetous, R. V., "the covetous renounceth, yea contemneth the Lord."

Man's cry (vs. 1).— This cry implies the belief that the distance is — 1. Unnatural; 2. Undesirable. How can this felt distance be explained? There are only three sources to which we can look for light on the subject. I. Philosophy. 1. It may be that God is too great to allow man a close connection with Him; 2. That the case of the felt distance is God's method of agency. II. Speculative theology. 1. Because it is inconsistent with the immutability of the Divine character; 2. Because it is inconsistent with the moral excellence of God. III. Divine revelation. The Bible speaks of sin as the cause of the felt distance (Isa. lix. 2; Col. i. 21).— Thomas.

Persecutors.— That famous persecutor, Domitian, like others of the Roman emperors, assumed divine honors, and heated the furnace seven times hotter against Christians because they refused to worship his image. In like manner, when the popes of Rome became decorated with the blasphemous titles of Masters of the World, and Universal Fathers, they let loose their blood-hounds upon the faithful. Pride is the egg of persecution.— C. H. Spurgeon.

author,— unknown

For explanation Comp. Ps. ix.

Ps. x. and xxxiii. are the only anonymous Pss. in Bk. I.

d "Through the pride of the wicked the lowly is hotly persecuted."— Revised Eng. Bible.

"Pride is a vice which cleaveth so fast unto the hearts of men, that if we were to strip ourselves of all faults, one by one, we should undoubtedly find it the very last and hardest to put off." —Richard Hooker.

4—7. (4) the pride, lit. height of his nostril: arrogant bearing. will not seek, etc. R. V., "saith, He will not require it. All his thoughts are there is no God."[a] (5) far above, comp. Ps. xviii. 22. puffeth, bloweth at contemptuously, as if they were mere bubbles.[b] (6) never, Heb. "unto generation and generation."[c] (7) under his tongue, the figure from vss. 7–10 is of a wild beast, and here cursing, deceit, fraud, mischief and vanity are the dainties the evil enjoy like choice prey[d] (cf. Job xx. 12).

Pride of heart (vs. 4).—Through pride the wicked are not saved. I. Proud of their own merit, they will not call upon God. II. Proud of their own strength, they will not apply to God for help. III. Proud of their own wisdom, they will not submit to God's teaching. IV. Proud of their own happiness, they will not seek God's favor.—W. W. Whythe.

Carnal security opens the door for all impiety to enter into the soul. Pompey, when he had in vain assaulted a city, and could not take it by force, devised this stratagem in way of agreement: he told them he would leave the siege and make peace with them, upon condition that they would let in a few weak, sick and wounded soldiers among them to be cured. They let in the soldiers, and when the city was secure, the soldiers let in Pompey's army. A carnal settled security will let in a whole army of lusts into the soul.—T. Brooks. A child instructed in a Sabbath school, on being asked by his teacher, if he could mention a place where God was not, made the following beautiful and unexpected reply, "Not in the thoughts of the wicked."—Whitecross.

8—11. (8) lurking places, ambush, places outside villages. villages, the Heb. word means a covered place, and the clause is better rendered, "He sits in a well-covered ambush."[e] poor, here the sad and sorrowful. (9) secretly,[f] in secret places. catch, in order to rob. This word changes the fig. from the lion to the hunter and his net. (10) croucheth, stoops to spring.[g] strong ones, either his claws, or his teeth. R. V., "He croucheth, he boweth down. And the helpless fall by his strong ones." (11) hideth his face, = "the keynote of the bad man's refrain."[h]

Religious cruelty.—In 1534, Francis I. ordered an inquisition to be made at Paris against the Protestants; some of whom were discovered by informers, others apprehended on suspicion, and put to the torture, and both sorts burned, after a very barbarous manner; for, being tied to a pulley, they were drawn up a great height, then let down into the fire, presently after snatched up again; and, after torturing them in this manner for some time, the executioner cut the rope, and they dropped into the flames, and were consumed. Those who were thought to be more learned than the rest, had their tongues cut out, and were then brought to the stake and burnt.

Lying in wait.—My companions asked me if I knew the danger I had escaped. "No," I replied; "What danger?" They then told me that, just after they started, they saw a wild Arab skulking after me, crouching to the ground, with a musket in his hand; and that, as soon as he had reached within what appeared to them musket-shot of me, he raised his gun; but, looking wildly around him, as a man will do who is about to perpetrate some desperate act, he caught sight of them and disappeared. Jeremiah knew something of the ways of these Arabs when he wrote (chap. iii. 2), "In the ways hast thou sat for them, as the Arabian in the wilderness;" and the simile is used in Psalm x. 9, 10, for the Arabs wait and watch for their prey with the greatest eagerness and perseverance.—John Gadsby.

12—15. An appeal for God to succor the oppressed and destroy the evil. (12) humble, trans. poor in vs. 9; the afflicted. (13) contemn, the same word is trans. abhorreth in vs. 3. (14) hast seen, comp. bad man's words, vs. 11. "God is not the passive spectator of human affairs wh. these men deem Him." spite, lit. the impatience or fretting under suffering. requite, etc., to set it in Thy hand, i. e. to make it the matter of Thy care. fatherless, the type of all the desolate. (15) Break, etc., shatter his strength.[i] seek out, in order to punish.[j]

Future retribution: doubts concerning it. I. By whom indulged: "the wicked." II. Where fostered: "in his heart." III. For what purpose: quieting of conscience, etc. IV. With what practical tendency: "contemn God." He who disbelieves hell distrusts heaven.—Spurgeon.

The power of a child's fidelity.—A gentleman, some time ago, sent his two youngest children, with their nurse, to take an airing on the seaside. On the a "The other interp. wh. makes the words 'He (i. e. God) will not require' the words of the evil-doer, accords better with the clause following, and with vs. 13."—Perowne.

---

b "The present life is ordained for those who believe not, and they laugh the faithful to scorn."—Koran.

c Job xxi. 8; Ps. xvii. 14; xlix. 11.

d "So is the way of the wicked; when he wishes to deceive others, he swears copiously, that it may appear as if he swore with all conviction on his own part."—Kimchi.

e "The places in wh. the robbers lurked rather than the places against wh. they plotted, seem to be indicated. Reference may be to nomad encampments of predatory Bedouins."—Perowne.

f "He lurks in the covert as a lion in his lair."—Kay.

g "As a lion gathers himself into as small a compass as possible to make the greater spring."—Fausset.

h Ps. xciv. 7.

Father of all, we urge life's highest plea—Thou lovest all. Thy erring child may sometimes be Lost to himself, but never lost to Thee.

i Job xxxviii. 15; Ez. xxx. 21, 24.

j "Thou shalt search out and punish his wickedness, until thou shalt not find aught to punish"—Spk. Com.

"God governs the world by His wisdom and goodness as a tender father. It is not His greatest pleasure to show His sovereign way one of them fell down on his knees, and said to his nurse, "O Belle, I came away, and forgot to say my prayers." A young woman who saw him was conscience-struck, and thought, "Here is a babe rebuking me: when did I pray in all my life?" This simple means was the instrument which the Father of spirits was pleased to use to awaken her from the sleep of sin. She remained with the nurse and children all the time they were bathing; when she returned home, she sent for a Christian friend, that she might converse with him, and died, after lingering eight months in a consumption, with a firm trust in the Saviour. — R. T. S.

power, but His immense goodness, to which He makes the other attributes subservient." — Stephen Charnock.

16—18. (16) is King, uttered in an exulting, triumphant tone. perished, comp. De. iv. 26.[a] (17) prepare, or establish, in the sense of strengthen and comfort; by imparting cheering convictions. (18) oppress, cause terror.[b]

The Eternal King (vs. 16). — A King, one Jesus. I. He reigns by Divine right. II. He reigns by the popular will. III. He reigns by the right of conquest. IV. He reigns on earth and in heaven, and will reign for ever and ever.

Rev. G. Whitefield. — When the Rev. G. Whitefield was preaching on one occasion at Plymouth, he lodged with Mr. Kinsman, a minister of the town. After breakfast, on Monday, he said to his friend, "Come, let us visit some of your poor people. It is not enough that we labor in the pulpit; we must endeavor to be useful out of it." On entering the dwellings of the afflicted poor, he administered to their temporal as well as spiritual wants. Mr. Kinsman, knowing the low state of his finances, was surprised at his liberality, and suggested that he thought he had been too bountiful. Mr. Whitefield, with some degree of smartness, replied: "It is not enough, young man, to pray, and put on a serious face; true religion, and undefiled, is this — to visit the widow and the fatherless in their affliction, and to supply their wants. My stock, it is true, is nearly exhausted; but God, whom I serve, and whose saints we have assisted, will, I doubt not, soon give me a supply." His hopes were not disappointed. A stranger called on him in the evening, who addressed him thus: "With great pleasure I have heard you preach; you are on a journey, as well as myself, and traveling is expensive. Do me the honor to accept this," at the same time presenting him with five guineas.—R. T. S.

a De. viii. 20.

b "So that frail man, from the earth, may no more cause terror." — Jennings and Lowe.

"It is with Fortune as with fantastical mistresses — she makes sport with those that are ready to die for her, and throws herself at the feet of others that despise her." — J. Beaumont.

"To be thrown upon one's own resources is to be cast in the very lap of fortune; for our faculties then undergo a development and display an energy of which they were previously unsusceptible." — Franklin.

PSALM THE ELEVENTH.

author, — prob. David

1—3. (1) flee, etc., some prefer a plural form, "flee, ye birds," and refer to Dav. and his company.[c] (2) bend, lit. "are bending; nay, they have already aimed." privily, in secret. (3) foundations, of justice and right. The state, or society, is compared to a building. The foundations upon which it rests are the fundamental principles of law and order and justice. When these principles are being subverted, "what," asks the voice of despair, "can the righteous do?" — Cam. Bib.

Confidence. — Torstensohn, the great commander to whom Gustavus Adolphus transmitted the prosecution of the Thirty Years' War, was a man so shattered by disease that he had to be carried at the head of his forces in a litter. Yet no commander of his age was so resistless and terrible in his onset and so invariably victorious. Schiller has expressed his leading maxim in these words: he never counted his enemies. Let us not count our enemies, but trust our God, and we shall be more than conquerors. "Flee as sparrows to your mountain." — Phillips.

c "The advice here given is that of timid and despondent friends, who would persuade him that all is lost, and that the highest wisdom is to yield to circumstances, and to seek safety not in resistance, but in flight."—Perowne.

4—7. (4) holy temple, not that at Jerus., but the heavenly temple. As heaven is over the entire world so God's kingdom is over all; He sees all; the rest of the Ps. is suggested by this thought of heaven. eyelids, the eyelids are mentioned purposely. When we observe closely or meditate, we bring the eyelids near to one another. Thus men, righteous and unrighteous, lie open to the eyes of Jehovah which search everything through and through.— Delitzsch. try, test, assay.[d] (5) soul hateth, a strong expression for the antagonism of God's ways and nature to those of the wicked. (6) snares, some rend. coals of fire, raining snares, or cords is an extravagant expression. horrible tempest, burning wind; the simoon: a blast of horror. (7) his countenance, lifted on them with grace and acceptance.[e] d Ps. vii. 9, xvii. 3; Job. xxiii. 10.

e Nu vi. 25; Ps. xxxi. 16; lxvii. 1.

"But, trusting in God, the sparrow becomes an eagle, mounting above the storm, and delighting itself in the eternal sunshine of the Father's face."—Watkinson.

"It is interesting to observe how early and how strongly this thought took possession of Dav's. heart."—Spk. Com.

God-sent trials (vs. 5).—I. All events are under the control of Providence; consequently all the trials of our outward life are traceable at once to the great First Cause. II. The trials which come from God are sent to prove and strengthen our graces, and so at once to illustrate the power of Divine grace, to test the genuineness of our virtues, and add to their energy.—Spurgeon.

PSALM THE TWELFTH.

author unknown

A sincere soul's complaint in a hollow age.

1—4. (1) Help, save, O Jehovah! ceaseth, dieth out.[a] faithful, steadfast in piety.[b] fail, are dispersed. (2) vanity, or untruth. double heart, Heb. a heart and a heart. (3) cut off, by sudden calamity. proud things, Heb. great boastful things. (4) our own, lit. are with us, under our command.

Flattering lips.—The philosopher Bion being asked what animal he thought the most hurtful, replied, "That of wild creatures a tyrant, and of tame ones a flatterer." The flatterer is the most dangerous enemy we can have. Raleigh, himself a courtier, and therefore initiated into the whole art of flattery, who discovered in his own career and fate its dangerous and deceptive power, its deep artifice and deeper falsehood, says, "A flatterer is said to be a beast that biteth smiling. But it is hard to know them from friends—they are so obsequious and full of protestations; for as a wolf resembles a dog, so doth a flatterer a friend."—Book of Symbols.

a Is. lvii. 1; Mic. vii. 2.

b "The honest and true-hearted, lit. who are steadfast, unchanged by the evil influences around them: men that may be relied on."—Perowne.

Flattery is the sign of the tavern where duplicity is the host.

5—8. (5) oppression, lit. for the laying waste of the afflicted. now, after what may seem to men a long silence. set . . him, render, "I will set (him) in the salvation for which he pants.[c] (6) The Psalmist's confidence restored. words, with special reference to the Lord's promises, e. g. vs. 5. furnace of earth, or furnace placed in the earth, so that it may be heated to any intensity. seven times, or thoroughly. (7) them, the poor and needy. generation, or depraved class. (8) walk, or prowl about.

The Divine revelation.—I. The grand characteristic of a Divine revelation:—Purity. II. The Scriptures which profess to be the words of the Lord have been tested, and their divinity established. 1. It has been tried by criticism. 2. It has been tried by science. 3. It has been tried by experience. (1) In relation to man's social necessities. (2.) In relation to man's moral and spiritual necessities. III. The consequent preciousness of the Sacred Scriptures.—Watkinson.

The Bible.—The Scripture is the sun; the church is the clock. The sun we know to be sure, and regularly constant in his motions; the clock, as it may fall out, may go too fast or too slow. As then, we should condemn him of folly that should profess to trust the clock rather than the sun, so we cannot but justly tax the credulity of those who would rather trust to the church than to the Scripture.—Bishop Hall.

c "The word used here means to pant with desire, not to puff contemptuously."—Jennings & Lowe.

Faith and works are the two oars of a boat. Row with the right oar alone, and the boat describes a useless circle on the water. Row with the left oar alone, and it merely goes in the opposite direction. But use both oars with equal force, and it moves swiftly and evenly forward.

PSALM THE THIRTEENTH.

author,—prob. David

A Ps. of weariness and despair. Comp. perhaps during the persecutions by Saul.

1—6. (1) How long, here are really two questions. How long wilt Thou forget me? Forever?[d] hide thy face, comp. Job. xiii. 24. (2) take counsel, meditate plan after plan. having sorrow, or while sorrow is in my heart. daily, or in the day. (3) lighten, etc.,[e] the eyes that were dimmed with anxiety and sorrow. sleep, death, sleep an eternal sleep. (4) Lest, etc., such boasting would affect the Divine honor and faithfulness. (5) thy mercy, not in my merit. (6) sing, in anticipation of God's gracious ways with him.[f]

Trust in God (vs. 5).—I. The nature of this important duty. 1. It is an enlightened confidence; 2. A universal confidence; 3. It is a holy confidence. II. The motives to its exercise. 1. The infinite wisdom of God; 2. His Almighty power; 3. His boundless goodness. Learn—(1) How miserable are they who have no trust in God; (2) How wise and happy the subjects of this trust.—F. I. Durand.

I will sing unto the Lord.—I never knew what it was for God to stand by me at all turns, and at every offer of Satan to afflict me, as I have found him since I came in hither; for look how fears have presented themselves, so have supports and encouragements; yea, when I have started, even as it were at nothing else but my shadow, yet God, as being very tender of me, hath not

d "It it natural to a perturbed and doubting heart thus to express itself, in a confused and almost contradictory manner."—Perowne.

e 1 Sa. xiv. 27, 29.

f "While Satan rages and wars about him, he meanwhile sings quietly his little psalm."—Luther.

suffered me to be molested, but would with one Scripture or another, strengthen me against all; insomuch that I have often said, were it lawful, I could pray for greater trouble, for the greater comfort's sake.— John Bunyan.

The best light for the eyes (vs. 3). — When the Princess Anne, daughter of Charles I., who died on the 8th of December, 1640, lay upon her death-bed, and nature was almost spent, she was desired by one of her attendants to pray. She said that she was not able to say her long prayer, meaning the Lord's Prayer, but she would say her short one, "Lighten mine eyes, O Lord, that I sleep not the sleep of death." The little creature had no sooner pronounced these words than she expired; she was not quite four years of age.

"The aggregate of our daily victories and defeats will be the measure of our whole life's success or failure."— Anon.

"None live so easily, so pleasantly, as those that live by faith." — Matthew Henry.

PSALM THE FOURTEENTH.

A Ps. of complaint over prevailing iniquity. The historical occasion of the composition is not known. It is almost identical with Ps. liii.

1—3. (1) The fool, a class of men, not a particular individual.[a] heart, used variously as the seat of the intellect, sensibilities, and will, and including all the operations of the mind. corrupt, Ge. vi. 11, 12. (2) The Lord, Jehovah. looked down, as before the flood. understand, their duty. and . . God, R. V., "That did seek after God." (3) all . . filthy, lit. rancid: see Rom. iii. 10-12.

Sin. — I. The great source of sin — alienation from God. II. Its place of dominion — the heart. III. Its effect upon the intellect — makes man a fool. IV. Its manifestations in the life — acts of commission and omission. — Spurgeon.

Is there no God? —

"Is there no God? — The stars in myriads spread,
If he look up, the blasphemy deny;
While his own features, in the mirror read,
Reflect the image of Divinity.
Is there no God? — The stream that silver flows,
The air he breathes, the ground he treads, the trees,
The flowers, the grass, the sands, each wind that blows,
All speak of God; throughout, one voice agrees,
And, eloquent, His dread existence shows:
Blind to thyself, ah, see Him, fool, in these!"— Giovanni Cotta.

[a] "Heb. nabal, imbecile, a vapid, worn-out fool, a word never used of mere natural obtuseness, but of spiritual corruption."— Spk. Com.

4—7. (4) eat up my people, a fig. common in Heb.[b] call not, they are men who do not pray. (5) There, when God speaks to them in the terribleness of His judgments:[c] or they were in fear when they saw that God was for the righteous. (6) shamed, endeavored to baffle. It was, however, in vain, because, etc. (7) bringeth . . captivity, this is supposed to indicate th. the Ps. was written during the exile. The fig., however, is used in early Scrip., as in Job xlii. 10.[d]

Trust (vs. 6). — An aged Christian, who had long been an invalid, and was dependent on Christian charity for her support, on sending for a new physician, who had just come into the place, and united with the same church of which she was a member, said to him, "Doctor, I wish to put myself under your care, but I cannot do it unless you will trust my Father." "Well, madam," replied the physician, "I believe your Father is rich; I may safely trust Him."— Whitecross.

[b] Nu. xiv. 9; Pr. xxx. 14; La. ii. 16.

[c] "I judge the meaning of the prophet to be that when all is tranquil and prosperous, on a sudden God hurls His bolts at them."— Calvin.

[d] Ju. v. 12.

author, — David

A Ps. on the conditions of access to God. Comp. prob. on occasion of removing the ark to Zion. 2 Sa. vi. 12-19.

PSALM THE FIFTEENTH.

1—5. (1) abide, sojourn.[e] The Jews were sojourners with Jehovah, as oriental guests receive the protection of him in whose tent they sojourn. tabernacle, tent set up on Mt. Zion to receive the ark.[f] (2) walketh, etc., as Ge. xvi. 1. The Heb. word uprightly, or perfect, is used to denote a consistent and thoroughly conscientious life.[g] speaketh, etc., comp. Ps. xii. 2. (3) backbiteth, "allows no slander upon his tongue, representing the slanderous lie as a store of venom." taketh up, receiveth, but with the idea of further circulating the slander. (4) On whose . . contemned, should be rend. "Despised is he in his own eyes, and worthless," extreme humility.[h] sweareth . . not, believes in the sanctity of an oath. (5) to usury, extravagant interest. This was forbidden by Mosaic law.[i] moved, "The Psalmist's conclusion goes a step further than his opening question." — Cam. Bib.

[e] "There is a fine distinction of the terms: the believer is admitted as a settler, and then takes up his permanent abode in his Father's dwelling." — Spk. Com.

[f] 2 Sa. vi. 17.

[g] Job i. 1; Ps. ci. 2.

[h] Matt. v. 3; comp. Is. liii. 3.

[i] Ex. xxii. 25.

"The footprint of the savage traced in the sand is sufficient to attest the presence of man to the atheist who will not recognize God, whose hand is impressed upon the entire universe."—Hugh Miller.

"It is a description of a class of men who, for centuries, and in every rank of life, have been an honor and strength to their Church and country."—Ker.

There is three-fold death in the slanderer's tongue — it kills him who slanders, him who is slandered, and him who received the slander.

On tranquillity of mind (vs. 5). — We shall point out the line of conduct which, independently of any worldly position, shall tend to make us easy in mind. I. Imitate the character of the man who is described in this psalm. II. Join to that humble trust in the favor of God. III. Attend to the culture and improvement of your minds. IV. Be careful to provide proper employment for our time. V. Learn to govern your passions. VI. Never to expect too much from the world. VII. Mix retreat with the active business of the world, and cultivate habits of serious thought and recollection (Isa. xxxii. 17). — H. Blair.

The cure for slander. — It is a most difficult thing to rule the tongue, and refrain from evil-speaking. There is a story told of an illiterate old monk named Pambos. Being unable to read, he came to some one to be taught a psalm. Having learnt the single verse, "I said I would take heed to my ways, that I offend not with my tongue," he went away, saying that was enough if it were practically acquired. When asked six months and again many years after, why he did not come to learn another verse, he answered that he had never been able truly to master this. What is the grand cure for all sins of the lip? — Watkinson. Tale-bearers. — Augustine, as Posidonius writeth, showing what hatred he had to tale-bearers and false reporters of others, had two verses written over his table; by translation these:

"He that doth love with bitter speech the absent to defame, Must surely know that at this board no place is for the same."

PSALM THE SIXTEENTH.

A Ps. of joy in God's presence and love. Its date is unknown.

1—4. (1) Preserve, keep, protect. my trust, or "I have found refuge in Thee;" "do I hide myself."—Delitzsch. "I flee unto Thee,"—Polych. Bib. (2) goodness . . thee, R. V., "I have no good beyond Thee."[a] (3) But to etc., R. V., "as for the saints . . . They are the excellent," etc. (4) hasten after, R. V., "exchange the Lord for another god." of blood, of those whose hands are full of blood-shedding and wickedness.[b] The blood-guiltiness of the offerers is referred to.

The portrait of a God-trusting soul. — I. His experience under the influence of the present. 1. A profound consciousness of his dependence; 2. A delight in the fellowship of the good; 3. An abhorrence of the practices of the wicked; 4. An exultation in the Lord as his portion; 5. A high satisfaction with providential arrangements. II. His experiences in reference to the future. 1. Thankful; 2. Thoughtful; 3. Calm; 4. Happy; 5. Hopeful.— Thomas.

The excellent. — Ingo, an ancient king of the Draves, who making a stately feast appointed his nobles, at that time pagans, to sit in the hall below, and commanded certain poor Christians to be brought up into his presence-chamber, to sit with him at his table, to eat and drink of his kingly cheer, at which many wondering, he said, he accounted Christians, though never so poor, a greater ornament to his table, and more worthy of his company than the greatest peers unconverted to the Christian faith; for when these might be thrust down to hell, those might be his comforts and fellow princes in heaven. Although you see the stars sometimes by their reflections in a puddle, in the bottom of a well, or in a ditch, yet the stars have their situation in heaven. So, although you see a godly man in a poor, miserable, low, despised condition, for the things of this world, yet he is fixed in heaven, in the region of heaven: "Who hath raised us up," saith the apostle, "and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." — Charles Bradbury.

Trust in God. — During the negro rebellion Mr. Francis Gardiner was traveling from one town to another, in Jamaica, in a gig. Some advised him to take firearms to protect himself, and he assented. He went a little way with the firearms, but soon returned, saying, "I am not comfortable with them;" and once more went on his journey without them. Soon he fell among a party of negroes, who stopped his horse. One said, "He is a missionary;" but the others said, "No, he is a government spy." Then they said, "If he be a government spy he will have firearms; if a missionary, he will have no arms." He was searched, and no firearms being found upon him, the negroes, instead of murdering him, led him safely on his journey. We generally have too much policy and too little faith. — Watkinson.

[a] "Whatever makes me truly happy is not above Thee, i. e. in addito Thee, or without Thee. Thou alone, without exception, art my chief good."—Delitzsch.

[b] "On Egyp. monuments the priest is represented as piercing the head of a kneeling figure, whose blood spurts out as a libation."—Spk. Com.

Alexander translates: "As to the saints who are in the land, they are the nobles in whom is all my delight." Thus the people of God are designated as peers, a divine aristocracy.

If other people do not enjoy your religion, you may be sure they will not honor your God.

5—7. This goodness of Jehovah amplified. (5) The Lord, Jehovah Himself. portion, my share in the division of the territory. To me Jehovah supplies the place of worldly blessings.[a] my cup, or part. maintainest, as well as givest. "Therefore no creature can rob me of it." (6) lines, measuring lines marking out plots of land.[b] goodly heritage, beautiful in itself, and beautiful to me. (7) reins, here the workings of conscience. reins, in Heb. the seat of feelings and emotion.[c]

The Christian's portion.— Excellent was the answer of Basil the Great to the Emperor Valens, who first essayed him with large proffers of honor and riches to draw him from Christ: "Offer these things to children — I regard them not." Then after threatening, he replied: "He who has but a few books and a wretched garment can suffer nothing from confiscation: banishment is nothing to one to whom all places are alike, and torture cannot be inflicted where there is not a body to bear it. Put me to death, and you do me a favor, for you send me earlier to my rest."— Anec. Illus. of O. T. Texts. The great possession (vss. 5, 6).— A gentleman one day took an acquaintance to the top of his house to show him the extent of his possessions. Waving his hand about, "There," said he, "that is my estate." Then pointing to a great distance on one side, "Do you see that farm?" "Yes." "Well, that is mine." Pointing again on the other side, "Do you see that house?" "Yes." "That also belongs to me." Then said his friend, "Do you see that little village out yonder?" "Yes." "Well, there lives a poor woman in that village who can say more than all this." "Ay! what can she say?" "Why, she can say, 'Christ is mine.'" He looked confounded and said no more.

8—11. The meaning of this goodness to the Psalmist's future. (8) always, taking Him as mine forever.[d] right hand, the place of the defender and protector. (9) my glory, i. e. my soul. rest in hope, R. V., "dwell in safety." (10) leave my soul, etc., better, "abandon my soul to Sheol; neither wilt thou suffer thy beloved one to see the pit." Jehovah will not surrender him to the unseen world, wh. is like some monster gaping for its prey.— Cam. Bib. (11) path of life, way to eternal life.

The Lord at our right hand (vs. 8).— Let us inquire what the effect of such an habitual recognition of God would be. I. It would make life to us a Divine thing. II. It would produce great care and watchfulness against sin. III It would be our comfort and strength in trouble.— P. W. Darnton.

Joy in God's presence (vs. 11).— The presence of God in the most miserable places that can be were a greater happiness than the absence of God in the most glorious place that can be. David would not be afraid though he walked in the valley of the shadow of death, so that God were with him. Luther would rather be in hell, with God's presence, than in heaven, God being absent. If the presence of God takes away the dread of the shadow of the valley of death, and makes hell to be more desired than heaven, what will the presence of God make heaven to be! The three children in the fiery furnace, with God's presence, were happy. How happy, then, are the saints with God's presence in heaven!— J. Burroughs. The fulness of God. — I have found it an interesting thing to stand on the edge of a noble rolling river, and to think that although it has been flowing on for six thousand years, watering the fields, and slaking the thirst of a hundred generations, it shows no sign of waste or want. And when I have watched the rise of the sun as he shot above the crest of the mountain, or, in a sky draped with golden curtains, sprang up from his ocean-bed, I have wondered to think that he has melted the snows of so many winters, and renewed the verdure of so many springs, and planted the flowers of so many summers, and ripened the golden harvests of so many autumns, and yet shines on as brilliantly as ever, his eye not dim nor his natural force abated, nor his floods of lightness full for centuries of boundless profusion. Yet what are these but images of the fulness of God. Let that feed your hopes, and cheer your heart, and brighten your faith, and send you away both happy and rejoicing. O blessed God, in Thy presence is the fulness of joy, and at Thy right hand there is pleasure forevermore! What thou hast gone before to prepare, may we at death be called upon to enjoy!

— T. Guthrie.

"I shine in the light of God,
His image stamps my brow;
Through the shadows of death my feet have trod,
And I reign in glory now.

a "Tacit allusion is made to the lot of the Levites. De. x. 9; xviii. 1."

b "The expression suggests that the Ps. was composed when Dav. first took up his abode in Jerusalem." — Spk. Com.

c Ps. iv. 4; xvii. 3.

"What can we wish for in our heritage that is not to be found in God? Would we have large possessions? He is immensity. Would we have a sure estate? He is immutability. Would we have a term of long continuance? He is eternity itself."— Arrowsmith.

d This passage is referred to Messiah by St. Peter. (Ac. ii. 25, 31.)

"There is a wild Indian story which tells of a girl falling in love with a handsome young warrior, who was, however, really, but an image of snow. Immediately after their marriage they took a journey, and as the sun appeared in the horizon the bridegroom melted away. Man, falling in love with earthly things, is wasting his affections upon an image of snow."— Watkinson.

"Covetousness is a vice that loves to dwell in an old and ruinous cottage, and yet in age can have no honest color for niggardness and insatiable desire. A young man might plead the uncertainty of his estate, and doubt of his future need; but an old man has his set period before him. Since this humor is so necessarily annexed to age, I will turn it in the right way and nourish it in myself. The older I grow the more covetous will I be, — but of the riches

"No breaking heart is here,
No keen and thrilling pain,
No wasted cheek, where the burning tear Hath rolled and left its stain.

'No sin, no grief, no pain—
Safe in my happy home;
My fears all fled, my doubts all slain,
My hour of triumph come.

"O friends of my mortal years!
The trusted and the true,
You're walking still through the vale of tears,
But I wait to welcome you!"

PSALM THE SEVENTEENTH.

not of the world I am leaving, but of the world I am entering upon. It is good to covet what I may have and cannot leave behind me."—Bp. Hall.

A Ps. of supplication for protection from the evil world and evil men. Assigned to the time of persecution.

Ground of the Psalmist's confidence

1—5. (1) the right, or righteous cause.[a] my cry, a shrill, piercing cry, "expressive of emotional excitement, such as an oriental scruples not to use in prayer."—Cheyne. feigned, guileful, deceitful. (2) let thine, etc., render as a declar. of God's justice, "Thine eyes do behold rightly." are equal, just, or upright, so Thou knowest the uprightness of Thy suppliant. (3) in the night, Ps. xvi. 7. find nothing,[b] of wh. to complain. purposed, he had made a strong resolve under much provocation. (4) men, the great mass of men. word . . destroyer, he had but one guide and rule of action, God's Word, not the O. T. law alone, but the spirit's revealing. (5) Hold up, etc., R. V., "My steps have held fast to Thy paths, my feet have not slipped."[c]

Divine support.—Let me observe David, and learn to pray as he prayed. I. See his course. He speaks of his goings in God's paths. These are threefold. 1. The path of His commands; 2. His ordinances; 3. Of His dispensations. II. His concern respecting this course. It is the language of—1. Conviction; 2. Of apprehension; 3. Of weakness; 4. Of confidence.—W. Jay.

Hold up my goings.—There is a Catholic story which relates that once a holy painter was painting on the lofty ceiling of a church the image of one of the apostles. Absorbed in his work the artist stepped back to contemplate it, and stepped beyond the edge of the scaffolding; in a moment the figure that he was painting started into life, caught the falling artist, and set him down safely by the altar. If we live in the church, and seek to glorify God, whenever we take a dangerous step, or stand in perilous plight, a Hand stronger than that of Peter, stronger than Gabriel's, shall preserve us, and keep us in safety.—Watkinson.

An artless argument (vs. 4).—Naimbanna, a black prince, arrived in England from the neighborhood of Sierra Leone, in 1791. The gentleman to whose care he was entrusted, took great pains to convince him that the Bible was the Word of God, and he received it as such, with great reverence and simplicity. Do we ask what it was that satisfied him on this subject? let us listen to his artless words. "When I found," says he, "all good men minding the Bible, and calling it the Word of God, and all bad men disregarding it, I then was sure that the Bible must be what good men call it, the Word of God."

6—9. "Prayer for protection on the ground of Jehovah's relation to him, enforced by a description of the virulence of his enemies."—Cam. Bib. (6) I have called, I is emphatic.[d] The Psalmist makes a personal testimony. (7) Shew, etc., lit. make wonderful; display in a marked manner. by thy right hand, or against Thy right hand.[e] (8) apple, Heb. pupil; the "daughter of the eye."[f] shadow, Ru. iii. 12; Matt. xxiii. 37. (9) oppress me, R. V., "that spoil me." deadly, the Heb. expresses the eagerness with wh. the enemies pursue their malicious intent.[g]

Bible poetry.—The most obvious feature of Bible poetry is its intense theism. The question of the existence of God is never raised, and an atheist—if there be one—is simply set down as a fool. The Hebrew poet lives and moves in the idea of a living God, as a self-revealing, personal, almighty, holy, omniscient, all-pervading, and merciful Being, and overflows with His adoration and praise. He sees and hears God in the works of creation, and in the events of history. Jehovah is to him the Maker and Preserver of all things. He shines

[a] "As God knoweth Dav. to have performed his duty rightfully and blamelessly, and therefore to be wrongfully vexed by his enemies, He would look upon him especially, bec. relying on His help he hopes well, and also, in the meanwhile, he prays heartily to Him."—Calvin.

[b] For the fig. comp. Job xxiii. 10; Zec. xiii. 9.

"All that is truly great and truly good lies far above us, as those white mountains of Switzerland lie above the traveler, their tops touching heaven."—Watkinson.

[c] "I owe my safety to the care which I take to tread in Thy footsteps."—Wordsworth.

I steadier step when I recall That, if I slip, Thou dost not fall.
—A. H. Clough.

[d] "The spirit of the closing portion of the Ps. shows that there was no unworthy boasting in the former portion."—Perowne.

[e] "Thou deliverer of those seeking protection from adversaries with Thy right hand."—Hitzig.

[f] De. xxxii. 10, 11.

[g] Ps. lxxiv. 19.

in the firmament, He rides on the thunderstorm, He clothes the lilies, He feeds the ravens and young lions, and the cattle on a thousand hills; He gives rain and fruitful seasons; He is the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, of Moses, David and the prophets. He dwells with Israel, He is their ever-present help and shield, their comfort and joy. He is just and holy in His judgments, good, merciful, and true in all His dealings. He overrules even the wrath of man for His own glory and the good of His people. — Schaff. Honored by God. — Wronged by the world, buffeted by the messengers of Satan, overtaken by the storms of adversity, in closer fellowship with God we find balm to our soul. One day an aide-de-camp of the late Emperor Nicholas of Russia threw himself at the monarch's feet, and begged from his sovereign permission to fight a duel. The Emperor, who was a staunch opponent of duelling, immediately and emphatically refused. "But, sire, I am dishonored; I must fight," cried the disconsolate aide. The Czar frowned, and asked him what he meant. "I have been struck in the face," was the ready reply. "Well," said the Emperor, "for all that, thou shalt not fight; but come — come with me." And, taking him by the arm, the Emperor led him into the presence of his court which was assembled in an adjoining saloon. Then, in view of the flower of his realm, the Emperor kissed the cheek of the aide-de-camp which had received the blow. "Go now," he exclaimed, "and be at peace; thy affront has been effaced." Thus, when we are wronged by men or devils, we fly to our God, and the kiss of the King of the universe more than atones for the injury and dishonor that may have been done us. The King's love and favor fill the wounded soul with strength and gladness. — Watkinson.

10—12. (10) fat, or "have shut up their heart."[a] (11) compassed, illus. by 1 Sa. xxiii. 26. in our steps, lit. in each step we take. bowing down, or "to bring us down to the earth."[b] (12) Like as, R. V., "He is like." Singling out the most prominent of his enemies. lurking, lying in wait.[c]

"They have set their eyes bowing down to the earth." — Trapp wittily explains this metaphor by an allusion to a bull when about to run at his victim; he lowers his head, looks downward, and then concentrates all his force in the dash which he makes. It most probably denotes the malicious jealousy with which the enemy watches the steps of the righteous; as if they studied the ground on which they trod, and searched after some wrong foot-mark to accuse them for the past, or some stumbling-stone to cast in their future path to trip them in days to come. — Spurgeon.

Like a lion. —

— About them round
A lion now, he stalks with fiery glare;
Then, as a tiger, who by chance hath spied,
In some purlieu, two gentle fawns at play,
Straight crouches close, then rising, changes oft
His couchant watch, as one who chose his ground, Whence rushing he might surest seize them both, Grip'd in each paw. — John Milton.

13—15. (13) disappoint, R. V., "confront."[d] which is thy sword, R. V., "by thy sword." (14) thy hand, R. V., "by thy hand," God's instrument for deliverance. of the world, Lu. xvi. 8. hid treasure, or stores of food. leave the rest, so a retributive Providence does not overtake them in this life.[e] (15) behold thy face, expression for hold close communion.[f] in righteousness, bec. to the righteous only is such communion granted. satisfied . . likeness, not "satisfied, awaking in resemblance to God," but "satisfied with beholding God's face," having communion with God. 1 John iii. 2.

Satisfaction. — What a magical word! What is it? Where is it to be found? I. The true satisfaction. 1. It is spiritual; 2. It is complete: 3. It is full; 4. It is everlasting. II. The source of true satisfaction. 1. The vision of God; 2. The likeness of God. — Watkinson.

The Psalmist'shope. — The contrast is not so much between here and hereafter, as betw. world (life) and God. We see here into the inmost nature of the O. T. belief. All the blessedness and glory of the future life which the N. T. unfolds is for the O. T. faith contained in Jehovah. Jehovah is its highest good: in the possession of Him it is raised above heaven and earth, life and death; to surrender itself blindly to Him, without any explicit knowl-

"Thou helper of those seeking protection from adversaries. Thy right hand." — Aben Ezra; Delitzsch.

"The ancient Egyptians had the term 'child of the eye' for darling." — Spk. Com.

"The hard usage of his enemies drove David into God's blessed bosom; as children misused abroad run home to their parents." — Trapp.

a "These men led a luxurious and selfish life, in consequence of which they had become proud and unfeeling." — Perowne.

b "The fig. refers to the lion, wh. fixes his eye on the prey, so that it falls paralyzed by terror." — Spk. Com.

c Fr. Ger. lauern, to lie hid.

"Virtue is an angel; but she is a blind one, and must ask of knowledge to show her the pathway that leads to her goal. Mere knowledge, on the other hand, like a Swiss mercenary, is ready to combat either in the ranks of sin or under the banner of righteousness; ready to forge cannon balls, or to print New Testaments; to navigate a corsair's vessel or a missionary ship." — Horace Mann.

Prayer concluded with more urgent pleading.

d "The foe springs like a lion upon Dav.; may Jahve, as Dav.'s defense, cross the path of the lion, and intercept him." — Delitzsch.

e Job. xxi. 17.

f Comp. Moses, Nu. xii. 8.

"Awake in the morning, a suitable expression in a night psalm." — Ewald.

edge of a future life of blessedness, to be satisfied with Him, to rest in Him, to take refuge in Him in view of death, is characteristic of the O. T. faith. — Delitzsch.

"Waking from the present night of sorrow and suffering."—Calvin.

Over yonder.—

To be over yonder,
In that land, that land of wonder,
Where the angel voices mingle, and the angel harpers ring;
To be free from care and sorrow
And the anxious, dread to-morrow,
To rest in light and sunshine, in the presence of the King.

"O blessed awak'ning for you and for me,
The King in His beauty our eyes then may see;
And like Christ, and with Christ, for aye we shall be!"—F. G. B.

O, to be over yonder!
My yearning heart grows fonder
Of looking to the east, to see the day-star bring Some tidings of the waking,
The cloudless, pure day breaking;
My heart is yearning, yearning for the coming of the King.

"Life is not victory, but battle . . . Be patient a little longer. By and by in our hushed and waiting chambers, each in his turn, we shall hear the sunset gun."—Roswell Dwight Hitchcock.

O, when shall I be dwelling
Where the angel voices, swelling
In triumphant hallelujahs, make the vaulted heavens ring?
Where the pearly gates are gleaming,
And the morning star is beaming?
O, when shall I be yonder in the presence of the King?

"There is no wealth but life. That country is the richest which nourishes the greatest number of noble and happy beings."—Ruskin.

O, I shall soon be yonder,
All lonely as I wander,
Yearning for the welcome summer, longing for the bird's fleet wing.
The midnight may be dreary,
And the heart be worn and weary,
But there's no more shadow yonder in the presence of the King.

—Florence C. Armstrong.

PSALM THE EIGHTEENTH.

author,— prob. David

A Psalm sketching a life story, written at the close of David's chequered life. See 2 Sa. xxii.

1, 2. (1) love, R. V., omits "will," the Heb. form employed indic. affection in its most tender aspects. "It is elsewhere used of God's love to man, not of man's love to God." (2) rock, etc., these figs. are naturally suggested by the experiences of Dav's time of persecution. my strength, R. V., "strong rock," poetical repetition of his leading fig. for God. buckler, the lighter form of shield. horn, etc., symbol of strength; or of height and dignity.[a] high tower, in wh. I am beyond reach of danger.

Review of a troubled life.— In this psalm we have three things. I. A life greatly troubled. They were — 1. Worthless: 2. Numerous; 3. Violent; 4. Indefatigable. II. A God equal to all emergencies. God appeared to him as— 1. His all-sufficient protector; 2. His triumphant deliverer: this movement of God is in answer to prayer sublimely grand, completely effective. III. A soul alive with true sentiments. What are they? 1. Love; 2. Trust; 3. Praise.— Thomas.

"The Lord is my high tower."—If a man do run to a tower, yet if that be a weak and an insufficient tower, without men and munition, and a ruinous shaken tower; or if a man do make choice of a tower, a strong, sufficient tower, yet if in his danger he betake not himself to that tower, but he sit still; or if he sit not still, yet he but only go and walk on easily towards it, he may well be met withal, and a danger may arrest him, surprise him, and cut him off before he get the tower over his head. But the man that will be safe, as he must choose a strong tower, so he must go to, nay, run into that tower. Running will not secure a man unless the tower be strong.— Jeremiah Dyke.

[a] De. xxxiii. 17; Lu. i. 69.

"Obs. the climax: the rock or cliff comes first as the place of refuge, then the fortress or fastness as a place carefully fortified, then the personal deliverer, without whose intervention escape would have been impossible."—Spk Com.

3—6. (3) will call, more precisely, I am continually calling. His need of Divine help emph. praised, on account of former mercies, wh. renew the Psalmist's confidence. so, by thus securing the help of God. (4) sorrows . . me, R. V., "cords." Death is figured as a hunter, who surrounds the field with a net. floods, or multitudes, lit. streams of ungodliness. ungodly, lit. Belial: "the personification of destructive wickedness." [b] (5) sorrows, cords or bands (vs. 4). hell, Sheol, the grave. prevented, R. V., "came upon me." (6) distress, strait; when seemingly closed in. temple, lit. "palace," [c] God's heavenly dwelling-place, wh. is both palace and temple.

"The Psalmist's dangers are here represented by 2 figures: a snare (Ps. xci. 3), and a whelming stream (Jonah ii. 5)."—Jennings and Lowe.

The thundering legion (vs. 6). — It was in the year 176 of the Christian era that the Romans, in an expedition against the Gauls, under the command of the Emperor Aurelius, found themselves encircled on all sides by precipitous mountains, which were occupied by their barbarian enemies. A defeat seemed inevitable, and the Roman soldiers were in want of food and tormented with thirst. In this extremity the commander of the Prætorian guards informs the emperor that the Militine legion are Christians, and that they believe in the efficacy of prayer. "Let them pray, then," replies Aurelius. Full of faith, the legion prostrate themselves on the ground, and conjure the Christian's God to succor the Roman troops. They had scarcely risen from their knees when thick clouds darken the air, thunder peals among the deep fastnesses of the mountains, a tremendous shower of hail accompanied by lightning drives the barbarians from their entrenchments, while a soft and gracious rain falls over the Roman camp, and refreshes the worn-out soldiers. "So that," says the pagan historian, "at the same time, and in the same place, fire and water descended from the clouds, one burning the enemy as with oil, the other invigorating the Romans. In their despair the Quadi rushed down from their camp, and casting themselves frantically into the midst of the Romans, where the gentle rain descended, sought relief from their tortures; even the emperor pitied them. In memory of this miracle, continues Dion Cassius, the army proclaimed Marcus Aurelius emperor for the seventh time; and he decreed that ever after these Christian troops should be called "The Thundering Legion." When writing afterwards to the senate to inform them of this miraculous success, Marcus Aurelius commanded that all persecutions against the Christians should henceforth cease. — Mrs. Elliot.

b De. xiii. 13; Ju. xix. 22; 1 Sa. ii. 12.

c "This pass. is conclusive as to the use of the word previous to the erection of Solomon's temple, a point of great importance in its bearing upon other Psalms. (Ps. v. 7; xi. 4)." — Spk. Com.

"In the performance of its sacred office, faith fears no danger, spares no expense, looks in the volcano, dives into the ocean, perforates the earth, wings its flight into the skies, enriches the globe, explores sea and land, contemplates the distant, examines the minute, comprehends the great, ascends to the sublime; no place too remote for its grasp, no heavens too exalted for its reach." — De Witt Clinton.

God's mighty deliverance

7—11. Then, etc., Dav. poetically describes his deliverance as if it had been a personal manifestation of Jehovah through the sublime agencies of nature.[d] shook, there was an earthquake. hills, R. V., "mountains." (8) smoke, etc.,[e] poetic reference to the clouds hanging about the mountains. fire, or lightning. (9) bowed, bringing the heavy storm-clouds to bend low. darkness, R. V., "Thick darkness" of the storm-cloud, God being above it to direct it. (10) cherub, which is here the storm and cloud figuratively conceived, not angelic beings.[f] fly, R. V., "flew swiftly." (11) secret place, R. V., "hiding place." pavilion, or tent, conceived as pitched amidst the clouds, which were His armies. him . . were, R. V., "him; darkness of waters."

d Compare Ps. lxviii. 7, 8; lxxvii. 14–20; Ex. xix; Ju. v. 4; Am. ix, 5; Mi. i. 3; Ha. iii.

Earthquakes, their moral suggestions (vs. 7). — I. The perilous condition of our earthly existence. This shows — 1. The absurdity of setting our affections on material good; 2. The folly of postponing the preparation for eternity. II. The probability of a coming crisis in the history of our planet. III. The element of the severe in the Divine government. 1. The sinner deserves the severe; 2. And requires it. IV. The wisdom of seeking the Divine protection. 1. It can be obtained; 2. Has been; 3. Secures from all danger. — Thomas.

The historical references are partly to the deliverance at the Red Sea, and partly to the giving of the law at Sinai.

The earth shook. — In the night in which the Idumæans lay before Jerusalem, there arose a prodigious tempest and fierce winds, with most vehement rains, frequent lightnings, and terrible thunderings, and great roarings of the shaken earth; and it was manifest that the state of the universe was disordered at the slaughter of men; so that one might guess that there were signs of no small calamity. . . . At the day of Pentecost, when the priests, by night, went into the inner temple, according to their custom, to execute their office, they said they perceived, first of all, a shake and a noise, and after that a sudden voice, "Let us go hence." . . . A few days after the feast of unleavened bread, a strange and almost incredible sight was seen, which would, I suppose, be taken for a mere fable, were it not related by such as saw it, and did not the miseries which followed appear answerable to the signs; for, before the sun set, were seen on high, in the air, all over the country, chariots and armed regiments moving swiftly in the clouds, and encompassing the city. — Flavius Josephus.

e For out of his nostrils, some read in his anger. De. xxix. 20.

f "The fig. in this vs. recalls Ezekiel's description of the cherub as mounted on wheels, and thus rendered a kind of living throne-chariot. Ezek. i. x." — Jennings and Lowe.

12—15. (12) brightness, reflection of His glory, wh. breaks up the clouds in lightning, hail, etc. hail, the attendant of the severer storms.[a] (13) thundered, immediately upon the lightning. Highest,[b] most high, in 2 Sa. xxii. 14. gave, R. V., "uttered." (14) arrows, poetical for His lightnings. discomfited, same word is used in Ex. xiv. 24. (15) channels . . seen, R. V., "appeared," fig. taken from the dry path made thro' the Red Sea. foundations, or bottom of the sea. discovered, R. V., "laid bare." blast, etc., as of old at the Exodus, when "He rebuked the Red Sea."[c]

Nature ministering to supernatural purpose. — Not to material, but to moral and spiritual ends. Remember the higher ministry of nature. Nature is really but a mass of means which God uses for the salvation and sanctification of His creatures. Heathen fables tell us of nature being affected by great military and political events, but God's Word shows us nature ministering to great moral and religious ends, and this is well worthy of credence. The inferior universe serves the higher universe. We may well believe that the sun was darkened at man's redemption; that natural law and phenomena are controlled with a view to man's moral education; that ordinary laws and processes are distributed to secure man's immortal salvation. — Watkinson.

16—19. (16) from above, R. V., "from on high," in a very direct way Div. deliverance came. many waters, figure for calamities.[d] (18) prevented me, R. V., came upon me. (19) large place, comp. distress, or strait, of vs. 6. Open ground, free of the hunter's nets. delighted in me, comp. 2 Sa. xv. 26; Ps. xxii. 8.

Deliverance from deep waters (vs. 16). — We take these words as the expression of — I. David's experience. II. Of Christ's experience. III. Of every Christian's experience. — Bonar.

The Lord my stay. — When Henry the Eighth had spoken and written bitterly against Luther; said Luther, Tell the Henries, the bishops, the Turks, and the devil himself, do what they can, we are the children of the kingdom, worshiping of the true God, whom they, and such as they, spit upon and crucified. And of the same spirit were many martyrs. Basil affirms of the primitive saints, that they had so much courage and confidence in their sufferings, that many of the heathens, seeing their heroic zeal and constancy, turned Christians. — Charles Bradbury.

20—24. (20) righteousness, not absolute freedom fr. sin, but conscious integrity; sincerity of heart.[e] cleanness . . hands, from the particular sins with wh. he was charged. Saul assumed that he was plotting against his life. (21) wickedly, knowingly and willfully. Sins of weakness and error he would admit, not deliberate sins of intention. (22) judgments, or disclosures of his will. (23) upright, Ge. xvii. 1; R. V., "perfect." before him, or in my relations with him. (24) in his eyesight, under His searching inspection.[f]

Thanksgiving in review of a troublous life (vs. 20.)—In these verses David regards God's interpositions on his behalf as — I. A vindication of his own character. 1. He regarded his character as very excellent; 2. As Divinely influential. II. As an illustration of God's manifestation. The general principle here is this, that as man is, so is God to him. This is true in two respects. 1. As a personal power; 2. As a mental conception. — Thomas.

Besetting sins. — I. We are all the subjects of special weaknesses and temptations. 1. Each nation has its besetting sin. Scientific observers tell us that different races of men have different kinds of weeds following in their wake, so that a careful observer can, in traveling, see at once, by merely noticing the prevailing weeds, whether Europeans or Asiatics, negroes or Indians, have dwelt at certain places. So each nation has its peculiar sin. 2. Each age has its besetting sin. In the history of morals we find how various vices have prevailed at various times. Now an age of cruelty; now of intemperance; now of superstition; now of scepticism. Has not our own age its besetting sin? Each individual has his besetting sin. John Hunter held that two general diseases cannot co-exist in the same individual. It is somewhat thus with man morally. Usually a man will be under the influence of some one particular passion or temptation. All sins are in us seminally, potentially, sympathetically, but in some one direction we are specially in danger. This may arise from our constitution. Or it may arise from our situation. — Watkinson.

---

a "Hail is rare in Palestine, but often the more terrible and destructive when it does fall. Comp. Job xxxviii. 22; Jos. x 11. — Ewald. Ex. ix. 23, 24.

b "Name of God as the inapproachable Judge, who governs all things."—Delitzsch.

c Ex. xiv. 21.

d Job. xxx. 14; Ps. cxxiv. 4, 5.

There are various seasons when it is particularly desirable that treasures of this kind should be in readiness. What can be more fitting, for instance, at family prayers, than to have one or more of the psalms repeated in addition to the passage read, or, occasionally, in place of the regular reading as a home Sabbath exercise?

Vss. 20-30. God's character and government make such deliverance possible.

e Comp. St. Paul, Ac. xxiii. 1.

"Some have seen in this language a too boastful spirit; but the words are, in truth, words of childlike, open-hearted simplicity, not of arrogant boastfulness."—Perowne.

f 1 Sa. xxvi. 23, 24; 1 Ki. xiv. 8; xv. 5.

"God respecteth not the arithmetic of our prayers, how many they are; nor the rhetoric of our prayers, how neat they are; nor the geometry of our prayers, how long they are; nor the music of our prayers, how melodious they are — but the divinity of our prayers, how heart-sprung they are."—Trapp.

25—29. (25) In revealing himself to man God's disclosure of Himself is seen and interpreted by the individual's experience and character, both partake of the same nature. merciful, not merely kind, but gracious, "a friend of God and man."[a] an upright, R. V., "the perfect." (26) froward, R. V., "perverse.", not willing to comply with what is reasonable.[b] show . . froward,[c] a diff. Heb. word is here used. (27) afflicted people, who are thought of as humble. (28) light my candle,[d] Job xviii. 6, xxix. 3, R. V., "lamp." (29) I have run, etc., R. V., "I run upon." See 1 Sam. xxx. 8–17. wall, with poss. reference to the taking of Zion.[e]

The light of God. — When the Father of lights gives saving grace, then instantly the foulness of the inner man is seen. Then the illumined conscience testifies, "Behold, I am vile." When the revealing Spirit uplifts the heaven-lit torch, then new-born vision discerns the sin-sick ruin. But out of these materials God peoples heaven with a redeemed multitude, pure and glorious as Himself. Yea, through grace, there is relief large as the need. There is a remedy, mighty to heal the deepest depths of the disease. The sinner is not forever buried in hopeless guilt. God, from all eternity foreseeing the Fall and its tremendous woe, devised a reparation wide as the breach. This gracious work is intrusted to His beloved Son. Sin destroyed creature-righteousness. Jesus brings in a righteousness Divine. — Dean Law.

30—34. (30), tried, tested, or refined. "In God's promise there is no mixture of alloy." buckler, shield. 2 Sa. xxii. 31. (31) save the Lord, i. e. Jehovah, "save" = beside. (32) girdeth, prepareth me for work and war.[f] my way perfect,[g] even as His, vs. 30. (33) hinds' feet, running swiftly, and standing firmly in dangerous places.[h] high places, mountain strongholds. (34) bow . . arms, R. V., "So th. mine arms do bend a bow of brass."

Full conquest. — I. The fulness of His victory. 1. He has vanquished a host of enemies; 2. He has utterly vanquished them; 3. He has done it easily. II. The source of his victory. 1. The Psalmist trusted in God; 2. The Psalmist trusted in God alone; and 3. God gave him the victory. — Watkinson.

Tried. — Building a bridge across the Niagara River, below the Falls, was once thought to be impossible. The banks are steep and high, the distance across nearly an eighth of a mile, and the river here boils and foams so that no boat can stand the fury of the torrent a moment. Sending piles and building arches, as with other bridges, was quite out of the question. Yet a bridge was built — a wire suspension bridge, so called because it had to be hung by cables driven into huge blocks of granite on each bank. The cables were made of twisted wire. The bridge looked like a spider's web. But would the cables hold? That had to be tried. How frightened the spectators were when the engineer drove the first carriage across! A terrible plunge would that be into the raging waters, two hundred and fifty feet underneath. But the bridge stood the trial. Then gales and storms tried it, and it stood. "I am afraid to trust it, it looks so slender," said one of a party, shrinking back, when visiting the Falls a year afterward. "It has been tried," said the guide; "there is no danger," and we crossed safely. The Bible tells us of something that is tried. "The word of the Lord is tried." Its declarations and promises are tried, and its threatenings also are to be relied on. —Anec. Illus. O. T. Texts.

35—39. (35) thy salvation, this Dav. felt was his real shield. thy gentleness, or condescension, lit. humility,[i] the correlative quality in man. (36) enlarged, given me room for unobstructed movement. (37) have pursued, R. V., "will pursue," and so the other words in this and the 38th vs. turn again, checked in the pursuit. (39) subdued, bowed down.

The gentleness of God (vs. 35). — I. What d we mean by gentleness? God's gentleness lies in His consenting to the use of indirection, as a way of gaining His adversaries. II. The end God has in view in condescending to these gracious methods, viz., to make us great. — Bushnell.

"O send me not away! for I would drink,
E'en I, the weakest, at the fount of life;
Chide not my steps, that venture near the brink, Weary and fainting from the deadly strife.

a "God renders to men according to their deeds in a penal, not a vindictive sense." — Kausset.

b A.S., framweard, perverse.

c "The Lord so deals with the perverse as to bring them into inextricable perplexity, and to overthrow them." Spk. Com.

d "The lamp lighted in the house is the image at once of prosperity and continuance of life and happiness." — Perowne.

e 2 Sa. v. 6–9.

f "Girding was essential to free motion on account of the looseness of Oriental dresses; hence it is an expressive fig. for describing the gift of strength." — Fausset.

g Mat. v. 48.

h Ha. iii. 19.

"One of the few articles of Eastern dress which I wore in the East, was the girdle, which was of great use as a support to the body in the long and weary camel-rides through the desert. The support and strengthening I received in this way gave me a clearer idea than I had before of the meaning of the psalmist."— John Anderson.

i "A very remarkable word as applied to God, and just one of those links connecting the Divine with the human, wh., in the O. Test., so strikingly foreshadow an incarnation." — Perowne.

"We are such babes that we cannot stand alone; but when the Lord's right hand upholds us, we are like "Went I not forth undaunted and alone, Strong in the majesty of human might?

Lo! I return, all wounded and forlorn,
My dream of glory lost in shades of night.

"Was I not guided for the battle-field?
Bore I not helm of pride and glittering sword!
Behold the fragments of my broken shield,
And lend to me Thy heavenly armor, Lord!"

40—42. (40) necks, R. V., "made mine enemies turn their backs unto me." Ex. xxiii. 27. destroy, R. V., "cut off." (41) answered . . not, bec. they fought against His anointed. And their cry was only one of terror. (42) beat them small, defeat them in a most complete and humbling way. dirt, R. V., "mire."

The morality of prayer. — I. Prayer must be offered in a right cause. II. Prayer must be offered in a right spirit. 1. The spirit of penitence; 2. Of righteousness; 3. Of confidence. III. Prayer must be offered at a right time. — Watkinson.

I did cast them out as the dirt in the streets, or rather "of the streets." In the East, all household refuse and filth are cast forth into the streets, where all of it that is at all edible is soon cleared away by birds and dogs, and all that is not is speedily dried up by the sun. To cast forth any one, therefore, as the dirt of the streets, is a strong image of contempt and rejection. — John Kitto.

43—45. (43) strivings, this express. apparently refers to internal difficulties. head of the heathen, head of nations. (44) submit, by a forced subjection, proceeding from fear, not from free will. (45) fade away, or be wearied out. be afraid, R. V., "come trembling." close places, caves or strongholds, in wh. a few may have found temporary shelter.

The story of a heathen. — The Burman Missionary tells this story of an old and blind man, who thirty years ago came into possession, through a countryman stopping over night at his house, of a book printed in Burmese, and containing only the Psalms and a part of the Prophets. Before he had finished the Psalms he cast away his idols and Buddhism, and believed in a living God — Creator, Preserver, and Judge of men, and from that time he has worshiped and prayed to the Eternal God. He committed many of the Psalm-prayers to memory, and daily offered them, especially the fifty-first. For twenty years he lived in this way before ever hearing of Christ and the Atonement. Coming then from the interior to Prome, he heard of a foreign preacher residing there, and from him received a copy of the New Testament. He says that if a man should go about and attend to his business twenty years by starlight, and the sun should then rise upon him in all its glory, he thinks it would produce about such a change in his eyes and vision as the Gospel of Matthew produced on his mind; that then the long night of praying to God and hoping for mercy without a mediator or an atonement came to an end, and for the past ten years his hope had been firmly fixed on Christ, and there it rests.

46—50. (46) The Lord liveth, comp. Ps. xlii. 2. my rock, vs. 2. (47) It is, R. V., "Even." avengeth, awarded retributions to me.[a] (48) yea, thou, he turns fr. testifying of God to men, and makes his appeal and prayer directly to God. violent man, perhaps Saul. (49) give thanks,[b] or make solemn acknowledgment and confession to Thee. (50) mercy, R. V., "loving kindness." and to his seed, 2 Sa. vii. 12–16, 26–29.

God as a rock (vs. 46). — Is the "shadow of a great rock" desirable "in a weary land," to bear the scorchings of the sun, and to revive the fainting traveler? What a covert and hiding-place then is God, against all storms raised either by the rage of man, or by the estuations of conscience? Is a rock of an awful aspect for its height? How great, then, is God, whose glory is above the heavens, whose faithfulness reaches unto the clouds. What evil can befall me, under which His everlasting arms cannot support me? A believer can only be wounded by his own fears, as the diamond is only cut by its own dust. O Saviour, if Peter cried out, "Save, Master, I perish," how much more shall I, who fall far short of his "little faith." — W. Spurstowe.

brazen pillars which cannot be moved." — Spurgeon.

"David yields me every day the most delightful hour. There is nothing Greek, nothing Roman, nothing in the west, nor in the land towards midnight, to equal David, whom the God of Israel chose to praise Him higher than the gods of the nations."—Miller.

dominion extended at home and abroad

"There are prayers to God which are no better than blasphemy, which bring no comfortable reply, but rather provoke the Lord to greater wrath."—Spurgeon.

There are in the whole Book of Psalms 2,345 verses, making an average of fifteen and a fraction to each psalm. Any one treasuring up that amount weekly — 15 or 16 verses — would in the course of three years master the whole; or, at the rate of one verse daily, would in the course of six years and something over accomplish the same.

a "An important pass. as bearing upon Dav.'s character, and his repudiation of private acts of vengeance." — Spk. Com.

b Ro. xv.

"In the morning David's Psalms are sought for. In the night, when men are asleep, David wakes them up to Life of David in his Psalms. — Take the eighteenth Psalm, which we know from the express testimony of the history, as well as from its inscription, to be David's, and which is on all hands admitted to be his. How thickly sown it is with metaphors, which in his mouth, have a peculiar force and beauty. Thrice he speaks of God as a rock. How suitable such epithets as coming from one who, when hunted by Saul, had so often taken refuge among the rocks and fastnesses, the almost inaccessible crags and cliffs of Palestine. As he had escaped the swiftness of foot, so he tells how God had made his feet like the fleet of the hinds of gazelles, which he had so often seen bounding from crag to crag before his eyes, and hath him "upon high places" beyond reach of the hunter's arrow. — Perowne.

sing; and gathering the servants of God into angelic bands, turns earth into heaven, and makes angels of men, chanting David's Psalms. — Chrysostom.

PSALM THE NINETEENTH.

author, — David

Psalm praising the God of nature and of revelation.

1—3. (1) heavens, the natural heavens: the firmament, and its contents. declare, or recount: it is as if they sung an unceasing song. God, El, the God of creation. sheweth, "proclaimeth." (2) uttereth, welleth out, as from a fountain. "Each day overflows with utterances full of meaning, wh. it transmits to its successor." knowledge, or inward apprehension. (3) no speech, their message is not fashioned into words.[a] where, R. V., omits.

The two volumes (vss. 1–7). — The text puts the book of Scripture in contrast with the book of nature. I. Some things the heavens teach us. 1. They say, God is great; 2. Wise; 3. Good. For great lessons to make us happy we must go to the Bible. For — II. There are some things the heavens cannot teach us. They cannot — 1. Show us the way to happiness; 2. Or tell us the way to holiness; 3. Or the way to glory. Since of these two books the Bible is the best — (1) Study it most; (2) Study both the works and the word of God; (3) Study the works of God in the light of His word. — J. Edmond.

Spectacle of the heavens. — I had occasion, a few weeks since, to take the early train from Providence to Boston, and for this purpose rose at two o'clock in the morning. It was a mild, serene midsummer's night; the sky was without a cloud, the winds were whist. Jupiter, two hours high, was the herald of the day; the Pleiades, just above the horizon, shed their sweet influence in the east; Lyra sparkled near the zenith; Andromeda veiled her newly discovered glories from the naked eye in the south; the steady Pointers, far beneath the pole, looked up meekly from the depths of the north to their sovereign. Such was the glorious spectacle as I entered the train. As we proceeded, the timid approach of twilight became more perceptible; the intense blue of the sky began to soften, the smaller stars, like little children, went first to rest; the sister beams of Pleiades soon melted together; but the bright constellations of the west and the north remained unchanged. Steadily the wondrous transfiguration went on. Hands of angels hidden from mortal eyes shifted the scenery of the heavens; the glories of night dissolved into the glories of the dawn. Faint streaks of purple soon blushed along the sky, the whole celestial concave was filled with the inflowing tide of the morning light, which came down from above in one great ocean of radiance; till at length, as we reached the Blue Hills, a flash of purple fire blazed out from above the horizon, and turned the dewy tear-drops of flower and leaf into rubies and diamonds. In a few seconds the everlasting gates of the morning were thrown open, and the lord of day, arrayed in glories too severe for the gaze of man, began his course. I am filled with amazement when I am told that in this enlightened age, there are persons who can witness this daily manifestation of the power and wisdom of the Creator, and yet say in their hearts, "There is no God."— Edward Everett.

[a] "We prefer to render, 'It is not a declaration, neither are they words whose voice is inaudible (or incomprehensible).'" — Jennings and Lowe.

"The starry sky above me," said Kant, and the moral law in me, . . . are two things which fil the soul with ever new and increasing admiration and reverence."

"This proclamation is continuous and unceasing. Each day, each night, hands on the message to its successor in an unbroken tradition. Day and night are mentioned separately, for each has a special message entrusted to it; the day tells of splendor, power, beneficence; the night tells of vastness, order, mystery, beauty, repose. They are 'like the two parts of a choir, chanting forth alternately the praises of God.'" — Cam. Bib.

4—6. (4) line, Heb. means boundary like, marking extent of dominion: then a rule of conduct. Fig. a sound, a strain, Ro. x. 18. In them, i. e. the heavens. tabernacle, or pavilion[b] for a king. (5) bridegroom, symbol of youthful vigor and happiness. chamber, Heb. chuppah.[c] Joel ii. 16. strong man, comp. Lu. v. 31. race, R. V., "his course," i. e. from east to west.[d] (6) end, the extreme E. of the horizon. hid . . heat, this even the blind may feel.

Natural theology. — I. The subject of the revelation. II. The characteristics of the revelation. 1. Its fulness. 2. Its constancy and perpetuity. 3. Its variety. 4. Its silence. 5. Its universality. III. The importance of this revelation. IV. The limitations of this revelation. — Watkinson.

[b] Ha. iii. 11.

[c] "Properly the canopy wh. is supported by four poles, and borne by four boys, at the consecration of the bridal pair, and then also the marriage itself."—Delitzsch.

[d] "A very common epithet of the sun in Persian is garonraw, or the hot, or swift-goer." —Jennings and Lowe.

The Creator. —

These are thy glorious works, Parent of good, Almighty! Thine this universal frame,
Thus wondrous fair; Thyself how wondrous, then!
Unspeakable, who sitt'st above these heavens
To us invisible, or dimly seen
In these thy lowest works; yet these declare Thy goodness beyond thought, and power divine.
— John Milton.

the excellence of God's law

7–9. (7) law, the word-revelation of God. Lord, Jehovah, no longer, El, as vs. 1. Jehovah is the name for the God of revelation and covenant. perfect, in sense of perfectly adapted to man's good. converting, etc., lit. refreshing the spirit, R. V., "restoring." testimony, "The law, regarded as bearing witness to Jehovah's will and man's duty." simple, sincere, willing to obey.[a] (8) statutes, R. V., "precepts" i. e. the law as setting forth man's obligations. pure, bright; it may be compared to the light in its illuminating influence.[b] (9) fear,[c] the law as teaching reverent fear of God.[d] clean, requiring and culturing moral purity, judgments, decisions, ordinances.

The law. — I. The attribute of the law. 1. It is the perfect transcript of the glory of God; 2. It is the perfect theory of the good of man. II. The effect of the law — 1. It brings back the soul to God; 2. The law strengthens and perfects it. — Watkinson.

God's law perfect (*vs.*7). — An eminent lawyer, who had not read the Bible, and was doubtful about it being God's word, asked a Christian friend to tell him what books he should read to satisfy his mind. His friend said, "Read the Bible itself." The inquirer thought his question had been misunderstood. He wanted some books that would say something about the Bible. But his friend said, "No; I will not send you to other books. Read the Bible for yourself." The lawyer obtained a Bible. "Where shall I begin?" said he. "Oh, begin at the beginning, and read it through." The Christian called upon him now and then, and was delighted to find that he continued to read. One day the friend found the doubter walking up and down his room full of thought. He inquired what subject occupied his mind so completely. "I have been reading," said he, "the moral law in the Book of Exodus." "Well, what do you think of it?" "Why, I have been trying whether I can add anything to it, but I can't; and I have considered whether there is anything that can be taken from it, so as to make it better, and I cannot. It is perfect."

Enlightening the eyes. — The process of enlightening in many minds, says an observer, is shadowed forth by the experience of one whom I saw last week. He sat down to read the Bible an hour each evening with his wife. In a few evenings he stopped in the midst of his reading, and said, "Wife, if this book is true, we are wrong." He read on, and in a few days longer, said, "Wife, if this book is true, we are lost." Riveted to the book, and deeply anxious, he still read, and in a week more joyfully exclaimed, "Wife, if this book is true, we may be saved." A few weeks more reading, and taught by the Spirit of God through the exhortations and instructions of a city missionary, they both placed their faith in Christ, and are now rejoicing in hope. — Christian Treas.

10, 11. (10) than gold, the object of search, and the most desirable thing in the Psalmist's days. Frequent reference is made to it.[e] honeycomb, 1 Sa. xiv. 27, Heb. the dropping of honeycombs. (11) warned, and so guarded from evils.[f]

Reward. — Though we should not serve God for a reward, yet we shall have a reward for our service. The time is coming when ungodliness shall be as much prosecuted by justice, as in times past godliness had been persecuted by injustice. Though our reward be not for our good works yet we shall have our good works rewarded, and have a good reward for our works. Though the best of men (they being at the best but unprofitable servants) deserve nothing at the hands of God, yet they may deserve much at the hands of men; and if they have not the recompense they deserve, yet it is a kind of recompense to have deserved. As he said, and nobly, "I had rather it should be said, Why doth not Cato's image stand here? than that it should be said, Why doth it stand here?"—Ralph Venning.—Honey and the honeycomb (vs. 10).—We speak of the sweetness of honey without making any such distinctions of quality as are here implied. But whoever has eaten honey newly taken out of a honey-a 2 Tim. iii. 15; Matt. xi. 25; 1 Cor. i. 27.

b Ac. xxvi. 18; Eph i. 18.

c "The revealed way in which God is to be feared." — Delitzsch.

d "I have delighted in the brightness of Thy temple. Thy creatures have been my books; but Thy Scriptures much more. I have sought Thee in the courts, fields, and gardens; I have found Thee in Thy temples."—Lord Bacon.

"The same Almighty Hand which had given the sun his light-giving, life-sustaining power in the physical world, had provided life and light also for the spiritual world." — Kay.

e Ps cxix. 72, 127; Pr. viii. 19.

f "To be forewarned is to be forearmed."

"A miner's safety-lamp was brought out some time ago, which, besides serving the purpose of an ordinary safety-lamp, sounds a note of warning to the workmen the moment the air around becomes so charged with fire-damp as to be dangerous or explo-comb, or chewed the fresh honeycomb before the cups or cells have been opened, is sensible of a peculiar delicacy of flavor, which will be sought for in vain after the honey has for any length of time been expressed or clarified. The Moors of Western Barbary esteem honey a wholesome breakfast, and the most delicious that which is in the comb.

12—14. (12) understand, R. V., "discern." errors, sins of inadvertency.[a] secret, etc., those hidden even from our own apprehension: "sins which even those of the most tender conscience may be unconscious of." (13) presumptuous, "sins done with a high hand," as Nu. xv. 27-31. upright, R. V., "perfect." innocent, R. V., "clear." great, fully developed, violently wilful. (14) Liturgical conclusion. strength, rock. redeemer,[b] Ge. xlviii. 16.

Secret sins (vs. 12).—I. Why are secret sins so dangerous? 1. Change of place and circumstances does not aid you to break away from them; 2. They produce a continual warfare between the conscience and the desires of the heart; 3. They return often; 4. They counteract and destroy the means of grace; 5. They give the tempter great power over you.—Todd.—Acceptable.—All wish to please. Some please themselves. Some please men. Some seek to please God. Such was David. I. The prayer shows his humility. II. The prayer shows his affection. III. The prayer shows a consciousness of duty. IV. The prayer shows a regard to self-interest.—William Jay.

The responsibility of thought.—He holds all responsible for their thoughts. The question is not how do you act, how do you treat Christ, but what think ye of Christ? The seed is held responsible for the harvest, the child for the man, the thought for the act, the character. Christ declared that he who lusted and hated was an adulterer, a murderer. A thought to the mind of God is a thing. The first requirement of education is that the man shall regulate his thoughts. Says the Apostle: "Whatsoever things are true" (Phil. iv. 8). The thought is of first importance. Every harmony that moves the hearts of men first swayed the soul of some one as an unexpressed thought. So it is of sculpture and of painting. The thought went before the creation of the universe. The philosopher strives to find out the things which do not appear from those which do appear.—S. H. Tyng.—The hidden treasure.—There died in the city of Lyons a poor widow, who had been so fortunate as to become possessed of great treasure in her old age. One day, as she was sitting alone in her comfortless, half-empty room, it struck her that there was a singular outline on the beams of the wall. The walls had been whitewashed; but she thought it looked as if there had been a square opening in one of them, which had been carefully closed with a kind of door. She examined it more closely; she tapped with her finger, and the boards returned a hollow sound. With beating heart she tried to remove the square door, and soon succeeded, without much difficulty: but, alas! instead of the gold and silver she hoped to see, she beheld a damp, dirty, moldy old book! In her disappointment she was ready to fix in the boards again, and leave the book to mould and crumble away; but a secret impulse induced her to take it out and see if there were any bank notes or valuable papers in it; but no, it is nothing but a book, a moldy book! She wiped it clean, and set herself to read. Her eyes fell upon the words, "Therefore I say unto you, take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air; they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?" And the words that she read appeared to her so sweet and precious, that she read on and on during the whole day, and far into the night, almost forgetting to eat or sleep. The next morning she sat down again to the damp old book, the words of which made an ever-deepening impression on her soul. She began to see that she had indeed found a treasure, and an invaluable one. Her little chamber no longer looked so desolate; her food, which had so often seemed to her as the bread of tears, now appeared to her more like bread from heaven; and her solitude was relieved by the presence of the great King, from whose book of gracious words, streams of blessedness flowed. She had the book cleaned and bound, and it was to her as meat and and drink, by day and by night, until she was permitted to close her eyes and enter into the joy of her Lord. She related this history, in the latter days of her pilgrimage, to a beloved pastor in Lyons, in whose hands the blessed book is now. It is Amelotte's edition of the New Testament, of the time of the Huguenot persecution.

sive. Thus the Word, which is a lamp unto our feet, gives a timely note of warning lest we fall into temptation and sin."—Watkinson.

a Plainly this Ps. was written before Dav. fell into wilful transgressions.

b Job xix. 25.

Coleridge says that the fairest flower he ever saw climbing round a poor man's window was not so beautiful in his eyes as the Bible which was lying within.

"The law of the Lord is so holy that forgiveness must be prayed for, even for hidden sins. (Note—This was a principal text of the Reformers against the auricular confession of the Roman Catholics)."—T. T. Barth.

"What strangers we are to ourselves. In every man's nature there is an interior unexplored as that of Africa, and over that region what wild beasts may roam."—Alex. Smith.

A German prince was once visiting the arsenal of Toulon, and was told that in compliment to his rank he might set free one of the galley-slaves. Anxious to use the privilege well, he spoke to many of them, and asked the cause of their punishment. All declared it unjust, till he came to one who confessed his sin and deplored it, saying, "I acknowledge I deserve to be broken on the wheel." The prince exclaimed, "This is the man I wish to be released."

"The Emperor Adrian, meeting a man who had insulted him before he came to the government, said to him, 'Approach, you have nothing to fear; I am an emperor.'"

PSALM THE TWENTIETH.

author, — unknown

a prayer before battle

"Psalm xix. is followed by Ps. xx., because the commencement of the latter is the echo, as it were, of the petition with which the former concludes; and Ps. xx. is followed by Ps. xxi., because they both refer, as prayer and thanks, to the same occurrence."—Delitzsch.

1—5. (1) hear thee, R. V., "answer," gracious hearing involves suitable answer. name of, put for the manifested perfections, as power, wisdom, etc., defend thee,[a] R. V., "set thee up on high." (2) sanctuary, term suitable to the reign of Dav. before the temple was built. Zion, where the sanctuary was. (3) thy offerings, special sacrifices were connected with military expeditions. accept it, lit. "regard as fat," so befitting the occasion. (4) grant . . heart, R. V., "grant thee thy heart's desire." (5) rejoice, R. V., "triumph," shout as in hours of victory. set up, or wave our banners, in the forward march.

God's defense. — On March 9, 1839, the sides of a coal pit, called "The High Pressure," near Musselburgh, Midlothian, fell in, and the shaft was filled up with earth, imprisoning thirteen people. After trying in vain every means of exit by abandoned shafts, they retired to a narrow space which had been hollowed out of the coal seam, 18 ft. by 24 ft., and 3½ ft. in height. Here they sat down, and prepared for death. They held a prayer-meeting, which they began by singing together the first four verses of this psalm. They were all calmed and strengthened, and conversed on the Scriptures, the state of their souls, and their hopes for another world, now and then pathetically referring to their loved ones at home. After long suspense, they were delivered almost by miracle, and the last verse of their song seemed prophetic:

"In thy salvation we will joy;
In our God's name we will Display our banners; and the Lord Thy prayers all fulfil." — Ker.

Bearer of banners. — In the early part of the late war, during one of the severest battles, as our forces were pressing forward in face of the enemy, the standard-bearer, being a mark for the rebel sharpshooter, fell. The soldier next to him caught the falling banner, while the ranks closing over him pressed onward. Soon he fell. Again, another comrade caught the falling banner and pressed onward. As I read the incident I raised my eyes to heaven and almost despairingly cried, "Who shall carry our nation's banner?" A few weeks ago, as I looked over our Zion in ——, so thinned by death and desertion, I felt to make the same cry, "Who shall carry our banner?" But He who loved and saved our nation hath loved and saved us, and just sent a reinforcement from our Bible classes and Sunday school of new recruits, bold and brave, who, I humbly trust, when we fall will catch the falling banner and press forward, copying the fidelity of our noble heroes, to sure and certain victory, which may God grant, for His Name's sake. Amen. —Christian Advo.

a Ps. ix. 9; xviii. 3.

"Really good wishes are good things, and should be expressed in words and deeds. The whole Psalm thus teaches Christian sympathy is a great branch of Christian duty. There may be a great deal of obliging kindness in that which costs us little."—Wm. S. Plumer.

The prayer accepted

6—9. (6) know I, either the king now speaks, in response to his people, or the high priest speaks on behalf of the people. anointed, so Dav. is often spoken of. hear, see vs. 1. (7) chariots, etc., regarded as formidable enemies.[b] remember, R. V., "make mention of." (8) They are, going forth in faith they fully anticipate the triumph over their foes.[c] brought down, R. V., "bowed down." (9) Save, render, "Save the king, O Lord; hear us when we call."

Chariots and horses (vs. 7). — We have here — I. The variety and vanity of all earthly sources of confidence. They point out to us — 1. The tendency of man to trust in the creature rather than the Creator; 2. The vanity of the creature is demonstrated by its inconstancy; 3. By its limited power and its brief duration. II. The foundation of Christian peace and courage. God's people have reason to trust Him — 1. From the history of the past; 2. From their own experience; 3. From the covenant of grace.

The Psalms. — The Jewish Psalms, in which is expressed the very spirit of the national life, have furnished the bridal hymns, the battle songs, the pilgrim marches, the penitential prayers, and the public praises of every nation in Christendom since Christendom was born. These psalms have rolled through the din of every great European battle field, they have pealed through the scream of the storm in every ocean highway of the earth. Drake's sailors sang them when they clove the virgin waves of the Pacific, Frobisher's when they dashed against the barriers of the Arctic ice and night. They floated over b "The horse is only once mentioned in connection with agriculture, and the foreign usage of war-horses is discountenanced in many passages. Consequently war-chariots were little used by the Hebrews, and were regarded by them as peculiarly formidable. Jos. xvii. 16; Ju. i. 19; iv. 3."—Jennings and Lowe.

c "Great certainly is the faith wh. hath such courage by remembering the name of the Lord. Soldiers the waters on that day of glad days when England held her Protestant freedom against Pope and Spaniard, and won the naval supremacy of the world. They crossed the ocean with the May Flower pilgrims; they were sung round Cromwell's camp fires, and his Ironsides charged to their music; while they have filled the peaceful homes of our land and of Christendom with the voice of supplication and the breath of praise. In palace halls, by happy hearths, in squalid rooms, in pauper wards, in prison cells, in crowded sanctuaries, in lonely wildernesses, everywhere these Jews have uttered our moan of contrition and our song of triumph, our tearful complaints and our wrestling, conquering prayer. —J. Baldwin Brown. —The siege raised.—When Louis XIII. of France had invested with his army a city of the Huguenots, the besieged assembled one evening on the city wall and sang, with great sweetness and solemnity, one of their favorite psalms. The king was so impressed with the whole scene, and with the spirit of the singers, that he turned to Mazarin, his favorite general, who was by his side, and quietly observed, "We can do nothing with this people." The siege was raised; and the persecuted Huguenots triumphed in their Lord. God ought to be remembered in our triumph as well as in our need. We are sometimes so much elated by the triumph as to forget the help by which it has come.—Watkinson.

PSALM THE TWENTY-FIRST.

author, — prob. David

Psalm for king returning triumphant.

1—6. (2) heart's desire, comp. Ps. xx. 4. (3) preventest, goest before him so that he must regard Thy ways as altogether of grace. crown, see 2 Sa. xii. 30.[a] pure, R. V., "fine." (4) life, a special blessing under the old dispensation. ever and ever,[b] fig for deliv. fr. repeated dangers. (5) glory, the honor that has come on him. hast, R. V., "dost." (6) R. V., "For thou makest him most blessed forever. Thou makest him glad with joy in thy presence."

God going before us (vs. 3). —The word prevent now means to hinder. It used to mean, to go before. This the meaning here. I. God prevents us with the blessings of His goodness when we come into the world. II. When we become personal transgressors. III. When we enter upon the duties and cares of mature life. IV. When in the general course of life we enter upon new paths. V. In the dark valley of the shadow of death. VI. By giving us many mercies without our asking for them. VII. By storing heaven with every provision for our blessedness. —S. Martin.

Generosity of God. —It was the saying of a certain generous Spanish captain. "There is no way of enjoying one's property like giving it away." It is a joy, a luxury to give. The generosity of God knows no stint. When a certain English monarch once threw open his park and gardens to the public, the royal gardener, finding it troublesome, complained to his Majesty that the visitors plucked the flowers. "What," said the kind-hearted king, "are my people fond of flowers? Then plant some more!" So our heavenly King, with lavish hand, scatters on our daily pathway the flowers of blessing, and, as fast as we can gather them, spite of the grudging, churlish world, more are supplied. "Not as the world giveth, give I unto you." The greater our need, and the more urgent our cry for help, the greater the rapture of our Divine benefactor in supplying that need. "The Lord rejoiced over you to do you good" (Deut. xxviii. 63). — Watkinson.

7—10. (7) For . . moved, "the mediate cause is the king's faith; the efficient. God's mercy." (8) thine hand, these words appear to be addressed to the king. Hand, is sign of power, right hand of the most vigorous power. (9) fiery oven, illus. 2 Sa. xii. 31. (10) fruit, or children. Ancient conquests were usually attended with what we now regard as exceeding cruelties.

Sin is often its own detective. — An unguarded word, a suspicious sign, an unconscious oversight, will unmask the most carefully disguised plans, and lead to exposure and misery. Recently, the house of the Caliph of the Ben Oreazen in Algeria was entered by a band of robbers, and a box containing 25,000 francs stolen. In their haste to escape, the thieves left behind them an Arab cake bearing a particular mark, which one of the bakers of the town recognized as the sign used by Ben Xerafas, it being the custom for each family in sending their bread to the oven to mark it, so to know it from others. The police acted on the information, and descending on a certain hut, caught a Comp. Ps. viii. 5; Re. vi. 2.

b Some com. think this express. refers to the endless life of Messiah. But comp. familiar expression, "Let the king live forever." 1 Ki. i. 31.

"No longer forward or behind
I look in hope or fear
But, grateful, take the good I find,—
The best of now and here."
—Whittier.

"With the sentiment here expressed, comp. David's words to Goliath, 1 Sam. xvii. 45, and Ps. xxxiii. 16, etc. Similar language is common in the prophets. The basis of it all is to be found in the law (Deut. xx. 2–4; xxxii. 30)." — Perowne.

"When, on a certain festive occasion, Pestalozzi, the German philanthropist, was presented with a wreath, he put it gently away, saying, 'Crowns are not for me, but for the innocent.' The best of men have ever had the feeling that if the world knew them better it would praise them less." —Watkinson.

"How sweet is his smile in whose countenance heaven lieth! Ps. xxi. 6."—Fleming.

in our day are wont, when they go into battle, to recall to mind the the brave exploits of their fathers, or former victories, and the like, wherewith to warm and stir their hearts." —Luther.

" Our grand business is not to see what lies dimly at a distance, but to do what lies clearly at hand." — Thomas Carlyle.

the robbers asleep with a portion of the plunder still in their possession. A simple Arab cake was the insignificant agent of discovery and exposure. If the sinner does not betray himself, the hand of God, which has power to tear away every covering will sooner or later find him out. — Watkinson.

11—13. (11) intended, plotted. (12) back, lit. the shoulder, a common expression for putting to flight.[a] (13) thou . . Lord, a final ascription of all the glory is made to God.

A devout doxology (vs. 13). — I. God exalted. II. God alone exalted. III. God exalted by His own strength. IV. His people singing His praise. — Spurgeon.

Mischief. — The brain of the evil-doer is continually racked, either in devising new plans of mischief, or in counteracting the plans of others that threaten to interfere with his own. It is hard work to be wicked; it involves anxious thought, incessant activity, and sleepless vigilance. The fair goddess who lured to the first transgession and threw around it an irresistible charm, is now transformed to a demon, and tyrannizes over its victim, forcing him to do as a necessity what he began to do as a pleasure. All wrong-doing begins in the intention: there the most malignant venom is secreted. — Watkinson.

"Prayer is the key of the day and the lock of the night. And we should every day begin and end with prayer. This will make our labor prosperous and our rest sweet."

PSALM THE TWENTY-SECOND.

author, — unknown

A Psalm of Messiah's sufferings.

Aijeleth Shahar, hind of the morning; prob. name of a tune.

1, 2. (1) why, not the word of impatience or despair, nor of sinful questioning, but the natural expression of deep and surprising suffering.[b] roaring,[c] he compares himself to a beast in pain. The cry forced forth from extremest suffering. (2) not silent, lit. not silence to me. Je. xiv. 17.

A sketch of suffering sainthood (vs. 1). — Regarding this Psa. in this light it falls into two general sections. I. The prayer of the righteous under great suffering. 1. The sufferings are spiritual, social; 2. The supplications are intensely earnest, ultimately successful. II. The relief of the righteous from great suffering. 1. The instrumental cause of the relief — Prayer: 2. The blessed results of the relief — the celebration of Divine goodness, the conversion of the world to the true God, the celebration of His religion to the end of time. — D. Thomas.

A plaintive psalm. — "Psalm xxii. is a plaintive psalm, whose deep complaints occasioned by the most shameful humiliation and the most fearful peril, stand in striking contrast with the calm and cheerful mood of Ps. xxi. It begins with a disconsolate shriek of anguish, advances to a cry for help that is full of trust, and ends in vows of thanksgiving and in an intuition of the world-embracing consequences which result from the deliverance of the suffering one. In no psalm does such a measure of the most excruciating inward and outward sufferings press upon the mourner, notwithstanding his most perfect innocence. In this respect Ps. lxix. is its counterpart; but our psalm differs from it in this, that there is not a word of imprecation mingling with its plaints." — Delitzsch. — Deliverance. — "The subject of this psalm is the deliverance of a righteous sufferer from his enemies, and the effect of this deliverance on others. It is so framed as to be applied without violence to any case belonging to the class described, yet so that it was fully verified only in Christ, the Head and Representative of the class in question. The immediate speaker in the psalm is an ideal person, the righteous servant of Jehovah, but his words may, to a certain extent, be appropriated by any suffering believer and by the whole suffering church, as they have been in all ages." — Alexander.

a "The shooting against their faces would cause them to turn their backs in flight." — Fausset.

b Ps. xiii. 5, 11; Matt. xxvii 46.

"It is the question of faith as well as of an anguish that cannot be told. For he who asks 'why,' nevertheless calls God 'my God,' and repeats the appropriating word again and again with the very emphasis of faith." — Perowne.

c "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me? Such are the words of my roaring." — Hupfeld.

"A genuine trust is always succeeded by a signal deliverance. Man is often disappointed and confounded when trusting to human policy and power; but never when trusting in God."

3—5. (3) holy, therefore cannot have changed; must be the same in the darkness as heretofore in the light. inhabitest, art throned on.[d] "God is regarded as enthroned on the praises addressed towards the Shechinah." praises, songs offered to God on account of His attributes and deeds. (4) trusted, in the midst of dark and trying scenes. (5) cried, the term implies that the Fathers, like the Psalmist, had their times of doubting and distress. confounded, R. V., "ashamed."

Lessons. — 1. The lowest level of suffering is reached when the soul is consciously forsaken of God; 2. Prayer is the most suitable exercise of the soul in the most trying moments: 3. When the soul can do nothing else it can trust in God. — Watkinson.

d "Sitting on the praises of Israel as on a throne, as Thou art enthroned upon the cherubim." — Wordsworth.

"They that have conduit-water come into their houses, if no water come they do not conclude the

They cried unto Thee and were delivered.— As if he had said, "How is it that I am now left without succor in my overwhelming griefs, while all others have been helped?" We may remind the Lord of His former loving kindnesses to His people, and beseech Him to be still the same. This is true wrestling; let us learn the art. Observe, that ancient saints cried and trusted, and that in trouble we must do the same, and the invariable result was that they were not ashamed of their hope, for deliverance came in due time; this same happy portion shall be ours. The prayer of faith can do the deed when nothing else can. Let us wonder when we see Jesus using the same pleas as ourselves, and immersed in griefs far deeper than our own.—Spurgeon.

6—8. (6) worm,[a] Heb. toleah, the cochineal, which yields scarlet juice, fr. wh. scarlet dye is produced.[b] The term denotes utter helplessness and humiliation. no man, i. e. I am an insignificant person – a nobody. despised, Is. liii. 3. (7) shoot . . lip, express. denoting "open-mouthed ferocity."[c] shake the head, this may express compassion, here it expresses malicious joy. (8) He trusted, etc., "Roll it upon Jehovah! let him deliver him: let him rescue him, for he delighteth in him."—Cam. Bib. So it is the actual language of the taunt.[d] seeing, this is spoken in bitter irony.

All they that see me laugh me to scorn.—There have been persons in our own days whose crimes have excited such detestation that the populace would probably have torn them in pieces, before, and even after their trial, if they could have had them in their power. Yet when these very obnoxious persons have been executed according to their sentence, if, perhaps, there was not one spectator who wished them to escape, yet neither was one found so lost to sensibility as to insult them in their dying moments. But when Jesus suffers, all that see Him laugh Him to scorn; they shoot out the lip; they shake the head; they insult His character and His hope.—John Newton.

9—11. (9) But, etc., "with this express. he establishes the reality of the loving relationship to God, at wh. his foes mock." took me, etc., strong express. for the graciousness of God's care from his very birth. make me hope, R. V., "trust." (10) cast on thee, God's care is deeper than a mother's, and works through hers. (11) far . . near, be not Thou far, for trouble is near, so there is present and immediate need of Thy help.

Hope as an instinct of the soul (vs. 9).—I. This instinct implies the distinguishing goodness of God in the constitution of our nature. 1. Hope is one of the most powerful impulses to action; 2. One of the chief elements of support under the trials of life; 3. A source of joy.—D. Thomas.

Comfort may be found in the hour of trial by reflecting on the past mercies of God. The more conscious we become of our own impotency, the more tenaciously do we cling to the Divine arm and the more highly do we prize the smallest acts of kindness and sympathy. "I began to rail against Providence," wrote the imprisoned Armand Charratt with the blood he had pricked from his arm, "when a messenger of mercy came me in the form of an escaped canary-bird down a chimney of the Bastile. I kept the canary-bird, and for three years I was no longer solitary."—Hom. Com.

12—15. (12) bulls, the fig. of brutal strength and willfulness.[e] Bashan, extending from the Jabbok to Mount Hermon, and eastward to the extreme boundary of Palestine. Celebrated for its fat pastures.[f] (13) gaped, R. V., "gape," opening a wide mouth, as a lion in his roaring. ravening,[g] seeking prey. (14) poured, etc., comp. our Lord's fainting on the cross. out of joint, stretched, as on a rack, from their sockets. like wax, softened with anguish. (15) dried up, with thirst. dust of death, i. e. death must be the end. Still he sees God's hand in it all.

Bulls of Bashan.—The mighty ones in the crowd are here marked by the tearful eye of their victim. The priests, elders, scribes, Pharisees, rulers and captains bellowed round the cross like wild cattle, fed in the fat and solitary pastures of Bashan, full of strength and fury: they stamped and foamed around the innocent One, and longed to gore Him to death with their cruelties. Conceive of the Lord Jesus as a helpless, unarmed, naked man, cast into the midst of a herd of infuriated wild bulls. They were brutal as bulls, many, and strong, and the Rejected One was all alone, and bound naked to the tree. His position throws great force into the earnest entreaty, "Be not far from me."—Spurgeon.

spring to be dry, but the pipes to be stopped or broken. If prayer speed not, we must be sure that the fault is not in God, but in ourselves; were we but ripe for mercy, He is ready to extend it to us, and even waits for the purpose."—John Trapp.

a Job xxv. 6; Is. xli. 14.

b "The point of comparison is not the blood-red appearance, but the suffering so utterly defenseless and even ignominious."—Delitzsch.

c Job xvi. 10; La. ii. 15, 16.

d Matt. xxvii. 42, 43.

A prayer for Divine help

"Faith turns the mockery of his enemies into an argument of deliverance. 'They mock my trust in Thee;—yea, I do trust in Thee; for Thou art He,' etc."—Perowne.

"What marvel," asks St. Bernard, "that the name of the Bridegroom should be as ointment poured forth, when He himself, for the greatness of his love, was poured forth like water!"

e "No deep ethical sense is to be given to such representations of the Psalmist's foes. 'Lions,' 'dogs,' 'bulls,' are introduced merely bec. his foes exhibit the savage, brutal character of these creatures."—Jennings and Lowe.

f De. xxxii. 14; Eze. xxxix. 18; Am. iv. 1.

g From rapine, also written ravin, food obtained by violence.

16—18. (16) dogs, regarded in Sc. as unclean creatures. In the E. they are mostly savage and wild. wicked, R. V., "evil-doers." pierced, etc., Matt. xxvii. 35. (17) tell, or count; by reason of extreme emaciation.[a] stare, with the complacency of a foe who has gained his cruel end. (18) part, etc., Lu. xxiii. 34; Jno. xix. 23, 24. "This would only occur in the case of one who had been stripped as a preliminary to execution." vesture, inner garment, a seamless tunic.

Dogs have compassed me. — So great and varied was the malignity exhibited by the enemies of our Lord, that the combined characteristics of two species of ferocious animals were not adequate to its representation. Another emblematical figure is therefore introduced. The assembly of the wicked is compared to that of "dogs" who haunt about the cities, prowl in every corner, snarl over the carrion, and devour it all with greediness — like "dogs" with their wild cry in full pursuit, with unfailing scent tracking their victim, with vigilant eye on all its movements, and with a determination which nothing can falter, they run it on to death. The Oriental mode of hunting, both in ancient and modern times, is murderous and merciless in the extreme. A circle of several miles in circumference is beat round; and the men, driving all before them, and narrowing as they advance, inclose the prey on every side. Having thus made them prisoners, the cruel hunters proceed to slaughter at their own convenience. So did the enemies of our Lord: long before His crucifixion it is recorded that they used the most treacherous plans to get Him into their power. — John Stevenson.

19—22. (19) thou far, as vss. 1, 11. strength, "a Heb. word only used here; source or substance of all strength, with special reference to physical exhaustion." R. V., "O thou my succor." (20) soul, or self. my darling, lit. "my only one." "The clue to the meaning is given by the use of the word for an only child, Gen. xxii. 2; Jud. xi. 34. The word denotes the one precious life wh. can never be replaced. Cf. xxxv. 17." — Cam. Bib. power . . dog, lit. the hand;[b] it appears to point to the agents or executioners. (21) unicorns, Nu. xxiii. 22; here wild bulls.[c] (22) declare,[d] etc., the language of dawning hope. brethren, fellow men and fellow sufferers.[e]

A pathetic cry for help. — I. God is the unfailing source of help in time of trouble. II. Deliverance is implored from imminent peril. 1. From threatened death; 2. From the ferocity of the most pitiless tormentors. III. The cry for help is emboldened by the recollection of past deliverances. — Watkinson.

23—27. (23) fear the Lord, R. V., "stand in awe of." praise him, for gracious deliv. afforded to His servant.[f] (24) despised, all these express. are toned by the shame gathering round a death by crucifixion. affliction, Is. liii. 4, 7. hath he hid, this was the fact, for the Psalmist's feeling, see vs. 1. (25) of thee, R. V., "Of thee cometh my praise in the great congregation." pay my vows, wh. had been made in the time of trouble. (26) eat, as at a thanksgiving feast.[g] live for ever, comp. Pro. vi. 51. (27) All, etc., "the anticipation of a general conversion of the heathen belongs to Dav.'s sphere of thought."[h]

The spread of true religion (vs. 27). — Here we have — I. Religion described as an act of — 1. Memory; 2. Of repentance; 3. Worship. II. Its prevalence foretold. 1. It has already been partially fulfilled; 2. There is no improbability of its entire fulfilment; 3. The Holy Spirit's agency will secure it. — W Whythe.

28—31. (28) kingdom . . Lord's, a theocratical truth, and an evangelical prophecy. governor among, R. V., "ruler over." (29) All . . fat, R. V., "All the fat ones." Fig. for mighty ones. none . . soul, the poor, who have only the barest means of subsistence. R. V., "Even he that cannot keep his soul alive." (30) seed, the posterity of the present race. "A never-failing seed." Comp. Is. liii. 10. it . . generation, R. V., "It shall be told of the Lord unto the next generation." (31) They shall come, comp. Is. liii. 11.

The living church. — The true church of God can never perish. It is said that the Baobab-tree — the largest known tree in the world — though stripped of its bark outside and hollowed to a large cavity within its trunk, has the singular power of exuding from its substance a perfectly new bark, which lines both the inner and outer surfaces of the tree. So is it with the church a "The body of the crucified is a living lesson in anatomy." — Spk. Com.

"The Lord can blunt the point of the sharpest weapon; and, at the last moment, restore the stricken one who cries to Him." — Watkinson.

We can do absolutely nothing with evil except to overcome it with good.

Comp. Lu. xxii. 43.

b 1 Sa. xvii. 37; Is. xlvii. 14; "hand of the flame."

c Job xxxix. 9.

d He. ii. 12.

e Comp. Mat. xxviii. 10; Jno. xx. 17.

Our prayers too often resemble the mischievous tricks of children in a town, who knock at their neighbors houses and then run away. We often knock at mercy's door and then run away, instead of waiting for an answer.

f Sometimes God delivers from the cross, at other times He delivers through the cross.

g "The sense is equally good and true in reference to the Antitype, whose sacrificed body, offered once for all on the cross, is given as spiritual food to the faithful in the Eucharist."

h Ps. ii. 8; xviii. 49; lxxii. 11; lxxxvi. 9.

"The Psalter forms, as it were, a little Bible for all saints, in which every man, in whatever situation he may be placed, shall find psalms and sentiments which shall apply to his own case, and be the same to him as if they were for his own sake alone, so expressed as he could not express them himof God. Though pierced and peeled and wounded by the gleaming axes of malicious enemies, it still lives and grows in irresistible productiveness, affording shelter to millions, and stretching its life-giving and healing foliage over all nations. — Watkinson.

The soul (vs. 29). — A little girl, about seven years of age, was taken, with a brother younger than herself, to see an aunt who lay dead. On their return home, the little boy expressed his surprise that he had seen his aunt, saying, "I always thought that when people died they went to heaven; but my aunt is not gone thither, for I have seen her!" "Brother," replied his sister, "I fear you do not understand it; it is not the body that goes to heaven! it is the think that goes to heaven! the body remains and is put into the grave, where it keeps till God shall raise it up again. The body returns to the dust as it was, and the spirit to God, who gave it."

self, nor find nor even wish them better than they are."

"So that there is a commonplace of comfort for all, both richest and poorest, if they be subjects of God's kingdom of grace, their souls shall be alike fed by him and saved."—John Mayer.

PSALM THE TWENTY-THIRD.

1—3. (1) Lord, "Jehovah." shepherd, forcible fig. in view of the dangers of Eastern shepherding.[a] not want, Pr. Bk. Vers. is forcible, "therefore can I lack nothing." (2) green pastures, bright green bec. covered with fresh grass;[b] an oasis. still waters, or waters of quietness, "restful waters."—Delitzsch. Reference is to well-watered oases, rather than to gently flowing streams. (3) restoreth, or refresheth, as with rest and food. his name's sake, not for my deserts. Ez. xxxvii. 22.

Heinrich Heine. — Poor desolate and afflicted Heinrich Heine, who had been a pantheist and a scoffer, alternately or combined, was laid for years on what he called his mattress sepulchre, and took to reading the Bible, especially the psalms. One of the very last of his poems, addressed to his wife, to whom he was devotedly attached, bears traces of the shepherd-song of God's flock, and if it wants the sparkle and point of his early genius, it is redeemed by its softened tenderness. It begins thus:

"My arm grows weak; Death comes apace, Death pale and grim; and I no more
Can guard my lamb as heretofore.
O God! into Thy hands I render
My crook; keep Thou my lambkin tender.
When I in peace have laid me down, Keep Thou my lamb, and do not let
A single thorn her bosom fret,
And guide where pastures green and sweet Refresh the wanderer's weary feet." — Ker.

Reminiscence. — This peaceful idyl (the twenty-third psalm) is a voice out of the maturer life of the psalmist, out of memories of care and battle and treachery; a voice that tells that peace and rest of heart depend not upon the absence of life's burdens, nor on the presence of nature's tranquilizing scenes, but solely upon the shepherding of God. — Marvin R. Vincent.

4—6. (4) walk, as sheep following their shepherd thro' a dark and trying road. valley . . death, "dark, deep, sunless ravine between mountains,"[c] R. V., marg. "deep darkness." thou, my protecting Shepherd. rod and . . staff, rod to defend with, staff to guide with.[d] (5) preparest, etc., the common formula for furnishing a meal.[e] Comp. 2 Sa. xvii. 27–29. anointest, R. V., "hast anointed;" this was customary at banquets; see Lu. vii. 56. runneth over, so abundantly is it filled with blessings. (6) Surely, R. V., marg. "only." for ever, Heb. to length of days.

A view of the future suggested by a review of the past (vs. 6). — I. The psalmist's hope. 1. He hoped for goodness and mercy; his hope was coextensive with his life; the assurance of this hope is remarkable; 2. But how was such a hope suggested? He recognized goodness and mercy in his past experience, and in a Divine Providence, which, having ruled the past, would guide the future. He had confidence in the present and abiding favor of God towards him. — J. Parker.

Shepherd's staff and crook. — The shepherd carried with him two instruments — the staff, for his own support, and to attack a beast or robber; and the crook, or rod. By this crook the shepherd guided a sheep in a dangerous

author,— prob. David

A Ps. on the loving care of God.

a Ge. xlviii. 15; Is. xl. 11; Je. xxxi. 10; Jno. x. 27, 28.

b Lie down in Heb. is a technical word for letting flocks lie down at their ease. — Jennings and Lowe.

"Beneath the burning skies, and the clear starry night of Palestine, there grows up between the shepherd and his flock a union of attachment and tenderness. It is the country where, at any moment, their protector may have to save them by personal hazard." — F. W. Robertson.

c Je. xiii. 16.

De Wette quotes Moriet as illus. of the image of this vs.: — "Near Ispahan is a valley, inconceivably dreary, desolate, waterless, called the valley of the angel of death." — Spk. Com.

d Zec. xi. 7.

e Pr. ix. 2; Is. xxi. 5; Eze. xxiii. 41.

"Joy may grow on the very face of danger, as a slender rose-bush flings its bright sprays and fragrant blossom over the lip of a cataract."—Maclaren.

"Those that have this happiness must carry their cup upright, and see that it overflows into their poor brethren's emptier vessels."—Trapp.

"It overflows with grace to comfort me in time. It shall overflow with glory to gladden me throughout eternity."—J. Stevenson.

"The little child out at sea in the storm is not frightened like all the other passengers on board the vessel; it is asleep in its mother's bosom; it is enough for it that its mother is with it; and it should be enough for the believer to know that Christ is with him."—Spurgeon.

pass, placing the crook under the sheep's neck, and holding him up to assist his steps. When a sheep was disposed to stray, the shepherd could hold him back with his crook. When the sheep had fallen into the power of a beast, the crook assisted in drawing him away. A good sheep loved the crook as much as the staff — to be guided as well as to be defended. Both of the shepherd's instruments were a great comfort to the sheep while passing through a frightful and dangerous valley. The interpretation usually given to the words, "Thy rod and Thy staff" — as though they meant "Thy gentle reproofs and Thy severe rebukes" — is erroneous. A sheep would hardly tell his shepherd that his chastising rod, and the heavy blows of his staff comforted him. The meaning is, it is a comfort to me to feel the crook of Thy rod helping me in trouble, and to know that Thy staff is my defense against wild beasts. — The anointing oil and overflowing cup. — Mr. Griffin, in his Memoirs of Captain James Wilson, gives the following statement in the captain's own words: "I once had this ceremony performed on myself in the house of a great and rich Indian, in the presence of a large company. The gentleman of the house poured upon my hands and arms a delightful odoriferous perfume, put a golden cup in my hands and poured wine into it till it ran over; assuring me at the same time that it was a great pleasure to him to receive me, and that I should find a rich supply in his house." To something of this kind the Psalmist probably alludes in this passage. — On Psa. xxiii. — This is an ode which for beauty of sentiment is not to be matched in the circuit of all literature. In its way down through three thousand years or more, this psalm has penetrated to the depths of millions of hearts; it has gladdened homes of destitution and discomfort; it has whispered hope and joy amid tears to the utterly solitary and forsaken, whose only refuge was in heaven. Beyond all range of probable calculation have these dozen lines imparted a power of endurance under suffering, and strength in feebleness, and have kept alive the flickering flame of religious feeling in hearts that were nigh to despair. — J. Taylor.

PSALM THE TWENTY-FOURTH.

author—prob. David

The Psalm of the Ascension. The removal of the ark fr. Kirjath-jearim to Mt. Zion may be the occasion of the writing. 2 Sa vi.

"The Psalmist does not of course refer to geological speculations, but describes natural phenomena, the earth raised above the seas, girt by the ocean, and resting apparently upon its waters." — Spk. Com.

1, 2. (1) The earth, not a mere portion of it, such as the heathen deities were regarded as ruling over. (2) founded . . seas, "bec. the waters existed before the dry land, this has been cast up out of them at God's word." Ge. i. 9, 10.

The Divine proprietorship of the world. — I. Absolute and all-inclusive — 1. As to its matter; 2. As to its productiveness; 3. As to its inhabitants. II. Based on the act of creation. III. Confirmed by the fact of its preservation. Learn — 1. The folly of loving the present world; 2. The audacity of Satan in claiming all the kingdoms of the world; 3. The duty and privilege of rendering joyful worship to the great Proprietor of all. — Watkinson.

The earth is the Lord's. — Man lives upon the earth and parcels out its soil among its mimic kings and autocrats; but the earth is not man's. He is but a tenant at will, a leaseholder upon most precarious tenure, liable to instantaneous ejectment. The great Landowner and true Proprietor holds His court above the clouds, and laughs at the title-deeds of worms of the dust. The fee-simple is not with the lord of the manor nor the freeholder, but with the Creator. — Spurgeon.

3–6. (3) hill of the Lord, Zion in the days of the tabernacle; Moriah in the days of the temple: but both only as fig. of God's eternal abode in heaven. stand, i. e. stand his ground. (4) clean, from acts of sin. pure, or simple, sincere. Moral conditions are absolutely essential to all true worship. vanity,[a] or vain desires. Poss. with allusion to false gods, wh. are in Sc. regarded as vanity. (5) the, R. V., "a." blessing, comp. Ge. xxxii. 29; xxxv. 9. righteousness, in O. T. sense of acceptation of inward and outward holiness.[b] (6) This, is the test of, see vs. 4. generation, class. O Jacob, or Jacob's God. Or we may read "even Jacob," meaning that only those who thus seek God, are the true Jacob, or Israel.

The soul's cry and the true response (vs. 3–6). — I. The soul's cry. This state of fellowship with God is the great want of human souls. It is — 1. A very elevated state; 2. A very holy state; 3. A very desirable state. II. The true response. The answer indicates two things. 1. The way of reaching this state; 2. The blessedness of reaching this state. — D. Thomas.

a "It may be taken in its widest sense of all that the hum. heart puts in the place of God."—Perowne.

b "Poss. the term here betokens beneficence on the part of God, as in Ps. cxl. 3." — Jennings and Lowe.

7—10. (7) Lift, etc., a kind of chorus, to be sung alternately. It is appropriate to the occasion of bringing the ark to Mount Zion.[a] gates, of the citadel of Zion. everlasting doors, or "gates of old," as being of a hoar antiquity. (8) strong, His attribute. mighty, its manifestations in actions. (10) hosts,[b] "As sovereign of the universe." — Cam. Bib.

The King of glory. —

In His blessed life
I see the path, and in His death the price,
And in His great ascent the proof supreme
Of immortality. And did He rise?
Hear, O ye nations! hear it, O ye dead!
He rose! He rose! He burst the bars of death.
Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates!
And give the King of glory to come in.
Who is the King of glory? He who left His throne of glory for the pangs of death.

Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates!
And give the King of glory to come in.
Who is the King of glory? He who slew
The ravenous foe that gorged all human race.
The King of glory, He whose glory filled Heaven with amazement at His love to man,
And with divine complacency beheld Powers most illumined 'wildered in the theme.

— Edward Young.

a 2 Sa. vii. 2; Ac. i. 9.

b Ho. xii. 5; Am. v. 16.

"Where do we find a sweeter voice of joy than in the Psalms of thanksgiving and praise? There you look into the heart of all the holy, as into a beautiful garden, as into heaven itself. What delicate, fragrant, and lovely flowers are there springing up of all manner of beautiful, joyous thoughts towards God and His goodness!"—Luther.

PSALM THE TWENTY-FIFTH.

A prayer for protection and guidance. An acrostic or alphabetical Psalm.

1—3. (1) Unto thee, not to any idol-god, nor to any human deliverer, but to God, who alone can grant him that wh. shall satisfy his need.[c] do . . soul, Polych. Bib. "My heart longs."[d] (2) trust, R. V., "in thee have I trusted." ashamed, by having my hope in Thee disappointed. triumph over me, wh. they would do, if Div. help tarried. (3) let . . ashamed, R. V., "Yea, none that wait on thee shall be ashamed: they shall," etc.

The nature of true prayer (vs. 1).— I. The realization and recognition of the presence of God. II. The abstraction from the influences of the world; the consecration and concentration of all the energies of the man. IV. The results of such lifting up of the soul to God. 1. We shall be transported with the Divine nearness: 2. Transformed into the Divine likeness; 3. Translated into the Divine presence now and hereafter. — F. W. Brown.

Lift up. — The call to devotion in the early church was sursum corda, up with your hearts. Some lift up their hearts to vanity, and idolize a creation of man, or the soulless and unresponsive forces of Nature. But the only legitimate object of worship, to whom prayer can be acceptably offered, is God. "A carnal man can as little lift up his heart in prayer as a mole can fly. Let us therefore pray to God to draw us up to Himself, as the lodestone doth the iron."— Trapp.

c Compare Ps. lxxiii. 24–26; He. xii. 2.

d "The fundamental distinction between the godly and ungodly men consists in the object to wh. their affections are directed." — Spk. Com.

"True prayer may be described as the soul rising from earth to have fellowship with heaven; it is taking a journey upon Jacob's ladder, leaving our cares and fears at the foot, and meeting with a covenant God at the top."— Spurgeon.

4—7. (4) thy ways, the trustful man desires to be wholly guided, and yields his will to God's. (5) lead me, R. V., "guide me." truth,[e] or faithfulness, regarded as an attribute of God. on thee, Thee only, Thee altogether. (6) tender mercies,[f] Heb. bowels. ever of old, as Ge. viii. 1; ix. 15; xix. 29, etc. (7) sins . . youth, lapses, frailties of youth. transgressions, marked by willfulness, such as belong to maturer age.

Sins of youth. — How many would like to return to the happy time of youth! There is an exquisite pathos in those lines of Goethe:

"Give me, oh! give me back the days of youth,
Poor, yet how rich! — my glad inheritance,
The inextinguishable love of truth,
While life's realities were all romance.
Give me, oh! give youth's passions unconfined,
The rush of joy that felt almost like pain,
Its hate, its love, its own tumultuous mind;
Give me my youth again!"

e "His truth is the lasting and self-verifying fact of His revelation of grace."—Delitzsch.

f "'Tender mercies,' 'loving-kindnesses,' 'goodness.' How the soul dwells on these attributes of God, and cleaves to them when it is troubled with the sad recollection of the 'sins of its youth,' and its 'transgressions!'" —Perowne.

"The ways and stairs of God are known to no crea-

But it may not, it cannot be. We are young but once. And oh! how much of that past youth-time would we like to live over again! How many of its wild, mad, sinful actions could we wish undone! How many are there of the sins of our younger days we can ourselves remember; and alas! how many more which are now unknown to ourselves and forgotten by all but God! — Watkinson.

8—11. (8) upright, a term suitable only to man is applied to God. "Acting according to his promise." sinners,[a] not while in their wilfulness, but when penitent and humble. Ref., however, may be to "those who err fr. human infirmity." (9) meek, those poor, or humble in spirit; contrite.[b] (10) mercy, R. V., "loving kindness." covenant, the national covenant, wh. represented the great human covenant. testimonies, or laws wh. are the conditions and terms of that covenant. (11) mine iniquity, in relation to the laws and covenant.[c]

The penitent's supplication (vs. 11).— Here we have — I. The sinner's confession,—my iniquity is great. II. The sinner's prayer,— pardon my iniquity. III. The sinner's plea,— for Thy name's sake.

Sin.— Nothing is so blinding and misleading as sin, and it is never so dangerously deceptive as when it wears the semblance of virtue. Naturalists tell us that certain birds and insects have the curious faculty of assuming a likeness to the vegetation among which they sport themselves — that the South American heron can assume a perpendicular position, so as to look exactly like the reeds of its native district, that the leaf-butterfly of Sumatra is readily mistaken for one of the leaves among which it alights and that the walking-stick insect of New Zealand can closely resemble an upright twig. So sin has the dangerous power of assuming a tone and attitude of certain virtues. But the Divine eye detects the fallacy, and the Divine hand graciously guides into the right way.— Watkinson.

12—14. (12) What man, or whosoever is the man. "What the Psalmist asks for himself is the common lot of the pious." teach . . choose, God shall instruct him to make wise choice of his course of life. (13) dwell at ease, Heb. lodge in goodness.[d] inherit, etc., fig. taken from the promise and possession of the land of Canaan.[e] (14) secret, R. V., marg. "counsel or friendship;" privilege of close, friendly communion.[f] will shew, better rend. "And His covenant to make them know it."[g]

The blessedness of fearing the Lord (vs. 12).— The man who feareth the Lord is blessed — I. In the sacred knowledge of Christ's will, him shall He teach in the way that He shall choose. II. In the quiet peace of a good conscience, his soul shall dwell at ease. III. In the present comfort of a hopeful progeny, his seed shall inherit the earth.— R. Mossom.

The secret of the Lord.— Saints have the key of heaven's hieroglyphics; they can unriddle celestial enigmas; they are initiated into the fellowship of the skies; they have heard words which it is not possible for them to repeat to their fellows. He who does not know the meaning of this verse, will never learn it from a commentary; let him look to the cross, for the secret lies there.— Spurgeon.

15—18. (15) eyes . . towards, attitude of expectant prayer. net, frequent fig. for dangers by enemies.[h] (16) desolate, the isolated one, whom men treat as a stranger. (17) troubles, i. e. straitness. are enlarged, "do Thou enlarge."[i] (18) Look upon, with idea of regarding graciously. pain, travail.

Forgive.—I. It is well when our sorrows remind us of our sins. II. When we are as earnest to be forgiven as to be delivered. III. When we bring both to the right place in prayer. IV. When we are submissive about our sorrows — "Look," etc. — but very explicit about our sins — "Forgive," etc. — Spurgeon.

"Mine eyes are ever toward the Lord." — The eyes of a fool are in the ends of the earth, wandering over a thousand different objects, but fastening on none, and learning nothing. But the humble and patient inquirer carefully investigates the minutest phenomena that promise to lead to the interpretation of truth, and conduct the mind up to the great source of truth. Every year of our lives we grow more convinced that it is wisest and best to fix our attention on the beautiful and the good, and dwell as little as possible on the ture so well as to Himself; therefore He can give us the best instruction in them; we must go to school to God, to the guidance and training of His Holy Spirit." — Starke.

a Ro. v. 8.

b Matt. v. 5.

c "The lively sense of the greatness of sin, and the open confession of it, are the best pleas for forgiveness." — Wordsworth.

"Where do you find more profound, mournful, pathetic expressions of sorrow than the plaintive Psalms contain? There again you look into the heart of all the holy, but as into death, nay, as into the very pit of despair. How dark and gloomy is everything there, arising from all manner of melancholy apprehensions of God's displeasure."—Luther.

d "The word 'abide,' literally 'lodge,' indicates that the abode here, after all, is but a sojourning, our earthly home but a caravanseral."—Sph. Com.

e Ex. xx. 12: Le. xxvi. 34; De. iv. 1.

f Comp. Job xxix. 4; Jno. xlv. 23.

g "So as to reveal its deep, inner meaning to them." —Kay.

h Ps. ix. 15; x. 9.

i "The original text undoubtedly was 'the straits of my heart do Thou enlarge, and bring me out of my distresses.'" — Delitzsch.

"Present fear begetteth eternal security; fear God, which is above all, and no need to fear man at all." —Augustine.

evil and the false. The eye that turns its inquiring gaze towards God will make the grandest discoveries and see the most entrancing visions. — Watkinson.

19—22. (19) Consider, with a view to restraining. cruel hatred, or hatred of violence; proceeding altogether from malignity. (20) ashamed, see vs. 2. (21) integrity, etc., a sense of sincerity is quite consistent with a confession of sin.[a] (22) Redeem, lit. "set free." Israel, the personal prayer becomes intercessory, and includes the whole congregation.[b]

Soul preservation (vs. 20). — I. Its twofold character, "keep" and "deliver." II. Its dreadful alternative, "Let me not be ashamed.' III. Its effectual guarantee, "I put my trust in Thee." — Spurgeon.

Perfect integrity (vs. 21). — Among the Alps alone are found men rustic without being ferocious, civilized without being corrupted. The following trait is as characteristic as it is singular. Frantz went one evening to Gaspard, who was mowing his field. "My friend," said he, "the time is come to get up this hay: you know there is a dispute about the meadow, to whom it belongs, you or me; to decide the question I have assembled together the appointed judges at Salenche; so come with me to-morrow, and state your claims." "You see, Frantz," answered Gaspard, "that I have cut the grass; it is therefore absolutely necessary that I should get it up to-morrow; I cannot leave it." "And I cannot send away the judges, who have chosen the day themselves; besides, we must know to whom the meadow belongs before it is cleared." They debated some time. At length Gaspard said to Frantz, "Go to Salenche, tell the judges my reasons as well as your own, for claiming the meadow, and then I need not go myself." So it was agreed. Frantz pleaded both for and against himself, and to the best of his power, gave his own claims as well as those of Gaspard. When the judges had pronounced their opinion he returned to his friend saying, "The meadow is thine: the sentence is in thy favor, and I wish you joy." Frantz and Gaspard ever afterward remained friends. — Paxton Hood.

a "Devoutness that fills the whole man, and uprightness that follows the will of God without any by-paths and forbidden ways, he desires to have as guardians on his way."—Delitzsch.

b "This last vs. was perhaps added in order to adapt the Psalm in liturgical use. The name of God is here Elohim, whereas throughout the rest of the Psalm it is Jehovah."—Perowne.

"It may poss. be a pious ejaculation added during the captivity." — Spk. Com.

"Faith alone can interpret life, and the heart that aches and bleeds with the stigma Of pain, alone bears the likeness of Christ, and can comprehend its dark enigma."—Longfellow.

PSALM THE TWENTY-SIXTH.

1—4. (1) Judge me, vindicate my cause: do me justice. integrity, conscious sincerity of intention,[c] see Ps. xxv. 21. Lord . . slide, R. V., "Lord without wavering." (2) Examine me, Ps. cxxxix. 1, 23. reins . . heart, "the reins are the seat of the emotions, the heart is the very centre of the life of the mind and soul." By this fig. Dav. seeks a most minute and complete inspection. (3) walked, "term in Heb. implies long and active habits of obedience." (4) vain persons, Ps. xxiv. 4. dissemblers, lit. hidden ones.[d]

"Thy loving kindness is before mine eyes."— It might be well to follow David and to keep the loving kindness of God before our eyes. This should be done in four ways: — I. As a subject of contemplation. II. As the source of encouragement. III. As an incitement to praise. IV. As an example for imitation. — William Jay.

Bad company. — So far from being himself an open offender against the laws of God, the psalmist had not even associated with the lovers of evil. He had kept aloof from the men of Belial. A man is known by his company, and if we have kept ourselves apart from the wicked, it will always be evidence in our favor, should our character be impugned. He who was never in the parish is not likely to have stolen the corn. He who never went to sea is clearly not the man who scuttled the ship. — Spurgeon.

c Ge. xx. 5.

d "Men in whom evil purposes are concealed under a mask of respectability."—Jennings and Lowe.

"A good cause, a good conscience, and a good deportment, are good grounds of appeal to God."—Ingram Cobbin.

"The law convinces and condemns sinners; the Gospel relieves and pardons them, justifies and saves them."—Watts.

5—8. (5) not sit, Ps. i. 1. (6) wash . . hands, a fig. expressive of separating one's self from.[e] compass, etc., see Ex. xxx. 17-21, word prob. means "near and habitual approach."[f] (7) publish, etc., R. V., "make the voice of thanksgiving to be heard." (8) have loved, R. V., "love." habitation, the home, or refuge.[g] the place, lit. "the place of the tabernacle of thy glory."

Redemption work. — I. It is a finished work. II. It is a wondrous work. III. It is an inspiring work. IV. It is a God-glorifying work. — Watkinson.

A song of thanksgiving. — Pineton of Chambrun, one of the French Huguenots, who after fleeing by night and hiding in the woods by day, escaped at e Matt. xxvii. 24.

f "I think that the whole passage is figurative, and amounts to this, 'I would fain give myself to Thy service even as Thy priests do.'" — Perowne.

g Comp. Ps. xxiii. 6; xxvii. 4; lxiii. 2.

"The Psalms, the Canticles, the poetic books, are the singing groves, the tinkling rills, the pastures green [of the Bible]."—J. Hamilton length from France in the time of the dragonnades of Louis XIV., tells that, when he and his companions came in sight of Geneva, they burst into tears and sung for thanksgiving from vs. 8 of this psalm to the end. "Lord, I have loved the habitation of Thy house, and the place where Thine honor dwelleth. . . . My foot standeth in an even place; in the congregations will I bless the Lord."—Anec. Illus. of O. T. Texts.

9—12. (9) Gather not, make not my lot common with theirs.[a] bloody men, Ps. v. 6. (10) mischief, or violence. bribes, the sin of magistrates.[b] (11) redeem me, fr. the devices, and from the lot, of the wicked. (12) even place, on level ground, "He expresses the confidence that he is safe, and cannot be hemmed in."

Bribery.—There was a patron in England that had a benefice fallen into his hand, and a good brother of mine came unto him, and brought him thirty apples in a dish, and gave them to his man to carry them to his master. It is like he gave one to his man for his labor, to make up the gain, and so there was thirty-one. This man cometh to his master, and presented him with the dish of apples, saying, "Sir, such a man hath sent you a dish of fruit, and desireth you to be good unto him for such a benefice." "Tush, tush," quoth he, "this is no apple matter, I will none of his apples, I have as good as these (or any he hath) in mine own orchard." The man came to the priest again, and told him what his master said. "Then," quoth the priest, "desire him yet to prove one of them for my sake, he shall find them much better than they look for." He cut one of them, and found ten pieces of gold in it "Marry," quoth he, "this is a good apple." The priest standing not far off, hearing what the gentleman said, cried out and answered, "they are all one apples, I warrant you, sir; they grew all on one tree, and have all one taste." "Well, he is a good fellow, let him have it," quoth the patron, etc., Get you a graft of this same tree, and I warrant you it shall stand you in better stead than all St. Paul's learning."—Hugh Latimer.

a "Let not my soul and my life be knit in their fate with those of such men. . . The prayer is apparently against evil fortunes regarded as the punishment of sin."—Jennings and Lowe.

b "The corruption of justice was then, and ever has been, the cancer of Oriental despotisms."—Spk. Com.

"Life has no dim and lonely spot That doth not in her sunshine share."—Lowell.

PSALM THE TWENTY-SEVENTH.

This Ps. expresses unshaken confidence in the midst of dangers.

1—3. (1) my light, only passage in the O. T. in wh. the term "light" is expressly applied to the Lord. Comp. Mic. vii. 8. salvation, or Saviour. strength, or stronghold, or bulwark.[c] (2) wicked, R. V., "evil doers." enemies, R. V., "adversaries." eat . . flesh, as if they were beasts of prey.[d] (3) in this, R. V., "even then."

The Christian's boast (vss. 1–6).—I. The one thing of which David here speaks. Abiding in the presence of God will give—1. Light; 2. Salvation; 3. Strength; 4 Beauty; 5. Joy. II. The condition of attaining this one thing; we must seek after it.—The Study.

The twenty-seventh Psalm.—India was still heaving with the ground-swell of the terrible mutiny of 1857, when the wife of Sir John Lawrence was called home to her children in England, and had to leave her husband, who could not quit his post, surrounded by the smoldering embers which might, at any moment, rekindle into flame, and worn to exhaustion with the anxiety and labor which did so much for the preservation of the Indian empire. She thus writes, "When the last morning of separation, Jan. 6, 1858, arrived, we had our usual Bible reading, and I can never think of the 27th Psalm, which was the portion we then read together, without recalling that sad time." In perusing the psalm, one can see what springs of comfort must have opened in every verse, from the beginning to the close.—Ker.

c "The accumulation of words is to be noticed, wherein he terms God not only his light, but his welfare, and the rock or strength of his life For his meaning was, to set as it were his threefold shield against sundry terrors, as sufficient to ward them off."—Calvin.

d Job xix. 22.

4—6. (4) desired, R. V., "asked." dwell . . life, this is plainly the language of one who is exiled fr. his sanctuary privileges. beauty, or graciousness.[e] inquire, or meditate, investigate God's char. (5) pavilion . . tabernacle, he will shelter me in his own dwelling. (6) will, etc., the Psalmist confidently anticipates his restoration. joy, lit. "shouting," the shouting that accompanies the sacrifices of thanksgiving.

One thing.—Changes, great changes, and many bereavements there have been in my life. I have been emptied from vessel to vessel. But one thing has never failed—one thing makes me feel that my life has been one; it has calmed my joys, it has soothed my sorrows, it has guided me in difficulty, it has strengthened me in weakness. It is the presence of God—a faithful and e "Apparently with reference to the ordinances of the sanctuary, the worship as there conducted, but not to be confined merely to the external glory of the tabernacle."—Perowne.

"Truth is not born with us, nor can it loving God. Yes, brethren, the presence of God is not only light, it is unity. It gives unity to the heart that believes it — unity to the life that is conformed to it. It was the presence of God in David's soul that enabled him to say, "One thing have I desired of the Lord;" and in St. Paul's that enabled him to say, "This one thing I do." — George Wagner.

7—9. (7) Hear, O Lord, the tone of the Ps. suddenly changes when the Psalmist thinks of his own sinfulness. with my voice, i. e. aloud; (8) When, etc., lit. "My heart said to Thee, 'Seek ye My face;' Thy face, Lord, I will seek."[a] (9) leave me not, R. V., "Cast me not off."

The answer of a gracious soul to the Divine call (vs. 8).— There will be a reply in a gracious heart to a gracious call. I. Consider the gracious call, 1. Seek My favor, approbation, friendship; 2. Seek by appointed means; 3. Especially in Jesus Christ. II. Consider the reply. 1. The call is general, but the reply is particular; 2. We have a warrant in the promises for seeking. — R. Cecil.

The hidings of God's face (vs. 9). Behold, great Master of the house, a needy beggar knocking at the door of Thy mercy; O let him, by his own experience, prove the truth of that gracious promise, "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you." For what is knocking, if the inward groan, the sounding of my bowels, the vehement desires, the doleful lamentations, the moving tears, and importunate cries, with which my heart now seeks Thee, do not deserve that name? Nor can any of these most inward griefs be lost upon an all-seeing God; for Thou observest my most secret thoughts, and my heaviness is not hid from Thee. Call up Thy bowels, Thy tender and unspeakable affection, of which I have already had so many instances; let these commiserate my present distress, and work out for me a mighty deliverance; that I may be conducted safe to Thee, my God, and see the riches of Thy kingdom, and the beauties of Thy glorious presence, and sing praises incessantly to Thy name. — St. Augustine.

10. When, R. V., "For my father and my mother have forsaken me;" a proverbial expression. Then, R. V., "But." take me up, into His love and care.[b] God's love stronger than th. of the closest human relations.

Human instability and Divine unchangeableness (vs. 10).— I. Man's mind and will are mutable, but God's grace and mercy cannot change. II. Man is feeble and impotent, but God is able at all times to succor His people. III. Man is mortal, but God is an ever-living friend. — J. J. Cort.

Refuge in God.—

When me my nearest friends forsake,
  When I am wretched and forlorn,
I refuge with the father take,
  My pang to heaven's God is borne;
Unchained by words my silent sigh Steals to the loving One on high.

In Christ's dear name I will outpour
  My fullest bosom, Lord, to Thee;
Learn by sweet silence to adore,
  To see, by seeking not to see;
My needs shall feed thine altar's flame
If I them breathe in Christ's dear name.

— Hymns of Denmark.

11—14. (11) plain path, Ps. xxvi. 12. enemies, lit. watchers for my fall. (12) breathe out, Ac. ix. 1, "A forcible image, not uncommon in classic writers." (13) trans. Polych. Bib., "Did I not trust to enjoy the goodness of Jehovah in the land of the living — — !"[c] (14) Wait on the Lord, the attitude of soul constantly commended in the Ps.[d] be . . heart, R. V., "Be strong and let thine heart take courage."

Need of Divine teaching (vs. 11).— Varro, a Roman writer of the first century B. C., states that in his day, he had been at the pains to collect the various opinions on the question, "What is the true object of human life?" in other words, "What is the supreme good?" He had reckoned up as many as three hundred and twenty different answers. How needful is Divine be obtained irrespective of our own efforts. It must be sought for its own sake. It must be wooed and won, from love, before it can be enjoyed." — Watkinson.

a Ps. xxiv. 6.

"How beautiful and how varied are the forms of prayer and thanksgiving in the Book of Psalms! They appear as the outpourings of a grateful heart before God for the glories of His creation, for succor in the hour of danger, for deliverance from affliction, for national privileges, and for anticipated salvation."—Sedgwick.

"How eagerly do we wait for the reply from a friend to an important letter! So should we watch for God's answer to our prayers."—Watkinson.

b "Though my condition be helpless and friendless as that of a child deserted of his parents, there is One who watches over me, and will take me to His bosom." — Perowne.

"Dav. was sometimes compelled to leave his parents to the care of others (1 Sa. xxii. 3), but we know nothing of his parents forsaking him." — Jennings and Lowe.

c "Did I not believe, were not confidence preserved to me, . . then I had suddenly perished."—Delitzsch.

d Ps. xxxvii. 34.

"There is no more dignified species of worship to be found than that of exemplifying our faith in the omnipotence and wisdom of God, by humble and joyous perseverance under the greatest difficulties."—Tholuck.

"A sense of God's presence in love is sufficient to rebuke all anxiety and fear in the worst and most dreadful condition."—Owen.

revelation: and how essential to those who are starting in life that a heavenly Guide should teach them the true end and purpose of earthly existence.—W. H. Groser.

Wait on the Lord, be of good courage. —

Stand but your ground, your ghostly foes will fly—
Hell trembles at a heaven-directed eye;
Choose rather to defend than to assail—
Self-confidence will in the conflict fail:
When you are challenged you may dangers meet—
True courage is a fixed, not sudden heat;
Is always humble, lives in self-distrust.
And will itself into no danger thrust.
Devote yourself to God, and you will find God fights the battles of a will resigned.
Love Jesus! love will no base fear endure—
Love Jesus! and of conquest rest secure.—Thomas Ken.

PSALM THE TWENTY-EIGHTH.

A psalm in which the help of God is sought against the public foe. The historical connection cannot be fixed.

1—5. (1) silent to me, be not deaf to me, do not turn away from me. pit, Sheol, the grave. (2) lift . . hands, the usual attitude in prayer.[a] oracle, or sanctury: the holy of holies. (3) Draw, etc., as Ps. xxvi. 9. speak peace, comp. dissemblers, Ps. xxvi. 4. (4) Give them, the godly man may seek just punishments on his foes, as well as deliverance for himself. (5) regard . . Lord, the ground on wh. we may seek their punishment is not injury done to ourselves, but dishonor brought on God. destroy, lit. shatter.

A society strongly deprecated (vs. 3).—I. The character of ungodly society. 1. They are apostates; 2. Rebels; 3. Hypocrites. II. The attractiveness of ungodly society. This consists—1. In its numerical force; 2. Its social resources. III. The banefulness of ungodly society. 1. It is detrimental to the highest interests of human nature; 2. It is doomed to ruin.—D. Thomas.

My rock.—One day a friend called on the Rev. William Evans, a pious minister in England, and asked how he felt himself. "I am weakness itself," he replied; "but I am on the Rock. I do not experience those transports which some have expressed in the view of death; but my dependence is on the mercy of God in Christ. Here my religion began, and here it must end." Said a dying saint (the Rev. John Rees), "Christ in His person, Christ in the love of His heart, and Christ in the power of His arm, is the rock on which I rest, and now" (reclining his head gently on the pillow), "Death, strike."—Watkinson.

"The structure of the psalm is based on the common principle of dipodia, or strophes of two verses; the only exception being in the central one, which consists of three verses."—Perowne.

"Happy occasions oft by self-mistrust are forfeited; but infamy doth kill."—W. Wordsworth.

6—9. (6) hath heard, in the past; therefore new prayers may be offered with confidence. (7) trusted, so he could rejoice as if his prayer had actually been answered. rejoiceth, exulteth. (8) saving strength, fortress of protection. (9) feed them, as a shepherd does his flock. lift them, as a shepherd would the weary lambs.[b]

The songs of heaven (vs. 7).—There are three especial occasions wherein the universe has resounded with the most noble praise. I. The song of creation. II. The song of redemption. III. The song of glorification.—C. Bryan.

"We should not sadden the harmless mirth of others by suffering our own melancholy to be seen, and this species of exertion is, like virtue, its own reward; for the good spirits which are at first simulated become at length real."—Thomas Scott.

Trust. —

When my dim reason would demand
Why that or this thou dost ordain,
By some vast deep I seem to stand,
Whose secrets I must ask in vain.

When doubts disturb my troubled breast,
And all is dark as night to me,
Here as on solid rock I rest—
That so it seemeth good to thee.

Be this my joy, that evermore
Thou rulest all things at thy will;
Thy sovereign wisdom I adore—
And calmly, sweetly trust thee still.

"Behold what great contempt hath the Lord of Majesty endured, that His confusion may be our glory; His punishment our heavenly bliss! Without ceasing impress this spectacle, O Christian, on thy soul!"—Dionysius.

[a] Ex. ix. 29; Ps. cxli. 2.

[b] Is. xl. 11; xlvi. 3; lxiii. 9.

PSALM THE TWENTY-NINTH.

author, — prob. David

A psalm suggested by a great thunder-storm, sweeping over the full length of Palestine from Mt. Hermon to Kadesh Barnea.

1, 2. (1) Give, or ascribe; yield (Calvin). mighty, Heb. sons of the mighty; or angels.[a] strength, i. e. acknowledge that strength is with Him. glory . . name, i. e. "His glory as He reveals Himself in the world." (2) beauty of holiness, "in holy array," as priests in holy vestments.[b]

Whole psalm. — A glorious psalm of praise sung during a tempest, the majesty of which shakes universal nature, so much so that the greatness of the power of the Lord is felt by all in heaven and on earth. This Lord is the God of His people, who blesses them with strength and peace. To rightly appreciate the feelings of the bard, one ought to realize an oriental storm, especially in the mountainous regions of Palestine, which, accompanied by the terrific echoes of the encircling mountains, by torrents of rain-like water-spouts, often scatters terror on man and beast, destruction on cities and fields. Wilson, the traveler, describes such a tempest in the neighborhood of Baalbek: "I was overtaken by a storm, as if the floodgates of heaven had burst; it came on in a moment, and raged with a power which suggested the end of the world. Solemn darkness covered the earth; the rain descended in torrents, and sweeping down the mountain side, became by the fearful power of the storm transmuted into thick clouds of fog." Compare also our Lord's parable, taken from life, in Matt. vii. 27. — Augustus F. Tholuck.

[a] Ps. lxxxix. 6.

[b] 2 Chron. xx. 21; Ps. cx. 3.

The Sept. indicates that this Ps. was connected with the feast of Pentecost, wh. was the memorial of giving of law on Sinai.

3—6. (3) voice, etc., the thunder heard at first muttering in the distance. the waters, those collected in the storm-cloud upon wh. Jehovah rides. (4) powerful, expressing the feeling produced as the storm comes nearer. The Heb. expression "in might;" "in majesty;" is more vigorous. (5) breaketh the cedars, the effect of the lightning, or of the wind.[c] (6) skip, a very strong poetical figure of the waving of mountain forests before the wind. Sirion, the Sidonian name for Hermon. unicorn, R. V., "wild ox," Nu. xxiii. 22.

[c] "The ancient expositors remind us that the breaking of the cedar trees by the wind is a figure of the laying low of the lofty and proud things of this world, by the rushing mighty wind of the Holy Spirit."— Wordsworth.

The voice of the Lord (vs. 4). — I. Let us notice the modes in which God speaks, or makes communications to men. He speaks — 1. In the structure and arrangements of material nature; 2. In the dispensations and the government of Providence; 3. In the messages of revealed truth. II. The attributes by which these communications are prominently distinguished. 1. Consider the glory of His nature from which the communications come; 2. The nature and contents of the communications themselves; 3. The issues in which neglect of or attention to these communications is to emanate. III. The tribute which these communications, made by God to man, imperatively require. 1. Faith is required; 2. Also gratitude; 3. And prayer.— J. Parsons.

"The priests and Levites in Jehovah's sanctuary on earth attired themselves, on special occasions, in suitable vestments to do Him service; so the angels are bidden to make a similar preparation."— Spk. Com.

Thunder in the poets. — The poets of all lands make frequent reference to the thunder. The following extracts are from Æschylus and Milton:

"I feel in very deep
The firm earth rock; the thunder's deepening roar Rolls with redoubled rage; the bickering flames
Flash thick; the eddying sands are whirl'd on high;
In dreadful opposition, the wild winds
Rend the vexed air; the boisterous billows rise, Confounding earth and sky, the impetuous storm Rolls all its terrible fury." — Potter's Trans.

"The call to worship in these two verses chimes in with the loud pealing thunder, which is the church bell of the universe ringing kings and angels, and all the sons of earth to their devotions."— Spurgeon.

"Either tropic now
'Gan thunder, and both ends of heaven, the clouds
From many a horrid rift abortive pour'd
Fierce rain, with lightning mix'd, water with fire,
In ruin reconcil'd; nor slept the winds
Within their stony caves, but rush'd abroad
From the four hinges of the world, and fell
On the vex'd wilderness, whose tallest pines,
Though rooted deep as high, and sturdiest oaks,
Bow'd their stiff necks, laden with stormy blasts,
Or torn up sheer." — Paradise Regained.

"The expression may pos. ref. to the Mediterranean Sea, fr. which the storm comes up."—J. D. Michaelis.

"For they can conquer who believe they can."— Virgil.

7—11. (7) divideth, cleaveth, "sendeth out forked lightning-shafts."[a] "Parts the blaze of the lightning, so as to give it the forked appearance." (8) Kadesh, Ge. xiv. 7; Nu. xiii. 26; N. W. of the wilderness of Paran; reference to this district indicates the course of the storm as fr. N. to S. (9) hinds to calve, It refers to the premature birth due to the fright of the animals.[b] discovereth, i. e. strippeth bare. temple, i. e. heaven. every one, better "while in his temple all are saying, Glory."—Cam. Bib. (10) upon, or over, so as to control it. flood, vast deluge of rain accompanying the storm. (11) with peace, in the midst of, and after, storm.[c]

Terror caused by thunder. — "The voice of Jehovah (a common Hebrew phrase, denoting thunder) maketh the hinds to calve." Nor ought we to wonder that so timorous a creature as the hind should be so much affected by that awfully imposing sound, when some of the proudest men that ever existed have been made to tremble. Augustus, the Roman emperor, according to Suetonius, was so terrified when it thundered, that he wrapped a seal-skin round his body, with a view of defending it from the lightning, and concealed himself in some secret corner till the tempest ceased. The tyrant Caligula, who sometimes affected to threaten Jupiter himself, covered his head, or hid himself under a bed; and Horace confesses he was reclaimed from atheism by the terror of thunder and lightning. — Paxton.—Nature God's temple. — I asked the earth, and it said, "I am not He," and all that is upon it made the same confession. I asked the sun, and the depths, and the creeping things that have life, and they answered, "We are not thy God; look thou above us." I asked the breezes and the gales; and the whole air with its inhabitants said to me, "Anaximenes is in error, I am not God." I asked the heaven, the sun, the moon, the stars. "We too," said they, "are not the God whom thou seekest." And I said to all the creatures that surround the doors of my fleshly senses, "Ye have said to me, of my God, that ye are not He; tell me somewhat of Him." And with a great voice they exclaimed, "He made us." — Augustine.

PSALM THE THIRTIETH.

author — unknown

Composed on recovery from dangerous illness.

1—3. (1) extol, or eulogize, elevated by praise.[d] lifted me up, as out of a well, or pit; fr. the depths of my suffering.[e] (2) healed me, "best taken literally of restoration from illness." (3) grave, Sheol, abode of spirits. kept me alive, through sickness, or danger. should not, etc., or from those that, etc.[f]

Note on title of this Ps. — It was common, when any person had finished a house, and entered into it, to celebrate it with great rejoicing, and keep a festival, to which his friends were invited, and to perform some religious ceremonies, to secure the protection of heaven. Thus when the second temple was finished, the priests and Levites, and the rest of the captivity, kept the dedication of the house of God with joy, and offered numerous sacrifices (Ezra vi. 16). We read in the New Testament of the feast of the dedication, appointed by Judas Maccabæus in memory of the purification and restoration of the temple of Jerusalem, after it had been defiled and laid in ruins by Antiochus Epiphanes; and celebrated annually, to the time of its destruction by Titus, by solemn sacrifices, music, songs, and hymns to the praise of God; and feasts, and everything that could give the people pleasure, for eight days successively (Josephus). This was customary even among private persons. The Romans also dedicated their temples and their theatres. So also they acted with respect to their statues, palaces, and houses. — Chandler.

4—6. (4) at . . holiness,[g] R. V., to his holy name, lit. to the memorial, the sacred title by which Israel remembers God: see Ex. iii. 15. (5) moment, "relatively, the longest experience of Divine anger by the pious is momentary." favour, etc., read, His favor is lifelong, or a lifetime.[h] for a night,[i] "weeping may come in to lodge at even, but in the morning there is singing." Cam. Bib. joy, or singing. (6) prosperity, or security. never be moved, so I needed the affliction to cure me of my presumption.

Life in God's favor (vs. 5). — I. What is God's favor? 1. His goodness in the ordinary course of providence; 2. Signal acts of discriminating providence; 3. Special fruits of His distinguishing grace; 4. Manifestations of His favor to the soul. II. How is this said to be life? 1. It is the cause of life; 2. It is the object of life; 3. The rule of life; 4. The end of life. III. To whom is a "The vivid, zigzag, serpent-like, character of the forked-lightning flash is given in a few words."—Perowne.

b "During thunderstorms the antelopes flee in consternation, and the poor Bechuanas start off the morning following such a storm in quest of the young which have been cast off through horror."—Moffat's South Africa.

c "The Psalm begins with a Gloria in excelsis, and ends with a Pax in terris."—Delitzsch.

"Many men affect to despise fear, and, in preaching, resent any appeal to it; but not to fear where there is occasion is as great a weakness as to fear unduly, without reason. God planted fear in the soul as truly as He planted hope or courage. It is the soul's signal for rallying."—Beecher.

d Fr. Lat. ex, out of; tollere, to lift, take up, or raise.

e 2 Sa. vii. 1.

f "In this case the meaning would be, that while others are perishing, God has preserved the psalmist's life."—Spk. Com.

g Is. xxvi. 8; Hos. xii. 5.

h "The beauty of the antithesis is lost in the A. V. The Heb. lit. is, 'For (there is) a moment in His anger, life in His favor.'"—Jennings and Lowe.

i Lit., "In the eventide weeping takes up its abode,

God's favor life? 1. To young converts; 2. Returning backsliders; 3. In the time of affliction; 4. To dying persons. IV. The nature of this life. A life of justification, sanctification, covenant supplies and glory. V. What a fearful case are they in who have not God's favor. — Heywood.

Preparation for death. — When you lie down at night compose your spirits, as if you were not to awake till the heavens be no more. And when you awake in the morning consider that new day as your last, and live accordingly. Surely that night cometh of which you will never see the morning, or that morning of which you will never see the night; but which of your mornings or nights will be such you know not. Let the mantle of worldly enjoyments hang loose about you, that it may be easily dropped when death comes to carry you into another world. When the corn is forsaking the ground it is ready for the sickle; when the fruit is ripe it falls off the tree easily. So when a Christian's heart is truly weaned from the world, he is prepared for death, and it will be the more easy for him. A heart disengaged from the world is a heavenly one, and then we are ready for heaven when our heart is there before us. — Barton.

but at morn (there is) a shout of joy." "Just as the sun in Eastern lands, without any long prelude of twilight to announce his coming, leaps, as it were, in a moment above the horizon, so does the light of God's love dispel in a moment the long night and darkness of sorrow. See the beautiful parallel, Isa. liv. 7, 8." — Perowne.

7—12. (7) mountain, Mount Zion,[a] fig. of David himself. "Jehovah had made his kingdom strong to David, when on account of his self-confidence He made him to feel, how he is everything only through Him, and without Him absolutely nothing." — Delitzsch. hide thy face, comp. Ps. xxii. 24; xxvii. 9.[b] troubled, a strong word, indic. utmost dismay. (9) profit, gain to God. in my blood, or violent death. The living only can praise Him. dust, the body returned to its dust.[c] (10) mercy, bec. affliction reminds of sin. (11) hast turned, the thankful joy of one whose prayer is answered. dancing, the expression of a bright rejoicing heart. (12) my glory, my soul, vii. 5; lvii. 8. for ever, all my life.

a 2 Sa. v. 7-10.

b See also De. xxxi. 17; Ps. civ. 29.

Death. —

So live that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan that moves To that mysterious realm, where each shall take His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not like the quarry slave at night,
Scourged, to his dungeon; but sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams. — Bryant.

c "The truth seems to be that whilst the faith of the O. T. saints in God was strong and childlike, their hope of immortality was at best but dim and wavering." — Perowne.

PSALM THE THIRTY-FIRST.

author,—unknown

1—5. (1) ashamed, by the failure of my trust in Thee, and by the success of mine enemies.[d] in thy righteousness, in vindication and illustration of Thy righteous ways of dealing with Thy servants. (2) Bow down, incline. strong rock, or like a hill-fort unto me. for . . me, "a mountain — fortress, to help me."—Polych. Bib. (3) art my rock, then prove Thyself to be what Thou art.[e] name's sake, as my rock, and my shepherd, defend, lead, and guide; cf. Ps. xxiii: 2, 3. (4) net, perhaps hunting of Saul, or devices of Ahithophel are referred to. (5) into, etc., words sanctified by our Lord's use of them.[f] "The man of God commends to God, not his body or his bodily life alone, but the life of his spirit, which is more precious."—Perowne. commit, R. V., "commend."

A prayer offered in time of grievous affliction.

Dedicated to the chief musician or precentor.

d Ps. xxv. 2.

e "This is the illogical language of intense feeling." — Jennings and Lowe.

f Lu. xxiii. 46.

Prayer for Divine guidance (vs. 3). — Consider the petition itself. It implies — I. That he feels his need of being led; 2. A persuasion of the willingness of God to lead; 3. Faith. II. The methods by which God leads. 1. By His providence; 2. By His Word; 3. By His Spirit. III. The encouragements thus to pray.

"Into Thy hands." — This psalm sparkles all through with lamps which have lighted the steps of men in dark places. Above all, the 5th verse has given the closing words to many a life. It was one of the seven sayings on the cross, and the last — "Father, into Thy hands I commend my spirit." It was the dying word of Stephen, addressed to Christ Himself, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." It was the parting word of Luther, of Knox, of John Huss, of Jerome of Prague, of Julian Palmer, one of the noted martyrs in the reign of the English Mary, of Francis Teissier, the first martyr of the "Desert," who

"The body being only the covering of the soul, at its dissolution we shall discover the secrets of nature — the darkness shall be dispelled, and our souls irradiated with light and glory; and as now we cannot lift up our eyes towards the sun without dazzling, what shall we do when we behold the Divine light in its illustrious original?"—Seneca.

ascended the scaffold singing it, in 1686, and of countless more. "The Lord Himself gave the word, and great has been the company of those who published it." No watchword of the Captain of salvation has been taken up by so many sons whom He has led to glory through the valley of the shadow of death. — Ker.

a De. xxxii. 21.

b "Thou hast taken cognizance of the distresses of my soul."—Hupfeld and Delitzsch.

c 1 Sa. xxiii. 12.

"What if the leaves were to fall a-weeping, and say, 'It will be so painful for us to be pulled from our stalks when autumn comes.' It is hard to die when the time is not ripe. When it is, it will be easy."—Beecher.

6—8. (6) have hated, R. V., "I hate." them that regard, the worshipers of. lying vanities, false gods which cannot help their worshipers.[a] (7) considered, R. V., "seen." known,[b] with the added sense of approving, which is usual in Scripture. my . . adversities, R. V., marg. "the adversities of my soul." (8) shut, etc., delivered over to. "A truly Davidic expression.[c] large room, enabled me to act with freedom. Ps. xviii. 19.

Thou hast known my soul in adversities. — One day a person who, by the calamities of war, sickness, and other affliction, had been reduced from a state of affluence to penury, came to Gotthold in great distress. He complained that he had just met one of his former acquaintances, who was even not distantly related to him, but that he had not condescended to bow, far less to speak to him, and had turned his eyes away, and passed him as if he had been a stranger. "O sir," he exclaimed with a sigh, "how it pained me! I felt as if a dagger had pierced my heart!" Gotthold replied, "Don't think it strange at all. It is the way of the world to look high, and to pass unnoticed that which is humble and lowly. I know, however, of One who, though He dwelleth on high, humbleth Himself to behold the things that are in heaven and in the earth (Ps. cxiii. 5, 6), and of whom the royal prophet testifies: 'Thou hast known my soul in adversities.'" Yes; though we have lost our rich attire, and come to Him in rags, He still recognizes, and is not ashamed to own us. — Christian Scriver.

d Job. xx. 11.

"Not one shall fall in the march of life,
Not one shall fall in the hour of strife,
Who trusts in the Lord's right hand;
Arise and possess the land!"

9—13. (9) eye . . belly, my soul and body. My whole person. (10) grief, anguish. sighing, the expression of inward distress. faileth, lit., tatters. mine iniquity, "there was some sin wh. called for chastisement, or required the discipline of suffering." consumed,[d] comp. Ps. xxxii. 3, 4, (11) was, R. V., "am become." reproach, etc., "The reproach originated with his enemies, but was extended to, and taken up by, his neighbors; so that his acquaintance, those who ought to have known him best, became terrified." fled, as from a leper. (12) forgotten, by men, not God. broken vessel, the type of fragility and worthlessness. (13) slander, calumny.[e]

Forgotten.— A striking instance of how the greatest princes are forgotten in death is found in the deathbed of Louis XIV. "The Louis that was, lies forsaken, a mass of abhorred clay; abandoned 'to some poor persons, and priests of the Chapelle Ardente,' who make haste to put him 'in two lead coffins, pouring in abundant spirits of wine.' The new Louis with his court is rolling towards Choisy, through the summer afternoon; the royal tears still flow; but a word mispronounced by Monseigneur d'Artois sets them all laughing, and they weep no more." — Thomas Carlyle. — Rev. Gilbert Rule (vs. 13).— Mr. Rule was minister of Alnwick, in Northumberland, during a period of persecution. Being compelled to resign his charge, he went to Berwick, where, for the support of his family, he engaged in the medical profession. His enemies continuing their persecution, engaged some of the worst of men to waylay and murder him. A messenger was sent to him at midnight, to request him to visit a person in the country who was represented as very ill. The kind-hearted man expressed so much sympathy for the supposed sick person, and so readily prepared to go to his relief, that the messenger relented, and he could not forbear telling Mr. Rule the whole affair. Thus his life was spared, and God showed how easily He can bring to naught the counsel of the wicked.

e All these expressions are singularly appropriate, as describing the state of things in connection with the Absalomic revolt.

"My joy is death! Death, at whose name I oft have been afear'd, because I wish'd this world's eternity!"—Shakespeare.

14—18. (14) But, introducing the deep confidence of his heart in God, amid both his consciousness of sin and peril of life.[f] (15) My times, the various vicissitudes of my life: life's "sundry and manifold changes." (16) face to shine, Ps. iv. 6, fig. borrowed from the high priest's blessing (Nu. vi. 25).— Perowne. mercies, R. V., "loving kindness." (17) silent, etc., marg. let them be cut off for the grave. (18) lying lips, that so freely slander the King. proudly, with stiff neck. contemptuously, with high and insolent demeanor.

Our times in God's hand (vs. 15).— Consider— I. Our dependence on God. In His hands are —1. The occurrences of life; 2. The seasons of death. II.

f "Mighty strength of faith, when a man, conscious of his own sinfulness, and with a world in arms against him, yea, forsaken of his own friends, can still turn to God, and say, 'Thou art my God.'"— Perowne.

Our security in God. 1. None can destroy us before our time ; 2. None can hurt us without His permission. Learn — To seek God without delay, to serve Him without fear, to trust Him without carefulness.— C. Simeon.

Waiting the Lord's time.— When the Rev. George Whitefield was last in America, the Rev. W. Tennent paid him a visit as he was passing through New Jersey ; and one day dined with him and other ministers at a gentleman's house. After dinner Mr. Whitefield, said that he was weary with the burden of the day ; and declared the great consolation, that in a short time his work would be done, when he should depart and be with Christ. Mr. Whitefield said, "Well, Brother Tennent, you are the oldest man among us ; do you not rejoice to think that your time is so near at hand, when you will be called home?" Mr. Tennent bluntly answered, "I have no wish about it." Mr. Whitefield pressed him again. Mr. Tennent answered, "No, sir, it is no pleasure to me at all ; and if you knew your duty, it would be none to you. I have nothing to do with death ; my business is to live as long as I can, as well as I can, and to serve my Master as faithfully as I can, until He shall think proper to call me home. But now, brother, let me ask you a question. What do you think I should say, if I were to send my man into the field to plough ; and if at noon I should go to the field, and find him lounging under a tree, and complaining, 'Master, I am weary of the work you have appointed me ; let me return home, and be discharged from this hard service.' What should I say? Why, that he was a lazy fellow, and that it was his business to do the work that I had appointed him, until I should think fit to call him home."

"The world is wide
In time and tide,
And God is guide;
Then do not hurry.
That man is blest
Who does his best
And leaves the rest;
Then do not worry."
—Chas. F. Deems.

"What can harm thee, when all must first touch God, within whom thou has inclosed thyself."—R. Leighton.

" When the cloud of trouble hideth the Lord's favor, faith knoweth it may shine again, and therefore prayeth through the cloud for the dissolving of it."—David Dickson.

19—22. (19) laid up, ready in store, waiting for necessary occasions. God is never taken unawares by the distresses of His people.[a] "Can the author of this serenely joyous thanksgiving, vss. 19–24, be the despised and downcast sufferer of vss. 9–18? If so, it was surely not at the same moment. An interval has elapsed ; his prayer has been answered ; the danger is past." — Cam. Bib. (20) hide them, as Israel was hidden by the pillar cloud, shining light to them, and being dread darkness to their foes. the pride, or violent schemes. pavilion, booth, tent of boughs, sheltering from heat. (21) strong city, Zion. "The strong city is generally explained as God Himself, and His powerful and gracious protection. But why should not an actual city be meant, Ziklag namely?"— Delitzsch. (22) in my haste, when fleeing in fear. "Humbly he confesses his want of faith in the hour of trial, when he thought himself out of God's sight, and contrasts it with God's goodness." — Cam. Bib.

a " We may compare the Arabic line, 'Never be cast down, O afflicted one, for God has many mercies hidden' (in store for thee)."— Jennings and Lowe.

The goodness of God to His believing people (vss. 19, 20). — In speaking of His goodness, we shall consider it — I. In a general view. Notice — 1. That which is laid up for them ; 2. That which God has actually wrought for them. II. With a particular reference to their intercourse with the ungodly world. 1. Exceedingly bitter are those pains which men inflict upon each other by calumnies and reproaches ; 2. But against these God does provide an effectual antidote. Apply — Seek to attain the character here drawn ; let us enjoy the privileges conferred upon us. — Simeon.

vs. 22. The meaning is simply as A. V. has it; "For I said in my haste." According to Gesenius and Fürst, however, we should substitute for "haste," "fear," or "terror."

God's treasuries. —

His are the mountains, and the valleys His,
And the resplendent rivers — His t' enjoy
With a propriety that none can feel ;
But who with filial confidence, inspired,
Can lift to heaven an unpresumptuous eye,
And smiling, say, My Father made them all!
Are they not His by a peculiar right,
And by an emphasis of interest his,
Whose eyes they filled with tears of holy joy,
Whose heart with praises, and whose exalted mind
With worthy thoughts of that unwearied love
That plann'd, and built, and still upholds a world
So clothed with beauty for rebellious man. — Cowper.

"What a mercy that if we believe not, yet God abideth faithful, hearing prayer even when we are laboring under doubts which dishonor His name." Spurgeon.

23, 24. (23) O love, etc., he would have all learn fr. God's gracious ways with him. faithful, those in whom is found both trust and steadfastness. (24) hope, "hope and waiting are marks peculiar of the O. T dispensation."[b] b Ps. xxvii. 14.

Two counsels of wisdom. — I. Love the Lord. 1. Reason says "Love the Lord;" 2. Gratitude says "Love the Lord;" 3. Experience says "Love the Lord." II. Be of good courage. There are differences as to courage. 1. There is the courage of the flesh; 2. There is the courage of the mind. This is higher; 3. But noblest of all is the courage of the soul. This implies a heart that is right with God, and hence a heart that is loyal to truth and to duty, a heart that is continually being recruited with new strength, and that is ready for any fate. — Watkinson.

Strengthened. — Some time ago a young girl, belonging to a prominent family in a Southern town, was stricken with a loathsome and incurable disease. For months she bore intense agony, the mere sight of which made strong men turn pale; but whenever a moment of relief came she was hopeful, loving and gay, as if in health, eagerly seeing the villagers in whom she was interested, and saying once to her father, who had been a soldier: "When your captain ordered you to march over a bad bit of ground, you knew he had a reason for it. You did it without complaining. So will I." When at last she was laid to rest, an intelligent workingman came up to her father as he turned from her grave, and said respectfully: "Sir, there's hardly a man or woman, black or white, in this village, who has not been helped by the sight of that child's courage and faith in the Master she loved. Perhaps you don't understand why such pain was sent to her, but we do. She suffered for us." The meanest man who receives his orders to face pain and misery like a faithful soldier, may see some day how he helped to win the victory of life for the great hosts of men. — Youth's Companion.

"Certain it is that, among the poor, the approach of dissolution is usually regarded with a quiet and natural composure, which it is consolatory to contemplate, and which is as far removed from the dead palsy of unbelief as it is from the delirious raptures of fanaticism. Theirs is a true, unhesitating faith, and they are willing to lay down the burden of a weary life, in the sure and certain hope of a blessed immortality." — Southey.

PSALM THE THIRTY-SECOND.

author, — David

The second of the seven penitential Psalms. To follow Ps. LI — the confession, — this records forgiveness received.

"The lessons of the Psalm are summed up in Prov. xxviii. 13; or 1 John i. 8, 9." — Cam. Bib.

1, 2. (1) Blessed,[a] comp. Ps. i. 1. "The first beatitude of the Psalter is pronounced on an upright life; but since 'there is no man that sinneth not' (1 Ki. viii. 46) there is another beatitude reserved for true penitence." transgression, open defection fr. God's covenant.[b] sin, personal defilement. covered, and so hidden, that it is to God the Holy One as if it had not taken place. The idea of covering underlies the conception of atonement. (2) imputeth, reckoneth to a person what is not properly his (Le. vii. 18). iniquity, deviation fr. that wh. is well pleasing to God: perversity. no guile, no deceitfulness; absolute sincerity.[c]

The forgiveness of sins (vs. 1). — I. The description of those who are pronounced blessed. Not the wealthy, etc. 1. They are sinners; 2. They are pardoned sinners; 3. They are pardoned by the Lord. II. The ground of pardon. 1. The meritorious cause is the work of Christ; 2. Yet not all will be saved; faith is necessary, and also repentance, and also confession.

The Thirty-second Psalm. — As if to show that the follies of the most frivolous courts cannot shut out the thought from the occasional view of the real and deeper side of life, this psalm is said to have been a favorite with Diana of Poitiers. — Ker. — The Penitential Psalms. — When Galileo was imprisoned by the Inquisition at Rome, for asserting the Copernican system, he was enjoined, as a penance, to repeat the Seven Penitential Psalms every week for three years. This must have been intended as extorting a sort of confession from him of his guilt, and acknowledgment of the justice of his sentence; and in which there certainly was some cleverness and, indeed, humor, however adding to the iniquity (or foolishness) of the proceeding. Otherwise it is not easy to understand what idea of painfulness or punishment the good fathers could attach to a devotional exercise such as this, which, in whatever way, could only have been agreeable and consoling to their prisoner. — M. Montague.

3—5. (3) kept silence, feeling sin, but restraining repentance and confession.[d] roaring, or groaning. "Bitter struggles of conscience, with severe prostration of bodily powers."[e] (4) thy hand, etc., God's punishing hand felt in the sinner's own spirit. moisture, vital juice, dried up by inward conflicts, and hardening himself against God's humblings.[f] (5) acknowledged, or made confessions, after Nathan's visit, and found peace. thou forgavest, God ever graciously responds to the humble and penitent soul.[g]

Confession and forgiveness (vs. 5). — From this we gather — I. That the condition of forgiveness is confession. II. That confession must be made to a Matt. v. 3-11; Ro. iv. 7.

b "Sin is called transgression, as being a breaking loose or tearing away fr. God." — Delitzsch.

c "The forgiveness of God must be based on sincerity on the part of the forgiven." — Jennings and Lowe.

d "Reference is made to the year during wh. Dav. had cherished his sin, without confessing his guilt. 2 Sa. xii. 1-5." — Wordsworth.

e Ps. vi. 2 cii. 5.

f "In the summer-heat of anxiety his vital moisture underwent a change; it burned and dried up." — Delitzsch.

g "This accords exactly with the God and not to man. III. Confession to God secures forgiveness with, as the context shows, increase of grace and holiness. Apply:— Cease from man whose breath, etc. Let us go with boldness to the throne of grace.— Analyst.

The drought of summer (vs. 4).— The fields of Canaan are refreshed with frequent and copious rains, while some of the neighboring countries are scarcely ever moistened with a shower. In the winter months the rain falls indiscriminately, but seldom in the summer. Soon after the heats commence, the grass withers, the flower fades, every green thing is dried up by the roots, and the fields, so lately clothed with the richest verdure, and adorned with the loveliest flowers, are converted into a brown and arid wilderness. To the uniform withered appearance of the field during the reign of an Eastern summer, and not to any particular year of drought, the Psalmist refers in these plaintive terms: "My moisture is turned into the drought of summer." When conviction slept, and conscience was silent, the soul of David resembled a field refreshed by the genial showers of heaven; but the moment God in anger entered into judgment with him, and set his sins in order before his face, his courage failed, his beauty was turned into corruption, and his strength into weakness; "the commandment came, sin revived and he died."— Paxton.

narrative. Nathan asks no more from the king, and at once declares his pardon. 2 Sa xii. 13."—Spk. Com.

"If God striketh those so sore whom he favoreth, how sharply and sore will he strike them whom he favoreth not."—Gregory.

6, 7. (6) shall every one, R. V., "let every one." in a time,[a] lit. of finding or a time of acceptance, ere his humblings pass into overwhelming judgments, floods, etc., the fig. of affliction (Ps. lxix. 1, 2). (7) Thou . . place, Adam fled from God to hide, but Dav. flees to hide in Him. compass, give me songs wherever I may go.[b]

Him.—Zenon hearing news he had lost all by sea, said, only thus, "Thou hast done very well, Fortune, to leave me nothing but my cloak." Another, called Anaxarchus, when as Nicocreon the tyrant commanded he should be beaten to death in a mortar, spake thus to the executioner, "Beat and bray as long as thou wilt Anaxarchus, his bag or satchel (so he called his own body), but Anaxarchus thou canst not touch." Yet these, making so small reckoning of their goods and body, set their mind notwithstanding at a high rate. The mind of a man is himself, say they. Hence it is that Julius Cæsar, when Amyclas, the pilot, was greatly afraid of the tempest, spake to him thus: "What meanest thou to fear, base fellow? dost thou not know thou carriest Cæsar with thee?" As if he should say, Cæsar's body may well be drowned, as any other man's may; but his mind, his magnanimity, his valor, his fortitude, can never be drowned. Thus far went philosophy; but divinity goeth a degree further. For philosophy defineth him, that is, a man, by his reason, and the moral virtues of the mind; but divinity defineth a Christian man by his faith, and his conjunction thereby with Christ. Excellently saith Saint Austin: "Whence comes it that the soul dieth? Because faith is not in it. Whence that the body dieth? Because a soul is not in it. Therefore the soul of thy soul is faith." So that if we would know what is a faithful man, we must define him, not by his natural soul, as he is reasonable, but by the soul of his soul, which is his faith. And then we easily answer the objection, that a flood may come near a faithful man's goods, near his body, near his reasonable soul; but to his faith, that is, to HIM, it can never come near. — Thomas Playfere.

[a] "At the time of visitation."—Kay.

[b] Ps. v. 12.

"He who seeks Jehovah when He may be found, shall not be swept away when His judgments are let loose like a flood of waters upon the earth."—Perowne.

"Remarkable answers to prayer very much quicken the prayerfulness of other godly persons. Where one man finds a golden nugget others feel inclined to dig."—Spurgeon.

"The floods shall come, and the waves shall rage, and toss themselves like Atlantic billows; whirlpools and waterspouts shall be on every hand, but the praying man shall be at a safe distance, most surely secured from every ill."—Spurgeon.

8—11. (8) I, i. e. Jehovah. guide . . eye, or "my eye being upon thee."[c] (9) mule, (2 Sa. xiii. 29). lest, etc., better rendered, "or it will not come nigh thee" to obey thee.[d] (10) sorrows, as Divine punishment. (11) Be glad, etc., comp. Ps. xxxi. 24.

The advantages of religion (vs. 10). — I. The sorrows of the wicked. 1. Who are the wicked? 2. What are their sorrows? II. The advantages of believers. 1. Who are believers? Their trust in God is enlightened, not presumptuous; heartfelt, not hypocritical; active, not indolent; evangelical, not legal; 2. What are their advantages? They are the objects of Divine mercy. It environs, it defends them. — G. Brook.

Mercy. — "Mark that text," said Richard Adkins to his grandson Abel, who was reading to him the thirty-second Psalm. "Mark that text, 'He that trusteth in the Lord, mercy shall compass him about.' I read it in my youth and believed it; and now I read it in my old age, thank God, I know it to be true. Oh! it is a blessed thing in the midst of the joys and sorrows of the world, Abel, to trust in the Lord." — Christian Treasury. — Rejoice. — When

[c] "The guidance with the eye is a gentle guidance. A look is enough, as opposed to that bit and bridle which the mulish nature requires."—Perowne.

[d] "Whose adornment is in bit and bridle (not as man's ornament), which is in the graciousness of a pliant and ready will. The sense has been happily expressed by Horace: 'A horse's ear is in his bitted mouth.' "—Wordsworth.

"Except the eye of God can be put out, we cannot be put out of His sight and His care." — John Donne.

author, — unknown: composed after the captivity

Subject is, — The God who rules the world is also the defender of His people.

a Fr. A. S. cymlic, suitable, fit.

b Ps. cxlvii. 1.

c "There is no distinct personification of the word, but a preparatory stage in the development of that fundamental truth of Christianity is traceable in this Psalm." — Spk. Com.

"God writes with a pen that never blots, speaks with a tongue that never slips, acts with a hand that never fails. Bless His name." — Spurgeon.

"The expression describes the convex surface of the ocean apparently overhanging the plains, but it undoubtedly includes a reference to Ex. xv. 8; Jos. iii. 13-16."—Spk. Com.

d Ps. civ 24; Is. vi. 3; xl. 9; Ha. iii. 3.

"For who can doubt that God can do as He wills upon earth, since he so tamed the unconquerable nature of the sea?"—Hugo Grotius.

"A similar grand description occurs in the Hindu mythology, as the following quotation from the Upanishad will show: — 'In the the poet Carpani inquired of his friend Haydn, how it happened that his church music was always so cheerful, the great composer made a most beautiful reply. "I cannot," he said, "make it otherwise; I write according to the thoughts I feel: when I think upon God, my heart is so full of joy that the notes dance and leap, as it were, from my pen; and since God has given me a cheerful heart, it will be pardoned me that I serve Him with a cheerful spirit." — Whitecross.

PSALM THE THIRTY-THIRD.

1—4. (1) Rejoice, shout for joy. for, R. V. omits. praise is comely,[a] words and mode of expression belonging to the later times after the exile.[b] (2) Praise, R. V., "Give thanks unto." harp, only two instruments are mentioned in this vs. the psaltery, played with the fingers, and the harp, an instrument played on with a plectrum. sing, R. V., "sing praises . . . psaltery of ten strings." (3) new song, "an expression especially characteristic of the later compositions." A new song is one springing freshly from a thankful heart. loud noise, accompaniments of trumpets and cymbals. (4) word,[c] all revelations of God's will. works are, R. V., "work is done in faithfulness."

True worship. — I. The worship of God is the chief joy of the good. II. The worship of God is the highest duty of the good. 1. It is agreeable to their character. 2. It is agreeable to their obligations. 3. It is agreeable to their circumstances. III. The worship of God is the noblest employment of the good. The worship of God in song combines — 1. Unity and variety. 2. Sameness and freshness. 3. Devotion and art. 4. Fellowship and individuality. — Watkinson.

Power of music. — Napoleon's army came to a pass in the Alps where the rocks could not be surmounted by the ammunition wagons. He went to the leader of the band, and asked for his portfolio. Then, turning over until he came to an inspiring march, he said, "Play that." The whole band struck the air with their instruments; and over the rocks went the ammunition wagons. While Dr. Kane was in the Arctic regions, ice-bound, his men were kept from despair, and probably mutiny, by one of their number playing on an old violin. — R. West.

All His works are done in truth. —

Truth is in each flower
As well as in the solemnest things of God:
Truth is the voice of nature and of time —
Truth is the startling monitor within us —
Naught is without it, it comes from the stars,
The golden sun and every breeze that blows — Truth, it is God! and God is everywhere! — W. T. Bacon.

5—9. (5) righteousness, the principle. judgment, the manifestation or expression. Reference is to righteousness in God, not in man. goodness,[d] R. V., "loving kindness." (6) heavens made, Ge. i. 6; ii. 1; Ps. cxlviii. 5. host, term combining the two ideas of multitude and order. breath, word of the Lord. (7) heap, "a fig. suggested by the appearance of the waves of the sea." the depth, R. V., "the deeps." (8) in awe, of His sublime power. (9) stood fast, i. e. it was as God commanded, Ge. i. 3.

Praise. — A fourfold argument for praise, from the truth, the faithfulness, the justice, and goodness of God. I. "For the word of the Lord is right. II. "All His works are done in truth." III. "He loveth righteousness and judgments." IV. "The earth is full of His goodness." — Adam Clarke.

The waters of the sea. — Of all objects that I have ever seen, there is none which affects my imagination so much as the sea or ocean. I cannot see the heavings of this prodigious bulk of waters, even in a calm, without a very pleasing astonishment; but when it is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horror that rises from such a prospect. A troubled ocean, to a man who sails upon it, is, I think, the biggest object that he can see in motion, and consequently gives his imagination one of the highest kinds of pleasures that can arise from greatness. I must confess it is impossible for me to survey this world of fluid matter without thinking on the Hand that first poured it out, and made a proper channel for its reception. Such an object naturally raises in my thoughts the idea of an Almighty Being, and convinces me of His existence as much as a metaphysical demonstration. The imagination prompts the understanding, and by the greatness of the sensible object, produces in it the idea of a Being who is neither circumscribed by time nor space. — Spectator.

10—12. (10) bringeth, etc. God is in all creation: He is also in Providence. devices, self-willed plannings.[a] (11) counsel, Pr. xix. 21. (12) Blessed, etc., comp. De. xxxiii. 29.

J. Knox (vs. 10).—This celebrated Scotch reformer had many surprising escapes from the malicious designs of his enemies. He was accustomed to sit at the table in his own house, with his back to the window; on one particular evening, however, he would neither himself sit in his chair, nor allow any one else to do so. That very night a bullet was shot in at the window purposely to kill him; it grazed the chair in which he usually sat, and made a hole in the foot of the candlestick. — The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought.— The more the Pharisees of old, and their successors the prelates of late, opposed the truth, the more it prevailed. The Reformation in Germany was much furthered by the Papists' opposition; yea, when two kings (amongst many others), wrote against Luther, namely, Henry VIII. of England, and Ludovicus of Hungary, this kingly title being entered into the controversy (making men more curious to examine the matter), stirred up a general inclination towards Luther's opinions. — Richard Younge.

13—15. (13) looketh, with minute and careful inspection. (14) place . . habitation, not described, but conceived as giving Him vantage-ground for His observations. (15) alike, R. V., "He th. fashioneth the hearts of them all, th. considereth," etc.[b]

The Lord looks upon us (vs. 13).— I. Perhaps no figure of speech represents God in a more gracious light that when He is spoken of as looking upon us. II. How can we but love Him when we know that He marks our path and orders our ways? III. He regards the poorest of His saints to show Himself strong on behalf of those who fear Him.— C. H. Spurgeon.

Legh Richmond's son. — For the encouragement of young persons, mention might be made of Wilberforce Richmond, an interesting and pious son of Legh Richmond, who died early, and who could say, "There is not a Psalm I have not turned into a prayer." The same has been done by some who were familiar with the original Hebrew of the book. Thus the Rev. David Brown, a devout English clergyman, accustomed himself to use them in that language as the medium of his most private and earnest devotion, whether of contrition, supplication, or praise. In all affliction and in all rejoicing, he alike called upon God in the language of David.

16, 17. (16) saved, in battle. It is characteristic of the true Israelite that he looks to God's deliverance and defense, sees behind all second causes.[c] (17) horse, much esteemed by the surrounding nations for war purposes.[d]

Groundless trust. — As a passenger in a storm, that for shelter against the weather, steppeth out of the way, betaketh him to a fair spread oak, standeth under the bows, with his back close to the body of it, and findeth good relief thereby for the space of some time; till at length cometh a sudden gust of wind, that teareth down a main arm of it, which falling upon the poor passenger, either maimeth or mischieveth him that resorted to it for succor. Thus falleth it out with not a few, meeting in the world with many troubles, and with manifold vexations, they step aside out of their own way, and too, too often out of God's, to get under the wing of some great one, and gain, it may be, some aid and shelter thereby for a season; but after awhile, that great one himself coming down headlong, and falling from his former height of favor, or honor, they are also called in question, and to fall together with him, that might otherwise have stood long enough on their own legs, if they had not trusted to such an arm of flesh, such a broken staff that deceived them. — Thomas Gataker.

18—22. (18) the eye, etc., Job xxxvi. 7. (19) soul, or life. famine, the common calamity of the East. (20) shield, or defense. (21) rejoice . . trusted, faith bringing present peace. (22) according as we hope, responsive to our attitude towards Thee.[e] beginning was self alone; there was nothing else. He thought, Let Me create the worlds and He created these worlds.'" a Ja. i. 13-15.

"The wheels in a watch or a clock move contrary one to another, some one way, some another, yet all serve the intent of the workman, to show the time, or to make the clock strike. So in the world, the providence of God may seem to run cross to his promises; one man takes this way, another runs that way; good men go one way, wicked men another, yet all in conclusion accomplish the will, and center in the purpose of God the great Creator of all things."—Richard Sibbes.

b "He at once moldeth their hearts, and understandeth all their wants."—Hupfeld. The deepest self-abasement often accompanies the fullest assurance of faith.

"True faith does not require you to see your name written in the book of life; it is sufficient for you to close with God on the ground of His sure word of promise."

c "The delusiveness of material resources is contrasted with Jehovah's care for His people."—Cam. B.

d "The king, mighty man (or warrior), and war-horse, are selected as types of earthly power in all its greatness."—Perowne.

"Do not speak of hindrances to keep you from Christ; the chief hindrance arises from yourself. To try to hide your sin from God is the greatest sin of all."

e "Our faith measures mercy (Matt. ix. 29), and if of grace, it is no more of debt (Ro. xi. 6.)" — Fausset.

"Two men give to the poor, one seeketh his reward in heaven, the other the praise of men. Thou in two seest one thing, God understandeth what is within. 'He understandeth all their works.'"—Augustine

"In our present imperfect state there is seldom or never true faith without some admixture of unbelief, any more than there can be a new man without the remains of the old one."

author, — unknown

An alphabetical Psalm. Subject, the reflections of a delivered one.

a 1 Sa. ii. 1; Ps. xliv. 8; Je. ix. 24; Lu. i. 46.

"Sorrow is knowledge."—Byron.

"Six wings he wore, to shade his lineaments divine; the pair that clad each shoulder broad, came mantling o'er his breast with regal ornament; the middle pair girt, like a starry zone, his waist, and round skirted his loins and thighs with downy gold and colors dipped in heaven; the third his feet shadow'd from either heel with feather'd mail, sky-tinctured grain."—Milton.

b Types of the cruel and violent, Ps. xxxv. 17; Job iv. 9-11.

"Just as the stem which is full of sap throws out many branches, so the believer who is full of a spirit of praise will give vent to it in many different forms."—P. B. Power.

"While a man rests in any degree

Waiting for the Lord includes; I. Conviction — a persuasion that the Lord is the supreme good. II. Desire — it is expressed by hungering and thirsting after righteousness, etc. III. Hope. IV. Patience — God is never slack concerning His promise. — William Jay.

Trust. — There is an excellent story of a young man that was at sea in a mighty raging tempest; and when all the passengers were at their wits' end for fear, he only was merry; and when he was asked the reason of his mirth, he answered, "That the pilot of the ship was his father, and he knew his father would have a care of him." The great and wise God, who is our Father, hath from all eternity decreed what shall be the issue of all wars, what the event of all troubles; He is our pilot, He sits at the stern; and though the ship of the church or state be in a sinking condition, yet be of good comfort, our Pilot will have a care of us. There is nothing done in the lower house of Parliament on earth, but what is first decreed in the higher house in heaven. All the lesser wheels are ordered and overruled by the upper. Are not five sparrows, saith Christ, sold for a farthing? One sparrow is not worth half a farthing. And there's no man shall have half a farthing's worth of harm more than God hath decreed from all eternity. — Edmund Calamy.

PSALM THE THIRTY-FOURTH.

1—5. (1) at all times, whensoever opportunity is offered. (2) boast, the Heb. implies grateful exultation.[a] humble, R. V., "meek," in sense of those submitting patiently to affliction. (3) magnify, ascribe glory to. (4) heard, R. V., "answered." (5) lightened, or brightened, by the uplifting on them of the shining of His countenance. ashamed, R. V., "shall never be confounded."

A song of praise. — We should praise God — I. For what He is in Himself. This praise is — 1. Free; 2. Constant; 3. Exulting; 4. Influential; 5. Social. II. For what He does for His people. 1. Personal deliverance; 2. Brighter days for the afflicted; 3. Divine guardianship for the godly to the end. — Watkinson.

Looking at God. — The more we can think upon our Lord, and the less upon ourselves, the better. Looking to Him, as He is seated upon the right hand of the throne of God, will keep our heads, and especially our hearts, steady when going through the deep waters of affliction. Often have I thought of this when crossing the water opposite the old place of Langholm. I found, when I looked down on the water, I got dizzy; I therefore fixed my eyes upon a steady object on the other side, and got comfortably through. — David Smith. — Prayer. — In prayer the perfections of God, and especially His mercies in our redemption, should occupy our thoughts as much as our sins, our obligations to Him as much as our departures from Him. We should keep up in our hearts a constant sense of our own weakness, not with a design to discourage the mind and depress the spirits, but with a view to drive us out of ourselves in search of the Divine assistance. — Hannah More.

6—10. (6) This poor man, a personal testimony, designed to encourage others. (7) The angel, "that mysterious Being who appears as Jehovah's representative in His intercourse with man, called also the angel of His presence (Is. lxiii. 9). He protects those who fear Jehovah like an army encamping round a city to defend it (Zech. ix. 8); or perhaps, since he is 'the captain of Jehovah's host' (Josh. v. 14), he is to be thought of as surrounding them with the angelic legions at his command." — Cam. Bib. (8) taste, gain a personal experience. (9) no want, many fancied wants there may be, but no real wants. (10) young lions,[b] not cubs, but lions in full vigor of life and energy.

Taste and see. — The testimony of experience. I. Personal experience alone can establish the truths of the Scriptures. II. This experience is within the reach of all. III. It is unreasonable to pass judgment upon it without this experience. IV. This experience brings great blessedness. — M. A. Breed.

Columba. — Part of his last afternoon was spent by Columba in transcribing the Psalms of David. Having come to that passage in the thirty-fourth Psalm, where it is said, "They that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing," he said, "I have come to the end of a page, and I will stop here, for the following verse, 'Come, ye children, hearken unto me: I will teach you the fear of the Lord,' will better suit my successor to transcribe than me. I will leave it, therefore, to Baithen." As usual, the bell was rung at midnight for prayers. Columba was the first to hasten to church. On entering it soon after, Dermid found him on his knees in prayer, but evidently dying. Raising him up in his arms, he supported his head on his bosom. The brethren now entered. When they saw Columba in this dying condition they wept aloud. Columba heard them. He opened his eyes and attempted to speak, but his voice failed. He lifted up his hands as if to bless them, immediately after which he breathed out his spirit. His countenance retained in death the expression it wore in life, so that it seemed as if he had only fallen asleep.—Christian Treasury.— Round about. — In illustration of this it may be observed, that according to D'Arvieux, it is the practice of the Arabs to pitch their tents in a circular form; the prince being in the middle, and the Arabs about him, but so as to leave a respectful distance between them. And Thevenot, describing a Turkish encampment near Cairo, having particularly noticed the spaciousness, decorations and conveniences of the Bashaw's tent, or pavilion adds, "Round the pale of his tent, within a pistol shot, were above two hundred tents, pitched in such a manner that the doors of them all looked towards the Bashaw's tent, and it ever is so, that they may have their eye always upon their master's lodging, and be in readiness to assist him if he be attacked."—Richard Mant.

11—14. (11) children, the audience of adults may be thus affectionately addressed.[a] the fear, or the first principle of the fear. (12) loveth . . days, wishes to have a long and prosperous life. The great desire of O. T. saints. (13) tongue, that most unruly member.[b] (14) pursue it, follow after it with great exertion and eagerness.

The use and abuse of the tongue. — We have here — I. A wonderful gift referred to — speech. 1. It is singular. Man distinct from dumb creation: 2. It is useful; 3. It is powerful. Mary of Scotland feared the tongue of Knox more than an army of 10,000 men. II. A gift that is often abused. 1. Profane swearing; 2. Indecent language: 3. Boastful and idle words; 4. Falsehood. III. A gift that requires the help of the Giver in order that we may use it well. 1. He helps by giving His Holy Spirit to cleanse the heart: 2. He helps by the laws he imposes; 3. He helps by the good things He gives us; 4. He helps in answer to prayer.

Master Terry. — Master Terry was a child who read many good books and thought very seriously, and spent a large portion of his time in walking and pondering by himself. He was seldom found without some good book or other in his pocket, even when he was but little above five years old. He was constant in his retirement for secret prayer. But that which deserves particular remark, was a concern which this young child had, some time before he died, for the spiritual welfare of an aged faithful servant, who had been above forty years in the family, and who, by weakness, was confined to her chamber, having passed the seventieth year of her age. This little child, when not eight years old, would take delight to be with her; of his own accord he would talk to her of the things of God, and pray with her; in which, as that servant said, he would deliver himself pertinently, and in such an affecting manner, as to surprise his friends. He continued thus till she died, and was thereby no small help and comfort to the poor servant. Thus out of the mouths of babes and sucklings God perfects praise. He died in the tenth year of his age.

15—18. (15) eyes, etc., comp. Job xxxvi. 7.[c] upon, R. V., "toward." (16) face . . against, the Heb. pânîm is the face of anger. remembrance, by depriving them of posterity.[d] (17) cry, heareth, delivereth, R. V., uses past tense. (18) nigh, in merciful tenderness, as a gracious healer. broken heart, "those in whom the egotistical, i. e. self-loving life, is broken at the very root."[e] contrite, or crushed. "Those whom grievous experiences have subdued and humbled."

God's care. — A mother had been trying to soothe to sleep her sick boy, and the following conversation took place: "Oh, what if we should both fall asleep, and dear baby alone up in your room?" "Well, I intend to sleep, and I intend that you should sleep too. If baby does wake up, I'll hear her first cry." "Would you? How is that? How do you hear so quickly?"

on his own merits for acceptance with God, it is of little consequence whether he be a pagan idolator or a proud, ignorant Pharisee, both go about to establish their own righteousness; neither submits to the righteousness of God, and I know not which of the two is more distant from the kingdom of God."—J. Milner.

"Heaven and earth are replete with the goodness of God. We omit to open our mouths and eyes, on which account the psalmist desires us to 'taste' and 'see.'"—A. F. Tholuck.

Testimony of the redeemed

a 1 John ii. 28, etc.

b Ps. xv. 2, 3; Pr. iv. 24; Jas. iii. 2.

"The benefit of life is not in the length, but in the use of it. He sometimes lives the least that lives the longest."—Seneca.

"Go away from it. Not merely take your hands off, but yourself off. Live not near the pesthouse. Avoid the lion's lair, leave the viper's nest. Set a distance between yourself and temptation."—Spurgeon.

"On every Mohammedan tombstone the inscription begins with the words, 'He remains.' This applies to God, and gives sweet comfort to the bereaved. Friends may die, fortune fly away, but God endures — He remains."—Perrine.

c See also 1 Pe. iii. 12.

d "The dread that, together with a man's posterity his name and memory should utterly perish, is especially characteristic of the Semitic races. See Job xviii. 17; xxxi. 8; Ps. xxi. 10; civ. 13."—Spk. Com.

e Ps. li. 17; Isa. lvii. 15.

"Though the mariner sees not the pole-star, yet the needle of the compass which points to it tells him which way he sails. Thus the heart that is touched with the lodestone of Divine love, looking towards God by fixed believing, tells the soul that its course is heavenward, towards the haven of eternal rest."—Leighton.

"Well, dear, I think that verse helps us to know about it, 'His ear is ever open to their cry.' I feel that my ear is very open to my baby's cry. God made the mother's heart and the mother's ear, and 'He who made the ear, shall He not hear?' Doesn't this help us to know that His ear must be very open to His children's 'cry? Think often about this, dear boy, when you are left alone and in pain."—Anec. Illus. of O. T. Texts.—Afflictions of the righteous.—God, who is infinite in wisdom, and matchless in goodness, hath ordered troubles, yea, many troubles, to come trooping in upon us on every side. As our mercies, so our crosses seldom come single; they usually come treading one upon the heels of another. They are like April showers—no sooner is one over, but another comes. And yet, Christians, it is mercy, it is rich mercy, that every affliction is not an execution, that every correction is not damnation. The higher the waters rose, the nearer Noah's ark was lifted up to heaven; the more thy afflictions are increased, the more thy heart shall be raised heavenward.—T. Brooks.

19—22. (19) Many, etc., no exception for evil promised to the righteous. (20) all his bones, simple fig. of protection fr. any serious injury.[a] (21) Evil shall slay, the natural result of evil is to bring about the destruction of the evil-doer. desolate, i. e. condemned, deemed guilty. (22) none . . desolate, or left under condemnation.

Consolation (vs. 19).—I. The peculiar affliction of God's people. 1. Internal—temptations, doubts, fears; 2. External—misrepresentation, persecution. II. Their deliverance. 1. Consolation in trial: 2. Compensation for loss.—W. W. Whythe.

God's care.—One of the poor members of the flock of Christ was reduced to circumstances of the greatest poverty in his old age, and yet he never murmured. "You must be badly off," said a kind-hearted neighbor to him one day as they met upon the road, "you must be badly off; and I don't know how an old man like you can maintain yourself and your wife; yet you are always cheerful!" "Oh, no!" he replied, "we are not badly off. I have a rich Father, and He does not suffer me to want." "What! your father not dead yet? he must be very old indeed!" "Oh!" said he, "my Father never dies, and He always takes care of me!" This aged Christian was a daily pensioner on the providence of his God. His struggles and his poverty were known to all; but his own declaration was that he never wanted what was absolutely necessary. When old age benumbed the hand of his industry, the Lord extended to him the hand of charity. With David he could rely on his Shepherd's care, and say, "I shall not want;" and as certainly as he trusted in God, so surely, in some unexpected manner was his necessity supplied.—John Stevenson.

[a] Some think there may be prophetic reference to our Saviour's crucifiction. Jas. xix. 32-36.

"The greatest pain to the troubled soul is not to be sure of the hearing of his prayers. Whoever does not give up God, even when his trouble of body and pain of soul has advanced to the highest point, soon has the experience that God has not forsaken him."—Lange.

PSALM THE THIRTY-FIFTH.

author,—prob. David

A cry to God as a champion against ungrateful persecutors.

1—4. (1) Plead my cause, R. V., "Strive thou, O Lord." An expression suitable to judicial proceedings. that strive, or my adversaries. fight, the speaker being a warrior, conceives of God's help in ways familiar to his own mind.[b] (2) Take . . buckler, as a man of war.[c] (3) stop the way, stand in it to keep my enemies from reaching me.[d] persecute, R. V., "pursue." (4) Let, etc., comp. v. 26; Ps. xl. 14, 15; lxx. 2, 3. confounded, R. V., "ashamed." put . . shame, R. V., "brought to dishonor."

God's help.—Before the enemy comes to close quarters the Lord can push them off as with a long spear. To stave off trouble is no mean act of loving kindness. As when some valiant warrior with his lance blocks up a defile, and keeps back a host until his weaker brethren have made good their escape, so does the Lord often hold the believer's foes at bay until the good man has taken breath, or clean fled from his foes. He often gives the foes of Zion some other work to do, and so gives rest to his church. What a glorious idea is this of Jehovah blocking the way of persecutors, holding them at the pike's end, and giving time for the hunted saint to elude their pursuit!—Spurgeon.

5—9. (5) as chaff, Job xxi. 18. chase,[e] "the angel of Jehovah thrusting them down."—Cam. Bib. (6) dark, etc., "darkness and utter slipperiness." persecute, better, "pursue." (7) pit . . digged, lit. their netted pit; or pit furnished with a net.[f] (8) at unawares, suddenly, when unprepared. (9) joyful, bec. of overthrow of these persecutors.

[b] Lit. "devour by devourers."—Fausset.

[c] Comp. Ex. xv. 3; De. xxxii. 41.

[d] "The word rendered stop may mean a battle-axe."—Spk. Com.

[e] "It is the angel who took off Pharaoh's chariot wheels, so that they drove them heavily, that is intended here."—Delitzsch.

[f] "A common metaphor, borrowed

Retribution. — By giving Ahithophel rope enough, the Lord preserved David from perishing. Who will not admire that Goliath should be slain with his own sword, and that proud Haman should hold Mordecai's stirrup, and be the herald of his honor? The wicked shall be undone by their own doings; all the arrows that they shoot at the righteous shall fall upon their own pates. Maxentius built a false bridge to drown Constantine, but was drowned himself. Henry the Third of France was stabbed in the very same chamber where he had helped to contrive the cruel massacre of the French Protestants. And his brother, Charles the Ninth, who delighted in the blood of the saints, had blood given him to drink, for he was worthy. It is usual with God to take persecutors in the snares and pits that they have laid for His people, as many thousands in this nation have experienced: and though Rome and her confederates are this day a-laying of snares and traps and a-digging of pits for the righteous, who will rather burn than bow to their Baal, yet do but wait and weep, and weep and wait a little, and you shall see that the Lord will take them in the very snares and pits that they have laid and digged for His people. — Thomas Brooks.

10—14. (10) All my bones,[a] every part of me. poor, afflicted. (11) False witnesses, or witnesses of injustice and cruelty.[b] (12) spoiling of my soul, lit. bereavement to my soul.[c] His wife Michal and his friend Jonathan were severed fr. him: and he felt friendless and alone. (13) sick . . sackcloth, the Psalmist indicates his ready and hearty sympathy with others. prayer returned, "perhaps to be explained by the attitude of earnest prayer, the head bowed, so th. the prayer wh. came fr. his heart seemed to return thither again."[d] 1 Ki. xviii. 42. (14) mourneth, with usual signs of Oriental grief.

Behaving as a friend. — This implies: I. Kind consideration. II. Generous sympathy. III. Self-denying service. IV. Constancy in love and devotion. — Watkinson.

Friendship. — A Moravian missionary sold himself to slavery, that he might win the love and trust of the slaves. The appeals of others they might scorn, but their hearts were opened to the man who had thus proved himself their friend. — Watkinson. — Kindness to the sick. — A few years ago, a number of boys, who had been taught in a Sabbath school near Sheffield, met in a field, and instead of spending their money in oranges, on what is called Shrove Tuesday, they agreed to give all they had to their teacher, who they knew was in great distress. They tied up the money in an old cloth, and when it was dark they opened his door and threw it into the house. Inside of the parcel was a small piece of paper, on which was written, "Trust in the Lord, and do good, and verily thou shalt be fed." — For his mother. — On account of the plurality of wives in in an Eastern household, the sons are usually far more attached to their mother than their father. Their father they share with a numerous band of half-brothers, who are envious of them, or of whom they are jealous, but their mother is all their own; with her they are brought up in childhood; she takes their part in youth, in the numerous battles of the harem; and on their part when they are grown up, they love her intensely, and hence their mourning at her decease is of the bitterest kind. — Spurgeon.

True love. —

Love is not love
Which alters when it alteration finds;
Or bends with the remover to remove.
Oh no! it is an ever fixed mark,
That looks on tempests, and is never shaken;
It is the star of every wandering bark,
Whose worth's unknown, although his height be taken.
— Shakespeare.

15—18. (15) mine adversity, R. V., "when I halted," strongly contrasting his ways toward them, and theirs toward him. abjects,[e] despicable ones; worthless ones; slanderers. I knew it not, or "whom I knew not:" persons beneath my notice. (16) hypocritical mockers, lit. men who make profane jests for the sake of a cake;[f] "vile, backbiting parasites." (17) my darling, Heb. "my only one,"[g] i. e. my precious life. (18) much people, another phrase for "the great congregation."

Slander. — It is such dainty work to tear to pieces a good man's character, a "Regarded, in Heb. physiology, as the seat of the most acute sensations, whether of pain or of pleasure."—Spk. Com.

b "The Psalmist laments the injustice and ingratitude of his adversaries. Comp. Saul's own admission, 1 Sa. xxiv. 18." — Jennings and Lowe.

c "I who have ever sought to help the friendless and comfort the afflicted, and who prayed so earnestly for others, am forsaken of all."—Perowne.

d Matt. x 13; Lu. x. 6.

"Mahomet was once asked what relation had the strongest claim upon our affection and respect; when he instantly replied, "The mother, the mother, the mother." — Spurgeon.

e Fr. Latin abjectus, part of abjicere, to throw away.

f "Hangers on at the tables of the rich, who, by witticism and buffoonery, made entertainment for the guests, and received their dinner in return." — Gesenius.

g Ps. xxii. 20.

from the artifice employed for taking wild beasts. Pit, lightly covered over, in wh. is concealed a net." — Perowne.

"Fair warfare belongs to honorable men, but the assailants of God's church prefer mean, ungenerous schemes, and so prove their nature and their origin. We must all of us be on our guard, for gins and pitfalls are still the favorite weapons of the powers of evil." — Spurgeon.

A colored Presbyterian deacon was in the habit of shutting his eyes while he sang with great unction, "Fly abroad, thou mighty gospel!" and not seeing the contribution-plate, "Oh, yes!" said the plate-bearer; "but you just give something to make it fly."

that when slanderers have their hand in they are loth to leave off. A pack of dogs tearing their prey is nothing compared with a set of malicious gossips mauling the reputation of a worthy man. That lovers of the gospel are not at this time rent and torn as in the old days of Mary, is to be attributed to the providence of God rather than to the gentleness of men.— Spurgeon.— Providence.— The entrance of Frederick William Robertson into the ministry came about by the barking of a dog. Lady Trench resided next door to Captain Robertson; she had a daughter seriously ill; the young lady was prevented from sleeping by the barking of Captain Robertson's dog. The families were strangers to each other; but Lady Trench wrote to beg that the dog might be removed; the dog was not only removed, but in so kind and acquiescent a manner that Lady Trench called to express her thanks. She was so much struck with the bearing of the eldest son, that an intimacy sprang up between the families, which resulted in the introduction of young Robertson to some of Lady Trench's clerical friends; one of them, Mr. Daly, now Bishop of Cashel, was no sooner introduced than he struck at the question, whether it were definitely fixed that he should go into the army; the impression of his unaffected piety convincing Mr. Daly that he ought to be in the church. "If," says Frederick Robertson, in one of his papers, "I had not met a certain person, I should not have changed my profession; if I had not known a certain lady, I should not probably have met this person; if that lady had not had a delicate daughter who was disturbed by the barking of my dog; if my dog had not barked that night, I should now have been in the dragoons, or fertilizing the soil of India. Who can say that these things were not ordered, and that, apparently, the merest trifles did not produce failure and a marred existence?"— Paxton Hood.

"It matters not at what hour of the day the righteous fall asleep; death cannot come to him untimely who is fit to die; the less of this cold world, the more of heaven; the briefer life, the earlier immortality."— Milman.

19—23. (19) wrongfully, without any adequate or just cause. wink,[a] see Pr. vi. 13; x. 10. hate . . cause, our Lord refers to these words as "fulfilled" in Himself. Jo. xv. 25. (20) quiet, but for their interruptions. And loving quiet. (21) mouth wide, in scornful laughter: represented by Aha, aha. eye hath seen, i. e. its desire, the fall of this righteous man. (22) thou hast seen, God knoweth us altogether, and this for us is the beginning of rest. (23) Stir up thyself, the earnest language of the importunate man.

The causeless hater.— I. His character. He is described as — 1. False; 2. Spiteful; 3. Turbulent; 4. Adding insult to injury; 5. Hating without a cause. II. His righteous doom. There is here a two-fold and earnest appeal to God for judgment. He is regarded — 1. As a silent witness; 2. As an almighty friend; 3. As a righteous judge.— Watkinson.

Note on vs. 21.— See that rude fellow, who has triumphed over another; he distends his mouth to the utmost, then claps his hands, and bawls out, "Agā! agā! I have seen, I have seen." So provoking is this exclamation that a man, though vanquished, will often commence another attack. An officer who has lost his situation is sure to have this salutation from those he has injured. Has a man been foiled in argument, has he failed in some feat he promised to perform, has he in any way made himself ridiculous, the people open their mouths, and shout aloud, saying, "Agā! finished, finished, fallen, fallen." Then they laugh, and clap their hands, till the poor fellow gets out of their sight.— Roberts.

[a] An insulting gesture.

"Pecuniary aid, by those who have the means, is the most easy form in which benevolence can be gratified, and that which often requires the least, if any, sacrifice of personal comfort or self-love. The same affection may be exercised in a degree much higher than itself, and often much more useful to others, by personal exertion and personal kindness."— Abercrombie.

"He who rejoices in another's fall rejoices in the devil's victory."— Ambrose.

24—26. (24) Judge me, secure me justice. thy righteousness, wh. is based on perfect knowledge and infinite love. None need fear the righteousness of God's judgments. (25) Ah . . it, lit. "Ah, ah, our soul," i. e. our desire: just what we wanted. swallowed, etc., 2 Sa. xvii. 16, obliterating every mark of him.

O Lord my God.— O Jehovah my God; here is another precious word. He takes Jehovah to be his God, in opposition to those who make idols, or riches, or their own lusts their God. He claims a full possession of all that is in the great I AM. Even though he views Him as a judge he lays the hand of faith upon his God, and flinches not even before the blaze of His righteousness. It is a noble word, a grand utterance of faith; he who can pronounce that word "my" from his inmost soul in such a connection may well laugh to scorn all his enemies.— C. H. Spurgeon.

"We know that when a man is benevolent and sympathetic, he is in the state in which we can draw more good things from him than when he is in any other state."— Beecher.

"If we go to one for some kindness, we do not go to him on those days when he is gloomy, when his nerves are shaken, when his health is suffer-

27, 28. (27) that favor, stand on my side; remain faithful to me in this time of slander and trouble. prosperity, welfare, or peace. (29) speak, in grateful, trustful songs; "shall speak musingly, in the low murmur of one entranced by a sweet thought."— Cheyne.

The fatherhood of Jehovah (vs. 27).— This passage, when steadily looked at, has a very wonderful light, almost, in some respects, like that of the sun. When any collection of the solar rays is separated by the use of the prism three different kinds of rays are said to result; some that illumine, some that exert chemical action, and some that give heat. In this pencil of Scriptural rays we find a similar threefold division; we find — I. Wonderful truth. II. Wonderful faith. III. Wonderful comfort.— Homilist.

God's providence.— The Rev. Hansard Knollys was one of the subjects of the persecution in the seventeenth century. He was prosecuted in the High Commission Court, and fled to America, whence after a time he returned. Having lived for some time in obscurity in London, he had but sixpence left, and no prospect for the support of his family. In these circumstances he prayed, encouraged his wife to remember the past goodness of God to them, and reflect on His promise, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee;" paid his lodging, and then went out, not knowing where the providence of God would lead him to seek the means of subsistence. He had walked but a short distance when he was met by a woman who told him that some Christian friends had prepared a residence for him and his family, and had sent him money and other comforts. They were greatly impressed with this manifestation of Divine goodness in their behalf, and the wife exclaimed, "Oh, dear husband, how sweet it is to live by faith, and trust God's faithful word! Let us rely upon Him whilst we live, and trust Him in all straits."

Prayer.— See how the hearts of the saints have been drawn out against their persecutors. Prayers are the arms that in times of persecution the saints have still had recourse to. The Romans being in great distress were put so hard to it, that they were fain to take the weapons out of the temples of their gods to fight with their enemies, and so they overcame them; so when the people of God have been hard put to it by reason of afflictions and persecutions, the weapons that they have fled to have been prayers and tears, and with these they have overcome their persecutors.— Thomas Brooks.

ing, and when his business is going wrong: we go to him when he is full-fed, and comfortable, and genial, as it is at such times that he is most likely to grant our request."—Beecher.

"One man has kindness deep within him; and when the occasion comes, the rind or shell is cracked, and the kernel is found. Such a man's heart, too long clouded, like a sun in a storm-muffled day, shoots through some opening rift, and glows for a period in glory. But there are other natures that are always cloudless. With them, a cloud is the exception, shining is the rule."—H. W. Beecher.

PSALM THE THIRTY-SIXTH.

author,— unknown

Psalm on the contrast between the evil and the good.

1—4. (1) The transgression, etc., this clause may be rendered, "Transgression uttereth its oracle to the wicked in his heart," transgression being personified. The wicked man has made it his God, and it has become a lying spirit within him.[a] "A mutinous spirit dwells with the wicked deep in his heart."— Polych. Bib. that there is, better, "there is." A positive assertion by the Psalmist. no fear, etc., illus. Lu. xviii. 2–4. (2) until his iniquity, R. V., "that his iniquity shall not be found out and be hated." (3) words, etc., his sin is of heart, of lip, and of life. (4) mischief, R. V., iniquity.[b] abhorreth not evil, at last the very sense of evil gets destroyed.

The distinguishing characteristics of a wicked life. — I. A wicked life is characterized by practical atheism. II. By self-adulation. III. By verbal profanity. IV. By un-wisdom. V. By cunning artifices.— Watkinson.

Proud sinners have strongest conceit that they go right, at least in the way of their choice. Satan blindeth them so, that they mistake both the end and way; in their count they are running to heaven, when they are posting to hell; he serveth them kindly with fresh post-horses. Sometimes he mounteth them on drunkenness, and when they have run a stage on that beastliness, he can mount them on lechery. Again, he can refresh them with avarice; and if they be weary of that slow jade, he setteth them on lofty ambition, and to make them more spirity he can horse them on restless contention. Every one seeth not Satan's inquiry; there is no complexion or disposition, but he hath a fit horse for it, and that of itself. Every man's predominant is a beast of Satan's saddling and providing to carry men to hell. The way is one, the postmaster is one; he is to be found at every stage, mounting his gallants; their horses are all of one kind, though not of one color. Happy is the man whom God dismounteth in that evil way, and more happy is he who taketh with that stay, and turneth his course to heaven. — William Struther.

a 'The wicked hath an oracle of transgression in his heart."—Perowne.

"Crime is personified as dwelling in the heart of the wicked, and as uttering suggestions, to wh. he listens as to an oracle." — Spk. Com.

b Mic. ii. 1.

"He hath the devil for his bedfellow who lies abed and schemes how to sin."—Spurgeon.

"The wicked man has no regard to the oracles of God: he has one in his own heart, which dictates nothing but rebellion."—Zachary Mudge.

5—9. (5) mercy, R. V., "loving kindness." faithfulness, to His promises.[a] clouds, R. V., "skies." (6) great mountains, lit. mountains of God.[b] great deep, so unfathomable. man and beast, comp. Ps. civ. 21.[c] (7) excellent, R. V., "precious." shadow, etc., comp. Ps. xvii. 8. (8) fatness . . house, fig. for the privileges of communion with God. pleasures, or delights, "thy Edens." (9) fountain of life,[d] etc., "golden sayings like this anticipate the revelation of the Gospel. It is only in the light of the Incarnation that their depth of meaning begins to be understood." Cp. John i. 4, 9.

"Thy righteousness is like the great mountains." — 1. Mt. Ranier, summit never covered: The uplifting, sustaining power of God's righteousness. 2. Mt. chains, the Rockies and Appalachians, forming continents: The formative power of God's righteousness. 3. Volcano, Mt. Vesuvius: The burning, consuming, cleansing nature of God's righteousness. 4. Mt. Washington, its magnificent view: From the point of view of God's righteousness only can we get a fair view of near, earthly things and human history. — M. A. Breed.

Satisfied. — I once heard a father tell that when he removed his family to a new residence where the accommodation was much more ample, the substance much more rich and varied than that to which they had previously been accustomed, his youngest son, yet a lisping infant, ran round every room and scanned every article with ecstacy, calling out in childish wonder at every new sight, "Is this ours, father? and is this ours?" The child did not say "yours;" and I observed that the father, while he told the story, was not offended with the freedom. You could read in his glistening eye that the infant's confidence in appropriating as his own all that his father had, was an important element in his satisfaction. Such, I suppose, will be the surprise, and joy, and appropriating confidence with which the child of our Father's family will count all his own when he is removed from the comparatively mean condition of things present, and enters the infinite things to come. When the glories of heaven burst upon his view, he does not stand at a distance like a stranger, saying, O God, these are Thine. He bounds forward to to touch and taste every provision which those blessed mansions contain, exclaiming as he looks in the Father's face, Father, this and this is ours! The dear child is glad of all the Father's riches, and the Father is gladder of his dear child. — William Arnot. — The supreme hymn. — Apropos of a symposium of ministers on the subject of "The Best Hymn," Robert Collyer tells this anecdote: "I well remember one day when this subject was the subject of a discussion between Ralph Waldo Emerson and Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes. The latter said that many of the so-called hymns were mere pieces of cabinet work. Then his voice deepened, his eyes shone, as we remember him in his noblest moments, as he said: 'One hymn I think supreme.' Emerson threw his head back, as he always did when his attention was arrested, and waited. Dr. Holmes repeated the first verse:

"'Thou hidden Love of God, whose height, Whose depth, unfathomed, no man knows,
I see from far Thy beauteous light;
Inly I sigh for Thy repose.
My heart is pained, nor can it be At rest, till it find rest in thee.'

"'I know — I know,' exclaimed Emerson. 'That is the supreme hymn.'"

10—12. (10) continue, draw out at length: prolong. The glory of God's loving-kindness is its constancy and continuance.[e] loving-kindness, mentioned the third time in this Ps., a matchless attribute of God. (11) come against, the proud oppressor trampling me down. remove me, drive me from my land. (12) There, with prophet. vision, the Psalmist seems to see the very place of their overthrow.[f]

God's continued care implored (vs. 10). — I. What need we all have of the blessings here implored! 1. Of this, whatever their attainments, all stand in need; 2. What should we do if God were to withdraw His loving-kindness from us? II. On what grounds are the upright authorized to expect it? 1. By the promises of God; 2. By the intercession of Christ; 3. By the honor of God Himself. Apply: — Seek to answer the character here described; implore of God the blessing you so greatly need; seek it also for others. — C. Simeon.

---

a "A burst of rapture, here is the true oracle." — Spk. Com.

b "Such epithets as these show how deeply the Heb. felt the beauty and majesty of natural scenery: the mountains were to him an outward representation of the righteousness, deep-rooted in the very essence of the Godhead, and towering over the earth in its manifestation." — Spk. Com.

c "Hast thou ever seen a beast or a bird that followed a trade? and yet they are fed without toil." — Jennings and Lowe.

d Pr. xvi. 22; Je. ii. 13; Jno. iv. 14; v. 26; Re. xxii. 1.

"Happy is the soul that can drink in the sumptuous dainties of the gospel — nothing can so completely fill the soul."

"Far and wide, terrible and irresistible like the ocean are the providential dispensations of God; at one time they appear as peaceful as the unrippled sea of glass; at another tossed with tempest and whirlwind, but evermore most glorious and full of mystery." — Spurgeon.

"From the low prayer want and plaint of woe O never, never turn away thine ear! Forlorn in this bleak wilderness below, ah! what were man, should heaven refuse to hear!" — Beattie.

e He. xiii. 8.

f "David descries their destruction afar off, as it were from a watch tower, and gives determinate sentence of it, as assuredly as if it were close at hand." — Calvin.

Figurative use of "feet" and "hands" (vs. 11). — Here we have another instance of the feet and hands being used for the whole man. Our Saviour said of the man: "The hand of him that betrayeth Me." Of a sick person to whom the physician will not administer any more medicine, it will be said paregari-kivuttan, "The hand of the doctor has forsaken him." A servant is under the hand of his master. The foot of pride probably alludes to the custom of the conqueror trampling upon the vanquished: for in the next verse it is said, "The workers of iniquity are fallen: they are cast down, and shall not be able to rise." — Roberts.

"The true mark of a godly man standeth in the conjunction of faith in God with sincere study of, obedience to Him, for, He is the man that knoweth God, and is upright in heart."— David Dickson.

PSALM THE THIRTY-SEVENTH.

author,— unknown

A didactic Psalm: subject, the justifying of God's providence.

1—4. (1) Fret,[a] Heb. "Heat not thyself." Do not get angry, and impatient.[b] Look at the matter coolly. workers, etc. R. V., "them that work unrighteousness." (2) cut down, Job xiv. 2.[c] (3) Trust, sure of safety. so . . land, R. V., "Dwell in the land," dwell safely, quietly. land, Palestine, God's honored land. be fed,[d] R. V., "follow after faithfulness." (4) Delight thyself, find thy pleasure in Him.[e]

Psalm thirty-seventh. — This psalm was the basis of the hymn of Paul Gerhardt, Befiehl du deine Wege ("commit thou all thy ways"), which has taken national rank in Germany, next to Luther's Ein feste Burg, ("a mighty fortress"). It was the custom in some of the high schools in Germany, when pupils were leaving at the close of their course, to accompany them to the gate of the town singing this hymn. When Queen Louisa of Prussia, in 1806, received the news of the disastrous battle of Jena, she sat down, after her first burst of weeping, and sang this hymn softly at the piano; when she rose, her eye was clear and her spirit calm. — Ker. — Get up and go on. — A father was once telling me about his experience with his boy. He was a preacher in Boston. There was much religious interest in the church, and one night his only son stood up in the young people's meeting and said he wanted to be a Christian. The father did not hear of it until the next morning. He determined that no one should get ahead of him, and after dinner he said, "Irving, don't you want to go to ride?" They rode and talked together for half a dozen miles, and everything was plain and frank between them. It was winter, icy and very slippery. Finally the father said: "Now there is one thing I want you to remember. Suppose I should say, 'I have got to go on several miles to see some one, and you will have to get out and walk home.' You get out and start. Suppose you should slip down on the ice, what would you do?" "Get up and go on again." "Suppose you slipped down half a dozen times." "Why, there would not be but one thing to do, and that would be to keep getting up and keep going on." "Yes, my boy; and I want you to remember that that is the Christian life. You will get down on the ice sometimes, but the only thing to do is to get up and go on." The boy was in college later, and after a while he said, "Father, I've got down on the ice." "Well, you told me what you would do." "Yes," and he did. But I am afraid there is many a boy that has not got up and kept on. — C. M. Southgate.

"The true object of the whole Ps. is to warn the hearer against the temptation to repine at the success of the ungodly." — Spk. Com.

a From Fr. frotter; fr. L. fricare, to rub; A. S., fretan, to eat, to gnaw.

b Pr. xxiii. 17; xxiv. 1.

c Matt. vi. 30; 1 Pe. i. 24.

d "The drift of the passage is, we think, 'Abide contentedly where Jehovah has placed you, and let not your faith in His love be impaired by these social anomalies.'"— Jennings and Lowe.

e Job xxii. 26; xxvii. 10; Is. lviii. 14.

5—7. (5) Commit, cast thy way; roll thy anxiety;[f] repose it on the Lord. (6) bring forth, even as He brings forth the light of the morning.[g] (7) Rest in the Lord, lit. be silent, or be still before Him.[h] who prospereth, comp. Ps. lxxiii. 3. "If the prosperity of the wicked frets thee, because it seems to obscure thy righteousness, since while he appears to bask in the sunshine of God's favor, thy life is possibly overshadowed by clouds and darkness, be sure that, in the end, this seeming injustice will be remedied. God will not frown on thee always; one day He will turn on thee the light of His countenance, and make thy righteousness to shine forth like the sun in its noonday splendor." — Pul. Com.

Character of those who rest in the Lord. — The state of heart and conduct in which we are to wait for His goodness is thus described. I. Trust in the Lord. II. Do good. III. Delight thyself in the Lord. IV. Commit thy way unto the Lord. — Pul. Studies.

Faith in the promises. — A captive was brought before an Asiatic prince: the scimitar was already raised over his head, when oppressed by intolerable thirst, he asked for water. A cup was handed him: he held it as if appre-

f Pe. v. 7.

g Je. li. 10.

"What you have to do and cannot, is set forth as a burden."—Tausset.

h "A word expressive of that calm resignation which leaves itself absolutely in the hands of God. Prayer Bk. Version is 'Hold thee still in the Lord.'"—Perowne.

"God is worth waiting for. His time is the best. Men tarry for the King." — Watkinson.

"The angry man is compared to a ship sent into the sea, which hath the devil for a pilot."—T. Adams.

hensive lest the scimitar would fall while he was in the act of drinking. "Take courage!" said the prince: "your life will be spared till you drink this water." He instantly dashed the cup of water to the ground. The good faith of the barbarian saved him. The word had passed; it was enough; and the captive went on his way rejoicing.

a "Be not incensed, it only leads to evil-doing." — Delitzsch.

b Job viii. 18-22.

"High and pure benevolence not only is dispensed with willingness when occasions present themselves, but seeks out opportunity for itself, and feels in want of its natural and healthy exercise when deprived of an object on which it may be bestowed."—Abercrombie.

8—11. (8) Cease from anger, etc., such anger and such wrath as the prosperity of the wicked calls forth. in any wise, read the clause, "Fret not thyself, since that can only lead thee to do evil."[a] "If men will dwell unduly on the fact of the prosperity of the wicked, and brood upon it in their hearts, they will be apt, in the first instance, to envy the wicked, which is at once 'to do evil;' and from this they will be naturally tempted to go on to an imitation of their wicked practices." (9) cut off, and so wilt thou be, if through fretfulness thou becomest an evil-doer. wait, God's time for vindicating the righteousness of His people. inherit the earth, Matt. v. 5. This prophecy has had only occasional fulfilment hitherto. (10) it shall not be, R. V., "he shall not;" not the least trace of him shall remain.[b] (11) But . . peace, this represents a general law, leaving untouched the exceptions.

A sermon for the fretful. — I. Cease from present anger. It is madness, it is sin; it shuts out our prayers; it will grow into malice; it may lead to worse. II. Forsake it for the future. Repent of it, watch temper, discipline thy passions, etc. III. Avoid all kindred feelings of fretfulness, impatience, envy, etc., for they lead to evil. — Spurgeon.

Indian and the Quaker meeting.—A little before the Revolutionary war, there were a few families of Friends, who had removed from Duchess county and settled at Easton, then in Saratoga county, New York. These requested the favor of holding a religious meeting, which was granted. The section of the country proved to be one which was so much distressed by scouting parties from both the British and American armies, that the American government, unable to protect the inhabitants, issued a proclamation, directing them to leave their country: and they did generally go. The Friends requested to be permitted to exercise their own judgment (saying, "You are clear of us in that you have warned us"), remained at their homes; and kept up their meeting. Robert Nisbet, who lived at that time at East Hoosack, about thirty miles distant, felt a desire to walk through the then wilderness country, and sit with the Friends at their week-day meeting. As they were sitting in meeting, with their door open, they discovered an Indian peeping around the door post. When he saw the Friends sitting without word or deed, he stepped forward and took a full view of what was in the house: then he and his company, placing their arms in a corner of the room, took seats with the Friends, and so remained till the meeting closed. Zebulon Hoxie, one of the Friends present, then invited them to his house, put a cheese and what bread he had on the table, and invited them to help themselves: they did so, and went quietly and harmlessly away. Before their departure, however, Robert Nisbet, who could speak and understand the French language, had a conversation with their leader in French. He told Robert that they surrounded the house, intending to destroy all that were in it; "but," said he, "when we saw you sitting with your door open, and without weapons of defense, we had no disposition to hurt you — we would have fought for you." This party had human scalps with them.

President Lincoln, walking one day with his secretary, stopped at a little shrub, and looked into it; then stooped, and put his hands down through the twigs and leaves, as if to take something out. His secretary said to him, "What do you find there, Mr. Lincoln?" "Why," said he, "Here is a little bird fallen from its nest, and I am trying to put it back again."

A dying soldier was exhorted to throw himself into the arms of Jesus. "He is not here; He is not here!" was his reply. "Not here, not here!" were his last mournful words.

c Fr. Old Eng. gnaste, Icel. gnista, to grind or strike together the teeth.

d Ps cxxxvii. 7; Job xviii 20; Je. l. 27, 31; Ob. 12.

"Come ye who find contentment's very core
In the light store
And daisied path
Of poverty,
And know how more
A small thing that the righteous hath

12—17. (12) gnasheth,[c] as in violent rage. (13) laugh, Ps. ii. 4. his day, in which he receives his full deserts.[d] (14) such as be, Heb. upright of way. (15) enter . . heart, all evil becomes at last woe upon the evil-doer. (16) A little, comp. Pr. xv. 15. riches, R. V., "abundance." (17) arms, with which violent deeds are done.

The Divine hand (vs. 14). — I. It is a strong hand. II. It is a redeeming hand. III. It is a tender hand. Upright conversation. — I. What it excludes. The horizontal or earthly, the crooked or crafty, the slanting or sinister. II. What it includes. Motive, object, language, action. III. What it achieves. It stands like a pillar; it supports like a column; it ascends like a tower; it adorns like a monument; it illuminates like a Pharos. — Spurgeon.

Rev. J. Garie (vs. 12). — This gentleman, with other ministers, attempted, in 1790, to disseminate the gospel in some of the darkest parts of Ireland. After preaching several months at Sligo, with every appearance of success, a new place of worship was opened, which was attacked and seriously injured the day after. These attacks were repeated, till at length it was burned down. A dreadful outrage was committed on one of the principal friends of Mr. G., and he himself was in so much danger of violent death, that he was compelled to change his lodgings every night; but he still continued at his post. One evening a man entered his room with a pistol, threatening to take away his life. Mr. Garie, holding up a small Bible, advanced towards him, and with a smiling countenance looked him full in the face. Struck with his mild and innocent appearance, the man immediately retired from him, and his life was preserved. Mr. Garie afterwards returned to Scotland, settled at Perth, and died in 1802. — R. T. S. When the wicked are most near to do a mischief to the Lord's people, there is a mischief most near to them. — David Dickson.—Riches of the poor. — If thine estate were but little, yet it would be perfumed with love, and that lump of sugar in thy cup would make the liquor sweet, be it never so small. As the waters which flow from the hills of some of the islands of Molucca taste of the cinnamon and cloves which grow there, so should thy gift, though it were but water, taste of the good will and special grace of the giver. Thy "little," with the fear of the Lord, would be "better than the riches of many wicked men." As a little ring with a very costly diamond in it is far more worth than many great ones without it, so thy estate, though it were but a penny, should be joined with the precious jewel of that love which is better than life, and enjoyed by special promise, and thereby be infinitely more worth than the thousands and millions of others bestowed merely from common bounty, and enjoyed only by a general providence. — George Swinnock.

Availeth, than the ungodly's riches great." — G o v. Patmore.

"God's hand is still under us, and His goodness is lower than we can fall." — Trapp.

The husbandman is never so near the vine as when he prunes it. God's hand is a tender hand even when he uses the pruning knife.

"The righteous gain by giving. The wicked lose by withdrawing. A running stream inherits the most territory." — Watkinson.

18—22. (18) knoweth the days, Ps. i. 6; xxxi. 15. forever, "the righteous man lives in his posterity, who continue in possession of the ancestral inheritance, while the posterity of the wicked perish (vss. 28, 38; xxxiv. 16). The Psalmist's view is still limited to earth (cp. vs. 19). The eternal inheritance reserved in heaven is beyond his horizon." — Cam. Bib. (19) ashamed, or confounded. evil time, R. V., "time of evil," when calamities are impending. (20) fat of lambs, R. V., "the excellency of the pastures," reference is to the transient character of the grass of the fields.[a] (21) borroweth, is brought so poor that he must borrow and cannot pay. Circumstances are changed at last, and the righteous can lend, nay give. showeth mercy, R. V., "dealeth graciously." (22) blessed of him, i. e. God; it is that blessing makes truly rich.[b] a "The enemies of Jahve are like the glory of the meadows. They vanish a w a y like t h e smoke, they disappear."—Delitzsch.

b Pr. iii. 33.

The relation of the righteous (vs. 21). — I. Relation to society. 1. He has the means of helping; 2. He has the disposition to help. II. Relation to God. 1. He blesses the righteous but not the wicked; 2. He establishes the righteous but not the wicked; 3. He is pleased with the righteous but not with the wicked. III. Relation to the world. 1. They will be kept from utter destitution; 2. Neither they nor their children shall be utterly neglected.— Thomas.

"To others do (the law is not severe) what to thyself thou wishest to be done; forgive thy foes, and love thy parents dear, and friends, and native land, nor t h e s e alone—all human weal and woe learn thou to make thine own."—Beattie.

"Excellency of the pastures."— The force of the comparison is hardly realized in our moist northern climate, where verdure is perpetual. "But let a traveler ride over the downs of Bethlehem in February, one spangled carpet of brilliant flowers, and again in May, when all traces of verdure are gone; or let him push his horse through the deep solid growth of clovers and grasses in the valley of the Jordan in the early spring, and then return and gallop across a brown, hard-baked, gaping plain in June, . . . and the Scriptural imagery will come home to him with tenfold power."— Tristram's Nat. His. of the Bible.

23—26. (23) ordered, or established. "God secures the just man from falling." (24) fall, into misfortune; perhaps even into sins of infirmity. utterly cast down, be prostrated.[c] upholdeth, etc. Heb., "upholdeth his hand." (25) old, an appeal to the experience of a long life in confirmation of the preceding stanzas. He has never seen the righteous permanently deserted by God, or his children reduced to homeless beggary (cix. 10). Cp. vss. 28, 33; ix. 10; Gen. xxviii. 15. Temporary impoverishment and apparent abandonment for a time need not be supposed to be excluded.[d] (26) he . . merciful, R. V., "all the day long he dealeth graciously c 2 Co. iv. 9.

d "The policy of the Hebrew commonwealth would of itself lead to the ultimate enrichment of God-fearing men, and in a w e l l-o r d e r e d period such a statement would involve no hyperbole." — Jennings and Lowe.

God's interest in His people (vss. 23, 24).— We observe — I. The interest which God takes in His people. 1. He orders their steps; 2. He delights in their way; 3. He upholds them with His hand. II. What return He looks for at their hands. 1. We must cheerfully obey His will; 2. We must simply depend on His care. Apply — (1) To the self-confident and secure; (2) The fearful and disconsolate.— C. Simeon.

"God promiseth that the seed of his people shall inherit the earth. The child of such a tenant as paid his rent well, shall not be put out of his farm." — John Glascock.

Begging (vs. 25). — It is not my observation just as it stands, for I have relieved the children of undoubtedly good men, who have appealed to me as common mendicants. But this does not cast a doubt upon the observation of David. He lived under a dispensation more outward, and more of this world than the present rule of personal faith. Never are the righteous forsaken; that is a rule without exception. Seldom indeed do their seed beg bread, and although it does occasionally occur, through dissipation, idleness, or some other causes on the part of their sons, yet doubtless it is so rare a thing that there are many alive who never saw it. Go into the union house and see how few are the children of godly parents; enter the gaol and see how much rarer still is the case. Poor ministers' sons often become rich. I am not old, but I have seen families of the poor godly become rich, and have seen the Lord reward the faithfulness of the father in the success of the son, so that I have often thought that the best way to endow one's seed with wealth is to become poor for Christ's sake. — Spurgeon. — The honest insolvent. — A gentleman of Boston, says a religious journal, who was unfortunate in business thirty years ago, and consequently unable at that time to meet his engagements with his creditors, after more than twenty years of toil, succeeded in paying every creditor (except one whose residence could not be ascertained) the whole amount due to them. He has in that twenty years brought up and educated a large family but — still he owed one of his former creditors; he was not satisfied to keep another's property; he made inquiry, and received information that the party had died some years since. He again pursued his inquiry respecting the administrator, and ascertained his name and residence, wrote to him, acknowledged the debt, and requested him to inform him of the manner he would receive the money. A few days since he remitted the whole amount, principal and interest.

"In sudden cases, the richest man in the world may be put to ask a piece of bread. A good man may fall into such wants, but good men are rarely, if ever or at all, left in them." — Joseph Caryl.

27—29. (27) dwell, etc., a promise or assurance. Thou shalt dwell.[a] Peaceable occupation of the land by successive generations is meant (cp. vs. 29). The individual lives on in his descendants. (28) judgment, i. e. justice. shall inherit, bec. He who loveth judgment will surely appear for them.

[a] So shalt thou abide securely for ever.

Doing good (vs. 29). — Psalm thirty-seventh is not a devotional but an ethical psalm. It contains no praises, petitions or confessions. It is a series of aphorisms embodying a single truth, and is not designed to unfold progressive thought, but to enforce one sentiment, with line upon line, like variations on a recurring strain of music. The third verse gives a practical inference suggested at every point along the psalm. "Do good," not merely think about it. Will imaginary subscriptions help on good objects? "Do good," not merely talk about it. Will words bind up wounds and clothe the naked? "Do good" yourself, not wait for others, not complain of others, not merely set others to work, but up and about it your own self.

"I will, if I can, do something for others and heaven; not to deserve by it, but to express myself and my thanks. Though I cannot do what I would, I will labor to do what I can."— Feltham.

30—34 (30) speaketh, or uttereth. (31) in his heart, cherished as the inward, moving principle, always controlling his actions. steps, or goings.[b] (32) watcheth, vs. 14. The next verse shows that wrong by judicial corruption (Is. v. 23) as well as actual violence is meant. (33) in his hand, i. e. to his private murderous devices. condemn, will not suffer him to be unjustly condemned. judged, when his enemies try to work his ruin by process of law. (34) thou shalt see it, bec. thyself protected by the God on whom thou has waited.

[b] In these vss. the righteous are described as to the elements of character, thought, word, and action." —Fausset.

"All heavenly hearts are charitable. Enlightened souls disperse their rays." —Feltham.

The security of the upright (vs. 31). — I. The character of the upright. 1. God has engraven His law on his heart; 2. This forms his distinguishing character. II. Their security. This — 1. Partly from the very character which they possess; 2. Principally from the care and fidelity of God. Hence we may see — (1) Whence it is that so many professors of religion dishonor their high and holy calling: (2) How inseparable is the union between duty and privilege. — C. Simeon.

"Avoid crooked paths, take heed of turning to the left hand, lest you be set on the left hand. Sin doth cross our hopes, it barricades up our

Justice will overtake the wicked. — As one that hath been either robbed himself, or that hath a friend murdered, if he have the party apprehended and laid fast in prison, is not presently out of patience because he seeth not him instantly executed, but is well content quietly to expect the time of the assizes, though it be half a year after, as long as he is sure that he will then have justice against him; so ought we not to fly out because evil-doers prosper, remembering that all wicked ones are in the meanwhile in this world, as in God's jail, under the chains of a guilty conscience, out of which there is no possible means-of escape without judgment. — T. Gataker.

way; a man may as well expect to find heaven in hell, as in a sinful way." —Thomas Watson.

35—40. (35) green bay tree, R. V., "a green tree in its native soil;" some deeply-rooted giant of the primeval forest, apparently secure from all danger of sudden disturbance. Comp. Ps. i. 3. (36) he passed away, better, "and I passed by." (37) perfect, in Old Testament, the sincere man. end, etc., or "a man of peace hath a posterity." Heb. "for the man of peace there is a reward (or future, or posterity)."[a] (38) end . . wicked, i. e. their posterity. (40) because they trust, the whole lesson of the Ps. lies in these words.

The true nobleman (vs. 37.)—I. His pedigree. II. His honors. 1. His prayers are the delight of God; 2. His influence over man is great; 3. His personal safety is secure. III. His sentiment. IV. His pursuits. V. His trials. VI. His future. 1. Certain and lasting fame; 2. Deliverance from all anxiety and uncertainty; 3. Permanent safety; 4. Abundant endowments; 5. Admission to glory. — Stems and Twigs.

His end is peace. — Time would fail me to tell how Christians die nor can anything save the pen of the recording angel who has stood by their bed of death and borne them to Abraham's bosom narrate the unnumbered instances of their delightful departure from the present world, which verify the truth of the Bible. "I could never have believed," said a dying saint, "that it was so delightful a thing to die, or that it was possible to have such views of the heavenly world as I now enjoy." The memorable Melancthon just before he died, chanted in his sleep the words, "I will not any more eat thereof until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God." He seemed restless, and on being asked by one near him, "Whether there were anything more that he desired?" replied, "Aliud nihil nisi cœlum" — nothing more, unless it be heaven. — Gardiner Spring.

[a] "Strange though such appeals may sound in our ears, numerous progeny, and a long line of descendants, are constantly set forward by the Heb. teachers, as rewards conditional on righteousness." —Jennings and Lowe.

"Mark him in the setting out, he hath many oppositions; mark him in the journey, he is full of tribulations; but mark in the conclusion; and the end of that man is peace." — Thomas Adams.

PSALM THE THIRTY-EIGHTH.

author, — prob. David

A prayer of a suffering penitent.

1—5. Sickness, punishment for sin. (1) in thy wrath,[b] wh. the Psalmist feels he has much reason to fear. (2) stick fast, have entered deep. Poetical description of the pains of sickness.[c] presseth, falleth heavily. (3) anger, R. V., "indignation." rest, R. V., "health." (4) over mine head, like swirling waves. heavy burden, familiar fig. for sins, as they come to oppress and crush the spirit.[d] (5) are corrupt, or suppurate. From this we may guess the nature of his disease. Comp. Job and Hezekiah. foolishness, sin is essentially foolishness. So it is often set forth in Proverbs.

"Foolishness."—The folly of sin. Everything that a man has to do with sin shows his folly. I. Dallying with sin. II. Committing it. III. Continuing in it. IV. Hiding it. V. Palliating it. — B. Davies.

Burdens.—There is a gateway at the entrance of a narrow passage in London, over which is written, "No burdens allowed to pass through." "And yet we do pass constantly with ours," said one friend to another, as they turned up this passage out of a more frequented and broader thoroughfare. They carried no visible burdens, but they were like many who, although they have no outward pack upon their shoulders, often stoop inwardly beneath the pressure of a heavy load upon the heart. The worst burdens are those which never meet the eye. There is another gate — one which we are invited to enter, and must enter, if we would ever attain to rest and peace, and over which is also inscribed, "No burdens allowed to pass through." This is the strait gate which leads to life; and by it stands One who opened the narrow way to which it leads, saying to each one of us. "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." — Anec. Illus. of O. T. Texts.

[b] Is. xxvii. 8; Je. xxx. 11; xlvi. 28.

[c] Joo vi. 4.

[d] Comp. bundle on back of Bunyan's pilgrim.

"A man, when under the rebuke of God, feels himself to be overwhelmed in the sea of his sins. There is no human refuge for him. No light reaches him."—Watkinson.

6—10. (6) troubled, R. V., "pained," writhe with pain and sorrow. I go mourning, he, like Job, feels himself under divine discipline. (7) loathsome disease, R. V., "burning." (8) feeble, "corpse-like cold;" benumbed. Psalmist describes the alternations of a fever fit. I . . heart, Polych. Bib. "I groan louder than the roar of a lioness." roared, with pain; groan aloud. (9) before thee, well known to thee. (10) panteth, R. V., "throbbeth;"

"Persons in health have died from the expectation of dying. It was once common for those who perished by violence to summon their destroyers to appear, within a stated time, before the tribunal of their God: and we have many perfectly attested instances in which, through fear and remorse, the perpetrators withered under the curse, and died. Pestilence does not kill with the rapidity of terror." —Wakley.

"The first symptom of approaching death with some is the strong presentiment that they are about to die."—Wakley.

lit. goes round and round. light . . eyes, eyes dim and dull from overmuch weeping, comp. Job xvii. 7.

Discipline of affliction.— To a certain extent, we can all see that discipline is good for us. What man of business repents him of the time he spent in what appeared to be the sharp discipline of school? Who does not wish that he had had more of it and sharper? The time when you strained all your powers, denied yourselves all your pleasures, and tied yourselves tight to your tasks, is the time which you remember most gratefully had you your youth over again, you would make that the rule and not the rare exception. Tell me which of you came through childish and youthful follies without some sharp lessons? Who has not been bitterly mortified by the wounding of his self-importance, or heartily laughed at for what he thought very wise and grand? The sharper the lesson the better it served its purpose. Looking back you would not wish one drop of its bitterness extracted; you would rather that the infusion had been stronger, that it might have killed the weakness at its very root. We see, so far, that good comes out of discipline. We do not sit down and cry over it. Hereby you consent to the wisdom of the discipline of God.— Baldwin Brown.

11—14. (11) lovers, i. e. familiar friends. my sore, R. V., "plague." Here again we may compare the case of Job.[a] (12) snares, "to the desertion of friends is added the persecution of enemies, who take advantage of the debility and prostration caused by sickness to plot against the writer's life, to 'lay snares for him,' and devise evil against him. Those who assign the psalm to David suppose the devices described in 2 Sa. xv. 1–6 to be referred to." (13) deaf man, we are reminded of David's self-restraint when Shimei hurled curses at him from the hillside. (14) no reproofs, or no arguments; i. e. conscious of guilt the psalmist is obliged to remain silent under his enemies' charges.

a "The alienation of friends and acquaintances is a common topic in Ps. of this kind. Comp. xxxi. 11; lxxxviii. 18."—Jennings and Lowe.

Deaf and dumb. — For why should I hear when I meant not to speak? and why should I speak when I knew beforehand I should not be heard? I knew by contesting I should but provoke them, and make them more guilty that were guilty too much before. I therefore thought it better myself to be silent than to set them a-roaring and make them grow outrageous. No doubt a great wisdom in David, to know that to be deaf and dumb was in this case his best course, but yet a far greater virtue that knowing it, he was able to do it. Oh, how happy should we be, if we could always do that which we know is best to be done, and if our wills were as ready to act as our reason is able to enact; we should then decline many rocks we now run upon, we should then avoid many errors we now run into. To be deaf and dumb are indeed great inabilities and defects, when they be natural; but when they be voluntary, and I may say artificial, they are then great abilities, or rather perfections. —Sir Richard Baker.

"Silence is the language of dignified innocence. It is a token of noble self control."—Watkinson.

One dying said, "I cannot see the darkness of the valley, because of His brightness."

15—22. Pleadings, confessions, petitions. 15—18. (15) in thee . . hope, or, "thee do I wait for." hear, R. V., "answer." (16) I said, within myself.[b] foot slippeth, fig. for misfortune wh. seems to prove God's disfavor. (17) to halt, in position where there is great danger of falling. sorrow, the suffering of affliction, making him unfit for kingly duties. (18) declare, in humble confession that sin is the cause.

b "Dav. may be giving the reason for his silence. He feared lest, by some injudicious answer, he might give occasion to his enemies, who had already triumphed when he made a false step. Ps xxxix. 1, 2"—Spk. Com.

Trust in God. — David committed himself to Him that judgeth righteously, and so in patience was able to possess his soul. Hope in God's intervention, and belief in the power of prayer, are two most blessed stays to the soul in time of adversity. Turning right away from the creature to the sovereign Lord of all, and to Him as our own covenant God, we shall find the richest solace in waiting upon Him. Reputation like a fair pearl may be cast into the mire, but in due time when the Lord makes up His jewels, the godly character shall shine with unclouded splendor. Rest, then, O slandered one, and let not thy soul be tossed to and fro with anxiety. — Spurgeon.

"The first hospital for the reception of the diseased and the infirm was founded at Edessa, in Syria, by the sagacious and provident humanity of a Christian father."

19—22. (19) lively, read the sentence, "But those that are causelessly mine enemies are strong." wrongfully, i. e. falsely; hatred based on misconceptions. This suits well the time of Absalom's conspiracy, when day by day more and more of the people forsook David and joined the party of his son (2 Sa. xv. 12, 13). (20) evil for good, turn against Dav., though he had been kind to them. (22) my salvation, "note the development of feeling;

first prayer, then confidence in God's knowledge, then hope, then assurance of salvation in God."[a] — Spk. Com.

Matthew Hale's enemy. — A person who had done Sir Matthew Hale a great injury, came afterwards to him for his advice in the settlement of his estate. Sir Matthew gave his advice very frankly to him, but would accept of no fee for it. When he was asked how he could use a man so kindly who had wronged him so much, his answer was, he thanked God he had learned to forgive injuries.

[a] Ex. xv. 2; Ps. xxiv. 5; xxvii. 1; Is. xii. 2, etc.

PSALM THE THIRTY-NINTH.

author,— unknown

Prayer of one much tried by the prosperity of the ungodly.

1—3. (1) I said, i. e. thought to myself; formed the resolution. with my tongue, by murmuring at the Div. dispensation under which he suffered. bridle, or muzzle. wicked . . me, the sight of their prosperity was a temptation to complain against God's providence. (2) even from good,[b] speaking neither good nor bad. (3) hot, with holding back the expression of earnest feeling. He speaks, however, at last to God, not to his adversaries. burned, R. V., "Kindled," the more he tried to suppress his feelings the greater the fire of passion burned to give utterance.

Silence. — There is a sevenfold silence. 1. A stoical silence. 2. A politic silence. 3. A foolish silence. 4. A sullen silence. 5. A forced silence. 6. A despairing silence. 7. A prudent, a holy, a gracious silence. — Thomas Brooks.

Meditation.—A writer of the present day says, "I remember Alma Tadema, the great painter, saying to me that he sat down every day at his easel. Sometimes he began without enthusiasm, and painted on with little interest. But after an hour or so he surprised himself in a fit of absorption: the fire had kindled within him as he worked. — Anec. Illus. of O. T. Texts. — Dying silence. — In the last visit but one which Whitefield paid to America, he spent a day or two at Princeton, under the roof of Dr. Finley, then president of the college at that place. At dinner the doctor said, "Mr. W., I hope it will be very long before you will be called home; but when that event shall arrive, I shall be glad to hear the noble testimony you will bear for God." "You would be disappointed, doctor," said W., "I shall die silent. It has pleased God to enable me to bear so many testimonies for Him during my life, that He will require none from me when I die." The manner of W.'s death verified his prediction.

[b] The expression includes the idea of submission; the silence of resignation.

"Such a Ps. fits well the reactions that followed the reformations of such kings as Asa, Jehoshaphat, or Jehoash."—W. E. Barton.

Jeduthun, either the same as Ethan, a leading singer, or the title of a tune.

"He who is left to himself has many difficulties to struggle with: but He who is saved every struggle is in a still more unfortunate position."

4—8. (4) mine end, how near I am to death,[c] comp. Ps. xc. 12. that . . know, R. V., "let me know." (5) handbreadth, R. V., "as handbreadths." "The shortest measure is enough to reckon life by."— Cam. Bib. Matt. vi. 27. best state, or at his standing fast, however firmly established he may be. vanity, or a mere breath. (6) vain shew, as a shadow, an unsubstantial form,[d] trans. Cam. Bib. translates: "Only as a phantom doth each walk to and fro; only for vanity do they turmoil; one heapeth up, and he will not know who doth gather the hoard." gather, as His heritage or His spoil. (7) now, taking all these things into consideration. (8) transgressions, his own sins were far more serious things than his enemies; therefore he prays first for redemption from their power and punishment.[e] foolish, i. e. those who taunt sufferers with being the mark of God's wrath.

Hope centered in God (vs. 7). — I. There is nothing in this world worthy the expectation of our souls, as to constitute their happiness. 1. All things here are uncertain; 2. They are unsatisfying. II. Our hopes should be placed on God entirely as the author of our felicity. 1. There is enough in God to fill our most enlarged expectations; 2. God is willing to grant us all the happiness we can possibly desire in and from Him. — T. Gibbons.

The rich man and his son. — An old woman, who showed the house and pictures at Towcester, expressed herself in these remarkable words: "That is Sir Robert Farmer; he lived in the country, took care of his estate, built this house, and paid for it; managed well, saved money, and died rich. That is his son. He was made a lord, took a place at court, spent his estate, and died a beggar!" A very concise but full account, and fraught with a valuable moral lesson: "He layeth up riches, and knoweth not who shall gather them."

[c] "Make me rightly to know and estimate the shortness and uncertainty of human life, that so, instead of suffering myself to be perplexed with all that I see around me, I may cast myself the more entirely on Thee." — Perowne.

[d] Ps. lxxiii. 20.

[e] Ps. xxxii. 1.

"When in the Bristol election, his competitor died, Burke said, 'What shadows we are, and what shadows we pursue!'" — Wm. S. Pluemr.

"I see that we who live are nothing else but images and a vain shadow." — Sophocles.

"Ills that never happened have chiefly made men wretched." — Tupper.

9—13. (9) dumb, "the knowledge that my afflictions came from Thee, and were the just punishment of my transgressions, helped me to keep the silence which I observed while the ungodly was in my sight." (10) blow, lit. conflict or quarrel.[a] (11) his beauty,[b] etc., "as easily as the moth-grub, working unseen, destroys 'goodly raiment,' so easily does God's chastisement destroy a man's bodily strength which makes him attractive." — Cam. Bib. (12) stranger, "only a short time here, and dependent on Jehovah's protection." — Cheyne. Gen. xxiii. 4.[c] (13) recover strength,[d] "brighten up again, like the morning, with a smiling gleam of light on my countenance."

Submission to God (vs. 9). — This language is suited to — I. A gracious soul under a sense of guilt. II. To one visited with a providential reverse of circumstances. III. Or under oppression. IV. Or one arrested by disease. V. Or when God takes away the light of his eyes. Conclude with three general hints — 1. The text shows us the right state of mind under bereaving providences; 2. That there is a school for God's children; 3. That God has appointed a present silence to be the harbinger of future praise. — R. Cecil.

Stranger and sojourner.—A stranger is one that hath his abode in a foreign country, that is not a native and a denizen of the place, though he liveth there, and in opposition to the natives he is called a stranger: as if a Frenchman should live in England, he is a stranger. But a sojourner is one that intendeth not to settle, but only passeth through a place, and is in motion traveling homeward. So the children of God in relation to a country of their own in another place, namely, heaven, they are denizens there, but strangers to the world; and they are sojourners and pilgrims in regard of their motion and journey towards their country. — Thomas Manton. — The decline of life. — So have I seen a rose newly springing from the clefts of its hood, and at first it was fair as the morning, and full with the dew of heaven, a lamb's fleece; but when a ruder breath has forced open its virgin modesty, and dismantled its too youthful and unripe retirement, it began to put on darkness, and to decline to softness and the symptoms of a sickly age; it bowed the head, and broke its stalk; and at night, having lost some of its leaves, and all its beauty, it fell into the portion of weeds and out-worn faces. The same is the portion of every man and every woman; the heritage of worms and serpents, rottenness and cold dishonor, and our beauty so changed, that our acquaintance quickly know us not; and that change mingled with so much horror, or else meets so with our fears and weak discoursings, that they who, six hours ago, tended upon us either with charitable or ambitious services, cannot without some regret, stay in the room alone, where the body lies stripped of its life and honor. — Jeremy Taylor.

a "We may render 'I am worn out with resisting Thy chastisement.'" — Jennings and Lowe.

b Job xiii. 28.

c 1 Chr. xxix. 15.

d See Job vii. 19; x. 20, 21.

"David pleads the good impressions made upon him by his affliction. It had set him a-weeping. It had set him a-praying. It had helped to wean him from the world." — Matthew Henry.

"They who know that everything is God's ordering are satisfied that He orders all for the best." — Fénélon.

"So what signifies wishing and hoping for better times? We may make these times better if we bestir ourselves." — Franklin.

PSALM THE FORTIETH.

author,— unknown; the time is the exile.

Subject, Thanksgiving and self-dedication.

1—5. (1) patiently, Heb. in waiting I waited; expressing the intense feeling of expectation.[e] (2) horrible pit,[f] he compares his plight to that of a prisoner in a dungeon (Lam. iii. 53, 55), or to that of a traveler floundering in a morass, or quicksand. Quagmires, "treacherous to the last degree," are common in Palestine. established, etc., or, made my footsteps firm. (3) new song,[g] one freshly started by this new deliverance. (4) respecteth not, turneth not to: the word generally used of apostasy. proud, so are called his high-handed enemies. lies, lying apostates, "either men who have forsaken the faith, or have broken their oaths of allegiance." — Spk. Com. (5) reckoned, they are innumerable. It is not only for his recent deliverance that the Psalmist owes thanks and gratitude to God. God's mercies in the past have been countless, and have laid him under unspeakable obligations.

Sinking but trusting (vs. 1). — I. The patience we should exercise: no insensibility, or stubbornness in action, or ease, or sloth. II. Some causes why it is not exercised. 1. Latent scepticism; 2. Self-reproach; 3. Self-confidence; 4. Weariness. III. Some reasons why we should exercise it. 1. The experience of all saints attests its desirability; 2. Our own utter inability; 3. The example of Jesus; 4. Our knowledge of the goodness of God. — Stems and Twigs.

The duke's example. — In a town in Bavaria, there is a little tumble-down church where the duke as often as he came that way used to go in and pray. If on coming out of the church he happened to meet any of the peasants, he loved to converse with them pleasantly. One day he met an old man, and after some talk, asked him whether he could do anything for him. The peasant replied, "Noble sir, you cannot do anything better for me than you have already done." "How so? I do not know that I have done anything for you." "But I know it," said the man; "for how can I forget that you saved

e Compare Ps. xxvii. 14; xxxvii. 7.

f "The metaphor of the pit may be used either with reference to a pit-fall for wild beasts, or a dungeon, such as that into which Jeremiah was cast (Jer. xxxviii. 6), and which would often have a damp and miry bottom." — Perowne.

g Ps. xxxiii. 3.

"By one and the same act the Lord works our salvation, our enemies' confusion, and the church's edification." — J. P. Lange.

my son! He traveled so long in sinful ways that for long he would have nothing to do with church or prayer. Some time ago he was here, and saw you, noble sir, enter this church. 'I should like to see what he does there,' said the young man scornfully to himself, and he glided in after you. But when he saw you pray so devoutly, he was so deeply impressed that he also began to pray, and from that moment became a new man. I thank you for it. This is why I said you can do me no greater favor than you have already done." — Illus. of O. T. Texts.

6, 7. Sacrifice . . not,[a] Sacrifice, of slain animals; offering, of the fruits of the earth, the "meal offering." 1 Sa. xv. 22. desire, R. V., "hast no delight in." mine ears,[b] etc., "God has endowed man with the faculty of hearing, and the endowment implies a corresponding duty of obedience." burnt . . offering, all the four kinds of offering provided for in the Jewish system are included in this verse; burnt-offering, symbolizing the dedication of the worshiper to God; sin offering, to reconcile and restore the sinner to God. hast not required, "all that God when forming Israel into a nation expressly required was obedience; and this was all that God, still required of each individual Israelite." — Cheyne. (7) come, R. V., "am come." The Psalmists' answer when aware of the divine requirements. volume of the book, or roll; ancient volumes were in the form of scrolls, or rolls.[c] it is written, better, "is it prescribed," "is my duty written:" i. e. the Psalmist promises to perform just what the "roll" — prob. the law — prescribes.

Life results of God's inward revelation to man (vs. 6). — I. A profound conviction of the spirituality of religion. 1. This result is rational; 2. Testing. II. A personal consecration to the Divine will. 1. This is voluntary; 2. Orderly; 3. Joyous. III. A faithful declaration of God's character. He declared — 1. His rectitude; 2. His fidelity; 3. Merciful interposition; 4. Goodness; 5. Revelation. — Thomas.

The Caffre converted. — A Caffre, a fine, tall, athletic young man, addicted to all the debasing and demoralizing customs of his nation, but who had occasionally attended public worship, one night resolved to go into the colony of Chumie for the purpose of stealing a horse, which is a common practice with them. He immediately left home, came into the colony, and watched for an opportunity of accomplishing his purpose, which soon presented itself. He found two horses grazing in a sheltered situation near a bush, and he instantly seized one of them, and made off with it as fast as he could. Elated with his success, and rejoicing in the prospect of securing his prize without being detected, he proceeded towards Caffreland, when all at once the thought struck him, "Thou shalt not steal." He could go no further, but immediately drew up the horse, and said to himself, "What is this? I have heard these words before, in the church, but I never felt as I do now. This must be the word of God." He dismounted, and held the bridle in his hand, hesitating whether to go forward with the horse or to return with it and restore it to the owner. In this state he continued for upward of an hour. At last he resolved to take the horse back again, which he accordingly did, and returned home a true penitent, determined to serve God. When he reached his dwelling he could not rest; sleep had departed from him; the sting of conviction abided deep in his conscience, and he could not shake it off. The next day he took an ox out of his kraal (cattle place) and went to the nearest village to sell it, in order that he might buy European clothing with the money, and attend the house of God like a Christian. When he returned with his clothes he went to the minister's house, and told him all that had taken place, and requested to be admitted on probation as a church member. The minister, cheered with his statement, received him: and after keeping him on trial the appointed time, and finding him consistent in his conduct, a short time ago baptized him; and he is now a full member of the Christian church, and adorning his profession.

8—12. (8) delight, find personal pleasure in it. Religion must be more than formal doing of duties if it is to be acceptable to God.[d] thy will, what thou approvest. within my heart, "as if God's law were itself the heart wh. gives life to his whole being." — Cam. Bib. (9, 10) have preached, R. V., "published," etc., "words are heaped on words to express the eager forwardness of a heart burning to show forth its gratitude." — Perowne. righteousness, i. e. Jehovah's power and willingness to prove Himself faith-

"Verily, were the arch-fiend of hell to start a carriage and pair, and live like a lord, he would have thousands who would court his acquaintance." — Spurgeon.

a Ps. li. 16, 17; lxix. 30, 31; Is. i. 11; Jer. vii. 21-23; Ho. vi. 6; Mi. vi. 6-8.

b "Thou hast given me capacity for hearing and obeying Thy law; a more valuable service than the mere offering of sacrifices." — Jennings and Lowe.

c Ewald would read this clause, "Behold I come with the volume of a book written." etc.

"So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
So near is God to man.
When Duty whispers low, Thou must
The youth replies, I can!"
Emerson.

Salvation is placed by the side of a believing look. "Look unto Me, and be ye saved." Can we have salvation on easier terms?

A highly esteemed young man was rescued from the water, and appeared to be dead. At length he began to show signs of life; and a thrill of joy ran through the crowd as it was whispered around, "He breathes!" How much greater the joy of men and angels over newly-born souls! "Repentance clothes in grass and flowers the grave in which the past is laid." — Sterling.

d "Personal and not ritualistic sacrifices are what God delights in" —Jennings and Lowe.

"It is more necessary to be saved than to be; better not to be than to have a being in hell."—Gurnall.

a "This passage was applied by the fathers, esp. by Augustine, to our Saviour, as bearing the sins of the church, of wh. He is at once the Head and Representative. Ps. xxxviii. 4; lxv. 3; lxix. 5; lxxiii. 26." —Spk. Com.

"The will of Jesus swung round instantly and easily, moving like a vane only in the direction of the Higher Will."—Burton.

"Doing God's will as if it were my own." —J. G. Whittier.

"The fairest and finest impression ot the Bible is to have it well printed on the reader's heart." — Arrowsmith.

"It takes courage to go into the world with a Christianity which you mean to make use of."—Anon.

"O God, who art the truth, make me one with Thee in everlasting love; I am often weary of reading and weary of working. In Thee alone is the sum of my desires. Let all teachers be silent; let the whole creation be dumb before Thee, and wilt Thou speak unto my soul?"—Thomas à Kempis.

"God gives the tree its nature, and plants it where it can best develop its nature, and looks for fruit according to its nature and place. So, after you have done your best work in the place where God has set you, do not be disturbed and irritated because it is not the rarer, more beautiful work of some other man." —M. R. Vincent ful to every promise and prophesy made to Israel. (11) Withhold, etc., as the Psalmist has been bold to speak for God, he now prays that God will not restrain His mercy, etc., to him. (12) iniquities, these, rather than external troubles, most deeply distress him.[a] taken . . me, R. V., "overtaken."

The hold of sin (vs. 12).— Sin takes hold of men — I. By its power, Prov. v. 22. II. By an accusing conscience. III. By its evil consequences. — Wolfendale.

Way to heaven.— "Fine sermon, wasn't it?" asked one of Farmer Peters' boarders, referring to a scholarly discourse with which the Meadowville meeting-house congregation had been favored that morning by a city clergyman. "Mebbe," returned Farmer Peters. "Why," persisted the boarder, "that man knows more about the Bible, he has made a deeper study of Biblical history and geography, than almost any other minister in this country." "Has he, now?" inquired Farmer Peters, mildly. "Well, then, I reckon the trouble must've been with me. You see I'd cal'lated I sh'd hear somethin' about the way to heaven, an' I only learned the way from Jerusalem to Jericho."— Youth's Comp.

The Bible the rule of action.— It is written of Boleslaus, one of the kings of Poland, that he carried about him the picture of his father, and when he was to do any great work, or set upon any design extraordinary, he would look on the picture, and pray that he might do nothing unworthy of such a father's name. Thus it is that the Scriptures are the picture of God's will, and therein drawn out to the very life; before a man enters upon or engages himself in any business whatsoever, let him look there, and read there what is to be done, what to be undone; and what God commands, let that be done, and what He forbids, let that be undone.

13—17. (13) Be pleased, etc., see Ps. lxx. (14) ashamed, etc., Ps. xxxv 4, 5. backward, as a routed army. put . . evil, R. V., "brought to dishonor that delight in my hurt." (15) aha, the exclamation of delight over another's misfortune, see Ps. xxxv. 21. (16) magnified, extolled, spoken highly of. (17) poor and needy, afflicted and poor. the Lord thinketh, better may the Lord think upon me. no tarrying, "the last word is a deep sigh." Cp. Daniel's prayer, Dan. ix. 19.

Man's hope in need (vs. 17).—I. Human wretchedness. We may admit the grandeur of man. Cannot deny the sorrow, etc., of life. II. Divine thoughtfulness, which indicates — 1. Divine condescension; 2. Divine estimates; 3. Divine provision. — Burrowes.

Poor and needy.—We have the comforting thought that, however humble, we have our place. We may be small, and of no reputation, but the Lord thinketh on us, has a place for us, and this should be enough. And as regards our affairs, it is true that they are mere straws in comparison with the great affairs of others; we have only to do with shillings where they have to do with thousands of pounds; we have only to do with aches and pains, where they have to do with life and death. But He who fashioned the creeping thing knows its need, and He who fashioned us knows ours.— P. H. Power.—The cruelty of persecutors. —In the St. Bartholomew massacre, at Vassy, when any of the victims desired to have mercy shown them for the love of Jesus, the murderers would say, "You use the name of Christ; but where is your Christ now?" So in the massacre of the prisoners at Trois, "Where is now your God?" cried the demons; "what has become of all your prayers and psalms now? Let your God, whom you call upon, save you if He can." Some of the wretches sung in scorn to their victims these words: "Judge me, O God, and plead my cause;" while others, beating them, cried, "Sing now, 'Have mercy on me, O God.'"— God's planting. — You are not to waste time in admiring or envying other men's modes of power, but to give your whole energy to the development of your own mode of power. And if your best is only a single fruit — why, many a time I have seen a gardener point with special pride and pleasure to a dwarf pear-tree which had gathered up its whole little life into one single pear; and if your life's best labor brings to pass but a single result, go back to the thought — God planted me — and be well content, as you will have a right to be, with the inference from that; He planted me that I might do that one thing. — M. R. Vincent.

PSALM THE FORTY-FIRST.

1—3. considereth, with "the kindness of a man who does not misinterpret the affliction." poor, in sense of affliction, not necessarily of poverty.[a] Used generally of those "afflicted in mind, body, or estate." time of trouble, R. V., "day of evil." (2) thou wilt not, better as marg. do not thou. (3) strengthen, R. V., "support" him from sinking into the grave. bed of languishing, a part at least of the Psalmist's trouble was a severe illness, which was interpreted to his injury. make . . bed, "all his couch dost Thou turn when he falleth sick."—Delitzsch. Turn from a couch of sickness to one of health.

The incidental blessings resulting from considering the pious poor.—1. We learn gratitude. 2. We see patience. 3. We often remark the triumphs of great grace. 4. We obtain light on Christian experience. 5. We have their prayers. 6. We feel the pleasure of beneficence. 7. We enter into communion with the lowly Saviour.—Spurgeon.

Care for poor.—Thomas Fuller tells how Queen Mary of England, abstracted from her evil counsellors, had good features of character. She erected again the hospital of the Savoy which had been founded by her grandfather, Henry VII.; and her maids of honor, out of her own wardrobe, furnished it with beds, blankets, and sheets; and then he adds, "Were any of those ladies still alive, I would pray for them in the language of the Psalmist: 'The Lord make all their bed in their sickness.' And He is a good bedmaker indeed, who can and will make it fit the person, and please the patient. But seeing such are all long since deceased, it will be no superstition to praise God for their piety, and commend their practice to the imitation of posterity."—Ker.—The three pillows (vs. 3).—When I visited one day, as he was dying, my beloved friend Benjamin Parsons, I said, "How are you to-day, sir?" he said, "My head is resting very sweetly on three pillows—infinite power, infinite love, and infinite wisdom." Preaching in the Canterbury Hall in Brighton, I mentioned this some time since; and many months after, I was requested to call upon a poor but holy young woman, apparently dying. She said, "I felt I must see you before I died; I heard you tell the story of Benjamin Parsons and his three pillows; and when I went through a surgical operation, and it was very cruel, I was leaning my head on pillows, and as they were taking them away, I said, 'Mayn't I keep them?' The surgeon said, 'No, my dear, we must take them away.' 'But,' said I, 'you can't take away Benjamin Parsons' three pillows; I can lay my head on infinite power, infinite love, and infinite wisdom.'"—Paxton Hood.

4—6. (4) I said, in the Heb. I is emphatic, I for my part. The poet turns from the compassionate man to give expression to his own feelings. soul, "the man's whole 'self,' the living personality wh. results fr. the union of spirit and flesh."—Cam. Bib. sinned, etc., before God the Psalmist recognizes the reason of his sufferings, but he mourns over the treatment received from his fellow-men. (5) of me, R. V., "against me, saying." When . . perish, they were watching anxiously for a fatal termination of the disease. (6) come to see me, allusion is distinctly made to some individual; we can only suppose that he refers to Ahithophel. vanity,[c] hypocritical expressions of condolence. gathereth . . itself, i. e. collects material for fresh accusation by observing the symptoms of the sick man.

Confession of sin (vs. 4).—This confession has been made by—I. The hardened sinner,—Pharaoh. II. The double-minded man,—Balaam. III. The insincere man,—Saul. IV. The doubtful penitent,—Achan. V. By the despairing man,—Judas. VI. By the saint,—Job. VII. By the prodigal.—Spurgeon.

Relief in prayer.—It is some consolation, it is some relief, to open our hearts to men, and to tell our sorrows to a friend, who can give us no relief but by mingling his tears with ours. What consolation, what relief will it then give to open our hearts, and tell our sorrows to that Friend above, who is ever gracious to hear, and ever mighty to save! To that Friend who never fails, who is afflicted in all our afflictions, and who keeps us as the "apple of the eye!" Art thou, therefore, oppressed with the calamities of life, is thy head bowed down with trouble, or thy heart broken with sorrow? Approach to the altar, go to God, present to Him the prayer of thy heart, and

author,—prob. David

Complaint of treacherous friends, such as Ahithophel.

a "The word is one of wide meaning, and is used of the poor (Ex. xxx. 15); of the lean and weak in body (Ge. xli. 19); of the sick in mind (2 Sa. xiii. 4)."—Perowne.

b "Thou wilt soon, when he is sick, turn all his being bedridden (into health)."—Jennings and Lowe.

"Not what we give, but what we share,—
For the gift without the giver is bare;
Who gives himself with his alms feeds three, Himself, his hungering neighbor, and me."
—J. R. Lowell.

c "He pretends friendship, and that his errand is to mourn with me, and to comfort me; he tells me he is very sorry to see me so indisposed, and wishes me my health; but it is all flattery and falsehood."—Matt. Henry.

The world, though tossed to and fro upon a sea of danger, yet never seems to cast its eye on the shore of safety. "Ye will not come unto Me that ye might have life."

"So thine own soul commend thee in the ways, Faint not, nor swerve from thine accepted aim,

He will send help to thee from His holy hill.—J. Logan.—An American lady.—The Rev. Dr. Mason, of New York, was some years since requested to visit a lady in dying circumstances, who, together with her husband, openly avowed infidel principles, though they attended on his ministry. On approaching her bedside, he asked her if she felt herself a sinner and perceived the need of a Saviour. She frankly told him she did not; and that she wholly disbelieved the doctrine of a mediator. "Then," said the doctor, "I have no consolation for you; not one word of comfort." Kneeling down by the bedside he prayed for her as a guilty sinner; and then arising from his knees left the house. A day or two after, he received a letter from the lady herself, earnestly desiring that he would come and see her without delay. He immediately obeyed the summons; but what was his amazement, when, on entering the room, she held out her hand to him, and said, with a benignant smile, "It is all true; all that you said on Sunday is true! I have seen myself the wretched sinner which you described me to be in prayer. I have seen Christ, that all-sufficient Saviour you said He was; and God has mercifully snatched me from the abyss of infidelity in which I was sunk, and placed me on the Rock of Ages. There I am secure; there I shall remain. I know in whom I have believed." On the evening of the same day she expired, in fullness of joy and peace in believing.—R. T. S.

Most diffident when men most loudly praise,
And unabashed beneath their harshest blame."
—Youth's Com.

"The difference between true and false repentance is as great as that between the running of water in the paths after a violent shower and the streams which flow forth from a living fountain."—Venn.

"Our Lord applied part of this verse to Judas, the betrayer, John xiii. 18. But it is significant that He omitted the words, 'Mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted.'"—Hom. Com.

7—9. (7) whisper,[a] "whisperers and backbiters are put together among the worst of sinners," Ro. i. 29, 30. devise my hurt, i. e. indulge in uncharitable speculations as to the cause of his illness, and hope for a speedy fatal issue. (8) evil disease, something dishonorable; a punishment which comes for evil doing. cleaveth, lit. is poured out on him, or smelted into him. rise no more, never get up from this sick bed.[b] (9) own . . friend, lit. man of my peace.[c] eat of my bread, so was in close and honored association.[d] lifted . . me, Heb. made great his heel, lifted it to trample me down; like a vicious horse, which kicks his own master. "The words 'he that eateth my bread lifted up his heel against me' are quoted by Christ in John xiii. 18 as fulfilled by the treachery of Judas. The words of the psalm are not a direct prediction, but the treachery and the fate of Ahithophel foreshadowed the treachery and the fate of Judas. What saints of old time had suffered by the desertion of friends must be suffered with an aggravated bitterness by the Son of Man. Their experience must be fulfilled in His. Cp. John xvii. 12; Acts i. 16."—Cam. Bib.

Blessings in disguise.—A naturalist, speaking of the swarms of insects which torment cattle in tropical lands, shows that the sufferings of the cattle issue in their safety. "Observe," says this writer, "that the furious eagerness of the winged insects, which seem to be the agents of death, is frequently a cause of life. By an incessant persecution of the sick flocks, enfeebled by hot damp airs, they ensure their safety. Otherwise they would remain stupidly resigned, and hour after hour grow less capable of motion, gloomier and more morbid in the bonds of fever, until they could rise no more. The inexorable spur knows, however, the secret of putting them on their legs; though, with trembling limbs, they take to flight, the insect never quits them: presses them, urges them, and conducts them, bleeding, to the wholesome regions of the dry lands and the living waters, where their furious guide abandons them, and returns to the pestilent vapors, to its realm of death." Thus David's nemies, like a swarm of winged insects, drove him to loftier heights of light. If he had been left to a level life of care and prosperity he might have fallen a victim to its relaxing influences, but persecutions and tribulations drove him to the higher walks of thought, and feeling, and life. —Hom. Com.

"The expression in this vs. "Thou favorest me," is characteristic of David. See Ps. xviii. 19; xxii. 8; xxxv. 27; 2 Sa. xv. 26.

10—13. (10) requite them,[e] apart from personal feeling it was a king's duty not only to repress revolt but also to punish the conspirators. (11) favourest,[f] R. V., "delightest in." (12) before thy face, so in thine acceptance. (13) Blessed, etc., "a later doxology appended, when the Pss. were collected, in order to mark the conclusion of the First Book." everlasting to everlasting, "'From æon to æon' means 'both in this æon and in the next.' The doxology thus becomes a creed; no one who disbelieved in a future life could repeat it."—Cheyne. amen, and amen, "so be it:" the response of the congregation to the doxology of the priests.

Before God's face.—The life of some creatures lieth in the light and

"The oriental feeling as to the sacredness of hospitality would stamp such conduct with peculiar blackness."—Perowne.

La Fontaine said: "Rare is true love; true friendship is still rarer." "In trust," said Queen Elizabeth, "I have found treason." "Friends!" said Socrates, "there is no friend."

"Such a wish cannot be reconciled with our better Christian conscience."—Perowne.

warmth of the sun ; and so doth the life of the saints lie in the light and warmth of God's countenance. And, as in an eclipse of the sun, there is a drooping in the whole frame of nature, so when God hides His face, gracious souls cannot but droop and languish, and bow down themselves before Him. Many insensible creatures, some by opening and shutting, as marigolds and tulips, others by bowing and inclining the head, as the solsequy and mallow-flowers, are so sensible of the presence and absence of the sun, that there seems to be such a sympathy between the sun and them, that if the sun be gone or clouded, they wrap up themselves or hang down their heads as being unwilling to be seen by any eye but his that fills them : and just thus it was with David when God had hid his face in a cloud. — Thomas Brooks.

"Men do not object to a battle if they are confident that they will have victory; and, thank God, every one of us may have the victory if we will." — D. L. Moody.

PSALM THE FORTY-SECOND.

author, — unknown

time prob. the exile

the beginning of Bk. II.

1—3. hart, or hind, as the female is referred to. panteth, Syr. brayeth, as if a peculiar cry of the thirsty animal were intended. The word is only found again in Joel i. 20. water-brooks, or water-courses.[a] (2) living God, as the source and sustainer of all life,[b] in contrast with the dead gods of the heathen. before God, "the regular formula for the stated visits to the temple" as required by the Mosaic law, Ex. xxiii. 17 ; xxxiv. 23. In the sanctuary God's presence was peculiarly manifested. (3) my meat, my daily portion, like my daily meal. where . . God? the bitterest of all taunts to the godly man. He is mocked as one forsaken by the God in whom he trusted. "The bitterest ingredient of his cup of sorrow is the taunt of the heathen that his plight demonstrates the importance or indifference of the God whom he serves." — Kirkpatrick.

"Not merely a quiet languishing, but a strong, audible thirsting or panting for water, caused by prevailing drought." — Delitzsch.

The Forty-second Psalm. — Perhaps somebody will one day write a book which shall gather up the services which unknown men have rendered to their race. Among these the author will surely include this forty-second psalm. It has been for centuries one of the most powerful cordials for the heart-sick and despondent, and its virtue has grown rather than diminished with the lapse of years, and yet we do not know its author, nor its date, nor the peculiar circumstances under which it was written. All we know is that it is the utterance of some one in deep trouble, and that it tells us how he found comfort, and how we may find it under similar circumstances. — Ker. — Thirst. — I have noticed when traveling among the woods and mountains that when a man was really thirsty, he was not very finical about the particular way of getting a drink. If he had a silver drinking cup with him, he used it of course ; but he seemed to drink with no less relish when he had to use a tin-cup, or a cow-horn, or even to lie flat down on the bank and drink from the stream itself. The amount of it was, he was thirsty; and people will not drink pure water when they are not thirsty ; they want something sweetened or spiced to tickle the palate. Only let our churches be filled with souls thirsting for the goodness which God has laid up for them in His word and ordinances, and there will soon be interest enough. — Ker.

a "The gazelle is constantly found resorting to the rocky ravines in quest of the pools of water left by the winter torrents." — Wilton.

b "Probably not without reference to the expression, 'living waters,' the quickening and restorative streams for wh. the thirsty soul longeth." — "A l'enfant il faut sa mère, A mon âme il faut mon Dieu. The infant needs its mother, my soul needs my God."

4, 5. (4) When . . things, R.V., "These things I remember and pour out," etc.[c] "He desires to indulge the sad pleasure of retrospect" when he led the pilgrims up to the great feasts. in me, or upon me.[d] for, R. V., "how." multitude, throng of pilgrims going to the feasts. went with them, Heb. went slowly as those in a procession. I . . with, R. V., "and led" as a Korahite skilled in song. "The joyousness of these processions was proverbial." kept holyday, or keeping festival.[e] (5) cast down, utterly prostrate.[f] O my soul, appeal to the higher spiritual principle in him. disquieted, or why moanest thou over me? hope thou, "distinguish bet. the feelings of faith that God is present, and the hope of faith that He will be so." — F. W. Robertson. help . . countenance, R. V., "health." Cheyne following LXX, "as the saviour of my countenance." The help of my countenance is a periphrasis for my help. — Cam. Bib.

"In such a recollection there would be mingled feelings of bitterness and consolation. No doubt the thought of those happy days in which he had traveled with the festal caravan to the holy city would make him feel more intensely his present loneliness." — Perowne.

Present sorrow, past joy (vs. 4). — I. The pleasures the Psalmist remembered. They were connected with — 1. The society he cultivated; 2. The day he observed. 3. The place he frequented; 4. The exercises in which he engaged. II. The sorrow he experienced. 1. Its occasion was the loss of religious privileges ; 2. Its measure was the sensibility of the soul; 3. Its expression was the language of prayer. — G. Brooks.

d "He distinguishes between the actual Ego and the afflicted spirit." — Delitzsch.

e Ex. xxiii. 14.

f Matt xxvi. 38; Jno. xii. 27.

"Thrice blest will all our blessings be,
When we can look through them to Thee,
When each glad heart its tribute pays
Of love and gratitude and praise."
—M. J. Cotterill.

Hope in God. — As you tarry before God, let it be in a deep, quiet faith in Him, the Invisible One, who is so near, so holy, so mighty, so loving. In a deep, restful faith, too, that all the blessings and powers of the heavenly life are around you and in you. Just yield yourself in the faith of a perfect trust to the ever-blessed Holy Trinity to work out all God's purpose in you. Begin each day thus in fellowship with God, and God will be all in all to you. — Andrew Murray.

6—8. (6) soul . . me, "in another equally plaintive psalm, too, though at first the poet 'can but moan' when he 'thinks upon God' — that God who seems to have cast off for ever' — yet soon afterwards a wider retrospect restores elasticity to his spirit. So here the poet has recourse to memory as a source of encouragement; he has reached a higher spiritual level." — Cheyne. land of Jordan, country district east of Jordan.[a] of the Hermonites, R. V., "Hermons:" either the two characteristic peaks, or the mountain range in the N. E. beyond Jordan. Mizar, a hill of this range, not precisely identified. (7) Deep . . over me, fig. taken fr. times of storm to represent the inner conflict through which the Psalmist was passing.[b] "The torrents and eddies of the Jordan suggest the breakers and waves of calamity wh. had gone over his head." waterspouts, cataracts, or waterfalls. (8) command, send His loving-kindness, as a heavenly messenger. "It is equally possible to render: Jehovah used to give his loving-kindness charge concerning me, And in the night his song was with me, Even prayer unto the God of my life. This rendering gives the best connection of thought. The verse is a retrospect like vs. 4, and is a further explanation of the 'remembering God' of which he speaks in vs. 6." — Cam. Bib.

Waterspouts. — Stand by the sea-coast of Palestine on some windy day, and watch the clouds which hang like a pall along the horizon. Now, suddenly, you shall see on the skirts of the clouds, a mass of black vapor, shaped like a long funnel, its smaller end resting on the sea, and the whole mass at once whirling on its own axis, and driven on by the wind with a terrific roar. Look down now at the sea, and behold how the commotion of its surface answers to the commotion above. Where the waterspout moves with its roar, the deep lifts up its voice in an answering roar. "Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of Thy waterspouts." And when these spouts break, as they do sometimes, on the mountains, then woe to the harvests and to the flocks. — M. R. Vincent.

9—11. (9) my rock, or steep cliff, high above the swirling waters.[c] mourning, lit. black, clad in mourning raiment. (10) with a sword, or with a crushing.[d] bones, denotes the whole physical organism. daily, R. V., "continually." (11) Why, etc., see vs. 5.

Cheer up (vs. 11). — I. The causes of spiritual despondency. 1. The burden of sin; 2. The wickedness of the world; 3. Earthly misfortunes. 4. Bereavements. II. The cure of despondency. 1. A present trust in God; 2. Looking to the future. III. The reasons for trust in God. 1. His present goodness to us; 2. His revealed relation to us. — W. W. Whythe.

Hope in God. — Here is God's own prescription for a downcast and disquieted soul. "Why art thou cast down?" Perhaps you are wrongfully disquieted; perhaps because you were trusting too much to riches or to position; perhaps because you have strayed from God, who ought to be your chief joy; or, possibly, your disquietude is His call to you to come back to His side. At all events, it is worth while to find the cause if you can; and in finding the cause you may find the remedy. It bids you not to forget gratitude in your sorrow. It bids you hope, never losing out of your mind the disciplinary purpose of God in all sorrow, and waiting in the confident expectation that "these light afflictions, which are but for a moment," shall work for you "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." If not here, why then by and by. — M. R. Vincent.

PSALM THE FORTY-THIRD.

author,—as previous psalm, of which this is really a part Subject, the cry of the exile to God.

1—5. (1) judge me, Psalmist asks judgment in the confidence that it will issue in his vindication.[e] against, i. e. "by delivering me from" the heathen who were destitute of the "milk of human kindness." deceitful . . man, the words may be understood collectively, "men of deceit and malignity," as

[a] "To which David had been driven from Jerus. by Absalom his son. See 2 Sa. xvii. 22." —Wordsworth.

"The abyss above calls on the abyss below, in the voice of the droppings of thy waterspouts." —Targum.

[b] "From Mizar the poet looks longingly towards the district round about his home, and just as there, in a strange land, the wild waters of the awe-inspiring mountains roar around him, there seems to be a corresponding tumult in his soul. . . . He feels as though all these threatening masses of water were rolling like so many waves of misfortune over his head."—Delitzsch.

[c] Ps. xviii. 2.

[d] "'With a breakage in my bones. His expression evidently means that the taunts of his adversaries cause him pain like a crushing blow which breaks his very bones."—Jennings and Lowe.

Is. xxxviii. 13.

"If the clouds do not disperse until the dark river be past, yet you may walk by God's voice though you see not His face."

[e] Ps. vii. 8, xxvi. 1.

a further description of the "inhuman nation" in general. — Kirkpatrick. (2) God of my strength, who art the source of my strength. dost, R. V., "hast." (3) light and truth, there may be an allusion to the Urim and Thummim, as the symbol of light and truth.[a] tabernacles, dwelling-place: the plural may have been used with reference to the various courts and buildings of wh. the temple was composed. (4) my exceeding joy, source and sustainer of all gladness and bliss. (5) Why, etc., Ps. xlii. 5.

Desiring communion with God (vss. 3, 4).— I. The Psalmist's earnest petition. 1. The subject of his request; 2. Its intention. II. The Psalmist's pious purpose. 1. The object of his devotion; 2. Its fervor · 3. Its manner. — Zeta in 400 Sks.

The soul's home. —

God only is the creature's home,
Though rough and straight the road:
Yet nothing less can satisfy
The love that longs for God.

How little of that road, my soul,
How little hast thou gone!
Take heart, and let the thought of God Allure thee further on. — F. W. Faber.

PSALM THE FORTY-FOURTH.

author, prob. a poet of the age of the Maccabees

1—8. (1) fathers have told, as they were enjoined to do.[b] work, etc.,[c] comp. Hab. i. 5. (2) heathen, R. V., "nations." cf., vss. 11, 14. with thy hand, these are the emphatic words signifying that Israel owed its possesion of Canaan to the help of Jehovah. plantedst them, i. e. our fathers. The fig. is taken fr. planting a vine; Ps. lxxx. the people, i. e. the original heathen population. cast them out, better taken as referring to the Israelites, "thou didst spread them out like the branches of a great tree," Ps. lxxx. 9. (3) For, etc., see De. viii. 17; Jos. xxiv. 12. thou . . them, God's free choice was the ground of His intervention on Israel's behalf.

God the source of all success (vs. 3). — The passage presents to us the following truths: — I. The co-operation of God secures the success of all right work. II. The spirit of true godliness will acknowledge God's co-operation. III. The recognition of God's co-operation in the work of others is largely useful to ourselves. — S. Martin.

The efficacy of prayer. — Heine, the well-known physician of Berlin, lost once very heavily by the bankruptcy of a mercantile house. Hufeland met him a few days after, and expressed his sympathy. "I had rather that you had not reminded me of it," he replied; "thank God, I have got over it." "How have you managed that?" "Well, I was unable to forget it; thought upon it night and day. All my money won so painfully, lost in a moment! Even my poor innocent patients suffered, for my thoughts were wandering. My domestic pleasures vanished: my good wife, otherwise so cheerful, hung her head; we sat opposite each other at table, dumb and sad; our children, that had been so full of joy, looked on with timid fear. I felt that this could not and must not continue. The money was gone, and with it we had lost our peace. I, poor worm of the earth, unable to come out of this distress, took refuge with the Almighty. I hurried to my bedroom, closed the door behind, and fell on my knees to pray with my whole heart, that strength, and courage, and joy, and rest, might be restored to me. Then I felt as if God appeared to me and said, 'Be again of good courage, and promise that thou wilt go joyfully back to thy calling!' And I promised; and wife and children were again cheerful; and I forgot the heaviness. I have got over it, and am once more happy with my God. And prayer has done all this."

4—8. (4) my King, a later mode of thinking concerning God: the Psalmist speaks for the whole nation: see the later Ps. lxxiv. 12. deliverances, i. e. full and complete salvation. Jacob, a later conception of the Jewish nation, Ps. lxxix. 7. (5) push down, the Heb. fig. is taken fr. horned beasts.[d] enemies, R. V., "adversaries." thy name, "The name of God is the compendious expression for his revealed char. and attributes." tread . . under, as Ps. lx. 12.[e] (6) I will not, the writer now gives his personal

[a] "The clause might be paraphrased — Give proof of Thy providential guidance of the true Israelite, and of Thy fidelity to the covenant." — Jennings and Lowe.

"The varied conflicts of the soul afford occasion for the exercise of the graces, and thus, through the Divine wisdom and goodness, are made the means of eventual good." — Henry March.

A Litany of Israel, when hard pressed by the enemy.

[b] Ex. x. 2; xii. 26, 27; xiii. 8, 10; De. vi. 20; Ju. vi. 13.

[c] "A term employed here collectively, gathering up in one the deliverance from Egypt, the guidance through the wilderness, and the settlement in Canaan." — Perowne.

"It is a solemn thought that the greatness of Divine love has its counterpart in the greatness of His indignation." — Spurgeon.

"No man can quench his thirst with sand, or with water from the Dead Sea; so no no man can find rest from his own character, however good, or from his own acts, however religious." — Bonar.

[d] De. xxxiii. 17.

[e] "Probably in the two words there is latent the conception of a wild beast goring an opponent and trampling him down with his hoofs."—Jennings and Lowe.

"The less confidence we have in ourselves or in anything beside God, the more evidence have we of the sincerity of our faith in God."—David Dickson.

"Who will adhere to him that abandons himself?"—Sir Philip Sidney feeling as leader in some enterprise, comp. vs. 3. (7) thou, Israel's God (8) In God we boast, R. V., "In God have we made our boast and we will," etc. Doubtless a musical interlude at this point.

The name of the Lord.— The Lord's name served instead of weapons, and enabled those who used it to leap on their foes and crush them with jubilant valor. In union and communion with God, saints work wonders; if God be for us, who can be against us? Mark well that all the conquests of these believers are said to be "through Thee," "through Thy name:" never let us forget this, lest going a warfare at our own charges, we fail most ignominiously. Let us not, however, fall into the equally dangerous sin of distrust, for the Lord can make the weakest of us equal to any emergency. Though to-day we are timid and defenseless as sheep, He can by His power make us strong as the firstling of his bullock, and cause us to push as with the horns of unicorns, until those who rose up against us shall be so crushed and battered as never to rise again. Those who of themselves can scarcely keep their feet, but like little babes totter and fall, are by Divine assistance made to overthrow their foes, and set their feet upon their necks.— Spurgeon.

a "Their enemies rifled them as their prey, at their pleasure, and without any resistance."—Calvin.

b "There may poss. be a reference to a Heb. father's right to dispose of his children; but it more prob. indicates a feeling that a people so cast off are treated as worthless."—Spk. Com.

De. xxxii. 30; Ju. ii. 14; iii. 8; iv. 2, 9.

"Some sinners repent with an unbroken heart. They are sorry, and yet go on as did Pilate and Herod."—Nevin.

9—14. (9) but, R. V., "but now." hast cast off, the leader's personal confidence is sorely tried by present discouragements. armies, a term implying large armies. (10) turn back, if not defeated, yet unable to accomplish our aims. for themselves, or at their own will.[a] (11) sheep, some are slaughtered, others are sold as prisoners of war into captivity. among the heathen, R. V., "among the nations." (12) for nought, "for a mere trifle."[b] (13) reproach, by reason of such humiliation; Ps. xxxix. 8. (14) byword, or proverb. The neighboring nations, Philistines, Edomites, Ammonites, Moabites, were always jealous of Israel, and ready to rejoice with a malicious delight at Israel's humiliation.

Rev. G. Wishart.— The name of this eminent man is well known in Scotland, where he acted a distinguished part in the reformation of religion, which rendered him a constant object of the hatred of the Popish party. Cardinal Beaton frequently formed plans to take away his life. At one time he procured a letter to be sent to him as from an intimate friend, the laird of Kinnier, in which he was requested to come to him without delay, as he had been seized with sudden illness. In the meantime the cardinal had provided sixty men to waylay him and deprive him of his life. The letter having been delivered by a boy, who also brought a horse to convey him on his journey. Wishart set out, but suddenly stopping by the way, avowed to the friends who had accompanied him his strong conviction that God did not will that he should proceed; for that there was treachery in this business. They went forward without him, and discovered the whole plot, by which means his life was preserved. — R. T. S.

c See Ps. viii. 2.

d "The whole of this very remarkable passage claims for the Israelites not only freedom fr. the old national tendency to idolatry, but thorough sincerity in religion, and consistent integrity of life. The only time at wh. such a description could be used with propriety must have been one of national reformation."—Spk. Com.

e Jer. ix. 10; x. 22.

15—19. (15) My confusion, etc., R. V., "all the day long is my dishonor before me;" obs. how the personal and the representative are blended in this Ps. (16) of him, apparently some enemy who was especially insulting. avenger, the enemy now taking his opportunity to avenge former defeats.[c] (17) not forgotten thee, i. e. the national distress was not directly connected with national apostasy.[d] (18) steps, or goings. "Neither in respect of inward feeling nor of outward act have we strayed from the right path." (19) Though . . death, Polychr., "That thou shouldest have trampled us all like a worm, and with darkness have covered us over." dragons, or jackals; a fig. for a place of desolation, such as would be inhabited by jackals.[e] covered, etc., or "overwhelmed us with deep gloom."

The joy of believers.— Happy saints! If all the waves of affliction and rolling billows upon which you are tossed in the troublesome sea of this world set you daily, yea hourly, nearer to the fair haven of everlasting happiness. But, O then, be sure you steer your course by the sacred compass of the Word of God; be daily preparing yourselves by a holy life for a happy death, if you desire to enter into a glorious eternity. In vain shall you long for heaven, if you still live in sin, which is but to walk in the way to hell. Unless the image of God be renewed upon your souls while you are yet on earth, never shall you see the face of God in heaven. Daily crucify your corruptions, exercise your graces perfecting holiness in the fear of God, and so prepare yourselves for heaven. Then may you, with comfort, look for Christ's coming, who will receive you up into His kingdom and glory. True believers love the appearing of Christ. — Willes.

20—22. (20) stretched . . hands, in the customary attitude of prayer.[a] (21) search, see Ps. cxxxix.[b] (22) yea . . slaughter, or "Nay, but for Thy sake," etc. "Not only have we not been unfaithful to Thee, but we are actually suffering as martyrs for Thy sake." — Kirkpatrick. Such a protest was no doubt particularly true in the persecution of Antiochus, but not in that period only; see Ro. viii. 36.

Perseverance in and through prayer. — Let us not stagger, let us not faint, let us not give over the combat; but let us stand to it stoutly, fight valiantly, play the man, and let our hearts be comforted, for the Lord will come speedily, and with strong hand break the power of the malicious. For as God exhorteth us to fight, so He helpeth us to overcome. He beholdeth us in the conflict; if we faint, He aideth us; if we overcome, He crowneth us. Therefore, in all temptations, let us have recourse to Him by earnest prayer; that "being strengthened with all might by His glorious power, we may be able to resist in the evil day." — C. Richardson. — Martyr song. — The words quoted by the Apostle Paul, Rom. viii., and enshrined in a triumphant hymn of victory, were sung by the noble Bohemians, who were executed in the midst of a terrible persecution of the Protestants by Ferdinand of Austria, in the Grosser Ring at Prague, June 21, 1621. Forty-seven were executed on two separate days, and among them were those men of the nation most distinguished for rank, learning, and piety. As the first passed on to their death, those still in prison sang to them, "Yea, for thy sake are we killed all the day long, we are counted as sheep for the slaughter." They spent the night after in psalms, prayer, and mutual exhortation. When called forth, one by one, they went to their death with undaunted heart, and took leave of each other with the words: "Farewell, loving friends; God give you the comforts of His Spirit, patience and courage, that what you have confessed with your mouth you may confirm with your death." — Ker. — For thy sake. — This passage is cited by St. Paul, Rom. viii. 36, apparently from the LXX, in illustration of the fact that the church of God has in all ages been a persecuted church. But there is this remarkable difference between the tone of the Psalmist and the tone of the apostle: the former cannot understand the chastening, and complains that God's heavy hand has been laid without cause upon His people; the latter can rejoice in persecution also, and exclaim, "Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors, through Him that loved us." — Perowne.

23—26. (23) sleepest thou, "faith cannot dispense with symbols, and weak faith naturally falls into the worn-out symbols of a lower stage of religion. A 'full assurance of faith' would have rejected the idea of Jehovah's sleeping." — Cheyne. Ps. vii. 6; cxxi. 3, 4.[c] (24) Wherefore . . face, in anger or indifference. forgettest, or dost act as if thou didst forget. (25) belly, etc., strong fig. for a prostrate, groveling condition. (26) for our help, or, be a help to us. mercies' sake, R. V., "loving kindness' sake."

A sleeping God. — In Southeastern India there is a wild race which believes that all the evil in the world is done whilst God is sleeping; if He were not obliged to sleep there would be no sickness, no sorrow, no death. What a comfort to feel that God's eyes neither slumber nor sleep, and that He is never far from any one of us. God is the nearest to us when we want Him the most. — Hom. Com.

PSALM THE FORTY-FIFTH.

1—4. (1) inditing, Heb. boileth or bubbleth up, as an overflowing fountain. good matter, or "goodly words," the nobility of his subject inspires excited, joyous feelings.[d] the king, Cheyne, "I address my work unto the king; be my tongue the pen of a ready scribe;" i. e. he needs a nimble pen man to keep up with his thoughts about such an exalted subject. (2) fairer, etc., placed first very appropriately in a bridal hymn.[e] grace, words of graciousness proceed from lips about wh. a smile plays. therefore, bec. the will of the king conforms to the will of God. "Physical qualifications correspond to moral qualifications." for ever, ref. to God's covenant with David; 2 Sa. vii. 13-29. (3) Gird . . thigh, fig. for preparing the royal warrior for the procession of peace. most mighty, R. V., "mighty one." glory and . . majesty, i. e. gird on thy glory and majesty, which should be a Ps. xxviii. 2; cxliii. 6.

b Compare Job xxxi.

"We many times condemn others and therein pass sentence against ourselves; thus Judah said of Tamar, Bring her forth and let her be burnt, not considering that he spake the word against his own soul. Thus David to Nathan, The man that hath done this thing shall die, not considering that he was the man." — Venning.

"Repentance begins in the humiliation of the heart, and ends in the reformation of the life." — Mason.

"Real repentance consists in the heart being broken for sin and from sin." — Nevins.

c "The sleep of God, a bold metaphor, implies an apparent suspension of His providential government, when His foes are triumphant, and His servants defeated." — Spk. Com.

author,— not known

The marriage song of a king. Probably Solomon's marriage to Pharaoh's daughter.

Recognized as a Messianic Psalm. Shoshannim, lilies; the name of a tune. Song of loves, a conjugal or love song.

d "His heart is brimming over with fervent thoughts which force themselves into words, and his tongue frames poetry as fast as the pen can write it down." — Jennings and Lowe.

e "Beauty was regarded by the to him as royal robe. (4) ride, R. V., "ride on." prosperously,[a] to certain victory for virtue and love. because of, better "in the cause of." right hand . . things, i. e. his strength and victory reveals the Divine power with wh. he has been endued.

The King of kings (vs. 2). — I. The personal excellencies of Christ, "Thou art," etc. 1. They are of a moral and mental character; 2. They are not derived; but His own native meritorious perfections. II. His peculiar official qualifications, "Grace is," etc. 1. The doctrine He teaches, the manner in which it is conveyed to the mind; the effect it produces all is grace; 2. The plenitude of this possession. III. His eminent prosperity and success. 1. It descends through Him upon all Hi subjects; 2. It comprehends perpetual increase; 3. We must look even beyond the glory of the latter day. —D. Katterns.

The personal appearance of Christ. — We have no account in the Gospels of our Saviour's person. Some writers of an early age (but none so early as to have seen Him) speak of it as wanting dignity, and of His physiognomy as unpleasing. It would be difficult, I believe, to find any better foundation for this strange notion, than an injudicious interpretation of certain prophecies, in a literal meaning, which represent the humiliation which the Son of God was to undergo, by clothing His divinity with flesh, in images taken from personal deformity. But from what is recorded in the Gospels of the case with which our Saviour mixed in what, in the modern style, we should call good company; of the respectful attention shown to Him, beyond anything His reputed birth or fortune might demand; and the manner in which His discourses, either of severe reproof or gentle admonition, were received, we may reasonably conclude that He had a dignity of exterior appearance remarkably corresponding with that authority of speech which, upon some occasions, impressed even His enemies with awe, and with that dignified mildness which seems to have been His more natural and usual tone, and drew the applause and admiration of all who heard Him. External feature, however, is generally the impression of the mind upon the body, and words are but the echo of the thoughts; and in prophecy more is usually meant than meets the ear n the first sound, and most obvious sense of the term employed. Beauty and grace of speech are certainly used in this text as figures of much higher qualities, which were conspicuous in our Lord, and in Him alone of all the sons of men. That image of God in which Adam was created, in our Lord appeared perfect and entire; in the unspotted innocency of His life, the sanctity of His manners, and His perfect obedience to the law of God; in the vast powers of His mind, intellectual and moral; intellectual, in His comprehension of all knowledge; moral, in his power of resisting all the allurements of vice, and of encountering all the difficulties of virtue and religion, despising hardship and shame, enduring pain and death. This was the beauty with which He was adorned beyond the sons of men. In Him, the beauty of the Divine image was refulgent in its original perfection; in all the the sons of Adam obscured and marred in a degree to be scarce discernible; the will depraved, the imagination debauched, the reason weak, the passions rampant! This deformity is not externally visible, nor the spiritual beauty which is its opposite; but, could the eye be turned upon the internal man, we should see the the hideous shape of a will at enmity with God; a heart disregarding His law, insensible of His goodness, fearless of His wrath, swelling with the passions of ambition, avarice, vainglory, lust. Yet this is the picture of the unregenerated man, by the depravity consequent upon the fall, born in iniquity, and conceived in sin. Christ, on the contrary by the mysterious manner of His conception, was born without spot of sin; He grew up and lived full of grace and truth, perfectly sanctified in flesh and spirit. With this beauty He was "adorned beyond the sons of men."

5–8. (5) Thine . . thee, R. V., "Thine arrows are sharp. The peoples fall under thee; They are, in the heart of the king's enemies." Polychr.: "Thine arrows pierce home in the heart of the foes of the King, nations shall under thee fall to the ground."[b] arrows, etc., a vigorous picture of the scenes of a battle-field. (6) Thy throne, O God, O Elohim, prob. means either Thy Divinely-constituted throne or the king is spoken of as God's representative.[c] Whatever may be the precise rendering, there can be little doubt that the words contain a reference to the promise of eternal dominion to the house of David, which was fulfilled in Christ. — Cam. Bib. the Heb. as the outward manifestation of inherent nobleness, or of a nature akin to the Divine. Here the representation is unquestionably Ideal; it refers to the Messiah."—Spk. Com.

[a] Re. vi. 2; xix. 11, 15, 16.

"Christ's doctrine must be observed above all other doctrines, be they of angels or of men, because He neither could nor willed to err in His teaching. But in men's doctrine there chanceth oftentimes to be error; and therefore we must forsake their doctrine if cloakedly or expressly they be repugnant to the doctrine of Christ. . . . He being the Wisdom that cannot be deceived, and the Truth that cannot be uttered of man's lips, He hath in this world taught the will of God His Father." —W. Bruce.

"The grace which is here specially ascribed to the lips is manifestly but a reflection of the loveliness of the speech which streams from the lips."

We call the prophets the panman of Scriptures, whereas they were but the pan." —Matthew Henry.

"I have a passion," observed Count Zinzendorf in one of his discourses to the congregation at Herrnhut, "and it is He—He only."

[b] "The arrows of Christ are the winged words of apostolic teaching, by wh. the hearers were pierced to the heart; not for death, but life eternal; and by wh. His enemies are made to become His friends." S. Basil and S. Jerome, through Wordsworth.

[c] "The person before the Psalmist's sceptre, symbol of government.[a] right, R. V., "of equity." (7) oil of gladness, with joy symbolized on festive occasions by precious unguents.[b] "The rejoicings of the marriage festival are meant." From this point the psalm becomes a marriage song. (8) myrrh,[c] a gum resin celebrated for its aromatic properties. aloes, resin of an odoriferous tree. cassia, the bark of an aromatic plant. The bridegroom appears, arrayed for the marriage, his garments saturated with costly perfumes, brought from distant lands. ivory palaces, adorned with, not built of ivory. whereby they have, R. V., "stringed instruments have," etc. Music meets the bridegroom as he enters the palace.

Note on verses 6 and 7. — These vss. are quoted in Heb. i. 8, 9. It is commonly supposed that the force of the quotation lies in the Divine title (ὁ θεός) which, as it is held, is applied to the Son. It seems however from the whole form of the argument to lie rather in the description which is given of the Son's office and endowment. The angels are subject to constant change. He has a dominion for ever and ever; they work through material powers. He—the Incarnate Son — fulfills a moral sovereignty and is crowned with unique joy. Nor could the reader forget the later teaching of the psalm on the Royal Bride and the Royal Race. In whatever way then ὁ θεός be taken, the quotation establishes the conclusion which the writer wishes to draw as to the essential difference of the Son and the angels.— Bp. Westcott.

God's arrows are sharp. — Adolph Monod, at Lyons, France, one Lord's day was preaching from the text, "God so loved the world," etc. He spoke of Christ as the true God-man, and announced that the next Sabbath he would show how men could be saved by faith in this God-man. But the authorities of this church were opposed to a doctrine so purely evangelical, and informed Monod that if he did not omit the sermon he had announced, they would have him arrested and brought before the Prefect, and dismissed from his office. Monod, notwithstanding, preached his sermon, and the authorities made their complaint. The Prefect demanded the two sermons, and Monod sent them to him. The Prefect, Count de Gasparin, was a Catholic. He came home at evening to his wife, and found the sermons. He never liked sermons, especially evangelical sermons: but he was a man who discharged faithfully the duties of his office. It was necessary that the sermons should be read. He came to his wife with the manuscripts in his hand, complaining that he would have to give up the whole evening to this irksome and protracted labor. She offered, as her husband's worthy helpmeet, to read them with him. They began. With every page they grew more interested. They forgot that it was evening and night. That which at first was an official duty became a service of the heart. They finished the first, and eagerly grasped the second. And what was the result? As a magistrate, Gasparin was forced to deprive Monod of his place, because all the authorities demanded it. But he and his wife became evangelical Christians, living, joyful, and happy believers in Christ. They found that night "the pearl of great price," and it has remained in the family. Their son, Count Agenor de Gasparin, has long been the head and pillar of the evangelical party in France.— Anec. illus. of O. T. Texts.

9—12. (9) honorable women, lit. precious ones; jewels. Reference is prob. to the other wives and concubines of the monarch. did,[d] R. V., "doth." gold of Ophir, Job xxviii. 6.[e] (10) forget . . people, fr. this it would seem that she was a foreign princess; she must adapt herself to the new home and new surroundings. (11) worship, render reverence to him. "This exhortation, and the title lord for husband reflect the subordinate position of women in ancient times and oriental countries."—Kirkpatrick. (12) daughter of Tyre, fig. for her princely merchants bringing rich bridal gifts. rich . . people, wealthy nobles of Israel.

An offer of marriage (vss. 10, 11).—I. The Lord Jesus addresses to us kind and gracious overtures, for a union resembling marriage. II. He expects us to entertain his overtures seriously. III. He requires us to abandon all others for His sake. IV. He promises to be highly gratified with the contemplation of us. V. He commands us to honor Him with our worship and service. — G. Brooks.

Worship thou Him (vs. 11).— A Spanish boy, who was a Roman Catholic, having a silver crucifix hanging in his bosom, was asked by a person in his company to sell it for half a dollar, at which he shook his head. He was then offered a dollar, to which he answered in broken accents, "No, not for tousand mind was a visible manifestation of the Godhead; the ideal King of whom his earthly sovereign was an imperfect type."— Spk. Com.

a Ps. lxvii. 4, xcvi. 10.

b Ps. cxxxiii. 2.

c Ex. xxx. 23, 24.

"vs. 8, describes the burst of jubilant music which welcomed and rejoiced the king as he approached the 'palaces of ivory,' where his bride waited his coming."—Exp. B.

"Cling fast to the hand that is leading you, though it be in darkness, though it be in deep waters; you know whom you have believed. Yield not for a single moment to misgivings about future storms. Infinite love, joined to infinite skill, will pilot the way through every strait and temptation."— J. Alexander.

d "Polygamy was practised even by the best of kings; and the Psalmist is describing the magnificence of an Oriental court, such as it actually existed before his eyes, not drawing a picture of what ought to be in a perfect state of things."— Perowne.

e 1 Chr. xxix. 4.

"The rich, golden shaft
Hath killed the flock of all affections else That live in her."

of tousands." Is not this a keen reproof to children in Protestant countries, who live in the awful neglect of God's "unspeakable gift?"

13—17. (13) within, i. e., in the inner chamber where she takes off her veil her full beauty is revealed. R. V., "within the palace." wrought gold, R. V., "in wrought with gold."—Polychr., "pearls woven in gold." (14) raiment of needle-work, or of embroidery. (15) gladness, as a festive band, with music and dancing. (16) instead . . fathers, if he cannot boast of a long line of royal ancestors, may he at least be blessed with a numerous and noble posterity. children,[a] etc., fruits of the royal marriage. The new queen is comforted in separating from her father's house by the vision of her posterity. mayest, R. V., "shalt." (17) thy name, some refer this and prev. vs. to the king.[b] The poet's song will perpetuate the memory of the king among all the nations of the earth.

The Church's beauty and happiness (vss. 13–16).—Let us consider—I. Her transcendent qualities. 1. The internal qualities of her mind; 2. The external habits of her life. Suited to these qualities is—II. The felicity prepared for her. 1. In due time she shall be brought to the King's palace; 2. While here she is to make herself ready; 3. The work completed, she shall be introduced. Address—(1) Those who have never yet espoused the Lord; (2) Those who profess to stand in the relation of spouse to Christ.—C. Simeon.

The King's daughter.—One day, a poor pious woman called upon two elegant young ladies, who received her with Christian affection, regardless of her poverty, and sat down in the drawingroom, to converse with her upon religious subjects. While thus employed, their brother, a gay youth, came in, and appeared astonished to see his sisters thus situated and employed. One of them instantly started up, saying—"Brother, don't be surprised; this is a King's daughter, though she has not yet got on her fine clothes."—Whitecross. Characteristic of this psalm.—This psalm is a poetical composition, in the form of an epithalamium, or song of congratulation, upon the marriage of a great king, to be sung to music at the wedding-feast. The topics are such as were the usual groundwork of such gratulatory odes with the poets of antiquity; they all fall under two general heads,—the praises of the bridegroom and the praises of the bride. The bridegroom is praised for the comeliness of his person and the urbanity of his address, for his military exploits, for the extent of his conquests, for the upright administration of his government, for the magnificence of his court. The bride is celebrated for her high birth, for the beauty of her person, the richness of her dress, and her numerous train of blooming bridesmaids. It is foretold that the marriage will be fruitful, and that the sons of the great king will be sovereigns of the whole earth. In this general structure of the poem, we find nothing but the common topics and the common arrangement of every wedding song: but when we recollect that the relation between the Saviour and His Church is represented in the writings both of the Old and New Testament under the image of the relation of a husband to his wife, that it is a favorite image with all the ancient prophets, when they would set forth the loving-kindness of God for the Church, or the Church's dutiful return of love to Him; while on the contrary, the idolatry of the Church, in her apostasies, is represented as the adultery of a married woman; that this image has been consecrated to this signification by our Lord's own use of it, who describes God in the act of settling the Church in her final state of peace and perfection, as a king making a marriage for his son;—the conjecture that will naturally arise upon the recollection of these circumstances will be, that this epithalamium, preserved among the sacred writings of the ancient Jewish Church, celebrates no common marriage, but the great mystical wedding, that Christ is the bridegroom, and the spouse His Church. And this was the unanimous opinion of all antiquity, without exception even of the Jewish expositors. For although, with the veil of ignorance and prejudice upon their understandings and their hearts, they discern not the completion of this or of any of their prophecies in the Son of Mary, yet they allow that this is one of the prophecies which relate to the Messiah and Messiah's people; and none of them ever dreamed of an application of it to the marriage of any earthly prince.

The king's daughter.—

How is she clothed? It matters not;
In faded garments patched and thin,

[a] For spiritual reference see 1 Pe. ii. 9; Re. i. 6, v. 10, xx. 6.

[b] This view is supported by the fact that the pronouns are in the masculine gender.

"The psalm had a historical basis; and it has also a prophetic meaning, because the king of Israel was himself a type, and Jesus Christ is the fulfilment of the ideal never realized by its successive occupants."—Exp B.

"The Gospel doth not only represent the doctrine of Christ to be believed; but also the life of Christ to be followed; nor shall any have Him for their advocate and propitiation, but such as are willing to have Him for their pattern and example; to copy out and imitate His humility, patience, purity benignity, and self-resignation. None shall be benefited by His death that are unwilling to live His life."—Worthington.

"There is no food for soul or body which God has not symbolized. He is light for the eye, sound for the ear, bread for food, wine for weariness, peace for trouble. Every faculty of the soul, if it would but open its door, might see Christ standing over against it, and silently asking by His smile, 'Shall I come in unto thee?' But men open the door, and look down, not up; and thus see Him not."—Beecher.

"Let us be thankful for a great past and for the golden present; but let our habitual attitude be one of prayerful and hopeful expectancy, 'looking

Or if she walk in silk attire—
She is "all glorious within."

Is she adorned? Sometimes upon Her white hands diamonds shine, Sometimes they're dark, and bear the stains
Of many a toilworn line.

How is she fed? It matters not—
On honey and finest wheat, Or worker's crust—she daily of
The heavenly food doth eat.

And is she fair? Most passing fair.
The fleshly veil grows thin.
Like flame through a transparent glass Streams radiance from within.

A daughter of The King! Upon
Her breast His sign she bears.
And sin and shame shrink back abashed
Before the cross she wears. — Bessie Hart Adams.

PSALM THE FORTY-SIXTH.

1—3. (1) very . . trouble, "a help in afflictions hath He let Himself be found exceedingly" (i. e. constantly). (2) removed, or "changes," undergoes a series of convulsions. Prob. to be understood of political changes and revolutions (see vs. 6). be carried, totter (and fall).[a] Polychr. "though the earth bubble, and though mountains shake in the heart of the sea." (3) roar, or rage and foam.[b] — Cam. Bib. Cheyne, Polychr. add here the refrain, "Jehovah of hosts is with us; The God of Jacob is our fortress."

God a refuge. — On this psalm Luther has founded his notable hymn, Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott, "A fortress strong is God our Lord." It breathes the force of battles, faces fearlessly the fire and the scaffold, and thrills in every line with unconquerable faith and Christian heroism. It was written in 1529, during the preparations for the Diet of Augsburg, when the Protestant cause seemed wavering in the balance. During the sitting of the Diet, Luther resided at the Castle of Coburg, and he sang it to the lute every day, standing at the window, and looking up to heaven. When Wittenberg was surrendered to Charles V., and Melancthon, Jonas, and Kreutziger, who, after Luther's death, were the leaders of the German Reformation, were sent into banishment, they entered Weimar in great trouble of spirit. As they passed along the street, they heard a girl singing Luther's hymn. "Sing on, dear daughter mine," Melancthon said; "thou knowest not what comfort thou bringest to our heart." Before the battle of Leipsic, Sept. 17, 1631, Gustavus Adolphus asked his whole army to sing it, and after the victory he thanked God that the word was made good. "The field he will maintain it." Before the Edict of Toleration in 1781, by the Emperor Joseph II., the Protestants of Linz were torn from their families and banished to Transylvania. In their bitter grief they sang with tears the words of this hymn:

"Take, if they will, our life,
Goods, honor, children, wife,
Yet is their profit small,
These things may vanish all,
The city of God remaineth." — Ker.

4—7. (4) river, etc., one never-failing stream of water supplied Jerusalem.[c] shall, R. V., omits. make glad, "the gently flowing river, fertilizing all the land over which it is distributed in channels and rivulets, is an emblem of Jehovah's presence, blessing and gladdening His city." — Cam. Bib. Polychr. "A brook, whose waters . . . Is the Most High in His habitation." tabernacles, the sanctuary with its courts. (5) right early, lit. at the turning unto Jesus,' who is able to do greater things for his faithful and obedient people." — J. H. Barrows.

"The highest joy is an edelweiss; it grows only bosomed in the snow and nursed by tempests. There is no joy like divinely joyful sorrow, as there is no strength like the divinely strengthened weakness. This is the paradox of Christian experience." — Lyman Abbott.

author,—prob. Isaiah, referring, (with Pss. xlvii. and xlviii.) to Sennacherib's Invasion.

A hymn of triumph after a great deliverance.

Alamoth. soprano or virgin voices.

a "By these terms are represented general social convulsions, evidently connected in their origin with a great invasion. The same figs. recur in Ps. xciii." — Jennings and Lowe.

b "The music, wh. here becomes forte, strengthens the believing confidence of the congregation, despite this wild excitement of the elements." — Delitzsch

"God is present helping us to bear trouble, to improve it, and to survive it. Present by gracious communications and sweet manifestations; present most when he seems absent, restraining, overruling, and sanctifying trouble. Trust and wait." — James Smith.

c "In its gentle, undisturbed, refreshing flow, it was an image of the peace and blessing wh. the holy city enjoyed under the protection of God."—Perowne.

a Ex. xiv. 27; 2 Ki. xix. 35.

See Is. viii. 6.

"Not with noise nor tumult, but in silent communication, God's grace and peace refresh the soul. Power is loud, but Omnipotence is silent."

Hezekiah led the waters under cover into Jerus. in the time of siege. 2 Chron. xxxii. 3, 4.

"The wider a Christian's knowledge of his religion and its triumphs, the broader will be his enjoyment of it. All of its successes will be his successes."

"Leave off to oppose and vex my people. I am over all for their safety."—Fausset.

b 2 Ki. xix. 19.

c "Let all believers triumph in this—they have the presence of a God of power—of all power. They are under the protection of a God in covenant, who not only is able to help them, but is engaged in honor and faithfulness to help them.'—Mat. Henry.

"The voice which melted the earth speaks at the close of the psalm; not now with destructive energy, but in warning, through which tones of tenderness can be caught."—Maclaren.

author and date as previous psalm

A nation's thanksgiving.

d 2 Ki. xi. 12.

As poetic figures see Ps. xcviii. 8; Is. lv. 12.

e Ps. lxv. 5; lxviii. 35; lxxvi. 7-9.

f "God is ever choosing Israel's of the morning.[a] "The deliverance of Israel from Sennacherib came, it is to be remembered, when it was discovered 'early in the morning' that in the camp of the Assyrians were 185,000 'dead corpses' (2 Kings xix. 35)." (6) heathen. R. V., "nations." melted, was dissolved. (7) Lord of hosts, Jehovah of Hosts. The title is a favorite one with Isaiah, and its use here is significant. "The Psalmist rests his confidence on two principles—the universality of God's dominion, and His covenanted relation to the Heb. as God of Jacob."

Living water.—"This brook will soon run dry," said one. "Nay," quoth his fellow, "it flows from a living spring, which was never known to fail in summer or in winter." A man was reputed to be very rich by those who saw his expensive houses, and horses, and charges; but there were others who judged that his name would soon be in the Gazette, for he had no capital. "There is nothing at the back of it," said one, and the saying meant much. Now, the believer has the eternal deep for his spring of supply, and the all-sufficiency of God as the substance of his wealth. What cause has he to fear? —Spurgeon.—Calmness in a storm.—When Sir Walter Scott was a schoolboy between ten and eleven years of age, his mother one morning saw him standing still in the street and looking at the sky in the midst of a tremendous thunder-storm. She called to him repeatedly, but he did not seem to hear; at length he returned into the house and told his mother that if she would give him a pencil, he would tell her why he looked at the sky. She acceded to his request, and in a few minutes he laid on her lap the following lines:

Loud o'er my head what awful thunders roll,
What vivid lightnings flash from pole to pole;
It is Thy voice, O God, that bids them fly;
Thy voice directs them through the vaulted sky;
Then let the good Thy mighty power revere,
Let harden'd sinners Thy just judgments fear.

8—11. (8) Come, addressed to the heathen nations especially. desolations, of Israel's enemies, as cause for astonishment. (9) wars to cease, bringing them to an issue by His interposition. (10) Be still, cease ye; let your hand sink down.[b] (11) The Lord, etc., as vs 7.[c]

I am God.—1. In that He is God, He is an absolutely and infinitely perfect being. 2. As He is God He is so great, that He is infinitely above all comprehension. 3. As He is God, all things are His own. 4. In that He is God, He is worthy to be sovereign over all things. 5. In that He is God, He will be sovereign, and will act as such. 6. In that He is God, He is able to avenge Himself on those who oppose His sovereignty.—Jonathan Edwards.

The Lord of hosts is with us.—On Tuesday Mr. Wesley could with difficulty be understood, though he often attempted to speak. At last, with all the strength he had, he cried out, "The best of all is, God is with us." Again, raising his hand, and waving it in triumph, he exclaimed with thrilling effect, "The best of all is, God is with us." These words seem to express the leading feature of his whole life. God had been with him from early childhood; His providence had guided him through all the devious wanderings of human life; and now, when he was entering the "valley of the shadow of death," the same hand sustained him.—W. C. Larrabee.

PSALM THE FORTY-SEVENTH.

1—4. (1) clap your hands, sign of joy.[d] people, Heb. plur. peoples; heathen nations are summoned to acknowledge the sovereignty of Jehovah by a rehearsal of his deeds. (2) terrible, Polychr., "is to be feared." "Fear is not incompatible with reverent joy."[e] (3) shall subdue,[f] Cam. Bib., "He subdued . . . (4) He chose," etc., i. e. the settlement of Israel in Canaan is a proof of His universal sovereignty. the excellency, or the pride of Jacob. A striking description of the Holy Land.

The choice of our inheritance.—I. Distrust of self. We would not choose our own inheritance because of—1. Our ignorance (1) of ourselves, (2) of the future; 2. Our proneness to self-indulgence. II. Trust in God. 1. In His wisdom; 2. In His goodness; 3. In His interest in us individually. III. Trust in God rewarded.—Hom. Com.

God choosing. — It is reported of a woman who, being sick, was asked whether she was willing to live or die; she answered, "Which God pleases." "But," said one, "if God should refer it to you, which would you choose?" "Truly," replied she, "I would refer it to Him again." Thus that man obtains his will of God, whose will is subjected to God. We are not to be troubled that we have no more from God, but we are to be troubled that we do no more for God. Christians, if the Lord be well pleased with your persons, should not you be well pleased with your conditions? There is more reason that you should be pleased with them than that He should be pleased with you. Believers should be like sheep, which change their pastures at the will of the shepherd; or like vessels in a house, which stand to be filled or emptied at the pleasure of their owner. He that sails upon the sea of this world in his own bottom, will sink at last into a bottomless ocean. Never were any their own carvers, but they were sure to cut their own fingers.— William Secker.

5—9. (5) gone up, Polychr. "marched in with din of battle." Ref. to God's warlike entry into Palestine with Joshua. shout,[a] the glad shout of His rescued people. (7) with understanding, R. V., marg. "in a skilful psalm," i. e. with the skill befitting the occasion.[b] (8) reigneth, is King; He has manifested His kingly power. the . . holiness, R. V., "His holy throne." (9) In the spirit of prophecy the Psalmist beholds the realization of the hope expressed in vs. 1. The nations acknowledge Jehovah's sovereignty. even the people, R. V., "To be the people." shields, princes as the protectors of their people. Polychr. "men, of their own free will, from the peoples, join the people of Abraham's God. For to God, our shield, belongs the world."

The mighty God.— A gale had been raging. Our staunch bark was tossed about as if a mere feather upon the billows, and for days "neither sun nor stars appeared." In the wild waste of waters we passed a solitary rock, lofty and massive. The waves beat furiously against it. White-winged sea-birds, weary with their long struggle in the tempest, were clustering on the summit, and pluming themselves in the warm rays that, to appearance, broke through the clouds just there only. Scripture imagery of God as a refuge and high tower rushed upon the mind. It seemed as if those birds, nestled in such security, must be singing the forty-sixth psalm. The church of Christ, in her season of peril, safe on the Rock of Ages, and having the light of God's countenance, came to view. At such a moment one could hear Moses giving forth his triumphal song; the sweet singer of Israel striking aloud his harp; Paul and Silas lifting up their prison psalms as they stand firm on the foundation of the Lord.

PSALM THE FORTY-EIGHTH.

1—3. (1) greatly, R. V., "highly." mountain of his holiness, R. V., "His holy mountain," i. e. Mt. Zion used for the whole city, Ps. ii. 6. (2) situation, R. V., "elevation."[c] whole earth, or whole land. sides of the north. In Is. xiv. 13, "the uttermost parts of the north" (R. V.), are mentioned as the mythological abode of the gods. This mountain, corresponding to the Olympus of the Greeks, was the Meru of the Indians, the Alborg of the Persians, the Arâlu of the Assyrians and Babylonians. It would seem that the Psalmist boldly calls Mount Zion the uttermost parts of the north with reference to this mythological idea. According to this interpretation vss. 1, 2 may be rendered as follows: Great is Jehovah and exceeding worthy to be praised, in the city of our God is His holy mountain. Beautiful in elevation, a joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, the uttermost parts of the north, the citadel of the great King. The sacred mountain of our God is not in the remote recesses of the north, but in the very midst of the city of His choice. Zion is in reality all that the Assyrians claim for their fabled mount of the gods.— Cam. Bib. (3) is known, "hath made himself known." refuge, as the protector of Zion. "He was like an inaccessible citadel, which gives assurance of security to the inhabitants."

Mount Zion.— When I stood that morning on the brow of Olivet, and looked down on the city crowning those battlemented heights, encircled by those deep and dark ravines, I involuntarily exclaimed, "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the inheritance anew, inasmuch as He shows Himself to be the true and mighty protector thereof." — Perowne.

"The voice of melody is not so much to be uttered with the tongue as with the hands; that is, it is our deeds, not our words, by which God is here to be praised." —J. M. Neale.

a Sa. vi. 15; 1 Chr. xv. 28. See also Col. ii. 15; Eph. iv. 8.

b "A song, either fine in its structure, or beautiful in its melody."— Perowne.

"That is always best which gives me to myself. The sublime is excited in me by the great stoical doctrine. Obey thyself. That which shows God in me, fortifies me. That which shows God out of me, makes me a wart and a wen. There is no longer a necessary reason for my being. Already the long shadows of untimely oblivion creep over me, and I shall decease for ever." — Ralph Waldo Emerson.

author and date as the two preceding psalms

Subject, God's protecting care of Jerusalem.

c "The word seems to denote a graceful wavelike height, not rugged nor precipitous, but rising by a succession of beautiful terraces." — Spk. Com.

"Where are finer expressions of joy than the psalms of praise and thanksgiving? There you look into the hearts of the saints as if you looked into a fair and delightful garden — ay, or into heaven itself,— city of the great King." And as I gazed, the red rays of the rising sun shed a halo round the top of the castle of David; then they tipped with gold each tapering minaret, and gilded each dome of mosque and church, and at length, bathed in one flood of ruddy light the terraced roofs of the city, and the grass and foliage, the cupolas, pavements and colossal walls of the Haram. No human being could be disappointed who first saw Jerusalem from Olivet. — J. L. Porter. — Note on verse 2. — Its elevation is remarkable; occasioned not from its being on the summit of one of the numerous hills of Judæa, like most of the towns and villages, but because it is on the edge of one of the highest tablelands of the country. To the traveler approaching Jerusalem from the west or east, it must always have presented the appearance of a mountain city; breathing, as compared with the plains of Jordan, a mountain air; enthroned, as compared with Jericho and Damascus, Gaza or Tyre, on a mountain fastness. — Stanley. — God our refuge. — We worship no unknown God. We know Him as our refuge in distress, we delight in Him as such, and run to Him in every time of need. We know nothing else as our refuge. Though we are made kings, and our houses are palaces, yet we have no confidence in ourselves, but trust in the Lord Protector, whose well-known power is our bulwark. — Spurgeon.

and you see how lovely and pleasant flowers are springing up there out of manifold happy and beautiful thoughts of God and all His mercies." — From Preface to Luther's Book of Psalms.

"O Love divine! — whose constant beam Shines on the eyes that will not see,
And waits to bless us while we dream,
Thou leavest us because we turn from thee." — J. G. Whittier.

4—8. (4) assembled, Sennacherib's vassal kings attacking Judah. they . . together, Polychr. "all at once they disappeared," i. e. fled. But Cam. Bib. suggests, "they united their forces, crossed the frontier and entered the land of Judah." (5) saw it, from a distance.[a] and . . marvelled, R. V., "then were they amazed." troubled, R. V., "dismayed." (6) Fear, R. V., "trembling," at the defenses, but more at the Divine protection that overshadowed the holy city. (7) ships of Tarshish, largest kind of merchant vessels. Here fig. for proud and lofty foe. Polychr. "They were scattered as though by an east wind, which dashes to pieces," etc. (8) As . . seen, the lessons of the ear have now become truths of personal experience through the recent wonderful deliverance of his native city. Ps. xliv. 1.

Opposition overthrown. — I. The opposition of worldly powers to the church. "The kings," etc. II. The manner in which they are subdued — by their own fears; conscience has persecuted those who have persecuted the Church of God. They who have seized the ark of God have been glad to return it with an offering. III. The completeness of their overthrow. As a fleet of ships of Tarshish, dispersed, broken, and engulfed by the east wind. — Spurgeon.

Panic. — Nothing is more unaccountable than panic. No man, no body of men can adequately guard against such terror. He who made the ears can easily make them to tingle. He who holds the winds in his fist, can easily make them whisper alarm, or roar dismay. This is specially to be expected when men so act as to have their own conscience against them. Job. xv. 21. But God can at any time so forsake men as that they shall be unmanned, and play the fool exceedingly. Lev. xxvi. 36. Men have fought bravely several battles, and then played the coward. — William S. Plumer.

[a] "From 2 Chr. xx. 20, we find that the invaders were encamped at Tekoa, whence, though at a considerable distance, they had a view of Jerusalem." — Delitzsch.

"It often happens that men who arraign religion have often been arraigned by it; and their defense of truth is only a refusal upon conscience." — Bishop Warburton.

9—14. (9) thought,[b] we seek to realize thy love by meditation. thy temple, as the place where opportunity for thanksgiving was presented. (10) so thy praise, "the 'Name of God,' i. e. the character that he has established for himself by former mighty deeds, and the praise which he has now won by the recent deliverance, are coextensive." Comp. 2 Chr. xx. 29. right hand, the symbol of power. (11) daughters of Judah, fig. for the towns and villages of Judah,[c] wh. had fallen into Sennacherib's hands before his overthrow. (12) Walk, etc., addressed to the delivered people, who were to look round and rejoice that their beautiful city was still free.[d] tell, i. e. count. (13) Mark ye well, set your heart to; observe closely. consider, lit. observe one by one, so as to get due impression from each.[e] (14) unto death, not a part of the psalm.[f] R. V., marg, "for evermore."

Her bulwarks. — I. The designation and constitution of Jesus Christ to be King of the church, King of Zion, is the great bulwark of Zion. II. The second bulwark of Zion is the promises of God, which are innumerable. III. The watchful providence of God over the church. IV. Another bulwark is God's special presence. God is in a special manner present in His church. V. The last bulwark unto which all others may be reduced, is the covenant of God: "For this God is our God." — John Owen.

[b] "We have imaged, i. e. bodied it forth, or as we should say, vividly realized." — Spk. Com.

[c] Nu. xxi. 25, marg.; Jos. xvii. 16.

[d] "The glad sense of freedom, the shout of deliverance, are no less noticeable in this verse than the strong patriotic feeling that breathes in it." — Perowne.

[e] "They are to convince themselves by all possible means of the uninjured state of the Holy City in order that they may be able to tell to posterity that such a marvelous helper as is now manifest to them, is Elohim, our God." — Delitzsch.

[f] "It is evident that the word al-

A permanent portion. — What a portion then is that of the believer! The landlord cannot say of his fields, these are mine for ever and ever. The king cannot say of his crown, this is mine for ever and ever. These possessions shall soon change masters; these possessors shall soon mingle with the dust, and even the graves they shall occupy may not long be theirs; but it is the singular, the supreme happiness of every Christian to say, or to have a right to say, "This glorious God with all His divine perfections is my God, for ever and ever, and even death itself shall not separate me from His love."—George Burder.— Meditation. — It is both our interest and our duty to meditate upon God's gracious dealings with us. Gratitude urges us to ponder every fresh proof of His goodness to us. And as it is necessary to digest our food for it to nourish and strengthen our bodies, so God's mercies must be spiritually digested by means of meditation, if they are to prove helpful to the spiritual life. By meditation we realize their greatness and their significance; we feel our obligation to God, and are encouraged to trust Him by reason of them.— Hom. Com.

moth has no place in the text of the psalm, and is merely a musician's mark."—Jennings and Lowe.

"He who is not overcome is not conquered, but he who overcomes is a conqueror"—A. T. Pierson.

"When the Son of God is conquered, we will be conquered, and not before."—T. L. Cuyler.

PSALM THE FORTY-NINTH.

author,— unknown: a Psalm of the later exile

Subject, a vindication of the ways of God in view of social inequalities.[f]

"Here we have the highest level of O. T. prophecy of the future life."—Barton.

1—4. (1) all ye people, "all are called to hear what interests all." Psalmist deals with universal truths. world, this temporal, transitory state of existence.[a] low and high, lit. sons of Adam and sons of Ish; i. e. sons of common men and sons of great men.[b] rich, so as to escape vanity. poor, so as to be free from discontent. (3) of, R, V., omits. wisdom, the Heb. is a plural form to signify wisdom of deep origin and varied form. (4) parable, the Heb. mashal means a hortatory illustration.[c] dark saying, an utterance where more is meant than meets the ear. upon the harp, i. e. with a musical accompaniment. Polychr. "I begin on the cithern my song of instruction."

The deep things of God are intended, I. To exercise our minds to understand them. II. To try our faith by believing them — "incline" implies a submissive mind. III. To excite our joy as we grasp them — "upon the harp." IV. To employ our faculties in explaining them to others. — Spurgeon.

Music. — "The most sorrowful people have known most and felt most the soul of music. The expression of the sorrows and aspirations of the soul in music ministers to our reserve, while it also flows forth in a stream, sad in itself perhaps, yet productive of a divine cheerfulness. There is a mystery and a meaning in music we can never expound or explore; and it is felt that those natures, which are the greatest burden and mystery to themselves, find most the solace of song in the combinations of all great sounds; we have known this, it is not always that in joyfulness of heart we sing. The girl oppressed by some great trial or loss, as she bends over her needle, or goes about her house-work, will sing; and while she sings, finds unconsciously that her song has been her medicine, and has given to her relief. I have known a woman, disappointed and forsaken, flying to her piano; her fingers rushing over the keys have given liberation to her spirit, and the chords opened the sealed well of tears, and the rains descended, and the floods came. And something like this is a very general experience. Hence we have the poetry for all cultured people, and hymns for holy people; and do we not know what it is to become happy while we sing? Good it is sometimes to utter the dark saying to the harp rather than to others; it composes, allays, and tranquillizes the mind while we utter it."—E. P. Hood.

a Ps. xvii. 14.

b "By the sons of Adam, he means the common and lower sort, and by the sons of great men the elders and nobles, or such as are raised above their fellows by some dignity"—Calvin.

c "The term comprehends all instructions, sayings, proverbs, allegories or parables."—Spk. Com.

"The discipline of the teacher of religious truth is the same at all times There must be the bent ear before there is the message which men will recognize as important and true."—Exp. Bib.

5—9. (5) days of evil, the time in which evil men bear sway. This might involve personal calamity. my heels, lit. one who dogs the heels, so a pursuer, or persecutor.[d] "Better still is the rendering of R. V., marg., which gives a clear sense, and a good connection with vs. 6. When the iniquity of them that would supplant me compasseth me about, even of them that trust . . . riches?[e] He is in danger from wealthy and unscrupulous neighbors, who are eager to trip him up and get him into their power."— Cam. Bib. (6) trust . . wealth, Mk. x. 4. (7) None . . brother, Polychr., "Yet, no one can buy himself off." redeem, from dying. With all his boasting the rich man cannot control life. "The idea of the payment of money as the equivalent of a life was familiar. There were cases in which wealth could deliver from death, when man was dealing with man. But when God claims the life, riches are of no avail."— Cam. Bib. (8) precious, R. V., "costly,"

d "Trans., 'When the evil doing of my supplanters encompasseth me.'"—Delitzsch.

e "They are the same men as Jesus meant when He said that it was hard for those who trusted in riches to enter into the kingdom of heaven."

beyond any rich man's payments. ceaseth for ever, i. e. the would-be purchaser must let it alone for ever.[a] (9) still live, connect with vs. 7. for ever, R. V., "alway." Polychr. omits entire vs. corruption, Ps. xiv. 10.

Boasting in wealth. — "Many years ago Judge B. resided in New Jersey. His family was considered the most aristocratic in town, and not unfrequently some of its members would give their acquaintances to understand that this was their opinion also. On a certain occasion a fishing-party was made up among the ladies. Mrs. Judge B. was one of the number. While fishing, the subject of losing property was discussed. Mrs. B. paused a little, and slipped a splendid gold ring from her finger, and dropped it into the lake, remarking as she did so, that it was 'as impossible for them to become poor as it was for her to recover that ring.' The party returned to their homes, and Mrs. B. gave her fish to the servants. Not long after, the cook came into the sitting-room and showed to Mrs. B. a gold ring that she had taken from one of the fish. The ring dropped into the lake was recovered. Mrs. B., who was so confident that she could never become poor, died a pauper also in Elizabethtown, Nova Scotia; and her husband, the judge, died a pauper in an adjoining town." — Dict. of Illus.—An inch of time. — "Millions of money for an inch of time!" cried Elizabeth, the gifted but ambitious Queen of England, upon her dying bed. Unhappy woman! reclining upon a couch — with ten thousand dresses in her wardrobe — a kingdom on which the sun never sets at her feet — all now are valueless; and she shrieks in anguish, and she shrieks in vain for a single "inch of time." She had enjoyed threescore and ten years. Like too many among us, she had devoted them to wealth, to pleasure, to pride, and ambition, so that her whole preparation for eternity was crowded into a few moments: and hence she who had wasted more than half a century, would barter millions for an inch of time. — R. T. S.

[a] "All that is here taught is, that no wealth can save a man from death, bec. the life of men is not in their own hands, or in that of their fellows, but only in the hand of God, who cannot be bribed." — Perowne.

"O holy trust! O endless sense of rest!
Like the beloved John
To lay his head upon the Saviour's breast, And thus to journey on."
—Longfellow.

10—13. (10) wise . . die, a continuation of vs. 7.[b] perish, from the earth, not perish altogether. Polychr. "The fool and the dolt alike perish;" "the self-confident braggart and the mere stupid animal." (11) inward thought, Cheyne, Cam. Bib., Polychr. are agreed in changing the sense of this vs. as follows: "The graves are their houses forever, their habitations for generation after generation;" "Even should they have called whole countries their own," i. e. after their own names. A narrow grave is the only possession left for all men. (12) Nevertheless, spite of all their endeavor, or "so man in splendor hath no continuance;" man's lordliness must come to an end. — Cam. Bib. (13) This their way,[c] the best rendering appears to be: This is the way of them that are self-confident, and of their followers who approve their sayings.

[b] "The observation of universal mortality leaves no place for hope — the wise die, the fool perishes, their wealth goes to others; but this argument would be utterly pointless, had not the just man a different and unfailing hope after death." — Spk. Com.

[c] "This is the way of those who have folly, and of those after them who delight to speak in like manner." — Ewald.

A life of faith and sense (vss. 13–15). — I. The text gives us an account of those who live a life of sense. This their way is their folly — 1. If we consider their condition; 2. Their capacity for better things. II. Consider the state of mind spoken of in the text, which implies a life of faith. Apply: — 1. The deplorable state of the unregenerate; 2. Seriously address young people; 3. Those who do not put their whole trust in God. — R. Cecil.

An American merchant. — A young merchant, in one of the large cities of America, was seized with a dangerous illness, which brought him, apparently, to the very confines of the eternal world. In this situation his past neglect of the Saviour rushed with power on his conscience, and in the most solemn manner he vowed to lead a new life if he recovered. Unexpectedly, both to himself and every one else, he gradually attained his former health. During the progress of his recovery, he regarded his vow, and professed decided attachment to the service of God; but when he returned to the business of life, he resumed his gayeties, and indulged in all the vanity of a fashionable life. A friend, who had heard and was deeply affected by his solemn vows when in trouble, reminded him of the affecting scene; he remembered it, and declared his intention of fulfilling all he had said, as soon as he had fulfilled two or three pressing engagements of business. Then he would give up his soul to the work; then he would seek God with all his heart. A few days after the admonition, he attended a fashionable and splendid ball: in the midst of his gayety and mirth, death suddenly entered the festive hall, and the gay and thoughtless merchant fell a lifeless corpse. Oh, immortal sinner, beware of delaying attention to the concerns of eternity. — R. T. S.

Self-will is so ardent and active that it will break a wall to pieces to make a stool to sit on.

"Grace is not hereditary, but sordid worldliness goes from generation to generation. The race of fools never dies out. No need of missionaries to teach men to be earthworms, they crawl naturally to the dust." — Spurgeon.

14, 15. (14) Like sheep, lying down in their fold at night. — Cam. Bib. "Like sheep are they put into sheol." feed on them, R. V., "death shall be their shepherd." in the morning,[a] "the wicked perish in the night and in the morning, i. e. the Messianic age, the righteous awake, triumphant over their fallen oppressors."—Kirkpatrick. beauty, etc.,[b] Polychr., "their form soon falls to decay; sheol is become their dwelling." (15) my soul, God redeems the godly fr. sudden evil death. What wealth is unable to do God can and will do. Ps. xvi. 10, 11. receive me, take me[c] fr. the hand of sheol stretched out to seize and carry me away.—Polychr. "When it (sheol) seizes me."

Note on verse 15.—Many commentators find in this passage "the strong hope of eternal life with God, if not the hope of a resurrection." But the context and the parallel passage lead to a different conclusion. Certainly the doctrine of a future life was not to the Psalmist a revealed certainty to which he could appeal for a solution of the enigmas of life which were perplexing him. Probably, as has been said before on Ps. xvi., the truth is that the antithesis in the Psalmist's mind is not between life here and life hereafter (as we speak), but between life with and life without God, and for the moment, in the consciousness of the blessedness of fellowship with God, death fades from his view. The rich man's wealth, which he is tempted to envy, cannot buy from God one moment's prolongation of life; nay, the wicked are doomed to a premature and miserable death: while the Psalmist rejoices in the assured protection and fellowship of God. But whatever may have been the extent or the limitation of the Psalmist's view, his words contain the germ and principle of the doctrine of the resurrection, and for ourselves, as we use them, they will bear the fuller meaning with which they have been illuminated by Christ's resurrection.—Cam. Bib.—The upright shall have dominion over them in the morning.—The poor saints were once the tail, but at the daybreak they shall be the head. Sinners rule till nightfall; their honors wither in the evening, and in the morning they find their position utterly reversed. The sweetest reflection to the upright is that "the morning" here intended begins an endless, changeless day. What a vexation of spirit to the proud worldling, when the Judge of all the earth holds His morning session, to see the man whom he despised, exalted high in heaven, while he himself is cast away!—Spurgeon.—The crowned skeleton.—"Nearly a thousand years after Christ, the tomb of Charlemagne was opened by the Emperor Otho. The skeleton form of the body was found there, dissolved and dismembered; the various ornaments were all there too; but the frame had sunk into fragments, the bones had fallen disjointed and asunder, and there remained nothing but the ghastly skull wearing its crown still, and nothing to signify royalty but this vain pageant of death in its most hideous form! The various relics were taken up, and are now preserved at Vienna, and they have often since been employed in the coronation of the emperors of Germany, in order to signify their greatness, and their being successors of Charlemagne." How striking a comment does the forty-ninth psalm afford to this strange history! The body itself is nowhere to be found! its last resting-place is empty,—the limbs are dispersed in the form of relics. But though scattered be his limbs, Charlemagne shall yet hear the voice of the King of kings, and stand uncrowned in His presence who wears the crowns of the universe.—Prot. Churchman.

16–20. (16) afraid, or "fretted," that all the good is with the man you are disposed to envy. (17) For . . away, Job xxvii. 18, 19. after him, into his grave. (18) blessed his soul, pronounced himself to be a happy man.[d] and . . thyself, Polychr., "And men say in his praise that he is prosperous." (19) never see light, nót see light for evermore.[e] (20) Man, etc., as vs. 12.[f]

Death the great leveler.—I remember an Eastern legend which I have always thought furnished a remarkable though unconscious commentary on these words of the Psalmist. Alexander the Great, we are there told, being upon his deathbed, commanded that when he was carried forth to the grave his hands should not be wrapped as was usual in the cere-cloths, but should be left outside the bier, so that all might see them, and might see that they were empty, that there was nothing in them; that he, born to one empire, and the conqueror of another, the possessor while he lived of two worlds—of the East and of the West—and of the treasures of both, yet now when he was dead could retain no smallest portion of these treasures; that in this matter the poorest beggar and he were at length upon equal terms.—Abp. Trench.

a Comp. Ps. xvii. 15; Da. vii. 22; xii. 2; 1 Co. vi. 2.

"The present life was ordained for them that believe not, and they laugh the faithful to scorn; but they who fear God shall be above them on the day of the resurrection."—Koran.

b "Whereas their form, falling a prey to the devouring of Hades, becomes habitationless."—Delitzsch.

c Ge. v. 24; Ps. lxxiii. 24.

"Self-righteousness, that is, no righteousness at all—a righteousness in its own eyes, which can never be a righteousness in the eyes of God—a righteousness in which the impure are to purify the impure, and the unjust to justify the unjust."—Hare.

"Self-love is the greatest of flatterers."—La Rochefoucauld.

"You will not be happy in your religion until you trust God for your happiness as for everything else.'—Amos R. Wells.

d Lu. xii. 19.

e "The blackness of sheol will be their portion eternally; but the just shall see light in God's light. Ps. xxxvi. 9."—Spk. Com.

f "In this last vs. we see the Psalmist's real meaning. He that is 'without understanding,' who has no thought beyond the affairs of this world, he it is who is like the beasts which perish."—Jennings and Lowe.

PSALM THE FIFTIETH.

author, — prob. a writer of the prophetic period

Subject, the nature of true sacrifice.

"This is the first of the Asaph psalms, and is separated from the other eleven (Psalms lxxiii-lxxxiii.) for reasons that do not appear." — Exp. Bib.

1—3. (1) mighty . . Lord, Heb. El, Elohim, Jehovah.[a] "El indicates God's sovereign power; Elohim represents Him as the object of worship; Jehovah identifies Him with the covenant God of Israel." R. V., "God, even God;" Polychr., "The God of the gods." hath spoken, "breaks the silence wh. has been misunderstood to mean indifference, by proclaiming a great assize." called . . thereof, Polychr., "Then trembled the earth from east to west." (2) perfection of beauty, Zion is so called,[b] as possessing the sanctuary. shined, R. V., "shined forth;" the Heb. word is specially used of theophanies, i. e. visible manifestations of God's presence.[c] (3) come, etc., God's coming at Sinai is regarded as the model of all His manifestations.[d] fire, comp. Da. vii. 10; 2 Thess. i. 7. tempestuous . . him, "round about him a mighty storm," i. e. the outward symbols wh. express the fearfulness of God's theophanies.

a Jos. xxii. 22.

b Ps. xlviii. 2; La. ii. 15.

c De. xxxiii. 2; Ps. lxxx. 1.

d Ex. xix. 16, etc.

"As He gave His law in fire, so in fire He will require it." — Trapp.

Zion the abode of God (vs. 2). — This text suggests — I. That God dwells in the church. 1. In the congregation of the righteous; 2. In their hearts individually. II. That the church is the perfection of beauty only when God dwells in it. Illus.: — World without sun, army without general, ship without pilot. — W. Nicholson.

The exordium or beginning of this psalm is the most grand and striking that can possibly be imagined — the speaker GOD, the audience an assembled world! We cannot compare or assimilate the scene here presented to us with any human resemblance; nor do I imagine that earth will ever behold such a day till that hour when the trumpet of the archangel shall sound, and shall gather all the nations of the earth from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other; when the dead, small and great, shall stand before God, and the sea shall give up the dead which are in it, and death and hell shall deliver up the dead that are in them. — Barton Bouchier.

4—6. (4) heavens from above, better, heavens above, in contrast to earth beneath. Heaven and earth are summoned to witness the righteousness of God's procedure.[e] (5) saints, general designation of the covenanted people of Israel. "Those who have obtained favor, grace in My sight."— Perowne. by sacrifice, lit. upon sacrifice, "as that by means of wh. the covenant was sealed, Ex. xxiv. 8." The human act wh. acknowledges the Divine grace and the entailed responsibilities. (6) heavens, put for the powers of heaven, who testify of God's righteousness in other spheres, as a guarantee of the impartiality of His judgment. shall declare, present tense, "shall" omitted. for . . himself, Cheyne, "for God is about to judge,"

Visions of God. — God rises upon the sight of some Christians as the sun comes right up against a clear sky, and over a sharp-cut horizon, and upon others as the sun comes up behind clouds, which it is his first work to wear out and disperse with his bright beams. I have seen men that never realized God till they were dying. Some never see Him till the midday of their life. Others see Him early in the morning. Some see Him during sickness; some after sickness; some on the occurrence of some special providence. Sometimes Christians are lifted up, through the susceptibility of their imagination, their affections, and their reason, all conjoined, into such an extraordinary sense of God's glory that it seems as though their soul could not abide in the body, and they think, "Praise God! At last He has had mercy on me, and revealed Himself to me," — supposing that He had not before cast the light of His countenance upon them. — H. W. Beecher.

e De. iv. 26; xxxii. 1; Is. i. 2; Mi. vi. 2.

"The covenant relationship is maintained on their part by offering sacrifices as an expression of their obedience and of their fidelity." — Delitzsch.

"He will not entertain us till we resign up ourselves freely to his disposal, that there may be no disputing with His commands afterwards, but, as one under his authority, go and come at His word." — William Gurnall.

7—11. (7) Hear . . people, the whole nation of Israel is called before the bar of its judge.[f] testify, etc., Polychr., "Of thee would I complain." even thy God, the name is repeated to give additional force.[g] (8) reprove, find fault. or . . me,[h] R. V., "And thy . . . are continually before me;" i. e. the stated offerings are strictly observed. Comp. Is. i. 11–14. (10) cattle, simply four-footed beasts. thousand hills, either "upon the mountains where thousands (of cattle) are;" or the "everlasting mountains." — Polychr. (11) know, "the word used expresses a knowledge wh. masters a subject, compasses it, and makes it its own." wild beasts . . field, Cheyne, "the roamers of the plain." mine, lit. "with me," in my mind.

f Is. i. 2; Ps. lxxxi. 8.

g "As if He should say, 'When you tie Me to your own devices, how far is this presumptuous rashness of yours from the reverence that is due to Me! for, seeing that I am God, My majesty ought to restrain all forwardness, so that all flesh should keep silence when I speak."— Calvin.

h "Judgment is not given bec. the Outward formality. — It is the very remonstrance which our Lord Himself makes against the Pharisees of His days, for laying so much stress on the outward observance of their own traditions, the washing of pots and cups and other such like things; the paying of tithes of anise and mint and cummin; the ostentatious fulfilment of all ceremonious observances in the eyes of men, the exalting the shadow to the exclusion of the substance. And have we not seen the like in our own days, even to the very vestment of the minister, the obeisance of the knee, and the posture of the body? as if the material church were all in all, and God were no Spirit, that demanded of those that worshiped Him that they should worship Him in spirit and in truth; as if the gold and ornaments of the temple were far beyond the hidden man of the heart in that which is incorruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. — Barton Bouchier.

people had neglected the externals of the law, or had forgotten to offer the sacrifices appointed by the law. They had brought them; but they had brought them as if the act were everything." —Perowne.

12—15. (12) hungry, the term seems wholly unsuitable for God, but it vigorously declares that He does not need things, but wants from His people spiritual worship. world is mine, Ex. xix. 5; De. x. 14. (14) thanksgiving, lit. sacrifice, thanksgiving; give God outspoken gratitude.[a] R. V., "the sacrifice of thanksgiving." and pay, etc., i. e. by such spiritual sacrifice are vows discharged. (15) call upon me, in trustful prayer. Ps. xci. 15.

Encouragements for the pious in the day of trial (vs. 15).—I. The Speaker: possessing—1. Boundless knowledge; 2. Infinite goodness; 3. Omnipotent power. II. The persons addressed. 1. Those who fear God; 2. Who are subjects of trial. III. The duty suggested. Calling upon God should be with—1. Humility; 2. Sincerity; 3. Confidence; 4. Consistency; 5. Importunity. IV. The declaration made. He will deliver—1. At what time He sees best; 2. In what way He sees best; 3. By what way He sees best. V. Notice what grateful returns are required. Thou shalt glorify Me — 1. By a devout acknowledgment of the Divine goodness; 2. By unreserved devotedness to Him; 3. By promoting His interests. Apply—(1) To those who fear God; (2) Those who are humbly seeking God; (3) Those who are living without God. — Kappa, in 400 sks.

Prayer answered, and God glorified (vs 15).—Some time ago the missionaries in the Fiji Islands were threatened with an attack by enraged hostile chiefs, who came forward uttering their threats and brandishing their weapons. The missionaries were unable to repel force by force, even if they had wished to do so. They shut themselves up in the mission-house, and united in earnest prayer to God, entreating His merciful and Almighty protection. After they had continued in prayer for some time, it was observed that there was less of noise outside the house than there had previously been, and at length it ceased altogether. One of their number went out to ascertain the real state of things. At first he found no one, but at length he found a man, and interrogated him thus:—"Where are the chiefs?" "They are gone," said he. "They found you were praying to your God, and they know your God is a strong God, and they are gone." Thus did God honor the prayers of His servants in the hour of their extremity. — Leifchild.

a Comp. Ps. lxi. 8.

"Instead of the legal 'sacrifice of peace-offerings for a thanksgiving or a vow,' the true worshiper must offer that wh. the victim represents, viz., praise from a grateful heart, and all duties to wh. he is bound by the terms of his covenant with God." — Spk. Com.

"Among the heathen the opinion prevailed that the gods ate and drank what was offered to them in sacrifice; these things were however consumed by the priests who attended on heathen altars, and who found that it did much to secure the liberality of the people, to keep up the impression that what was thus offered was consumed by the gods."

16—20. (16) wicked, hypocrites, hiding their iniquity under professions and outward observances. declare, tell, or number, "as if with a view to their more punctual observance." or . . take, R. V., "and that thou hast taken." (17) hatest, etc., "the whole discipline of moral education." Ro. ii. 21, 22. (18) consentedst, hadst pleasure. Ro. i. 32. hast . . adulterers, Heb. with adulterers is thy portion.[b] Thou makest common cause with them. (19) givest, lettest it loose; givest it free play. (20) Thou sittest, "emphasizing the deliberateness of the slander." slanderest, givest a wound to.[c] The chief features of the social iniquity are here indicated.

A lunatic beggar in Athens would not believe but that all the ships in the harbor were his. His mistake exceeded not theirs, who persuade themselves that this richer office is theirs, before they are "alive from the dead," and "born of the Spirit," before they are returned to God or to themselves. The Duke of Alva is said to have complained that, "his king sent him in fetters to fight for him;" because without his pardon given him, and while he was a prisoner, he employed him in war. But the Supreme King is a more merciful one, and orders our charity to begin at home; making it our first duty to break off our sins; and then when we have put off these our shackles, go to fight His battles. — Daniel Burgess. — Polluted lips. — All the mediæval writers teach us, even from the Mosaic law, concerning the leper, how the writer of this psalm only put into words what those statutes expressed in fact. For b "That is, Thou sharest their condition, their feelings, and their fate." — Spk. Com.

c "Thou didst set a stigma on." — Jennings and Lowe.

"We look down at our fellows as the eagle looks over the edge of the cliff at the mice which crawl so far below him. This is the selfishness of the moral nature. Our gifts and attainments are not only to be light and warmth in our own dwellings but are as well to shine through the window into the dark night to guide and cheer bewildered travelers upon the road."—Henry W. Beecher.

a "But the long-suffering of God cannot always be abused. The time comes when the sinner is made to feel that God is a righteous Judge."—Perowne.

b "Acts in a straight, right manner, opposed to turning aside. In such pure worship and a pure life evince their true piety, and they will enjoy God's presence and favor."—Fausset.

"Many favors which God giveth us ravel out for want of hemming; for though prayer purchases blessings, giving praise doth keep the quiet possession of them all."—Fuller.

"Thanksgiving is good, thanksliving is better."—M Henry.

so it is written: "The leper in whom the plague is, . . . he shall put a covering upon his upper lip." As they all, following Origen, say: Let them who are themselves of polluted lips, take good heed not to teach others. Or, to take it in the opposite way, see how Isaiah would not speak to his people, because he was a man of polluted lips, and he dwelt among a people of polluted lips, till they had been touched with the living coal from the altar; and by that, as by a sacrament of the Old Testament, a sentence of absolution had been pronounced upon them. —J. M. Neale.

21—23. (21) kept silence, Polychr. "and must I be silent? I will punish thee, and let thee see how the case stands." Refraining fr. immediate punishment, and on this the wicked presumed, thinking Jehovah to be indifferent.[a] (22) tear, etc., Ps. vii. 2. (23) praise, R. V., "the sacrifice of thanksgiving," as the expression of a thankful heart. ordereth, etc., lit. that disposes or prepares his way. Cam. Bib., "He that keepeth my way."[b] shew, or "I will make him look with joy." Polychr., "he shall joy in my help."

Salvation. —I. Salvation is the work of God. II. The evidence of salvation is holiness of heart and life. III. The effect of that evidence is praise. IV. The tendency of that praise is to glorify God. God is not glorified by the doubts, and fears, and murmurings of His people, but by their praise. —Geo. Rogers.

The silence of God (vs. 21). —It sometimes seems as if God cared for nothing. The wicked are at ease. The good are vexed incessantly. The world is full of misery and confusion. The darling of the flock is always made the sacrifice. Some child, in the very midst of its glee, becomes suddenly silent —as a music box, its spring giving way, stops in the midst of its strain, and never plays out the melody. The mother staggers, and wanders through day and night, as if these were mingled into one, and that shot through with preternatural influence of woe. But think not that God's silence is coldness or indifference. When Christ stood by the dead, the silence of tears interpreted His sympathy more wonderfully than even that voice which afterwards called back the footsteps of the brother from the grave, and planted them in life again. God's stillness is full of brooding. Not one tear shall be shed by you that does not hang heavier at His heart than any world upon His hand. —H. W. Beecher.

PSALM THE FIFTY-FIRST.

author,— David

A penitential psalm.

Historical connection, 2 Sa. xi. xii.

c Is. xliii. 25; xliv. 22.

d "David uses three words, transgression, iniquity, and sin, involving every kind and degree of guilt."—Spk. Com.

e "Purity as well as pardon is desired by all true penitents."—Fausset.

f "The little word for in this vs. must be understood so as not to imply that his sins must be forgiven him because he had confessed them."—Luther.

g 2 Sa. xii. 13; 2 Co. vii. 10.

1—4. (1) thy loving-kindness, "in all godly sorrow there is hope. Sorrow without hope may be remorse or despair, but it is not true repentance." blot out,[c] as from a register. transgressions,[d] acts of deliberate rebellion. (2) Wash me, like a fuller; Heb. implies reiterated washing.[e] (3) acknowledge, make unreserved confession.[f] before me, a constant burden on my heart; "such consciousness of sin is the first step towards the repentance and confession wh. are the indispensable conditions of forgiveness." (4) thee only, so Dav. regards the deep iniquity of his sin wh. had been committed against his fellow-men:[g] this evil, R. V., "that which is evil." mightest, R. V., "mayest." speakest, "when Thou dost pronounce sentence." clear, i. e. blameless. "Man's sin brings out into a clearer light the justice and holiness of God, Who pronounces sentence upon it. The Psalmist flings himself at the footstool of the Divine Justice. The consequence of his sin, and therefore in a sense its purpose (for nothing is independent of the sovereign Will of God), is to enhance before men the justice and holiness of God, the absolutely Righteous and Pure." —Cam. Bib.

True confession is not something extorted by terror and by fear of impending justice. Such an acknowledgment implies only fear and despair. It is not the utterance of a man who arises and goes to his father, but of one whom baliffs arrest while he flees from his father. True confession implies faith in God's pardoning grace, and confidence in His power to make the broken bones rejoice, and to wash the tainted heart whiter than snow. It is a voluntary laying bare of the wound to the eye of a trusted surgeon.—M. R. Vincent.

Divine mercy implored.

Lord! who art merciful as well as just,
Incline thine ear to me, a child of dust!

Not what I would, O Lord, I offer Thee, Alas! but what I can,
Father Almighty, who hast made me man,
And bade me look to heaven, for thou art there,
Accept my sacrifice and humble prayer.
Four things which are not in Thy treasury
I lay before Thee, Lord, with this petition:
My nothingness, my wants,
My sins and my contrition.— Southey.

This beautiful penitential psalm has been on the lips of many of God's saints and martyrs when dying.

5–8. (5) Behold, etc., strong poetic fig. to represent Dav.'s deep feeling that from his earliest being he had been sin-stained. shapen, born, "All that the speaker means (and is not that a sad confession enough?) is that he belongs to an erring race and drew his first breath in sin."— Cheyne. (6) inward parts, innermost consciousness. God takes great pleasure in whole-hearted devotion. (7) hyssop, used in ceremonial cleansings. Nu. xix. 8; Le. xiv. 4-6. wash me, appeals to God Himself to perform the work of the priest. (8) joy and gladness, in restoring me to sanctuary privileges.

The sinner cleansed (vs. 7).—I. That which David desired. We must consider him as a—1. Penitent; 2. King; 3. Prophet. II. The means by which it was to be accomplished. 1. Hyssop, the ordinary means of purification under the law; 2. Blood had to be used with the hyssop; 3. Note the manner of its use. Hyssop typifies repentance — linen dyed scarlet, faith — the staff of cedar, holiness of life. All point to Jesus and the new life in Him.— Pierre du Bosc.

"He that is contented with just grace enough to get to heaven and escape hell, and desires no more, may be sure he hath none at all, and is far from being made partaker of the Divine nature."— Janeway.

Psalm li.— Nearly every verse has also its special history. Take the first. Henry Vaughan, the poet, who departed this life in 1695, desired the following inscription should be placed on his tomb: "Servus inutilis, Peccator maximus, Hic jacco. Gloria! Miserere!" Dr. Carey, the missionary, suffering from a dangerous illness, was asked, "If this sickness should prove fatal, what passage would you select as the text of your funeral sermon?" He replied, "Oh, I feel that such a poor sinful creature as I is unworthy to have anything said about him; but if a funeral sermon should be preached, let it be from the fifty-first psalm and first verse."

This psalm has from earliest Christian times, been called, by way of eminence, the Penitential Psalm, the Miserere, from its opening words in the Vulgate, Miserere mei Domine.

9, 10. (9) Hide . . sins, do not only forgive but forget.[a] blot out, vs. 1. (10) Create, as Gen. i. 1, "implying that the purification of the heart requires, as it were, a fresh act of creative power;"[b] "as the necessary condition of communion with God." right, constant, or steadfast in its allegiance to God.

The new creation.— This "creation" is from nothing. Our creation "in Jesus Christ" is no mere strengthening of our powers, no mere aiding of our natural weakness by the might of the grace of God; it is a creation out of nothing, of that which we had not before. We were dead in trespasses and sins. What is corrupt receiveth not soundness, save by passing away itself and being replaced by a new production. "The old man" passeth not into the new man, but is "put off." It is not the basis of the new life, but a hindrance to it. It must be "put off" and the new man "put on," "created in Christ Jesus."— E. B. Pusey.

A new heart (vs. 10). — Let us but deeply feel the need of a new heart, and that conviction will secure our cordial assent to the memorable saying with which one of England's greatest men, her bravest and noblest spirits, closed an illustrious career on the scaffold of an ungrateful country. When Sir Walter Raleigh had laid his head upon the block, he was asked by the executioner whether it lay right. Whereupon, with the calmness of a hero, and the faith of a Christian, he returned an answer, the power of which we shall all feel when our own head is tossing and turning on death's uneasy pillow: "It matters little, my friend, how the head lies, provided the heart is right." — Guthrie.

[a] "If we wish that God should turn His face from our sins, our own face must be turned towards them. We must not hide them, if we wish that they should be hidden by Him." — Wordsworth.

[b] Ti. iii. 5; Eph. ii. 10; iv. 24. With this prayer comp. the promise in Je. xxiv. 7; Eze. xi. 19; xxxvi. 26.

"Let us pray God that He would root out of our hearts everything of our own planting, and set out there, with His own hands, the tree of life, bearing all manner of fruits."— Fénélon.

11–13 (11) away, holy spirit,[c] although the doctrine of the personality of the Holy Spirit is not taught in the O. T., passages like these, which imply that in the spirit Jehovah personally acts, prepare the way for the N. T. revelation concerning Him, and can be used in the fullest Christian sense. — Cam. Bib. (12) the joy, wh. was lost in the bitter sense of sin. Polychr., "Give me once more the glad sense of Thy help." thy free spirit, R. V., "a free spirit;" free in the sense of willing, generous, spontaneously seeking and

[c] 1 Sa. xvi. 13.

"It is equally admissible to take the words to mean the Spirit of grace, i. e. the Divine nature, as manifesting itself in influencing the moral nature of man." — Jennings and Lowe.

"The word rendered 'willing' comes by a very natural process, to mean nobles. God's servants are princes and lords of everything besides, themselves included. Such obedience is freedom."—Maclaren urging to goodness. (13) will I teach, fain would I teach the lessons learnt by sad experience. be converted, return.

The beginning of anxiety is the end of faith, and the beginning of true faith is the end of anxiety."

Uphold me. — I am tempted to think that I am now an established Christian, that I have overcome this or that lust so long that I have got into the habit of the opposite grace, so that there is no fear; I may venture very near the temptation, nearer than other men. This is a lie of Satan. I might as well speak of gunpowder getting by habit a power of resisting fire, so as not to catch the spark. As long as powder is wet it resists the spark, but when it becomes dry it is ready to explode at the first touch. As long as the Spirit dwells in my heart, he deadens me to sin, so that if lawfully called through temptation I may reckon upon God carrying me through. But when the Spirit leaves me, I am like dry gunpowder. Oh, for a sense of this! — R. M. M'Cheyne. — The Holy Spirit. — Christianity is a Divine power, a power which must be sought in faith, in humiliation, and in prayer: and till the Holy Ghost is duly honored, and His presence be humbly sought, the finest system and the most elaborate organizations will be found devoid of any fruitful life and vigor. — G. T. Stokes.

14, 15. (14) bloodguiltiness,[a] first, blood violently spilt; then the guilt and penalty of the commission. thy righteousness, faithfulness to thy char. and promises. (15) O Lord, Adonai, or Master. my lips, wh. had been sealed by the consciousness of unconfessed and unforgiven sin.

The dumb learning to praise God. — A beautiful incident occurred only a short time since in the school to teach mutes articulation and lip-reading, at Mystic River, Connecticut. Miss P., having a desire to learn to speak and read the lips of her speaking friends, was recommended to try Mr. Whipple's school. She made rapid progress, and was much aided by the natural alphabet, the invention of her teacher. This alphabet curiously suggests sound, or the right position of the organs to utter sound, as well as form; and whenever a mute pupil can read and write it, he or she can generally give any of the forty sounds of our difficult language with great precision and discrimination, and often with remarkable correctness. This young lady mastered the alphabet with little difficulty, and one day came to her teacher with something written on her slate, which she asked him to correct. It proved to be the Lord's Prayer, put into the language of articulation. Perceiving her agitation, the teacher could scarce restrain his own tears as he corrected a few unimportant errors of pronunciation, and delicately returned it. The next morning the young lady came exultingly to her teacher, exclaiming: "I prayed last night for the first time in my life with my voice;" and neither of them could restrain their emotions. He ventured to ask her if she had ever prayed before. "Oh, yes; I have thought my prayers, but I never spoke before." "My lips shall praise Thee, O God." "Attend to the voice of my supplications, O Lord." — Bib. Ill.

16, 17. (16) desirest not, R. V., "delighted not in." not sacrifice, spoken relatively, not absolutely. Sacrifice without the crushed spirit is simply dead formality and useless as worship to a moral, living God. Ps. 1. 8–15. delightest not, R. V., "hast no pleasure." (17) broken spirit, humbled, meek, penitent.[b] contrite, bruised, worn, broken-hearted for sin, as against God.[c] "The deeper the sense of sin, and truer the sorrow for it, the more heartfelt also will be the thankfulness for pardon and reconciliation. The tender, humbled, broken heart is therefore the best thank-offering."—Perowne.

An old Hebrew parable. — A poor penitent came up to worship before the Lord who had just risen from a sick bed. He could now scarcely sustain his tottering limbs. The words of the psalm were like a cordial to his sinking spirit. One after another brought his sacrifice, and was accepted; but the penitent had none. At length he drew near the priest, and said, "Last night a poor widow and her children came to me, and I had nothing to give her but two pigeons which were ready for sacrifice." "Why, then, art thou come to me, my son?" "I heard them sing, 'The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit.' Will He not accept mine? God be merciful to a me a sinner!" The old priest was melted, and the tears started in his eyes as he raised the poor penitent. He laid his hands on his head: "Blessed be thou, my son! Thine offering is accepted. It is better than thousands of rivers of oil. Jehovah make His face to shine upon thee, and give thee peace!" — Anec. Illus. of O. T. Texts.

[a] Most suitably referred to the case of Uriah.

Ge. iv. 10.

"Inspect the neighborhood of thy life; every shelf, every nook of thy abode; and, nestling in, quarter thyself in the farthest and most domestic winding of thy snail-house."—Richter.

"Oh! the unspeakable littleness of a soul which, entrusted with Christianity, speaking in God's name to immortal beings, with infinite excitements to the most enlarged, fervent love, sinks down into narrow self-regard, and is chiefly solicitous of its own honor."—W. Ellery Channing.

[b] "The inward part of a man is said to be broken and crushed when his sinful nature is broken, his ungodly self slain, his inpenetrable hardness softened, his haughty vainglorying brought low,—in fine, when he is in himself become as nothing, and when God is everything to him."—Delitzsch.

[c] Fr. Lat, con, and terere, to rub, or grind.

"Nothing that is broken bears any value, except the heart, which becomes more valuable the more it is broken."—Persian Prov

18, 19. That this is an addition made to the original psalm, during the time of the Babylonian exile, or later, for liturgical purposes, has been maintained by a large number of the commentators who ascribe the rest of the psalm to David. The verses seem to imply that Jerusalem was in ruins and that sacrificial worship was suspended. "A comparison of similar expressions in lxix. 35; cii. 16; cxlvii. 2, makes it almost certain that the words are a prayer for the restoration of Jerusalem and the reëstablishment of sacrificial worship there." -Cam. Bib. (19) sacrifices of righteousness, those offered in a right spirit. Cp. iv. 5; Deut. xxxiii. 19. with burnt offering, etc. The term ōlāh, "burnt offering," denotes the sacrifice as "ascending" in smoke and flame: kālīl, "whole burnt offering," denotes the sacrifice as entirely consumed. It was the rule that the burnt offering should be wholly consumed, to symbolize the entire self-dedication of the worshiper; and the second designation is added in order to emphasise this idea of the sacrifice. Cp. Deut. xxxiii. 10; 1 Sam. vii. 9.

"Amazing love, that sets my spirit free,
And makes my broken life complete in Thee."—Mrs. M. S. Corning.

"Here is love's offering to my King Which in glad sacrifice I bring—Here is my heart."—E. Leidick.

A broken heart.—

Saviour, is there anything
I have failed to bring?
Lies my offering at Thy feet Incomplete?"
* * *
Nay; but I am satisfied,
Having all besides.
Since that erring heart of thine
On my shrine
Broken, contrite, suppliant lies—Sweetest sacrifice!
In that offering thou dost bring Everything.

"O Patient watcher over all!
If broken lives may best complete Thy circle, let our fragments fall An offering at Thy feet."
—Carl Spencer.

PSALM THE FIFTY-SECOND.

author,— prob. David

1—5. (1) This verse states the theme of the psalm; the contrast between man's wrongdoings and God's loving kindness. The two halves of the verse correspond to the two divisions of the psalm. The statement of the second line is abruptly introduced, but it is virtually the answer to the question of the first. What avails it thee to boast of successful evil doing? it is vain: the loving kindness of God (endureth) all the day. mighty man, or insolent tyrant.[a] (2) mischiefs, R. V., "very wickedness." destructive malignity. razor, wh. will cut suddenly, before one is aware. (3) lovest, so art bad at heart. (4) devouring words, lit. words of swallowing up.[b] deceitful tongue, Polychr., "Thou deceitful tongue, thou!" identifies the offender with the offending member. (5) likewise, act by thee as thou dost act towards others, only with far more terrible effect. destroy, break thee down as a house: seize thee, as coals are taken, raked out fr. the hearth: root thee out, pluck up, and tear away thy tent. dwelling place, R. V., "tent."

Apostates (vs. 5). — In the long line of portraits of the Doges, in the palace at Venice, one space is empty, and the semblance of a black curtain remains as a melancholy record of glory forfeited. Found guilty of treason against the state, Mariano Falieri was beheaded, and his image, as far as possible, blotted from remembrance. Every one's eye rests longer upon the one dark vacancy than upon any one of the fine portraits of the merchant-monarchs; and so the apostates of the church are far more frequently the theme of the world's talk than the thousands of good men and true who adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. — Spurgeon.

Subject, the futility of plots against the righteous.

Historical connection 1 Sa xxii.

a So Prayer Bk. version.

b "Malicious words tending to undermine the character and reputation of others." — Jennings and Lowe.

"A lie always needs a truth for a handle to it, else the hand would cut itself which sought to drive it home upon another." — Beecher.

6—9. (6) see, R. V., "see it." laugh, not in pleasure at his destruction, but at the vindication of God's righteousness.[c] him, R. V., "him, saying." (7) not God his strength, the very root of his evil. wickedness, Cheyne. "his substance." (8) But, R. V., "But as for me." olive tree, Ge. viii. 11. "The righteous man is like an evergreen olive tree, while the wicked is rooted up. He is God's guest, enjoying His favor and protection." — Kirkpatrick. (9) wait on, or proclaim Thy Name. before, R. V., "in the presence of."

c "There is such a thing as a shout of righteous joy at the downfall of the tyrant and oppressor, at the triumph of righteousness and truth over wrong and falsehood." — Perowne.

Stier advises men in business to add to their three columns of pounds, shillings and pence, a fourth column for the blessing of God.

"Let thy face, like Moses', shine to others, but make no looking-glass for thyself." — Jeremy Taylor.

The mercy of God (vs. 8). — I. It is tender mercy. II. It is great mercy. III. It is undeserved mercy. IV. It is rich mercy. V. It is manifold mercy. VI. It is abounding mercy. VII. It is unfailing mercy. — Spurgeon.

The olive tree. — There is something strongly indicative of health and vigor in the fresh look of a flourishing olive tree; but especially when a grove of them is seen together, and the sun shining on their glossy leaves. The trunk is of a moderate height, and gnarled in a picturesque manner; the foliage is of a deep and peculiar green, and under a passing breeze the uppermost leaves turn round, and show a fine silvery hue. Hence the full meaning of the words, "His beauty shall be as the olive tree:" and again, "The Lord called thy name a green olive tree, fair and of goodly fruit." It is not the evergreen verdure of the tree merely that is referred to, but its health and vigor. Where could we find a better emblem of the church in a flourishing condition than just such a grove of olives as this, with the peaceful notes of the turtle dove poured forth from the midst, and the sun's living light over all, like the Sun of Righteousness shining over His peaceful church? — Nar. of Mission to Jews.

PSALM THE FIFTY-THIRD.

author, — prob. David

Subject, see Ps. xiv., of which this is a repetition with very slight changes.

Mahalath, a melancholy tune, adapted to the sombre strain that pervades the psalm.

1—3. (1) fool, always with added idea of wicked; ref. to class of men; Polychr., "The fools." There is no God, not a speculative denial of the existence of a Supreme Being, but a practical denial of His providential care. none, i. e. among the fools. (2) looked down, illus. fr. Divine exam. of Sodom, Ge. xviii. seek, R. V., "seek after." filthy, indulged sin polluting us, as well as bringing us under Divine punishment.

"Whoever considers the study of anatomy, I believe, will never be an atheist; the frame of man's body, and the cohesion of its parts, being so strange and paradoxical, that I hold it to be the greatest miracle of nature." — Lord Herbert.

God inspecting man. — I. God's profound interest in humanity. 1. Because of the dignity of man's nature; 2. Because of the peculiarity of man's moral condition; 3. Because of the capabilities of man's nature. II. God's searching scrutiny of humanity. His is the scrutiny of — 1. An all-seeing Being; 2. An infinitely holy Being; 3. An infinitely merciful Being. — Hom. Com.

A question for atheists. — Napoleon the First, with all his disdain for men, bowed to one power that he was pleased to regard as greater than himself. In the heart of an atheistic age he replied to the smattering theorists of his day, "Your arguments, gentlemen, are very fine. But who," pointing up to the evening sky, "who made all these?" — J. B. Clarke. — No God. — The Chinese acknowledge no God in their creed, and yet their houses and shops and streets are full of idols. The reverse of this is seen in Christendom; our creed is full of God, and then we shut Him out from our shops homes and hearts. — Hom. Com.

"Self-love exaggerates our faults as well as our virtues." — Goethe.

4—6. (4) no knowledge, are they so utterly devoid of understanding. Cam. Bib. suggests, "have not the . . . been made to know?" i. e. taught by sharp experience their error. Polychr., "shall not . . . be made to feel?" they . . called, R. V., "and call not." (5) There, etc., ref. to some historic event in wh. God greatly exalted His power in the overthrow of Israel's enemies. despised, this catastrophe is God's answer to the atheism of the foolish. (6) out of Zion, the center fr. wh. Jehovah manifests his earthly sovereignty. captivity, etc., this also seems to be full of later associations than any of David's time. But instead of "bring back the captivity," we may read, "turn the fortunes."

"I regard that man as lost, who has lost his sense of shame." — Clautus.

Superstitious fear. — There is a fond and superstitious fear, when men are afraid of their shadows, as Pisander was afraid of meeting his own soul, and Antenor would never go forth of the doors, but either in a coach closed upon all sides, or with a target borne over his head, fearing, I guess, lest the sky should fall down upon it, according to that in the psalm, "They fear where no fear is." — John King.

PSALM THE FIFTY-FOURTH.

author, — David; time, his exile

A confident prayer of the oppressed.

Historical connection 1 Sa. xxiii. 14-24; xxvi. 1.

1—3. (1) by thy name, exertion of those powers wh. are revealed as the attributes of thy character.[a] judge me, do me justice. (2) of my mouth, uttering the deep desires of my heart. (3) strangers, Polychr., "barbarians," the Ziphites, who were Jews, but alien to him in spirit. oppressors, R. V., "violent men." seek, R. V., "have sought."

a Ps. xx. 1.

The Covenanter's prayer. — Mr. Alexander Peden, a Scotch Covenanter, with some others, had been, at one time, pursued both by horse and foot, for a considerable way. At last, getting some little height between them and their persecutors, he stood still and said, "Let us pray here, for if the Lord hear not our prayer, and save us, we are all dead men." He then prayed, saying, "O Lord, this is the hour and power of Thine enemies, they may not be idle. But hast Thou no other work for them than to send them after us? Send them after them to whom Thou wilt give strength to flee, for our strength is gane. Twine them about the hill, O Lord, and cast the lap of Thy cloak over puir auld Saunders, and thir puir things, and save us this ae time, and we will keep it in remembrance, and tell to the commendation of Thy guidness, Thy pity and compassion, what Thou didst for us at sic a time." And in this he was heard, for a cloud of mist immediately intervened between them and their persecutors; and in the meantime, orders came to go in quest of James Renwick, and a great company with him. — Cheever.

Who can limit the power of Christ to save? Has He ever yet done all that, as God, He might or could do?

"No strangers are more strange than they who cast off the bands of civility and nature, whereby they were bound."—Dickson.

4—7. (4) with . . soul, or the upholder of my life. (5) in thy truth, or in fidelity to Thy promise made to me. (6) I . . sacrifice, R. V., "with a freewill offering will I sacrifice." (7) hath delivered, spoken in faith wh. rejoices in a deliverance that is not, as yet, an acomplished fact. seen, etc., a common idiom in psalms.[a] It occurs twice in the inscription on the Moabitish stone. his, R. V., "my," Polychr. "Mine eye feasts on my foes." This is not the spirit of the Gospel. But deliverance to the Psalmist will be a vindication of God's fidelity, a proof of his moral government, as such it causes him to rejoice.

A theme for wonder. — 1. At His unmerited grace, that He should side with me. 2. At His gracious power, for who can resist Him? 3. At His practical help, for He has upheld my soul. — Spurgeon.

Faith. — God is personally interested in every one whose confidence is reposed in Him. In his distressing wanderings, David never passed beyond the Divine care. In his extremest danger he was covered by the shield of the Divine protection. It was his faith in these things that enabled him to live a triumphant life, even in the midst of incessant persecutions and perils. It is true of all men and in all ages that life can become victorious only through Faith. Faith enlarging the horizon of life, realizing the future and invisible, feeling the presence of God, and resting in His promises, transforms common men into heroes (Heb. xi. 32–40). — W. Jones.

[a] Ps. xxii. 17; lix. 10; xcii. 11; cxviii. 7.

"The Christian needs a reminder every hour; some defeat, surprise adversity, peril; to be agitated, mortified, beaten out of his course, so that all remains of self will be sifted out."—Bushnell.

One of the most important, but one of the most difficult things for a powerful mind, is to be its own master; a pond may lie quiet in a plain, but a lake wants mountains and compass to hold it in.

PSALM THE FIFTY-FIFTH.

Author,— prob. David time, Absalom's rebellion

The prayer of one who is betrayed by his friends.

1—5. (1) Give ear, etc., comp. Ps. v. 1, 2; xvii. 1. hide not, veil not Thyself; comp. La. iii. 56.[b] (2) mourn, etc., or I go wandering to and fro, restless and agitated with doubts and fears. make a noise, or moan aloud. (3) oppression, pressure which forced David into a condition of great perplexity. cast iniquity, rend, "They set mischief in motion against me:", or, "They make evil doings slide upon me." "A metaphor fr. the practice of rolling stones down upon an enemy." in . . me, R. V., "in anger they persecute me." (4) sore pained, or writhes.[c] (5) horror, or trembling,[d] a rare word in the Heb.

God hiding Himself. — I. An evil to be dreaded: "Hide not thyself," etc., 1. By long delay in an urgent case. 2. In the sinner's case by refusing to hear altogether. II. Causes which may produce it. 1. In the man. 2. In the prayer itself. 3. In the manner of the prayer. III. Evils which will follow — a list which the preacher can readily think of. IV. Remedies for the evil. There is none of it should continue; but heart-searching, repentance, importunity, pleading the name of Jesus, etc., will lead to its removal. — Spurgeon.

Great answers to prayer. — It is said that a man once asked Alexander to give him some money to portion off a daughter. The king bade him go to his treasurer and demand what he pleased. He went and demanded an enormous sum. The treasurer was startled, — said he could not part with so much without an express order, and went to the king, and told him that he thought a small part of the money the man had named might serve for the occasion. "No," replied Alexander, "let him have it all. I like that man: he does me honor; he treats me like a king, and proves, by what he

[b] "God is said to 'veil His ear' when the right state of heart leaves the praying one, and consequently that which makes it acceptable and capable of being answered is wanting to the prayer."—Delitzsch.

[c] Comp. Matt. xxvi. 38, 39; 2 Cor. i. 8, 9.

[d] Job xxi. 6; Is. xxi. 4; Eze. vii. 18.

"Man's plea to man is that he never more will beg and that he never begged before; man's plea to God is that he did obtain a former suit, and therefore sues again How good a God we serve, that, when we sue, makes His old gifts the examples of His new."—Quarles.

a In his flight fr. Abs. Dav. did lodge in the wilderness, 2 Sa. xv. 28, xvii. 16.

b Je. xxv. 4.

"We are all too apt to utter this vain desire, for vain it is; no wings of doves or eagles could bear us away from the sorrows of a trembling heart. Inward grief knows nothing of place. Moreover, it is cowardly to shun the battle which God would have us fight."—Spurgeon.

"The Hindoos who desire to escape from trouble, often exclaim, 'Could I but fly, these things would not be so.'"—Roberts.

"Short passes, quick ejections, concise forms and remembrances, holy breathings, prayer like little posies, may be sent forth without number on every occasion, and God will note them in His book."—J. Taylor.

c "The sudden outburst of these fervent, impetuous feelings gives an irrgularity to the whole poem. But this is natural"—Perowne.

d Ge. xi. 7.

e Not "violence and strife" personified, as some older versions, and Rabbinical interpretators.

A man once complained to his minister that he had prayed for a whole year that he might enjoy the comforts of religion, but found no answer to his prayers The asks, that he believes me to be both rich and generous." "Let us," says Mr. Newton, in quoting this anecdote, "go to the throne of grace, and put up such petitions as may show that we have honorable views of the riches and bounty of our King."

6—8. (6) be at rest, Polychr., "and alight." The Psalmist watching the flight of some wild doves to their nests in the crags of the mountains, wishes he could escape to some solitary place where he might be free from persecution. (7) wander, etc.,[a] see Je. ix. 2. and remain, R. V., "I would lodge." (8) hasten my escape, R. V., "haste me to a shelter." tempest,[b] a figure for the malevolent hostility of party-strife raging in the city.

The dove. — The classical bards of Greece and Rome make frequent allusions to the surprising rapidity of the dove, and adorn their lines with many beautiful figures from the manner in which she flies. Sophocles compares the speed with which she cleaves the ethereal clouds to the impetuous rapidity of the whirlwind; and Euripides, the furious impetuosity of the Bacchanals rushing upon Pentheus, to the celerity of her motions. And Kimchi gives it as the reason why the Psalmist prefers the dove to other birds, that, while they become weary with flying, and alight upon a rock or tree to recruit their strength, and are taken, the dove, when she is fatigued, alternately rests one wing and flies with the other, and by this means escapes from the swiftest pursurers. The Orientals knew well how to avail themselves of her impetuous wing on various occasions. It is a curious fact that she was long employed in those countries as a courier, to carry tidings of importance between distant cities. Ælian asserts that Taurosthenes communicated to his father at Ægina, by a carrier pigeon, the news of his success in the Olympic games, on the very same day in which he obtained the prize. The Romans, it appears from Pliny, often employed doves in the same service; for Brutus, during the siege of Mutina, sent letters tied to their feet into the camp of the consuls. This remarkable custom has descended to modern times. Volney informs us that in Turkey the use of carrier pigeons has been laid aside, only for the last thirty or forty years, because the Kurd robbers killed the birds and carried off their dispatches. — Paxton.

A lodge in the wilderness—

"Oh for a lodge in some vast wilderness,
Some boundless contiguity of shade.
Where rumor of oppression and deceit,
Of unsuccessful or successful war,
Might never reach me more. My ear is pain'd,
My soul is sick with every day's report
Of wrong and outrage with which earth is fill'd."— Cowper.

9—11. (9) Destroy, lit. swallow up, as did the earth Korah and his followers, Comp. Neh. xvi. 32; or frustrate their counsels. Observe the change in the tone of the psalm from mourning and melancholy to passionate indignation.[c] divide their tongues, lit. slit their tongues. Evidently alluding to the breaking up of the schemes of the Babel builders.[d] I have seen, etc., Polychr., "Thou beholdest." violence, etc., the signs of revolutionary movements. (10) they go, i. e. my enemies who are plotting against me; like watchmen patrolling in siege against the Psalmist.[e] (11) Wickedness, or destruction. "The city is become the home of destruction." "In the city all kinds of party passions have broken loose." streets, Heb. broad place, or square; Polychr., "market place."

Evil in the city. — "The tone of sadness and melancholy now gives way to one of hot and passionate indignation;" and the poet sketches the sad scenes which he had witnessed in the city, and the painful experiences through which he had passed. The word which is rendered "streets" and "markets" denotes "the large open spaces at the gates of the oriental cities, where were the markets, the courts of justice, and general places of public concourse." Every phase of life seems to have become depraved. "Wickedness was in the midst" of the city. The whole city in all its parts and at all times was full of wickedness; and the result was distress and grief. Where wickedness abounds, misery will not be wanting. Sin is the fruitful parent of sorrow. It is well that trouble does follow transgression. We wonder not that David's heart was stirred with grief and indignation as he beheld the city so filled with untiring wickedness and sore anguish. No person of enlightened piety can contemplate the sins and sorrows of a great city without emotions of deep grief and earnest solicitude. — Hom. Com.

12—15. For . . me, this personal enmity by a whilom friend is the keenest pang in his cup of suffering. The Psalmist appears here to renew a kind of soliloquy. The person referred to is usually regarded as Ahithophel.[a] (13) mine equal, one so honored and esteemed as to be treated like an equal. guide, my associate, R. V., "companion." acquaintance, better, intimate friend; confidant. (14) sweet counsel, or familiar intercourse. in company, or in the throng of festal worshipers. (15) seize upon, or surprise. them, the party led by Ahithophel and Absalom. quick, R. V., "alive." hell, the grave, sheol,[b] R. V., "pit." in their dwellings, Polychr, "in their storehouse," i. e. in their hearts. "The mournful recollections of past friendships, so cruelly outraged give way to a fierce invocation of vengeance, and the individual disappears behind the whole body of the Psalmist's enemies. It will be noted that he avoids any personal execration of his old friend."

Treacherous friends.—Religion had rendered their intercourse sacred; they had mingled their worship, and communed on heavenly themes. If ever any bonds ought to be held inviolable, religious connections should be. There is a measure of impiety, of a detestable sort, in the deceit which debases the union of men who make professions of godliness. Shall the very altar of God be defiled with hypocrisy? Shall the gatherings of the temple be polluted by the presence of treachery? All this was true of Ahithophel, and in a measure of Judas. His union with the Lord was on the score of faith; they were joined in the holiest of enterprises; he had been sent on the most gracious of errands." — Spurgeon.

Severed friendship. —

Alas! they had been friends in youth;
But whispering tongues can poison truth;
And constancy lives in realms above;
And life is thorny; and youth is vain;
And to be wroth with one we love,
Doth work like madness in the brain.
And thus it chanced, as I divine,
With Roland and Sir Leoline.
Each spake words of high disdain
And insult to his heart's best brother:
They parted — ne'er to meet again!
But never either found another
To free the hollow heart from paining —
They stood aloft, the scars remaining,
Like cliffs which had been rent asunder;
A dreary sea now flows between; —
But neither heat, nor frost, nor thunder, Shall wholly do away, I ween,
The marks of that which once hath been. — Coleridge.

16—18. (16) call upon God, the mode of the Psalmist is here again changed. Lord, "Here and vs. 22 the name JEHOVAH is significant. It is the covenant-God of revelation to whom he can appeal, and under whose protection he can rest." — Kirkpatrick. (17) Evening, etc., mentioned first bec. the day began at sunset. The resort of the troubled, anxious soul was frequent prayer.[c] The three chief parts of the day are put as a poetical expression for "the whole day," or "without ceasing." (18) hath delivered, R. V., "redeemed," in past times. With the memory Dav. renews his hope. many with me, having hostile purposes against me. R. V., "they were many that strove with me."

Prayer (vs. 17).— I. The nature of prayer. It is an acknowledgment of the being and providence of God; 2. It re-establishes communion between God and man; 3. It is the grand means by which we obtain our spiritual blessings from God; 4. Only that is real prayer which is presented through Christ. II. The manner in which the Psalmist performed this duty. It was distinguished by — 1. Fervor; 2. Regularity; 3. Frequency. III. The confidence of success which he expresses. It is founded on — 1. His knowledge of God's disposition; 2. His belief of the Divine promise; 3. His experience minister repiled, "Go home now, and pray, Father, glorify Thyself."

a "It is not open enemies, who might have had cause for it, that are opposed to him, but faithless friends and among them that Ahithophel, of Giloh, the scum of perfidious ingratitude."—Delitzsch.

b Ahithophel committed suicide, 2 Sa. xvii. 23. Absalom died a sudden and violent death. 2 Sa. xviii. 14.

Comp. Nu. xvi. 30-33.

"That is a slight pain which is removed by one cry. Rooted griefs, overwhelming sorrows, demand many repetitions. Trouble finds ease in tautology. It is absurd to look for cool, logical sequence in such a heart's cry as this psalm. The psalmist feels that the defection of his false friend is the worst blow of all."—Exp. Bib.

"The Psalmist means that he will always pray; he will run a line of prayer right along the day, and track the sun with his petitions."—Spurgeon.

c Comp. Da. vi. 10; Lu. vi. 12, xviii. 1; Ac. iii. 1; Ph. iv. 6; 1 Th. v. 17.

"From a singular conformity of practice in persons remote both as to age and place, it appears probable that some idea must have obtained generally, that it was expedient and acceptable to pray three times every day. Such was the practice of David, and also of Daniel, and as a parallel, though, as far as connected with an idolatrous system, a different case, we are informed that 'It is an invariable rule with the Brahmins to perform their devotions three times every day; at sunrise, at noon, and at sunset.'" (Maurice.) — Burder.

of past favors. We may be satisfied that God hears us when — (1) We feel access to the throne of grace; (2) When we have direct answers to prayer; (3) When we are cheered with the hope that God will hear. Apply. — Gamma in 400 Sks.

Prayer. —

Dart up thy soul in groans: thy secret groan Shall pierce His ear, shall pierce His ear alone.
Dart up thy soul in vows: thy secret vow Shall find Him out, where heaven alone shall know.
Dart up thy soul in sighs: thy whispering sigh Shall rouse His ears, and fear no list'ner nigh.
Send up thy groans, thy sighs, thy closet vow:
There's none, there's none shall know, but heaven and thou.
Groans freshed with vows, and vows made salt with tears, Unscale His eyes, and scale His conquered ears:
Shoot up the bosom shafts of thy desire,
Feathered with faith, and double-forked with fire,
And they will hit: fear not, where heaven bids come,
Heaven's never deaf, but when man's heart is dumb. — Quarles.

"Every day is a thanksgiving day. Every morning a blessing of strength, every evening a bundle of mercies, every night a benediction of peace, for each of God's children! We may not see the angels, or hear the sweep of their wings, but we receive the blessings of their hands." — Isaac W. Gowan.

Regular prayer. — The point to be insisted on is the having some season set apart for prayer, on which nothing shall be suffered to intrude. And what better season can be found than the morning? In the days of the old Roman empire, the gateways of rich and powerful citizens were thronged in the morning with dependents, each bearing his basket, and waiting for the daily gift of food. So it is fitting that our heavenly Father's gate should daily witness our presence, at the opening of the day, awaiting our share of the bread of heaven to nourish us for the day's responsibilities, trials, burdens, and temptations. And what is true of prayer regarded as petition, is equally true of prayer viewed as communion or as worship. It is fitting that the fresh energies of the morning, the clear, unwearied thought, the vigorous perception, the new enthusiasm, should be first called out towards Him. Then we are quicker to take His meaning, and calmer to face the coming issues of the day, and better disposed for that concentration of mind and heart which is indispensable to the effectiveness of prayer. — M. R. Vincent. — Prayer the forerunner of mercy. — There was once a young man who had begun to pray, and his father knew it. He said to him, "John, you know I am an enemy to religion, and prayer is a thing that never shall be offered in my house." Still the young man continued earnest in supplication. "Well," said the father, one day, in a hot passion, "you must give up either God or me. I solemnly swear that you shall never darken the threshold of my door again, unless you decide that you will give up praying. I give you till to-morrow morning to choose." The night was spent in prayer by the young disciple. He arose in the morning, sad, to be cast away by his friends, but resolute in spirit that, come what might, he would serve his God. The father abruptly accosted him: "Well, what is the answer?" "Father," he said, "I cannot violate my conscience, I cannot forsake my God!" "Leave immediately," said he. And the mother stood there; the father's hard spirit had made hers hard too; and though she might have wept, she concealed her tears. "Leave immediately," said he. Stepping outside the threshold, the young man said, "I wish you would grant me one request before I go; and if you grant me that I will never trouble you again." "Well," said the father, "you shall have anything you like; but mark me, you go after you have had that; you shall never have anything again." "It is," said the son, "that you and my mother would kneel down, and let me pray for you before I go." Well, they could hardly object to it; the young man was on his knees in a moment, and began to pray with such unction and power, with such evident love to their souls, with such true and Divine earnestness, that they both fell flat on the ground, and when the son rose, there they were; and the father said, "You need not go, John; come and stop, come and stop;" and it was not long before not only he, but the whole of them, began to pray, and they were united to a Christian church. — Spurgeon.

"Exult and praise thy God, who has made and redeemed thee, for to God you owe all those many and inestimable benefits which you daily receive from His merciful bounty, for, even were you a holy angel, your gratitude as such should still be beneath His goodness and infinite grandeur." — Thomas à Kempis.

"If, then, I were a nightingale, I would do the part of a nightingale. If I were a swan, I would do like a swan. But now I am a rational creature, and I ought to praise God; this is my work. I do it; nor will I desert this part so long as I am allowed to keep it, and I exhort you to join in the same song." — Epictetus.

19—21. (19) God . . old, R. V., "God shall hear, and answer them," etc., ref. to the judicial char. of God's government. Because they, R. V., "the men who." no changes, the word used probably means a change, in the sense of succession, as of garments, of troops relieving guard, servants leaving work, and the like.[a] therefore they, R. V., "And who." (20) He, i. e. Dav.'s treacherous friend, of whom he cannot keep from thinking. be, R. V., "mere." broken, R. V., "profaned." covenant, of friendship. (21) The words of, R. V., omits. were . . than, R. V., "was smooth as." butter, his words flow sweet and smooth like cream. —Spk. Com. war, lit. war his heart; absorbed in hatred.

Flattery and churlishness. — A chameleon once met a porcupine, and complained that he had taken great pains to make friends with everybody; but, strange to say, he had entirely failed, and could not now be sure that he had a friend in the world. "And by what means," said the porcupine, "have you sought to make friends?" "By flattery," said the chameleon. "I have adapted myself to all I met; humored the follies and foibles of every one. In order to make people believe that I liked them, I have imitated their manners, as if I considered them models of perfection. So far have I gone in this, that it has become a habit with me; and now my very skin takes the hue and complexion of the thing that happens to be nearest. Yet all this has been in vain; for everybody calls me a turncoat, and I am generally considered selfish, hypocritical, and base." "And no doubt you deserve all this," said the porcupine. "I have taken a different course; but I must confess that I have as few friends as you. I adopted the rule to resent every injury, and every encroachment upon my dignity. I would allow no one to even touch me without sticking into him one or more of my sharp quills. I determined to take care of number one; and the result has been that, while I have vindicated my rights, I have created a universal dislike. I am called old 'Touch-me-not;' and if I am not as much despised, I am even more disliked than you, Sir Chameleon."

[b]

22, 23. (32) burden, or "portion;" that which is appointed to man to bear. righteous to be moved, Polychr., "totter," i. e. no final disaster; or Cam, Bib., "moved for ever;" there will be an end to their suffering. (23) bloody etc., R. V., "bloodthirsty;" words wh. seem prophetic of the fate of Ahithophel and Absalom.[c] but, i. e. "but as for me."

God as our care-bearer (vs. 22). — I. Let us notice some of the burdens which most commonly afflict mankind. 1. Burdens of the flesh; 2. Of the mind; 3. Of the heart; 4. Of the conscience. II. Consider the encouragement we have to cast our burdens on the Lord. —J. M. Sherwood.

Happiness of confiding in God. — There once lived in an old brown cottage a solitary woman. She tended her little garden, and knit and spun for her living. She was known everywhere, from village to village, by the name of "Happy Nancy." She had no money, no family, no relatives, and was half blind, quite lame, and very crooked. There was no comeliness in her, and yet there, in that homely, deformed body, the great God, who loves to bring strength out of weakness, had set His royal seal. "Well, Nancy, singing again?" would the chance visitor say, as he stopped at her door. "Oh yes, I'm for ever at it." "I wish you'd tell me your secret, Nancy. You are all alone, you work hard, you have nothing very pleasant surrounding you; what is the reason you're so happy?" "Perhaps it's because I haven't got anybody but God," replied the good creature, looking upward. "You see, rich folks like you depend upon their families and their houses; they've got to be thinking about their business, of their wives and children; and then they're always mighty afraid of troubles ahead. I ain't got anything to trouble myself about, you see, 'cause I leave all to the Lord. I think, well, if He can keep this great world in such good order, the sun rolling day after day, and the stars shining night after night, and make my garden things come up the same, season after season, He can certainly take care of such a poor thing as I am; and so you see I leave it all to the Lord, and the Lord takes care of me." "Well, but, Nancy, suppose a frost comes after your fruit-trees are all in blossom and your plants out; suppose ——" "But I don't suppose — I never can suppose — I don't want to suppose, except that the Lord will do everything right. That's what makes you people unhappy — you're all the time supposing. Now, why can't you wait till the suppose comes, and then make the best of it?" "Ah, Nancy, its pretty certain you'll get to heaven, while many of us, with all our worldly wisdom, will have to stay out." "There you are — at it again," said Nancy, shaking her head: "always looking out for some black cloud. Why, if I were you, I'd keep the devil at arm's length,

[a] "Change of fortune, i. e. those who are always prosperous."—Calvin.

"Moral change for the better, i. e. amendment."—Gesenius and Fuerst.

"Changes from prosperity to adversity."—Jennings and Lowe.

"Christian! thou knowest thou carriest gunpowder bout thee. Desire them that carry fire to keep at a distance. It is a dangerous crisis when a proud heart meets with flattering lips."—Flavel.

[b] b Matt. vi. 25; 1 Pe. v. 7.

[c] Ps. v. 6; xxxvii. 38; Pr. x. 27.

"He is declaring a universal truth. However crushing our loads of duty or of sorrow, we receive strength to carry them with straight backs, if we cast them on Jehovah. The promise is not that He will take away the pressure, but that He will hold us up under it."—Maclaren.

"It appears to us that this vs. contains the very words of the Psalmist's smooth-tongued enemy. . . If we take them as spoken ironically, they are drawn swords to Dav."—Jennings and Lowe.

"To all that have a desire to walk with God, prayer is the key to open the day, and the bolt to shut in the night."—J. Taylor.

instead of taking him right into my heart. He'll do you a desperate sight of mischief." She was right. We do take the demon of care, of distrust, of melancholy foreboding, of ingratitude, right into our heart. We canker every pleasure with gloomy fear of coming ill. We seldom trust that blessings will enter, or hail them when they come. — Bib. Ill.

"Trust Him for a way when there is no way, for light when there is no light, for all things when you have nothing, for joy when there is only sorrow, for life when you are in the midst of death. Thus you will find at last that faith is not only righteousness, but life and joy and peace."—T. T. Munger.

Cast thy burden upon the Lord.—

What can it mean? Is it aught to Him
That the nights are long and the days are dim?
Can He be touched by the griefs I bear,
Which sadden the heart and whiten the hair?
Around His throne are eternal calms,
And strong glad music of happy psalms.
And bliss unruffled by any strife.
How can He care for my little life?

And yet I want Him to care for me
While I live in this world where the sorrows be.
When the lights die down from the path I take
When strength is feeble and friends forsake;
When love and music, that once did bless,
Have left me to silence and loneliness.
And my life-song changes to sobbing prayers,
Then my heart cries out for a God who cares.

Oh, wonderful story of deathless love!
Each child is dear to that heart above.
He fights for me when I cannot fight,
He comforts me in the gloom of night;
He lifts the burden, for He is strong,
He stills the sigh and awakens the song:
The sorrows that bowed me down He bears,
And loves and pardons because He cares.

— Marianne Farningham.

"It takes considerably more piety to make a man thankful to God for what he has done than prayerfully dependent upon God for what we would like to have him do."—C. H. Parkhurst.

PSALM THE FIFTY-SIXTH.

author,— David at the time of his exile

Subject, God's word of promise the outcast's hope.

1—4. (1) man,[a] . . up, like a wild beast pouncing upon his victim. daily, R. V., "all the day long." (2) swallow me, hungrily pant for me. Polychr. "are snatching." O thou most High, is prob. not an exclamation. (3) afraid, by reason of these watching and proud Philistine enemies. I will trust, I, is emphatic; the poor, weak one will betake himself to God for protection. (4) In God, i. e. by his help. This is the true refrain, or key-note, of the Psalm. his word, of promise. what . . me, R. V., "what can flesh do unto me?"

Trust in God.— Whensoever we are afraid of any evil, we are still to put our trust in God. I. What is it to put our trust in God? 1. To keep our hearts from desponding or sinking down under any fears. 2. To comfort ourselves in God. 3. To expect deliverance from him. II. What is there in God we ought to put our trust in? 1. In his promises. 2. In his properties. His power, wisdom, justice, mercy, all-sufficiency. III. Why should we in all our fears put our trust in God? 1. Because there is none else can secure us from our fears. Whereas, 2. There are no fears but God can secure us from them, either by removing the thing feared, or by subduing the fear of the thing.—Bp. Beveridge.

Faith.— There is nothing like faith to help at a pinch; faith dissolves doubts, as the sun drives away the mists. And that you may not be put out, know your time of believing is always. There are times when some graces may be out of use, but there is no time wherein faith can be said to be so. Wherefore, faith must be always in exercise. Faith is the eye, is the mouth, is the hand; and one of these is of use all day long. Faith is to see, to receive, to work, or to eat; and a Christian should be seeing, or receiving, or working, or feeding all day long. Let it rain, let it blow, let it thunder, let it lightning, a Christian must still believe.— J. Bunyan.

[a] "Heb. enosh, wh. has always the sense of weakness and fragility, and is placed in antithesis to Elohim."—Spk. Com.

"The customary devotion of prayer twice a day is as the falling of the early and the late dew; but if you will increase and flourish in the works of grace empty the great clouds sometimes, and let them fall into a full shower of prayer; choose out the seasons in your own discretion, when prayer shall overflow like Jordan in the time of harvest"— J. Taylor.

5—9. (5) wrest my words, distort, or pervert them with design to get accusation against him.[a] (6) hide themselves, set an ambush, lie in wait. mark my steps, as hunters track game; (Ps. xlix. 5). when they wait, R. V., "even as they have waited;" i. e. watched for an opportunity. (7) Shall . . iniquity? or on account of such iniquity is there escape to them? The original is very obscure. Polychr., "according to their malice weigh out to them," i. e. pay them what they deserve. (8) tellest, dost keep an exact account of the days and adventures of my fugitive life. my wanderings, in that period of homelessness and exile.[b] tears . . bottle, a bold but expressive metaphor. "As the traveler carefully preserves water, milk, or wine in leather bottles for a journey, so Dav. trusts that God keeps in memory every tear which he sheds." (9) turn back, baffled and checked.

Fear dispelled by faith (vss. 8, 9).—I. Learn from this experience of the Psalmist not to go over and over your troubles alone. II. Learn to treat more with God and less with man. III. Let us take encouragement from a consideration of the Divine sympathy. IV. While we live among enemies let us remember that the weapons of our warfare are not carnal. A word to the ungodly:—God knows your wanderings also. — R. Cecil.

Tear-bottles (vs. 8). —The custom of putting tears into the ampulla or urnæ lacrymales, so well known among the Romans, seems to have been more anciently in use in Asia, and particularly among the Hebrews. These lachrymal urns were of different materials, some of glass, some of earth, and of various forms and shapes. One went about to each person in the company at the height of his grief with a piece of cotton in his hand, with which he carefully collects the falling tears, and which he then squeezes into the bottle, preserving them with the greatest care. This was no difficult matter; for Homer says the tears of Telemachus, when he heard of his father, dropped on the ground. They were placed on the sepulchres of the deceased as a memorial of the affection and sorrow of their surviving relations and friends. It will be difficult to account, on any other supposition, for the following expressions of the Psalmist: "Put Thou my tears into Thy bottle." If this view be admitted, the meaning will be: "Let my distress, and the tears I shed in consequence of it, be ever before Thee." — Paxton.

10—13. (10) In God, see vs. 4. (11) afraid, see vs. 3. R. V., makes this a question, "What . . me?" (12) vows,[c] made on former occasions of deliverance. praises, R. V., "thank-offerings," in addition to the votive offerings. (13) soul,[d] or life. wilt . . deliver, R. V., "hast thou not delivered." feet from falling, into surrounding dangers. light of the living, i. e. as a living man; that henceforth I may be free from trouble, and walk before God in the clear daylight, no longer dwelling in darkness, but in "the light of life." —Pul. Com.

Vows to be performed (vs. 12). — I. What vows are upon you? 1. There may be some of a personal and particular nature, into which we cannot inquire; 2. There are some common to us all, made at our baptism, confirmation, at the Lord's table. II. The obligations which are thereby entailed upon us: the least we can do is to render praises — 1. In a way of devout acknowledgment; 2. In a way of total surrender of ourselves to God. — C. Simeon.

The power of God. — The Thracians had a very striking emblem expressive of the almighty power of God. It was a sun, with three beams — one shining upon a sea of ice, and dissolving it; another upon a rock, and melting it; and a third upon a dead man, and putting life into him. How admirably does all this harmonize with the Gospel, which an inspired Apostle calls "the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believes it!" It melts the hardest heart into uniform obedience to the Divine will, and raises those who were dead in trespasses and sins to a life of righteousness. — "Pray without ceasing." — A sailor coming to London, where he had never been before, visited St. Paul's. When carelessly passing, he heard the words, "Pray without ceasing," uttered by the minister. One fine evening, some seven years later, he was walking the deck, with his feelings soothed by the pleasing aspect of nature, when all of a sudden darted on his mind the words, "Pray without ceasing!" "What words can these be?" he exclaimed: "I think I have heard them before: where could it be?" After a pause — "Oh, it was at St. Paul's in London; the minister read them from the Bible. What! and do the Scriptures say, 'Pray without ceasing?'" The poor fellow now found the lightning of conviction flash on his conscience, the thunders of the law shake a "This description is singularly applicable to David's position among the envious nobles at the court of Achish." —Spk. Com.

b 1 Sa. xxvi. 20

"The lachrymatories used in Greece and Rome are, I believe, unknown to the Hindoos. A person in distress, as he weeps, says, 'Ah! Lord, take care of these tears; let them not run in vain.' 'Alas! my husband, why beat me? my tears are known to God.'"—Roberts.

"The tears that His children shed and give to Him to keep cannot be tears of rebellious or unmeasured weeping, and will be given back one day to those who shed them, converted into refreshment,

'Think not thou canst weep a tear,
And thy Maker is not near.'"
— Exp. Bib.

c Ps. lxvi. 13, 14; Ec. v. 4, 5.

d Ps. cxvi. 8

"The respect or relation which lies between God, considered as an unchangeable Being, and one that is humble, and supplicates, and endeavors to qualify himself for mercy, cannot be the same with that which lies between the same unchangeable God, and one that is obstinate and will not supplicate or endeavor to qualify himself. That is, the same thing or being cannot respect opposite and contradictory characters in the same manner. It is not, in short, that by our supplication we can pretend to produce any alteration in the Deity, but by an alteration in ourselves, we may alter the relation and respect lying between Him and us." — Wollaston, Phil. iv. 6.

"I have so much business to do to-day that I shall not be able to get through it with less than three hour's prayer." — Martin Luther.

his heart. Now he began, for the first time, to pray; but praying was not all! "Oh," said he "if I had a Bible, or some good book!" He rummaged his chest, when, in a corner, he espied a Bible which his anxious mother had, twenty years before, placed in his chest, but which till now he had never opened. He snatched it up, put it to his breast, then read, wept, prayed; he believed, and became a new man. — Whitecross.

PSALM THE FIFTY-SEVENTH.

author, — David

Time of his exile; a cave psalm.

A psalm of confidence in God during a time of trouble.

Historical connection, 1 Sa. xxii. 1.

Al-taschith, see Ps. lviii., lix., lxxv.; "destroy thou not," initial words of a song, to the tune of wh. this was to be sung.

1—3. (1) my soul, self or life. trusteth, better, takes refuge. He seems to take refuge in a cave, he really takes refuge in God. shadow . . wings, see Ps. xvii. 8.[a] calamities, lit. destructions; hostilities. (2) most high, R. V., "Most High." performeth, or surely completes what He begins.[b] Polychr, "who requites me." (3) from . . up, more prop. rendered R. V., "When he that would swallow me up reproacheth." mercy and truth, "it is in virtue of the loving kindness which is the foundation of His covenant, and of the faithfulness which is an inalienable attribute of His nature, that God will send help to His servant."

Him that would swallow me up. — If I were to take you to my house, and say that I had an exquisitely fat man, and wished you to join me in eating him, your indignation could be restrained by nothing. You would pronounce me to be crazy. There is not in New York a man so mean that he would not put down a man who should propose to have a banquet off from a fellow man, cutting steaks out of him, and eating them. And that is nothing but feasting on the human body, while they all will sit down, and take a man's soul, and look for the tenderloins, and invite their neighbors in to partake of the little titbits. They will take a man's honor and name, and broil them over the coals of their indignation, and fill the whole room with the aroma thereof, and give their neighbor a piece, and watch him, and wink as he tastes it. You all eat men up. . . . You eat the souls, the finest elements of men. You are more than glad if you can whisper a word that is derogatory to a neighbor, or his wife, or his daughter. . . . The morsel is too exquisite to be lost. Here is a person's hope for this world and the world to come, and you have it on your fork, and you cannot refrain from tasting it, and give it to some one else to taste. You are cannibals, eating men's honor and name and rejoicing in it — and that, too, when you do not always know that the things charged against them are true; when in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the probabilities are that they are not true. — H. W. Beecher.

a Ps. xxxvi. 7; lxiii. 7; De. xxxii. 11; Ru. ii. 12; Matt. xxiii. 37.

b Ps. cxxxviii. 8; Phi. i. 6.

4—6. (4) lions, Ps. xxii. 21. I lie, etc., the idea is: though my life be in great danger from blood-thirsty men, I will lie down and sleep secure under the protection of God. teeth are spears,[c] Pr. xxx. 14; Ps. lv. 21. tongue . . sword, by reason of blasphemy. (5) exalted, i. e., "manifest Thy glory and Thy majesty in the exercise of universal dominion."[d] (6) prepared a net, Ps. vii. 15, 16; ix. 15. fallen themselves, allusion may possibly be to Saul's adventure in cave of Engedi.[e]

My soul is among lions. — How came I there? If for God's sake, then I may remember. — 1. So was my Lord in the wilderness; 2. The lions are chained; 3. Their howling is all they can do; 4. I shall come out of their den alive, unhurt, honored; 5. The Lion of Judah is with me; 6. I shall soon be among the angels. — Spurgeon.

Arrows. — The arrows were usually made of light wood, with a head of brass or iron, which was commonly barbed. Sometimes they were armed with two, three, or four hooks. The heads of arrows were sometimes dipped in poison. Horace mentions the poisoned arrows of the ancient Moors. They were used by many other nations in different parts of the world; and if we believe the reports of modern travelers, these cruel weapons are not yet laid aside by some barbarous tribes. The negroes in the countries of Bornou and Soudan fight with poisoned arrows; the arrow is short, and made of iron; the smallest scratch with it causes the body to swell, and is infallibly mortal, unless counteracted by an antidote known among the natives. Everywhere, the poison used for this inhuman purpose was of the deadliest kind; and the slightest wound was followed by almost instant death. From this statement it will appear that arrows were by no means contemptible instruments of destruction, although they are not to be compared with the tremendous inventions of modern warfare. We are not, therefore, to be surprised that so c "The mingled figures of wild beasts and weapons of war heighten the picture of danger." —Fausset.

d "The prayer of God's exaltation is at the same time a prayer for his own deliverance, but it is — may we not say? — a less selfish and a nobler prayer."—Perowne.

e 1 Sa. xxiv.

The praying men of the Fourteenth Massachusetts Regiment in the civil war, while stationed in Fort Albany, took an agent of the Christian Commission to see their praying-place. They showed him the bomb-proof of the fort, which afforded them an undisturbed and many striking allusions to the arrow, and the trodden bow, occur in the loftier strains of the inspired writers. The bitter words of the wicked are called "their arrows;" "their teeth are spears and arrows;" and the man that beareth false witness against his neighbor is "a sharp arrow."—Paxton.

safe retreat. Every place of prayer is a bomb-proof to its occupants.

7—11. (7) fixed, steadfast in the confidence of faith.[a] The Heb. word denotes the firm and ready attitude of his mind. sing . . praise, use both voice and instrument to give expression to trust. R. V., "sing, yea, I will sing praises." (8) my glory, i. e. my soul, as the noblest part of man, Ps. xxx. 12.[b] psaltery, etc., or harp and cithern. awake early, "my song shall itself awake the morning."[c] (9) sing, R. V., "sing praises." "The Psalmist's joy is too great to be confined within any narrower limits than those of the entire earth." (10) unto the heavens, Ps. xxxvi. 5. clouds, R. V., "skies." (11) exalted, vs. 5.

a Ps. li. 10.

b Ac. ii. 26.

c "With the music of stringed instruments and with song he will awake the not yet risen dawn, the sun still slumbering in its chamber."—Delitzsch.

The fixed heart (vs. 7). — I. On what was David's heart fixed? 1. On God and His service; 2. On a diligent study of the lively oracles of God; 3. On the duty of prayer; 4. On furthering the interests of Zion. II. Why should we do likewise? 1. Because indecision degrades the character; 2. There is no solid reason why the heart should not be fixed on God; 3. Spiritual religion as developed in the Gospel requires it; 4. Without it we shall never accomplish anything truly great and good in God's service; 5. It will be a source of no small comfort in old age and death. — Jonathan Brace.

"Who can tell the glory of the summit of the mountain of the mercy of God which reaches to the heavens, whose base is refulgent with glory!"—R. A. Griffin.

A steadfast heart. — The ideal perfect Christian life would be a life in contact with God along its whole line. It would be everywhere and always in communion with God. God's will and God's love would fill and move in every inlet and curve of the life, as the ocean in its gulfs and creeks and round its promontories; and upon this high plane, the general tenor of the life would be more even. There would be no struggles for the vision of God's face when His face should be constantly unveiled. There would be fewer, or, perhaps, no seasons of special communion with God, when the whole life should be one long communing with Him. The seer on Patmos, in his vision of the heavenly Jerusalem, saw no temple therein. There was no need of the special forms and occasions of worship where the spirit lived forever in the immediate presence of Christ. — M. R. Vincent.

"The incense of the temple was to be beaten to typify the breaking of the heart in prayer."—T. Watson.

PSALM THE FIFTY-EIGHTH.

author, — unknown; time, Josiah's reign

1—5. (1) Do, etc., R. V., "Do ye indeed in silence speak righteousness." The Psalmist is expostulating with the judges who are dumb when they ought to speak. — Polychr. Cheyne, "Speak ye indeed what is right ye gods? Do ye judge men without partiality? The judges addressed as 'gods' bec. they rep. God, the supreme Judge." (2) Yea, in heart, etc., better, "Nay;" inwardly these judges were continually contriving some scheme of injustice against the weak, the poor, the widow. weigh, R. V., "weigh out." Spoken sarcastically; instead of weighing in the balances of justice, they weigh out and distribute their own violence.[d] (3) as soon as . . born, giving earlier signs of their depravity.[e] (4) poison, etc., De xxxii, 33.[f] adder, or asp. The "adder" was supposed to be "deaf," on account of its being very difficult to charm. It was thought obstinately to set itself against the charmer, and, as it were, stop its ears against him.— Pul. Com. So the judges refuse to listen to God's prophets. (5) charmers, whisperers, referring to the inarticulate murmurs of the serpent-charmers. never so wisely, or however well versed he may be in his art.

A bold protest against unrighteous judges.

d "Ye pretend indeed to hold the balance of justice, and nicely to weigh out to each his just award, but violence is the weight with wh. ye adjust the scales."—Perowne.

Serpent-charming. — One day a rattlesnake entered our encampment. Among us was a Canadian who could play the flute, and who, to divert us, marched against the serpent with his new species of weapon. On the approach of his enemy, the haughty reptile curls himself into a spiral line, flattens his head, inflates his cheeks, contracts his lips, displays his envenomed fangs and his bold throat; his tongue flows like two flames of fire: his eyes are burning coals; his body, swollen with rage, rises and falls like the bellows of a forge; his dilated skin assumes a dull and scaly appearance; and his tail, whence proceeds the death-announcing sound, vibrates with such rapidity as to resemble a light vapor. The Canadian begins to play upon his flute — the serpent starts with surprise, and draws back his head. In proportion as he is e Eph. ii. 3; iv. 18.

"The Psalmist, however, does not here declare the general doctrine of original or birth sin; he speaks simply of the desperately wicked."—Spk. Com.

f Job xx. 14-16; Is. xi. 8.

struck with the magic notes, his eyes lose their fierceness, the oscillations of his tail become slower, and the sounds which it makes become weaker and gradually die away. Less perpendicular upon their spiral line, the rings of the charmed serpent are by degrees expanded, and sink one after another on the ground, in concentric circles. The shades of azure green, white and gold, recover their brightness on his quivering skin, and slightly turning his head he remains motionless, in the attitude of attention and pleasure. At this moment the Canadian advances a few steps, producing with the flute sweet and simple notes. The serpent inclining his variegated neck, opens a passage with his head through the high grass, and begins to creep after the musician; stopping when he stops, and beginning to follow him again as soon as he advances forward. In this manner he was led out of the camp, attended by a great number of spectators, both savages and Europeans, who could scarcely believe their eyes, which had witnessed this effect of harmony.—Chateaubriand.

"The accusation of Psalmist sets in sinister light the flagrant contradiction between the spirit in which these men exercised their office and the source from which they derived it, and thus sharpens the reproach of the question."—Exp. Bib.

6—8. (6) Break, etc., the expression suits rather the wild beast than the serpent; the "lions" of the second clause of the verse. (7) continually, R. V., "apace," as some torrent, swollen for a time, and then utterly gone: as winter torrents do."[a] when . . pieces, render "When he shoots out his arrows, let them be as if they were headless:" as if they had been "lopped at the points." (8) As, R. V., "Let them be as." snail . . melteth, Polychr. "Like the snail that dissolves as it crawls;" bec. the slug leaves a slimy trail the idea is taken that it dissolves as it goes along; the idea is manifestly an incorrect one.[b] that . . seen, Polychr. "which the sun has never seen," i. e. vanish as if they had never existed.

a Job vi. 15.

"When he shooteth his arrows let them be blunted."—Revised Eng. Bib.

b "Evidently this is nothing more than a poetical hyperbole, and need not be explained therefore as a popular error, or a mistake in natural history."—Perowne.

The popular impression (snail melting) is used to illustrate a great truth; the wicked may prosper for a time, but the day will come when they will melt away, when there shall not be, as in the snail, a provision made for their renewing opportunities.

Imprecatory passages in the Psalms (vss. 6-8)—I shall attempt to show—I. That granting that David really expressed these unkind feelings, we are here by no means warranted to copy his example. II. To prove that he never at all expressed them. III. Point out the real meaning of the passages in question. IV. Conclude with a few short practical observations.—H. A. Herbert.

The wicked.—Rottenness smells sooner or later too strong to be concealed. There is a time when the leprosy cannot be hidden. At last the old house can no longer be propped up, and falls about the tenant's ears: so there is a limit to a man's self-gratulation; he is found out amid general scorn, and can no longer keep up the farce which he played so well. If this happen not in this life, the hand of death will let light in upon the coveted character, and expose the sinner to shame and contempt.—Spurgeon.—The wicked are all, so to speak, human abortions; they are and for ever remain defective beings, who have not accomplished the great purpose of their existence. Heaven is the one end for which man is created, and he who falls short of it does not attain the purpose of his being; he is an eternal abortion.—O. Prescott Hiller.

9—11. (9) Before, etc., read: "Before your pots can feel the thorns [the fire of the thorn-bush] while the flesh is yet raw, He shall sweep them away with a whirlwind in wrath." It is another figure for the swift destruction of the wicked and their schemes, taken from the experience of travel in the desert. The travelers have lighted a fire of dry thorns or brambles under their cooking pots. It blazes up rapidly, but even so, before the pots are heated and the meat in them cooked, a sudden whirlwind sweeps away the fire and undoes their work. The fire represents the malicious will of the evil-doers, the pots with the meat, the plans which they are devising: but let them work never so rapidly, the whirlwind of Divine judgment will annihilate their schemes.—Cam. Bib. (10) wash . . wicked, such terrible vengeance was common in ancient times, but is painful for us even to contemplate. (11) a man, R. V., "men." reward, or fruit.[c] he is a God, R. V., "there is a God."

c Pr. i. 31; Is. iii. 10.

"The wicked are compared to a heap of thorns, some green, some dried up, lighted under a caldron, and then swept away by a sudden storm . . . before they have heated the pots."—Spk. Com.

"Ere your caldrons know the thorn, His winds shall sweep away greenwood and brands that glow."—Keble.

"The Arabs kindle a fire in a large stone pitcher, and when it is hot they mix the meal in water, as we do to

A reward for the righteous (vs. 11).—I. What are the discriminating features which distinguish the righteous? They are known—1. By the genuineness and spirituality of their faith; 2. By the rectitude and purity of their principles; 3. By the consistency of their conduct. II. What is that reward to which the righteous are entitled? 1. It is a gracious and voluntary one; 2. It is distant and remote; 3. It is suitable and proportionate; 4. It is glorious and eternal. III. What evidences have we for crediting the assertion in the text? 1. From the character of God; 2. From the positive declarations of Scripture; 3. From the general consent of mankind. Apply—(1) Try to be of the righteous; (2) Be reconciled to afflictions, etc.; (3) Let the infidel be silenced; (4) What will become of the wicked?—Beta in 400 Sks.

Fall of Robespierre.—Robespierre had possessed the courage to place over the altars of the churches, which had been transformed into temples dedicated to Reason, the inscription, "There is a Supreme Being" (un Etre Suprême); and he was soon, in his own person, to experience that he had not been mistaken. Betrayed by his own companions, accused of wishing to raise himself to the rank of a dictator, to be a new Cæsar to the new republic, Robespierre stood as a prisoner before that very tribunal of terror himself had called into existence. He was busy signing sentences of death at the town hall, when a number of Jacobins and national guards forced the door of the Hôtel de Ville, and arrested him. He tried to blow out his brains with a pistol, but the attempt was unsuccessful, and only ended in the shattering of one of his jaw-bones. Bleeding profusely, he was dragged before Fouquier Tainville, to hear his doom, and then to be delivered into the hands of the executioner. In observance of the customary forms, however, he was first taken to the Tuileries, where the Committee for Public Safety were sitting in the bedroom of Marie Antoinette. To this room Robespierre was dragged, and insultingly thrown on a great table that stood in the centre. The day before he had been sitting at this table, with power over the life and property of every Frenchman; but yesterday he had been signing sentences of death there. They lay still scattered about; and these papers were now the only bandage the suffering man had to staunch the blood which profusely flowed from his wound. It was strange to see how they greedily drank up the blood of the man who had signed them. A sansculotte who stood by was moved with compassion, and gave Robespierre a rag from an old tri-colored flag, that he might cover the wounds in his face. As the ex-dictator lay groaning amidst the blood-stained sentences, an old national guard raised his arm, and pointing to the fearful spectacle, exclaimed, "Robespierre was right; there is a Supreme Being!"—Life of Queen Hortense.

PSALM THE FIFTY-NINTH.

make paste, and daub it with the hollow of their hands upon the outside of the pitcher, and this soft pappy dough spreads and is baked in an instant; the heat of the pitcher having dried up all its moisture, the bread comes off in small thin slices, like one of our wafers."—(D'Arvieux.)—Burder.

"It is the Being that is the precious thing. Being is the mother to all little Doings, as well as the grown-up deeds, and the mighty heroic Sacrifice; and these little Doings, like the good children of the house, make the bliss of it."—George Macdonald.

author,—David since his exile

Prayer for help against treacherous enemies.

Prob. historical connection, 1 Sa. xix. 11-18.

a Ps. xviii. 48.

1—5. (1) defend me, lit. lift me up above.[a] (2) bloody men, blood-thirsty, who purposed to take his life. (3) lie in wait, secret plots have long been going on. mighty, or shameless ones. are gathered, Heb. "assemble." preparing now for an open attack. not . . sin, without my transgression; apart from any occasion in my sin. (4) run, etc., "both words denote the prompt and officious servility of hirelings." awake, i. e., arouse thee in my defense, as Ps. vii. 6. (5) God of hosts, "the first title implies that He has the power, the second that He is under the obligation to punish the 'nations' for their offenses."—Kirkpatrick. 1 Sa. i. 3. awake, R. V., "arise." heathen, or nations: "the prayer for a judgment upon personal enemies is expanded into a prayer for a judgment upon all the enemies of Israel: and in that general judgment the treacherous Israelites who are iniquitously plotting against the Psalmist's life will meet their due reward."—Cam. Bib.

"A metaphor borrowed fr. an attacking host, wh., getting a firm footing on the walls of a beleaguered city, is ready to rush in over them, or through them, as already broken into the city."—Hengstenberg.

The activity of the evil a rebuke for the good.—I. Their activity, "run." II. Unanimity—"they run." III. Their care—"prepare themselves." IV. Their readiness—"without my fault."—Spurgeon.

Treachery.—Suppose we were always and at all places armed and provided both against the assaults of hostility and the mines of treachery, it will yet be but an uncomfortable life to be ever in alarms. Though we were compassed round with fire to defend us from wild beasts, the lodging would be unpleasant, because we must always be obliged to watch that fire, and to fear no less the defects of our guard than the diligence of our enemy.—Cowley.—David's prayer.—They were all round the house with the warrant of authority, and a force equal to the carrying of it out. He was to be taken dead or alive, well or ill, and carried to the slaughter. No prowess could avail him to break the cordon of armed men, neither could any eloquence stay the hand of his bloody persecutor. He was taken like a bird in a net, and no friend was near to set him free. Unlike the famous starling, he did not cry. "I can't get out." but his faith uttered quite another note. Unbelief would have suggested that prayer was a waste of breath, but not so thought the good man, for he makes it his sole resort. He cries for deliverance and leaves ways and means with his God.—Spurgeon.

"What is prayer but the breathing forth of that grace which is breathed into the soul by the Holy Spirit? When God breathed into man the breath of life, he became a living soul; so when God breathes into the creature the breath of spiritual life it becomes a praying soul."—W. Gurnall.

6—10. (6) return at evening, the Psalmist likens his foes to the wild scavenger dogs, which come out in the evening, and prowl about the streets of Eastern cities. at evening, means every evening.[a] (7) belch, pour out as from a spring. swords, etc., they threaten him with death, or boast that "he will soon be got rid of." doth hear? "They think themselves irresponsible for their words. No one will hear or know what they say."— Pul. Com. (8) laugh, at the absurdity of the plots of the wicked. Ps. ii. 4. (9) his strength, R. V., "O my strength, I will wait upon thee."[b] defence, or high place. (10) shall prevent me, Cam. Bib., "shall come to meet me;" in ans. to vs. 4. my desire, these words should be omitted, as not in the original. See my enemies, means look calmly upon them. Polychr. "Let me behold the end of my foes."

Dogs in the East.— The streets are so narrow and rugged that it is almost impossible to go along without a light; and, moreover, one is in danger from the hungry and savage dogs that infest the streets. During the day they act as scavengers, and, whether walking about or lying, are quiet enough; but when the night comes on they arouse themselves and assume quite another character. They go about in all the ferocity of their nature, barking and howling continually, and ready to pounce upon any one if without a light. The Psalmist could hardly select a more graphic comparison of the importance of revealed truth than a lamp unto his feet and a light unto his path (Ps. cxix. 105). I shall never forget one night in Jerusalem, in returning from the English consul's house to my lodgings at the other end of the city, when, in a lonely dark spot, surrounded by these ferocious brutes, my light nearly went out. I never felt more anxious in my life. The incident gave me a perfect idea of the description which the Psalmist gives of his enemies, "They return at evening," etc.— Mills.— Who doth hear?— They are free from all restraint, they fear no God in heaven, and the government on earth is with them. When men have none to call them to account, there is no accounting for what they will do. He who neither fears God nor regards man sets out upon errands of oppression with gusto, and uses language concerning it of the most atrociously cruel sort. David must have been in a singular plight when he could hear the foul talk and hideous braggings of Saul's black guards around the house. After the style in which a cavalier would have cursed a Puritan, or Claverhouse a Covenanter, the Saulites swore at the upstarts whom the king's majesty had sent them to arrest. David called them dogs, and no doubt a pretty pack they were, a cursed cursing company of curs. When they said, "Who doth hear?" God was listening, and this David knew, and therefore took courage.— Spurgeon.

11—15. (11) Slay them not, by a sudden destruction; rather deal with them so as to make them a warning. scatter them,[c] make them wanderers. by thy power, Cheyne, "by thine army," i. e. the heavenly host of invisible angels. our shield, Ps. iii. 3. (12) For . . lips, Polychr., "A sin of their mouth is every word on their lips." pride, prob. manifesting itself in insolence and taunts. (13) Consume, exterminate: make an end of them. Apparently inconsistent with vs. 11; but burning indignation does not study logical inconsistency. that . . be, R. V., "that they be no more." (14) and, R. V., omits. at evening, etc., as vs. 6. (15) Let . . wander, R. V., "They shall wander." for meat, wh. they cannot find.[d] grudge, "tarry all night," remain, eager for food and expecting it.

Dog.— Is it the influence of Christianity extending its law of kindness to the lower animals, or something in the nature of northern dogs and northern men, which makes dogs among us Anglo-Saxons, and all the associations connected with them, so entirely different from what they are in the East? Imagine the effigy of an Oriental saint reposing with its feet on a dog, like that of William the Silent, the heroic Prince of Orange, on the faithful spaniel which rescued his life in the night attack of the Spanish troops, and like so many a sculptured knight of mediæval times! The very presence of such an image would, in Oriental eyes, be the greatest desceration an enemy could inflict on a sacred edifice. And in the Bible how exceedingly contemptuous, and how inapplicable to English dogs, are the terms employed in describing canine habits.—From Wanderings Over Bible, Lands and Seas.

16, 17. (16) But I, the pronoun is emphatic. in the morning, i. e. every fresh morning. Comp. vs. 6. trouble, R. V., "distress." defense,[e] or high tower, as vs. 9. (17) O my strength, etc., as vs. 9.

a "Saul's emissaries returned in the evening, prowl about the gates, and go to and fro in the city, prob in order to occupy every egress, and cut off David's flight."— Spk. Com.

b "David here ascends the watch-tower of faith, whence he can look down calmly on the violent assaults of his foes, fully assured that they can do nothing but by the permission of God"— Calvin.

"How weak soever the believer finds himself, and how powerful soever he perceives his enemy to be, it is all one to him, he hath no more to do but to put faith on work and to wait till God works."—David Dickson.

c Je. xxx. 11; Eze. xii. 15, 16.

d "Now David mocks at their wicked attempts, and says that after they have wearied themselves all day long, they shall fail of their object."— Calvin.

"Prayer is the channel into which godly sorrow pours forth itself, and runs down in brinish tears, while the Christian is accusing himself of, and judging himself for, his abominations with deep shame."— W. Gurnall

e "His inaccessible stronghold, his unapproachable asylum."— Delitzsch.

The heavenly chorister.— I. His song is sweet in contrast with the revilings of others — "but I." II. It treats of subjects which terrify others — "Thy power." III. It grows louder on tender themes — "Thy mercy." IV. It has its choice seasons — "in the morning." V. It is tuned by experience — "for Thou hast." VI. It is all to God's glory — "Thy power," "Thy mercy," "Thou hast."— Spurgeon.

Cure for despondency. — Doth sorrow and anguish cast down a man's heart, and may he complain that his soul is disquieted within him? Let him fetch an herb out of the Lord's garden called hearts-ease: an inward joy which the Holy Ghost worketh in him. This is heaven upon earth: this may well be called hearts-ease, it is a holy, a happy herb to comfort the spirits. Those which we call penal evils are either past, present, or to come. Here is hearts-ease for all these. Miseries past are solaced, because God hath turned them to our good. Miseries present find mitigation; and the infinite comfort that is with us, within us, sweetens the bitterness that is without us. Miseries future are to us contingent, they are uncertain, but our strength is certain — God: "I know whom I have trusted." — T. Adams.

Ps. xviii. 1, 2.

"'To Thee will I harp.' Glad praise is ever the close of the vigils of a faithful, patient heart. The deliverance won by waiting and trust should be celebrated by praise."

"Patient waiting on God, and importunate calling upon God, are not inconsistent."

PSALM THE SIXTIETH.

author,— unknown, vss. 5-9 (see also Ps. cviii.) belong to the time of David; the rest to that of the Maccabees

1—5. (1) cast us off,[a] ref. seems to be to some signal failure and defeat. scattered. Polychr., "dispersed us." Poss. indic. a defeat of one of the army divisions.[b] displeased, R. V., "been angry." turn thyself, R. V., "restore" us again. (2) earth, better land, as if with an earthquake. broken, R. V., "rent." (3) hard things, or hardship. wine of astonishment,[c] R. V., "the wine of staggering." "The cup of God's wrath is a common metaphor for His judgments. It is like some drugged potion, which robs the drinker of reason, and makes him reel helplessly along, the mockery of all beholders."— Cam. Bib. (4) banner, raised the standard as a signal for war. displayed, etc. Polychr., "whereto they may flee from the bow." R. V., marg. "That they may take themselves to flight fr. the bow." i. e. God has deliberately sent forth Israel to defeat. (5) thy beloved, same as those that fear Thee.

God's banner over his people (vs. 4).— I. What banners God has given to us— 1. In the elevation of His Son; 2. In the records of His Word; 3. In the experience of His saints. II. For what end are they displayed to us? 1. To confirm our confidence in Him; 2. To assure us of victory over our enemies. Apply:—(1) Fear God; (2) Trust in Him.— C. Simeon.

The great conflict.— The people of God fight for the banishment of ignorance and the promotion of knowledge; for the overthrow of error and the enthronement of truth; for the destruction of evil and the diffusion of goodness; for the utter defeat of the father of lies, and the complete, universal, and perpetual triumph of the King of truth. Here is a holy war — a war against all injustice, falsehood, error, oppression, evil; and in favor of righteousness, truth, kindness, holiness.— W. Jones.—The 60th Psalm is memorable in the history of the Secession church of Scotland. When Ebenezer Erskine, in 1740, had to leave his church, he took his place with an immense multitude below the battlements of Stirling castle, and sang the first five verses of this psalm. Looking down on the field where the heroic Wallace gained a decisive victory for his country, the words have in them the ring of battle.— Ker.

Aram-Naharaim, Syria of the two rivers, or Mesopotamia.

Zobah, prob. bet. the Euphrates and the Orontes.

a Ps. xliv. 9.

b Comp. case of Ai. Jos. vii.

c Is. li. 17, 22; Je. xxv. 15.

If you want your spiritual life to be more healthy and vigorous you must just come boldly to the throne of grace. The secret of weakness is little faith and little prayer.

6—8. (6) spoken, promised, sworn. in his holiness, and the promise cannot fail. His holiness includes the whole essential nature of God's moral character. divide . . mete out, i. e. I will distribute Canaan among my people — both the western region, of which Shechem was the chief town (1 Ki. xii. 25), and the eastern, which contained the valley of Succoth. God is rep. as a victorious warrior portioning the land to His chosen people. (7) Gilead . . Manasseh . . Ephraim . . Judah, represent the security of all David's territory. strength, R. V., "defense." lawgiver, R. V., "sceptre." (8) washpot, vessel used for washing the feet; sign of disgrace. cast . . shoe, "Edom is regarded as the slave to whom the master throws his shoe to clean."[d] triumph, or "Unto me, O Philistia, shout loudly." Cheyne, "over Philistia shall I break into shouting."[e]

Names of countries.— It is a good rule to refer the names of countries to their actual physical aspects. "Are not the terms Edom and the Red Sea to d "The king regards Moab as a vessel fit only for the meanest uses, — he casts the shoes, which he takes off in order to wash his feet, to Edom as a mere slave." — Spk. Com.

e "If the text of vs. 8c is correct, Philistia is addressed with bitter sarcasm, and bidden to repeat her ancient shouts of triumph over Israel now, if she can." Exp. Bib.

By far the greater part of our petitions don't press for immediate answers. They wind round our Father in heaven the silken thread of communion, not to draw down blessings, but to bind us to God.

be referred to the red sandy soil? Would Albion ever have gained the name if it had not been for her white cliffs? Was Greenland not the glad welcome given by the hardy Icelanders to that green oasis? And is not the White Sea so called from its proximity to the regions of ice and snow?" — Notes and Queries. — Succoth. — What says David? "God hath spoken in His holiness, hath made an express and inviolable promise, that I shall be ruler of His people Israel. I will rejoice, therefore; away with every alarming apprehension; I will even exult and triumph. Nay more; I will divide Sichem, and mete out the valley of Succoth; I will look upon the whole land as my own, I will divide it, and dispose of it, just as if it was already in my possession." Why should not you and I also say — "God hath spoken in His holiness; hath expressly and solemnly declared the promise of an all-sufficient Saviour is to you?" We will rejoice, therefore; confiding in this most faithful word, we will bid adieu to all disquieting fears, and make our boast of this glorious Redeemer. — Hervey.

9—12. (9) Who will, or "Oh for one to conduct me." strong city, the wonderful rock-built city of Petra.—Hengstenberg. (10) hadst cast us off, vs. 1. R. V., "Hast not thou, O God, cast us off? And thou goest not forth, O God, with one host." God has for the moment deserted Israel, as no one can lead Israel to victory. (11) help, marg. salvation. from trouble, R. V., "against the adversary." (12) do valiantly,[a] Ps xviii. 16; Nu. xxiv. 18.

The soulwinner's question. — I. The object of attack; the strong city of man's heart, barricaded by depravity, ignorance, prejudice, custom, etc. II. Our main design. To penetrate, to reach the citadel for Jesus. III. Our great inquiry. Eloquence, learning, wit, none of these can force the gate, but there is One who can. — Spurgeon.

Faith and sight. — So long as sight and reason find footing in matters, there is no place for faith and hope; the abundance of human helps puts not grace to proof, but the strength of faith is in the absence of them all. A man is stronger when he goeth on his feet alone, than when he standeth by a grip in his infancy, or leaneth on a staff in his old age: the two feet of faith and hope serve us best when we are fixed on the Rock of Sion alone. — William Struther. — The friendship of Christ. — "What do you do without a mother to tell your troubles?" asked a child who had a mother of one who had none. "Mother told me whom to go to before she died," answered the little orphan. "I go to the Lord Jesus; He was mother's Friend, and He is mine." "Jesus Christ is in the sky. He is a way off, and He has a great many things to attend to in heaven. It is not likely He can stop to mind you." "I do not know anything about that," said the orphan. "All I know, He says He will; and that's enough for me."

a Eph. vi. 19; Phi. iv. 13.

Be full of prayer whenever you attempt to preach, and go from your closet to your pulpit with the inward groanings of the Spirit pressing for utterance at your lips.

"No heights of grace are too elevated for us, the Lord being our leader, but we must beware of high things attempted in self-reliance. Excelsior is well enough as a cry, but we must look to the highest of all for guidance."

PSALM THE SIXTY-FIRST.

author,— unknown; time, prob., reign of Josiah

Thanksgiving of an exiled king on his restoration.

Neginah, upon a single stringed instrument.

1—4. (1) cry, i. e. plaintive cry. (2) end of the earth, this expression natural in the mouth of an exile. To a Jew Jerusalem was the centre of the earth. cry, R. V., "call." overwhelmed, fainteth.[b] "A Jewish community, living at a great distance from Judea, believes itself to be endangered by the neighboring heathen, and longs to be transported to Jerusalem (vs. 4)." — Polychr. higher than I, better, "Lead me upon a rock that is too high for me," so a place of perfect security, which without Thee I cannot reach. (3) hast been, in times of former trouble. shelter, R. V., "refuge." (4) abide . . ever, the resolve of a restored one, who, by exile, has been led to value his religious privileges; or perhaps a prayer: "Let me abide. . . . Let me take refuge, etc."

The heart's cry and desire. — I. A recognition of a place of safety: then, II. We have this place brought before us, as abundantly sufficient, when personal weakness has been realized. III. This place cannot be attained without the help of another's hand. IV. The character of this refuge, and the position of a believer when availing himself of it: the place of refuge is "a rock," and the position of the believer is "upon a rock."— P. B. Power.

Send me to the rock. — There is a mint of meaning in this brief prayer. Along the iron-bound coast of our northern shores, lives are lost because the rocks are inaccessible to the shipwrecked mariner. A clergyman of one of the coast villages has with immense labor cut steps up from the beach to a b Pr. Book Vers. "is in heaviness."

Ps. xlii. 6.

Laborers on an English railway lately found a thrush's nest under a rail, with the hen peacefully sitting on four eggs, undisturbed by the thunder of passing trains.

large chamber, which he has excavated in the chalk cliffs; here many mariners have been saved; they have climbed the rock, which had else been too high for them, and they have escaped. We have heard of late, however, that the steps have been worn away by the storms, and that poor sailors have perished miserably within sight of the refuge which they could not reach, for it was too high for them: it is therefore proposed to drive in iron stanchions and to hang up chain ladders that shipwrecked mariners may reach the chambers in the rock. The illustration is self-interpreting. — Spurgeon. — Gratitude. — It is inexpressibly important to keep the mind up to a full realization of all that God has done in one's personal history. When a man's own history goes for nothing with him, he may be regarded as having sunk below the level of a man; but if he will watch how God has developed his life, how wondrously He has turned it, how gently He has withdrawn it into 'shelter' when the storm was coming, how graciously He has placed it in the 'strong tower' when sounds of war shook the air, he will be moved from thankfulness to eloquence, and will say to those who doubtfully look on — "In God is my salvation and my glory."

5—8. (5) the heritage the possession. "Possession" is the term regularly used of Israel's "occupation" of the land of Canaan. — Polychr. "Thou hast granted the inheritance to these," etc. (6) prolong, lit. days to the king's days wilt Thou add.[a] as, "shall be as." "The writer, lifted up above himself and above sublunary things, abiding, as he does, in the spiritual tabernacle under the shelter of God's wings prays for long continuance of days for the true King, the ideal King, Messiah, of whom David and his house are types." — Pul. Com. (7) abide, sit on his throne, or judgment-seat. mercy, R. V., "loving kindness." which, R. V., "that they."

The heritage of the people of God (vs. 5). — I. The text implies that there are those who fear God's name. 1. All do not fear God; 2. State the nature of true fear of God. II. Those who do fear God have an inheritance. 1. Supplies in the time of need; 2. Consolation in the time of trouble; 3. Victory in the time of conflict; 4. Peace of conscience. — Studies for Pulpit.

Abiding. — His restoration to his home, to his throne, and to the privileges of the sanctuary, he may have regarded as an emblem of his ultimate reception into a peaceful heaven, and his mind may have glanced rapidly from the one to the other. On earth, after his restoration, he would have no fear that he would be banished again; in heaven, of which such a restoration might be regarded as an emblem, there would be no change, no exile. — Barnes. — The saints' inheritance. — Come, believers, come to the top of Pisgah, and take a prospect of the Holy Land. Seest thou the land that is afar off? behold, that is the land of promise, where, after our weary pilgrimage, we shall have an everlasting glorious rest. There the flourishing vines are ever laden with full clusters of the richest grapes. Oh, how happy then shall we be, when, instead of the waters of the wilderness, we shall come to drink of the wines of Canaan. There the rivers do continually flow with milk and honey — here we are compassed with enemies, but there we shall have perfect tranquillity, an eternal security, an unchangeable felicity. Oh, that we had the wings of a dove, that we might fly from this high mountain to that Holy Land. — Willes.

PSALM THE SIXTY-SECOND.

author, — prob. David; time, Absalom's rebellion

A Psalm of confidence in God.

Jeduthun, see Ps. xxxix.

1—4. (1) Truly, or only. waiteth, etc., or my soul is silently waiting unto God.[b] Ps. xxxiii. 20. (2) rock, Ps. xviii. 2. defence, R.V., "high tower," an asylum in time of danger. (3) imagine mischief, assault; rush with violence; R. V., "set upon," rage tumultuously. ye . . slain, R.V., "that ye may slay him." bowing wall, bulged out, and ready to fall. R. V., Like a bowing wall, like a tottering fence. tottering fence, or hedge. (4) excellency, rank, and dignity suitable to a king. with their mouth, lit. with his mouth, one arch-traitor being in Dav.'s thought.

A tottering wall. — In consequence of heavy rains and floods, and unsound foundations, it is very common to see walls much out of perpendicular, and some of them so much so that it might be thought scarcely possible for them to stand. "Poor old Raman is very ill, I hear." "Yes, the wall is bowing." "Begone, thou low caste; thou art a kutte-chivver," i. e. a ruined wall. "By a The royal house of David is prob. meant; with distant reference to Messiah.

"'When my heart is overwhelmed.' Troubles are of various kinds; some are provoking, some are gnawing, some are perplexing, and some are overwhelming; but whatever form they assume, they are troubles, and are part of the wear and tear of life."—P. B. Power.

Prayer is the cry of those that cannot do and do not know, unto One who does know and who can do.

The fountain is unsealed, but you only sip a few drops. The bread of life is before you, yet you only eat a few crumbs. The treasury of heaven is open, but you only take a few pence. O! man of little faith, wherefore do you doubt? Awake to know your privileges; awake and sleep no longer.

"True righteousness is found only in the dweller with God, and they who anchor themselves in Him, as a tree in the earth, are both stayed on and fed from Him."—A. McLaren.

b "'Only unto God my soul is silence,' i. e. is hushed into perfect resignation before Him."—Perowne.

the oppression of the head man the people of that village are like a ruined wall." — Roberts.

"The natural mind is ever prone to reason, when we ought to believe; to be at work, when we ought to be quiet; to go our own way, when we ought steadily to walk on in God's ways, however trying to nature." Geo. Müller.

5—8. (5) wait thou, Polychr., "silently submit." (6) rock, vs. 2. be moved, comp. greatly moved of vs. 2. (7) In God, it depends upon God to defend the honor of His saints. refuge . . God, Polychr. "my Refuge is God!" (8) all times, whether prosperous or disastrous. pour . . heart, give free flow to your anxieties.

Waiting. — God brings men to His consummations only by his own road. Whatever apparent prosperity they may reach by other roads, no matter how long, is not of God's giving; and therefore, no matter how tedious God's way is, or how tortuous, or how long God keeps them walking in it, they are to keep His way if they would win His good. And this is often a severe trial of faith. It is as when one has been traveling for long hours over a rough road, amid storm and mist, with night drawing on, looking, as he gains the top of every successive hill, for the spires of the city to which he is going, and seeing instead only a new stretch of dreary road, and a new hill to be climbed — he is tempted to think his guide has lost the way, and to take matters into his own hands. To the man who waits on God it is indispensable that he trust his guide. — M. R. Vincent. — Confidence of a child. — In a public school in New York on an alarm of fire, a terrible panic ensued, and many of the scholars were injured by rushing to the doors, and one of the teachers, a young lady, jumped from a window. Among the hundreds of children with whom the building was crowded was one girl, who, through all the frightful scene, maintained composure. The color, indeed, forsook her cheek, her lip quivered, the tears stood in her eyes, but she did not move. After order had been restored, and all her companions had been brought back to their places, the question was asked her, how she came to sit so still when everybody else was in such a fright. "My father," said she, "is a fireman, and he told me if there was an alarm of fire in the school, I must just sit still."

"All grace comes from the God of grace; not only the first seed of grace, but its growth and increment; and God usually sheds His grace in a way of communion with His people. Now, by prayer the Christian is led into most intimate communion with God; and from communion follows communication."—Gurnall

"What is a consecrated heart? It is a heart which, in every respect, rests entirely content with God alone, which finds no relish, nor tastes any delight in anything in which he is not." — Haeftenus.

9—12. (9) low degree, in the social scale. high degree, in the same social scale. to . . balance, R. V., "in the balances they will go up; they are," etc. altogether, the sum of their weights is lighter than nothingness. (10) in oppression, or be not ye overcome by the temptation to unjust acquisitions. (11) twice, a source of strength against the temptation to follow might rather than right, or these two things have I heard, God is powerful, God is merciful. (12) for, etc., the Psalmist understands that both power and mercy are shown in God's strict and righteous dealings.[a]

God's power (vs. –1). — I. God's power acts with infinite ease. II. God's power is never exhausted by exertion. III. God's power is regulated by His other perfections. IV. God's power is only limited by His will. — W. W. Whythe.

The spendthrift turned miser (vs. 10). — A young man who ran through his patrimony, spending it in profligacy, was at length reduced to utter want and despair. He rushed out of his house intending to put an end to his life, and stopped on arriving at an eminence overlooking what were once his estates. He sat down, ruminated for a time, and rose with a determination that he would recover them. He returned to the streets, saw a load of coals which had been shot out of a cart on to the pavement before a house, offered to carry them in, and was employed. He thus earned a few pence, requested some meat and drink as a gratuity, which was given him, and the pennies were laid by. Pursuing this menial labor, he earned and saved more pennies; accumulated sufficient to enable him to purchase some cattle, the value of which he understood, and these he sold to advantage. He now pursued money with a step as steady as time, and an appetite as keen as death, advancing by degrees into larger and larger transactions, until at length he became rich. The result was that he more than recovered his possessions, and died an inveterate miser. When he was buried, mere earth went to earth. With a nobler spirit, the same determination might have enabled such a man to be a benefactor to others as well as to himself. But the life and its end in this case were alike sordid. — Smiles.

[a] "This is the only truly worthy representation of God. Power without love is brutality, and love without power is weakness. Power is the strong foundation of love, and love is the beauty and crown of power."—Perowne.

Ps. cxlv. 6, 7.

"Build not thy nest on any tree of earth, seeing God hath sold the forest to Death; but rather soar upwards to the sure and immutable refuge in the Clefts of the Rock."—Rutherford.

PSALM THE SIXTY-THIRD.

1—3. (1) my God, the term employed is El, the strong God, so the refuge of one who feels weak.[a] early,[b] the Heb. fig. for earnestly. my flesh, or body; see Ps. lxxxiv. 2. longeth, a peculiar word, "faints with desire," pineth. thirsty, R. V., "weary." "These words are certainly metaphorical, not literal: it is the 'water of life' for which he thirsts; the spiritual refreshment with which God revives the fainting soul."—Cam. Bib. (2) To see,[c] the A. V. has transposed the clauses of this vs. All the best commentators trans. with Cheyne, "In such wise do I long for Thee, in the sanctuary to behold Thy power and glory." (3) better than life, God's favor and grace are properly esteemed to be more important than prolonged life. The Psalmist prayed that he might see God's power, but it was the revelation of loving kindness wh. led him to sing praises.

Sunshine and storm. — When my blood flows like wine, when all is ease and prosperity, when the sky is blue, and birds sing, and flowers blossom, and my life is an anthem moving in time and tune, then this world's joy and affection suffice. But when a change comes, when I am weary and disappointed, when the skies lower into the sombre night, when there is no song of bird, and the perfume of flowers is but their dying breath, when all is sunsetting and autumn, then I yearn for Him who sits with the summer of love in His soul, and feel that all earthly affection is but a glow-worm light, compared to that which blazes with such effulgence in the heart of God."—Beecher.— Early at worship (vs. 1)—It is said that the Jogers, or pilgrim saints of Ceylon, will take their station at the foot of the cypress, and there remain night and day, watching and watchful, heedless of sunshine or of storms, impelled by the tradition that the leaves of the ancient tree, falling only at distant and uncertain intervals, can, if gathered and eaten, restore the wasting form to all the energies of youth. A plant of nobler growth has been sown in our world, the leaves of which never fade, nor are its fruits consumed. The latter are for meat and the former are for medicine; and out of the heavenly sanctuary issue the waters which maintain their freshness. Not at long and unknown intervals do they descend, Regularly and ever weekly are they within our reach. Shall we think it an unwelcome task to tarry a few moments beneath the consecrated shade, while we await the first shaking of the blessing-laden boughs? —Miss Henderson.

4—8. (4) Thus, R. V., "so" comp. note on vs. 2; with the old earnestness and affection.[d] lift . . hands, the usual Eastern attitude of prayer. Ps. xxviii. 2. (5) My . . satisfied, Polychr., "Therewith is my soul sated." marrow and fatness, fig. allusion to the sacrifice of the tabernacle worship.[e] The Psalmist has an inward spiritual joy in God, though separated from His worship. joyful lips, or lips of jubilee.[f] (7) therefore, R. V., "and." shadow, etc, Ps. xvii. 8. (8) followeth hard, in earnest seeking.[g] Polychr., "clings close."

Following after God (vs. 8).—I. The state of mind here depicted. It includes—1. A persuasion that God alone is the portion of the soul; 2. A choice of God as that portion; 3. Ardent desires after nearness to God; 4. Earnest use of the means which have been appointed to bring us near. II. The reasons why this state of mind should be cultivated. 1. It forms a safeguard against temptation; 2. It supplies a perpetual stimulus to devotion; 3. It imparts an impulse to do good to ourselves and others; 4. It turns every religious service into a source of pleasure. — G. Brooks.

Remember — and meditate. — The meditation of anything hath more sweetness in it than bare remembrance. The memory is the chest to lay up a truth, but meditation is the palate to feed upon it. The memory is like the ark in which the manna was laid up; meditation is like Israel's eating of the manna. When David began to meditate upon God, it was sweet to him as marrow. There is as much difference between a truth remembered and a truth meditated, as between a cordial in the glass and a cordial drunk down. — John Wells.

9—11. (9) lower parts, or Sheol,[h] (10) fall . . sword, R. V., "be given over to." "Like Savonarola, and like the Scotch Covenanters, the Psalmist has no sense of any incongruity between deeply spiritual musings and vehement author,—unknown; probably same as Ps. lxi.

A psalm of longing after God.

"With the singing of this Ps. the worship of the early church was accustomed to begin."—W. E. Barton.

a "The spirit and soul of the whole Book of Psalms is contracted into this Psalm."—St. Chrysostom.

b "The noun, wh. signifies 'the dawn, the early morning,' and the verb 'to seek,' are both from the same root, meaning 'to break in,' and so to seek."—Perowne.

c "The two words 'strength' and 'glory' are associated with the ark of the covenant. 1 Sa. iv. 21; Ps lxxviii. 61."—Kay.

d "As I adored Thee in the sanctuary, and as I seek Thee now (vs. 1), even so will I bless Thee throughout my life, which is only precious so far as it has the loving kindness of God shining upon it."—Spk. Com.

e "Reference is immediately to the sacrificial meal wh. accompanied the thank-offering, here used as an image of thanksgiving."—J. H. Michaelis.

f Ps. xlii. 8; cxix. 55; cxlix. 5; Song Sol. iii. 1.

g "The strength of this clinging of the soul to God is tried and increased by absence of the external accessories of public worship."—Wordsworth.

h "What may be called the human force of character remains even amid thoughts whose impassioned earnestness is not of this world, and whose strain of intensely exhausted spiritual fervor is such as but very few can reach."—Perowne.

"Meditation is prayer in bullion, prayer in the ore—soon melted and run into holy desires. The laden cloud soon drops into rain; the piece charged soon goes off when fire is put to it. A meditating soul is in proxima potentia to prayer."—William Gurnall.

It is certain that the nearer we come to heaven or to a meetness for glory, the more we are impressed with the value and privilege of prayer.

author,—unknown

A prayer for deliverance fr. cunning and malicious enemies, dating from the persecution of Manasseh.

denunciations of his enemies."—Cheyne. foxes, or jackals, which feed on dead bodies. (11) the king, the connection is unintelligible unless the king is identified with the Psalmist, whose enemies are destroyed. by him, i. e. God. mouth . . stopped, "those who 'speak lies are those who rebel against God and His king, deluding men by false promises to join an undertaking which is false in its principles and aim."

Liar's prayer answered (vs. 11).— A certain poor widow, who lived in Galway, had a little cabin and a plot of potato ground, for which she paid three pounds a year. She had with difficulty collected enough money to pay her half year's rent. She took her money to the bank, and got a thirty-shilling note in exchange for it. She gave this note to a neighbor, whom I shall call Brien, and asked him to pay her rent at the same time that he paid his own, and thus save her a long walk to the agent's office. This Brien promised to do. Some time afterwards a driver came from the agent, and asked the widow for her rent. She told him that she had sent it, and when Brien was applied to, he denied all that the widow had said. The widow could not raise the money to pay her rent a second time: and the agent told her that if she did not he must turn her out of her cabin. At last she took proceedings against Brien, in the hope of obliging him to give back her property. Before the magistrate he denied receiving the money; and when cross-questioned, he exclaimed: "I never did, I never did receive any money from the woman. May I drop down dead this minute, if ever I got any money from her!" That moment he fell dead. In the pocket of his coat was found a note bearing the marks which had been described by the widow.— W. C. Wilson.

PSALM THE SIXTY-FOURTH.

1—6. (1) in my prayer, R. V., "in my complaint."[a] fear, including, of course, the danger that produced the fear. (2) secret counsel, etc., Cheyne, "the conspiracy of the ungodly." insurrection, throng; noisy, tumultuous assembly; contrast bet. secret machinations and open attack. (3) whet, or sharpen. bend, etc., or, have aimed their arrow, lit. tread their bow,[b] bitter, venomous. (4) fear not, God who is on the side of the upright. (5) encourage, take every means to secure their object. commune . . privily, striving to secure secrecy for their plots.[c] see them, Polychr., "who, they think, sees us?" (6) search, etc.,[d] "the Psalmist hears them exulting in the secrecy of their plans, in the depth and subtlety of their thoughts." Cheyne.— "They think our acts of injustice, [and say] 'We have accomplished a well thought out thing,' and the inward part of each one [is unsearchable], and the heart [of every one] is deep."

Omniscience ignored (vs. 5).—I. It is a fact that this notion has great influence upon the conduct of man. II. It is a fact that this notion is utterly untruthful and delusive. III. It is a fact that God has often in human experiences shown the delusiveness of this notion, and that the time is fixed for the complete demolition of its delusiveness. 1. Character is often seen through by man; 2. Retribution often follows men's deeds in the present world; 3. The future state will show that God saw.—Analyst.

Bitter words.— We saw in the Museum at Venice an instrument with which one of the old Italian tyrants was accustomed to shoot poisoned needles at the objects of his wanton malignity. We thought of gossips, backbiters, and secret slanderers, and wished that their mischievous devices might come to a speedy end. Their weapons of inuendo, shrug, and whisper, appear to be as insignificant as needles; but the venom which they instil is deadly to many a reputation.—C. H. Spurgeon.

7—10. (7) shoot . . arrow,[e] comp. vss 3, 4. (8) own tongue, it is best to render, "And they are made to stumble, their own tongue being against them." The conseq. of their own slanders. all . . away, "all that gaze upon them shall shake the head."—Jennings and Lowe. (9) wisely consider, Polychr., "acknowledge." i. e. understand that it is God's operation. Job xxxiv. 26, 27. (10) glad, Ps. xxxii. 11.

The tongue.— "The tongue is a little member," saith the apostle James, and therefore a light member; yet it falls heavy, as heavy as lead. A man were better to have his house fall upon him, than that, in this sense, his tongue should fall upon him. Some have been pressed to death because they would

[a] Ps. lv. 1, 2.

[b] "The allusion is to the mode of bending a bow by treading on it, here, and in Ps. lviii. 7, transferred to the arrows."—Fausset.

[c] Pr. i. 11.

[d] Trans. "They devise iniquities. They accomplish a cunning devise; and each man's inward part and heart is deep." Revised Eng. Bible.

[e] "'And God shooteth at them an arrow suddenly; their wounds are there,' i. e. they are already wounded, the wounds are instantaneous."—Spk. Com.

Comp. Pr. xviii. 7. "The bitterness of not speak, but stood mute before the judge; but more have been pressed to death by their sinful freedom, or rather licentiousness in speaking; this hath brought them to judgment, and cast them in judgment. A strange thing, that the fall of a man's tongue should oppress his body and whole estate: yet so it is, the weight of a man's tongue falling upon him crushes him to powder. — Joseph Caryl. — Words are but wind, is the common saying, but they are such wind as will either blow the soul to its haven of rest, if holy, wholesome, savory, spiritual, and tending to edification, or else sink it into the Dead Sea and bottomless gulf of eternal misery, if idle, profane, frothy and unprofitable.— Edward Reyner.

PSALM THE SIXTY-FIFTH.

controversy has perhaps been a greater hindrance to truth than the assaults of atheism. Wherever this Marah flows—in the Church, the home, the social circle, the nation—it poisons life."—Pul. Com.

author,— Isaiah, or, unknown: date, prob. period of Sennacherib's invasion

Praise for a bountiful harvest for the feast of first fruits.

1, 2. (1) waiteth, or is silent.[a] Polychr. "befits." "To Thee silent resignation is praise."[b] Sion, De. iv. 48. vow, when there was any special outpouring of praise in the temple, there would almost always be a performance of vows. Both depended on some deliverance or favor having been granted. — Pul. Com. (2) flesh, all human beings.[c] The answers to prayer of which Israel is abundantly conscious fill the Psalmist with a longing that all mankind may have recourse to the same divine Friend. — Cheyne.

The glorious certainty of the fact that God hears prayer. — By hearing prayer is meant in Scripture taking account of our requests and answering them (1 John v. 14, 15). This involves all that is most glorious in God's revealed attributes. His infinite knowledge, which not the most timid or rapid desire, or speechless lifting up of any heart, escapes. His wisdom to discern, whether, when, how, to grant our requests. Foreknowledge — for long preparation may have been needful, though the prayer be uttered and granted in a moment. Righteousness, to grant no petition, however fervent, which it would not be right to grant. Love — to take fatherly interest in our childish ways, small needs, and often ignorant and impatient desires; and to care for our best welfare. And almighty power — to carry out all that wisdom, righteousness, and love direct, and to make "all things work together," etc. (Rom. viii. 28). The certainty that God hears prayer rests on His faithfulness and the promises which fill the Bible; on the commands which lay on us the duty as well as confer the privilege of prayer; on the examples, still more abundant in Scripture than these commands and promises of prayer answered (including our Saviour's own example); on the daily experience of God's church. If any truth in the scope of human knowledge rests on a firm foundation of experience it is this. — Pul. Com.

a "Praise is fitly shown to Thee by a holy silence, more expressive than words. The silence implies a soul filled with thoughts too big for utterance; these at last untie the tongue; and the psalm wh. follows is their expression."—Spk. Com.

b "What is intended is that submission or resignation to God, wh. gives up its cause to God, and allows Him to act on its behalf."—Delitzsch.

3—7. (3) Iniquities, "manifold guilt." Heb. words, matters, or instances of iniquity, suggesting a long roll of sins, wh. crowd the memory of the Psalmist. purge them away,[d] "make atonement for:" lit. cover them out of sight. (4) Blessed, happy is he; i. e. the house of Israel. of thy holy temple, Polychr., the holiness of Thy temple."[e] (5) By terrible,[f] etc., Cheyne, "fearful-glorious" bec. they affright the ungodly, but cause the godly to sing praises. wilt thou, or dost thou; the tense indicates continuous action. confidence, i. e. the object of confidence. afar . . sea, Heb. sea of distant ones; the dwellers on distant coasts and islands. (6) mountains, the actual hills are fixed by Divine creative power. (7) seas . . people,[g] "He controls alike the turbulent elements of nature, and the tumultuous hosts of the nations which they symbolize."— Kirkpatrick. noise, R. V., "roaring."

c "God can no more divest Himself of His attribute of hearing prayer than of being."— Calvin.

d "Thou is emphatic. 'We are powerless to rid ourselves of our iniquities. Thou alone canst cover them and condone them.'"— Jennings and Lowe.

e Ps. xxxvi. 8; Je. xxxi. 12, 14.

f De. x. 21; 2 Sa. vii. 23; Ps. cvi. 22; cxlv. 6.

g Ps. xlvi.

Consolation in God (vs. 3). — Let us notice — I. His complaint. 1. What are we to understand by the expression? 2. Who is there amongst us that has not reason to adopt the same language in reference to his own soul? II. His consolation. 1. From the free grace and mercy of God; 2. From the sufficiency of the means ordained by God. Apply: — (1) Acquaint yourselves with your own ways that you may be humbled; (2) And with God, that you may be at peace. — Simeon.

Nearness to God is the foundation of a creature's happiness. This doctrine appears in full evidence, while we consider the three chief ingredients of true felicity, viz., the contemplation of the noblest object, to satisfy all the powers of the understanding; the love of the supreme good, to answer the utmost propensities of the will, and the sweet and everlasting sensation and assurance of the love of an Almighty Friend, who will free us from all the evils

"Christian joy that does not bear the stamp of this very day and date is a Silurian deposit, an evangelical relic, piety fossilized.!" — C. H. Parkhurst.

which our nature can fear, and confer upon us all the good which a wise and innocent creature can desire. Thus all the capacities of man are employed in their highest and sweetest exercises and enjoyments. — Isaac Watts.

8—10. (8) tokens, signs in nature of the Div. presence. outgoings, etc., Polychr. "the ends of the East and the West," denoting the whole world;[a] "places where morning and evening have their birth."[b] (9) waterest it, lit. thou has made it plentiful. Or, saturated it, reference being to the refreshing effects of rain. river of God, trans. "The stream of God is full of water," omitting with. So the Arabs still call the rain. Rain is spoken of as a brook or channel, with reference to the irrigation of the land by means of such. so provided, R. V., "prepared the earth," i. e. by the gracious rains. (10) Thou, etc., man raises ridges, etc., but Thou alone refreshest, and quickenest the life. settlest, term well describing the influence of genial rains, Polychr. "make its clods even!"

Prayer for harvest. — This beautiful psalm, first of grace, then of nature, inverting the order of Ps. xix., seems to have taken early possession of the heart of the Christian Church. There is a prayer which has come down to us from the Church of Alexandria, alluded to by Origen, first half of the third century, in which its language is largely used, and applied to the land of Egypt: "Send rain out of thy treasures upon those places which stand in need of it. Renew and make glad the face of the earth by its descent that it may bring forth and rejoice in the rain-drops. Raise the waters of the river to their just height; renew and make glad the face of the earth by its ascent; water the furrows and increase their produce. Bless, O Lord, and crown the year with the riches of thy goodness, for the sake of the poor, the widow, the fatherless, and the stranger." — Ker.

Works of God.—

Wonderful indeed are all His works.
Pleasant to know, and worthiest to be all
Had in remembrance always with delight:
But what created mind can comprehend
Their number, or the wisdom infinite
That brought them forth, but hid their causes deep?
I saw when at His word the formless mass,
The world's material mold, came to a heap;
Confusion heard His voice, and wild uproar Stood ruled, stood vast infinitude confined;
Till at His second bidding darkness fled,
Light shone, and order from disorder sprung;
Swift to their several quarters hasted then
The cumbrous elements, earth, flood, air, fire;
And this ethereal quintessence of heaven
Flew upward, spirited with various forms,
That roll'd orbicular, and turned to stars
Numberless, as thou seest, and how they move;
Each had his place appointed, each his course;
The rest in circuit walls this universe.— Milton.

11—13. (11) crownest, a bountiful harvest may well be spoken of as the "crown of the year." thy paths, Heb. tracks of chariot-wheels;[c] "allusion perh. to an unusually copious fall of the 'latter rain,' looked for as a special blessing." (12) wilderness, or steppe: patches of verdure in the uncultivated country used for pasturage. little hills, R. V., omits "little;" summits of verdant hills. (13) covered over, so actually hidden by the rich harvest they bear. they shout, man's action being poetically applied to inanimate nature.[d]

Spring. — Only look at the people's faces, as they meet one another by the way, some fine morning in the first burst of spring! How full of good-humor they are, how warmly they salute, how disposed they seem to be more generous and charitable than usual! You may explain it physiologically, I am quite aware; but then, it is not less God coming to you, in and through physiological laws and processes, with an opportunity of improvement, with a tide to bear and lift you, if taken at the flood, toward a permanently better, a permanently sweeter and more gracious spirit. It is a Divine means of a Comp. Arab expression, "The two Orients," to denote east and west.

b "Briefly vss. 5-8 may be summed up thus: the whole wide world, its mountains and its seas, and all the dwellers in the world from one end of it to the other, are in the hand of God, wait upon Him, and He makes all to rejoice." —Perowne.

"God's grace fructifies through Israel to all. How clearly the Psalmist had grasped the truth that God had limited the knowledge of Himself to one spot of earth in order to its universal diffusion! The light is focussed and set in a tower that it may shine out over sea and storm."

"He that makes but one step up a stair, though he be not much nearer to the top of the house, yet he has stepped from the ground, and is delivered from the foulness and dampness of that. So, in this first step of prayer—O Lord, be merciful unto me—though a man be not established in heaven, yet he has stepped from the world and the miserable comforters thereof."—Donne.

c De xxxiii. 26; Ps. xviii. 10; Is. lxvi. 15.

d "Nothing can be more beautiful, or more truly poetical, than the figure by wh. the valleys waving with corn are said themselves to shout and sing."—Perowne.

"The seasons will keep their own true time,
You can hurry nor furrow, nor sod;

grace. What you have to do is, just to seize the vernal feeling that has risen in you, and cherish and go forth with it: namely, by starting from the height of it, under the impulse of it, with new resolves and endeavors to cultivate the genial and generous temper; and by seeking to put it at once, before it fades, into some corresponding deed. Now, while it is upon you, go and give something to somebody's need; go and do something for somebody's good. — Tipple.—The footsteps of God, when He visits the land with rain, create fertility. It was said of the Tartar hordes, that grass grew no more where their horses' feet had trodden; so, on the contrary, it may be said that the march of Jehovah, the Fertilizer, may be traced by the abundance which He creates. For spiritual harvests we must look to Him, for He alone can give "times of refreshing" and feasts of Pentecost. — Spurgeon.

It's honest labor and steadfast thrift
That alone are blessed by God." —Alfred Austin.

"People in passing fields or gardens, after a fine rain, say, 'Ah! how these fields and trees are laughing today.' 'Yes, you may well laugh; this is a fine time for you.' 'How nicely these flowers are laughing together.'"—Roberts.

PSALM THE SIXTY-SIXTH.

author and date, same as Ps. lxv. and lxvii.

Subject, celebration of God's great deeds on behalf of His people.

1—4. (1) Make . . noise, Cheyne, "Shout ye merrily." ye lands, all parts of the earth. (2) Sing . . name, Cam. Bib., "Hymn forth the glory of His name;" celebrate afresh the revelation of God's char. make . . glorious, lit. make glory His praise.[a] "Give glory as praise unto Him." (3) terrible . . works, R. V., "How terrible are Thy works;" see Ps. lxv. 5.[b] submit, etc., lit. lie, i. e. yield feigned and reluctant obedience.[c] (4) All the earth, including its inhabitants.[d]

Praising God for His mighty works. — I. The reason of this praise. 1. The nature of His works; 2. The constancy of His works; 3. The influence of His works. Calculated — (1) To excite awe; (2) To check rebellion against Him; (3) To inspire confidence in Him; (4) The necessity of observing His works. II. The enthusiasm of this praise. The praise is to be offered — 1. Heartily; 2. Joyfully; 3. Openly. III. The universality of this praise.—Hom. Com.

Terrible in Thy works. — The earthquakes in New England occasioned a kind of religious panic. A writer, who was then one of the ministers of Boston, informs us, that immediately after the great earthquake, as it was called, a great number of his flock came and expressed a wish to unite themselves with the church. But, on conversing with them, he could find no evidence of improvement in their religious views or feelings, no convictions of their own sinfulness; nothing, in short, but a kind of superstitious fear, occasioned by a belief that the end of the world was at hand. All their replies proved that they had not found God, though they had seen "the greatness of His power" in the earthquake. — Edward Payson.

a "Let His praise be such as will glorify Him, or be honorable to Him."—Fausset.

b Re. xv. 3.

c Pr. Bk. Ver. "Shall be found liars unto Thee."

d Ps. xxii. 27; Re. v. 13; vii. 9.

5—7. (5) Come and see, or consider the story of ancient Israel, of wh. the Psalmist now reminds them. terrible, etc., "see how, to save His people, He has to smite their enemies." (6) turned . . laid, as at crossing of the Red Sea.[e] flood,[f] R. V., "river;" as distinct from the "sea," may refer to the river Jordan, crossed under the leadership of Joshua. there, or in those instances or at those places. (7) for ever, or continuously; the past does but illustrate the present. behold, or keep watch,[g] R. V., "observe;" to protect Israel fr. every foe. exalt themselves, or exhibit exultation.[h]

God's special dealings with nations seen in history (vss. 5–7). — It is said of the ungodly that "the harp, and the viol, the tabret, and pipe, and wine, are in their feasts; but they regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of His hands" (Is. v. 12). But the Psalmist was of a different spirit. He had seen much that had thrilled his heart with admiration and delight, and he would have others to enter into his joy. "Come and see the works of God." Israel may be called the model nation. As "a city set on a hill." Israel has been set on high for the instruction of other nations and peoples (1 Co. x. 11). The principles and laws by which God governed and judged Israel are the principles and laws according to which He deals with His people everywhere, in all times and in all lands. God changes His methods, but not His laws. His dispensations alter, but He Himself is the same. Hence His judgments of Israel and of the nations are full of instruction to us. Israel was the chosen people, "unto whom were committed the oracles of God." God is represented as keeping guard over them. He was their Watchman, and His eye was ever on "the nations" around, ready to warn and defend His own people. Let us be sure that in like manner He is e "Such allusions are especially numerous about the time of the Babylonish captivity, but are too common and natural a topic to determine the date of this psalm."—Spk. Com.

f Heb. nâhâr, the river.

g Ps. xi. 4.

h Ps. ii. 12; lxviii. 18; Is. xxxvii. 23.

"Live not so much upon the comforts of God as upon the God of comforts. Ps. lxiii. 3."—Mason.

"God's guidance of His people is a constant drying up of the sea and of the Jordan, and the joy over His mighty deeds is always receiving new materials."—E. W. Hengstenberg.

now standing in watch over the interests of truth and righteousness, and that He will overrule all things for the advancement of the kingdom of His Son." — Pul. Com.

8—12. (8) ye people, or nations; the appeal being to surrounding nations. (9) holdeth . . life, Polychr., "caused our souls to revive;" keeps us safe in state of extreme peril.[a] moved, "He has not abandoned their foot to tottering unto overthrow." (10) as silver is tried, the fig. of the purifying fire is common in Scrip.[b] (11) Thou, God deliberately gave them over into the power of the enemy as a punishment for sin. net, or poss. prison-fortress. Cheyne, "into the dungeon;" signify the depressed spirits of a conquered people. The fig. of the hunter is, however, frequent in the Ps. affliction, or burden, like that laid on the horse or camel. (12) ride . . heads, as those wounded on a battle-field.[c] wealthy place, lit. abundance, refreshment. Polychr., "into the open air;" the opposite fr. the privations endured.

Stability the gift of God (vss. 8, 9). — I. What a mercy it is to be upheld in the ways of God! 1. To how many snares and dangers we are exposed; 2. How many in like circumstances have fallen; 3. What would be the probable consequences of our falling? 4. What occasion have we given to God to let us fall. II. The duty of those who experience this mercy. 1. To acknowledge God in our steadfastness: 2. Bless and adore Him for His great goodness; 3. Walk humbly and carefully before Him; 4. Commit ourselves continually to Him. Here arise two questions: — (1) Are our souls really alive to God? (2) Have our feet been kept from falling? — Simeon.

Affliction. — In the ancient times a box on the ear given by a master to a slave meant liberty; little would the freed man care how hard was the blow. By a stroke from the sword the warrior was knighted by his monarch; small matter was it to the new-made knight if the royal hand was heavy. When the Lord intends to lift His servants into a higher stage of spiritual life, He frequently sends them a severe trial; He makes His Jacobs to be prevailing princes, but He confers the honor after a night of wrestling, and accompanies it with a shrunken sinew. Be it so: who among us would wish to be deprived of the trials if they are the necessary attendants of spiritual advancement? — Spurgeon.

13—15. (13) burnt offerings, expressive of entire consecration. (14) uttered, lit. opened. The verb used elsewhere means "to talk at random," "to prattle."[d] (15) fatlings,[e] or fat lambs. incense, or ascending smoke. Polychr., "with rams consumed in sweet smoke."[f] bullocks with goats, sparing no expense in the endeavor to present a worthy sacrifice.

A good test. — "I pay more attention," says Mr. Booth, "to people's lives than to their deaths. In all the visits I have paid to the sick during the course of a long ministry, I never met with one, who was not previously serious, that ever recovered from what he supposed the brink of death, who afterwards performed his vows, and became religious, notwithstanding the very great appearance there was in their favor when they thought they could not recover." — Cheever.

16—20. (16) Come and hear,[g] comp. vs. 5. all . . God, not limited to Israel, but wherever they are to be found. my soul, or life; with evident reference to some remarkable personal deliverance. (17) extolled, lit, extolling was under my tongue. R. V., marg. "and high praise was under my tongue," i. e. even while he prayed he had praises ready, bec. he felt certain of God's favorable answer. (18) regard iniquity, i. e. cherish it deliberately.[h] (19) hath heard, therefore it is plain that I have not cherished iniquity. (20) from me, Heb. from being (as it ever is) with me.

God's doings. — I. What has God done for the soul of every Christian? II. Why does the Christian wish to declare what God has done for his soul? III. Why does he wish to make this declaration to those who only fear God? 1. Because they alone can understand such a declaration. 2. They alone will really believe Him. 3. They only will listen with interest, or join with Him in praising his Benefactor. — E. Payson.

Gratitude. — If people are loud in the praise of a physician who has cured them of some deadly malady — recommending others to trust and seek his skill, why should not Christ's people crown Him with equal honors, commend a "Places our soul in the (the state) of life."— Jennings and Lowe.

b Ps. xii. 6; xvii. 3; Is. xlviii. 10; Je. ix. 7; Eze. xxii. 20; Ze. xiii. 9; Mal. iii. 3; 1 Pe. i. 6, 7.

c "Cast down and trampled upon by the horse-hoofs and chariot-wheels of their triumphant and savage enemies."— Perowne.

"The Lord is a protection to those that call upon His name. The very calling upon His name is a running under God's wings, that is, putting ourselves 'under His shadow;' but when thou neglectest that, thou dost wander abroad from Him."— John Preston.

d "Its use may indicate that the vows were wrung fr. the nation by extraordinary distress." — Delitzsch.

e Le. iii. 3; ix. 14.

f "The fact that 'rams' were not used for the offerings of individuals, seem to suggest that the speaker, representing the nation, may be the high priest."

g Mal. iii. 16.

h Pr. xv. 8, 29; xxviii. 9; Is. i. 15; Jno. ix. 31.

"Have we no tale to tell? If a thief broke into your house, you would tell everybody about it. If your house was on fire, all the neighborhood would know it. A man who has a tale to tell, tells it; and he is right in doing so. We are not unwilling to speak, but we have no story to relate." — J. Parker.

Him to a dying world, and proclaim what He has done for them? Let them say with David, "Come all ye that fear the Lord, and I will declare what He hath done for my soul;" and tread in the steps of the Samaritan who threw away her pitcher, and running to the city brought them all out, crying, "Come, see a man who hath told me all things that I have ever done." It is a bad thing ostentatiously to parade religion; but it is a base thing for a Christian man to be ashamed of it; not to stand by his colors; by his silence, if not his speech, to deny his Master; to sneak away, like a coward, out of the fight. — Guthrie.

"Only, O Lord, in Thy dear love Fit us for perfect rest above;
And help us, this and every day,
To live more nearly as we pray."
— Keble.

PSALM THE SIXTY-SEVENTH.

author and date same as Ps. lxv. and lxvi.

Subject, desire that God should be universally acknowledged, a song of joy at close of harvest.

1, 2. (1) God be merciful, better, "gracious." Borrowed from the high priest's blessing. Nu. vi. 24-26. (2) thy way, of dealing with Thy people, so that the nations may desire to serve Him. saving health, or salvations, deliverances, redeemings. nations, or Gentiles.[a]

The calling of the Gentiles prayed for.— The text shows us — I. That there are rich blessings yet in store for the Gentiles. II. What a union there is between piety and philanthropy. III. What encouragement we have for missionary exertions.—C. Simeon.

Stability of the Gospel.— Like the treacherous signal-boats that are sometimes stationed by the wreckers off an iron-bound coast, the shifting systems of false religion are continually changing their places. Like them, they attract only to bewilder, and allure only to destroy. The unwary mariner follows them with a trembling uncertainty, and only finds out where he is when he feels his ill-fated vessel crashing into a thousand fragments on the beach. But how different from these floating and delusive systems is that unchanging Gospel of Christ, which stands forth, like the towering light-house of Eddystone, with its beacon-blaze streaming far out over the mid-night sea! The angry waves, through many a long year, have rolled in, thundering against that tower's base; the winds of heaven have warred fiercely around its pinnacle; the rains have dashed against its gleaming lantern; but there it stands. It moves not, it trembles not; for it is "founded on a rock." Year after year, the storm-stricken mariner looks out for its star-like light as he sweeps in through the British Channel. It is the first object that meets his eye as he returns on his homeward voyage; it is the last he beholds, long after his native land has sunk beneath the evening wave. So is it with the unchanging Gospel of Christ. While other systems rise and fall, and pass into nothingness, this Gospel (like its immutable Author) is "the same yesterday, to-day and for ever." While other false and flashing lights are extinguished, this, the "true light," ever shineth.— T. L. Cuyler.

[a] "Three distinct words are here used to designate foreign nations; they are regarded as foreigners, races, and communities." — Spk. Com.

"What the Church most pressingly needs for the accomplishment of her great work is not more numerous agencies, not new methods of evangelization, not increase of material wealth, but a deeper and more abiding realization of the presence and blessing of God in her midst." — Hom. Com.

3, 4. (3) people, i. e. peoples, ref. to the inhabitants of the earth. praise thee, turning fr. their idols to acknowledge Thee. (4) be glad, in realizing the righteous rule of God. This may refer to the setting up of the righteous kingdom of Messiah. righteously, R. V., "with equity." govern, marg. lead, or shepherd. Thou wilt be their guide. "A promise of peculiar graciousness, used elsewhere only of God's faithful and tried servants."— Spk. Com.

Praise.— We have comforts increased, the more we praise God for what we have already received. The more vapors go up, the more showers come down; as the rivers receive, so they pour out, and all run into the sea again. There is a constant circular course and recourse to the sea, unto the sea; so there is between God and us; the more we praise Him, the more our blessings come down; and the more His blessings come down, the more we praise Him again; so that we do not so much bless God as bless ourselves. When the springs lie low, we pour a little water into the pump, not to enrich the fountain, but to bring up more for ourselves.— Thomas Manton.— Gladness. — When men know God's way and see His salvation, it brings to their hearts much happiness. Nothing creates gladness so speedily, surely, and abidingly as the salvation of God. Nations never will be glad till they follow the leadership of the great Shepherd; they may shift their modes of government from monarchies to republics, and from republics to communes, but they will retain their wretchedness till they bow before the Lord of all. What a sweet word is that "to sing for joy!" Some sing for form, others for show, some as a duty, others as an amusement, but to sing from the heart, because over-

"Praying frequently helps to praying fervently. Be assured it is better to wander in prayer than to wander from it."— Bp. Wilson.

"Prayer is the buckler, prayer is the helmet that keeps thee safe; when a man neglects it, when he ceaseth to go to God by prayer, when he shows himself to be a stranger to the Lord by neglecting this duty, then he is out of the pale of His protection, like the coneys that go out of their burrows; for so is the Lord to those that pray." — J. Preston.

flowing joy must find a vent, this is to sing indeed. Whole nations will do this when Jesus reigns over them in the power of His grace. We have heard hundreds and even thousands sing in chorus, but what will it be to hear whole nations lifting up their voices, as the noise of many waters and like great thunders. When shall the age of song begin? When shall groans and murmurs be exchanged for holy hymns and joyful melodies? — Spurgeon.

5—7. (5) Let, etc., as vs. 3. (6) Then, R. V., omits. shall yield, R. V., "hath yielded." increase, bountiful harvests being the gracious Div. testimony to a faithful and devoted people.[a] and . . us, Polychr., "May God, our God bless us;" a prayer rather than a prophecy. (7) all the ends, etc., "this psalm is a truly missionary psalm, in its clear anticipation of the universal spread of the knowledge of God, in its firm grasp of the thought that the church has its blessings in order to the evangelization of the world."— Exp. Bib. fear, reverent, trustful fear.[b]

The power of hope. — Once on a time, certain strong laborers were sent forth by the great king to level a primeval forest, to plough it, to sow it, and to bring to him the harvest. They were stout-hearted and strong and willing enough for labor, and much they needed all their strength and more. One stalwart laborer was named Industry — consecrated work was his. His brother Patience tired not in the longest days under the heaviest labors. To help them they had Zeal, clothed with ardent and indomitable energy. Side by side there stood his kinsman Self-denial, and his friend Importunity. These went forth to their labor, and they took with them, to cheer their toils, their well-beloved sister Hope; and well it was they did, for they needed the music of her consolation ere the work was done, for the forest trees were huge, and demanded many steady blows of the axe ere they would fall prone upon the ground. One by one the giant forest kings were overthrown, but the labor was immense and incessant. At night when they went to their rest, the day's work always seemed so light, for as they crossed the threshold, Patience wiping the sweat from his brow, would be encouraged, and Self-denial would be strengthened by hearing the sweet voice of Hope within singing, "God will bless us, God, even our own God, will bless us." They felled the lofty trees to the music of that strain, they cleared the acres one by one, they tore from their sockets the huge roots, they delved the soil, they sowed the corn, and waited for the harvest, often much discouraged, but still held to their work as by silver chains and golden fetters by the sweet sound of the voice which chanted so constantly, "God, even our own God, will bless us." They could never refrain from service, for Hope could never refrain from song. They were ashamed to be discouraged, they were shocked to be despairing, for still the voice sang clearly out at noon and eventide, "God will bless us, God, even our own God, will bless us." You know the parable, you recognize the voice. May you hear it in your souls to-day. — Spurgeon.

"Let our deeds be syllables
Of the prayer our spirit swells.
In us Thy desire fulfil;
By us work Thy gracious will."
— Lucy Larcom.

a Le. xxvi. 4.

"The blessings of a fruitful harvest are mentioned as types of greater and spiritual blessings, under which all nations shall fear and love God." — Fausset.

b Ps. xxii. 27.

"Those trees flourish most, and bear sweetest fruit, which stand most in the sun. The praying Christian stands nigh to God, and hath God nigh to him in all that he calls upon Him for, and therefore you may expect His fruit to be sweet and ripe; when another that stands as it were in the shade, and at a distance from God (through neglect of, or infrequency in, this duty) will have little fruit found on his branches, and that but green and sour." — Gurnall.

PSALM THE SIXTY-EIGHTH.

author, — unknown

Processional hymn to Adonai, the God of victories.

1—3. (1) God arise, "the chant with which the ark set forward in the wilderness," Nu. x. 35. before him, marg. from His face, in dread of Him. (2) As smoke, etc.,[c] Polychr., "As smoke vanishes before the wind;" an apt fig. for total disappearance. as wax, "emblem of unresisting impotence." wicked, i. e. the foreign nations as opposed to Israel, the righteous. Ps. xxii. 14. (3) exceedingly rejoice, Heb. rejoice with gladness: Polychr., "shout in their joy."

The Sixty-eighth Psalm. — An old Camisard, as the hunted Protestants of the Cevennes were called, says, "We flew when we heard the sound of the psalms, we flew as if with wings. We felt within us an animating ardor, a transporting desire. The feeling cannot be expressed in words. It is a thing that must have been felt to be known. However weary we might be, we thought no more of our fatigue, and grew light as soon as the psalms reached our ear." This psalm was chanted by Savonarola and his brother Dominicans, A. D. 1497, as they marched to the grand Piazza of Florence to meet the trial of fire to which they had been summoned by their enemies. The corruption of the Church of Rome was never deeper in the lives of pontiff and clergy; and, in the midst of it, rose the wonderful contrast and protest of Fra Angelico who breathed into his paintings the mystic beauty of a seraphic soul, and o c "These figs. may have been borrowed fr. the pillar of smoke and fire above the ark." — Hupfeld.

"The best scholarship place it among the songs of the restoration, and probably as a dedication song for the new temple." — W. E. Barton.

"With this ps. on their lips, Cromwell's Ironsides marched to their victories." — Barton.

Savonarola, whose outraged conscience broke forth in words of flame. — Ker. Smoke. — "Their end was bitter as the smoke," said an aged teacher. "What meanest thou, O Master?" asked his young disciple. "I was thinking of the end of the unrighteous," replied the old man, "and of how too often I, like the Psalmist, have been envious when they were in prosperity. Their lives have seemed so bright and glowing that I have thought they resembled the blaze of a cheerful fire on a winter's night. But, as I have watched them, they have suddenly vanished like the flame that fades into black and bitter smoke; and I have ceased to envy them. Trust not, O my scholar, only to that which appears brilliant; but watch also for its ending, lest thou be deceived." — Hubert Bower.

"This Sixty-eighth Psalm was known among the Huguenots as the 'song of battles' and was raised by them in many a bloody and desperate conflict."

4—6. (4) unto God, Elohim. sing praises, or harp His name. extol . . him, R. V., "Cast up a highway for him that rideth through the deserts; His name is Jah; and exult ye before him."[a] God's people must prepare a way for Him by the removal of the obstacles of unbelief and faintheartedness and ungodliness which hinder Him from coming to deliver them. Jah, shortened form of Jehovah.[b] "God's eternal duration and power are the attributes wh. these names commemorate." (5) fatherless . . widows, the types of the utterly lonely and helpless.[c] holy habitation, heaven: from whence He regards their cry. (6) solitary, or wanderers and desolate ones. Here type is exchanged for allegory. The Psalmist looks back on the two great returns, that from Egypt and that from Babylon. those . . chains, R. V., "the prisoners into prosperity." dry land, i. e. "parched land" is not the desert of Sinai, where so many Israelites perished, but a figurative expression for a land without the spiritual and material blessings showered by Jehovah upon his faithful ones. — Cheyne.

The rebellious (vs. 6). — I. We are rebels against God. 1. God is our rightful sovereign; 2. We have renounced subjection to His authority; 3. We have leagued ourselves with His enemies; 4. We have refused to be reconciled to Him. II. As rebels against God we are heirs to misery. In our — 1. Temporal circumstances; 2. Spiritual condition; 3. Eternal doom. — G. Brooks.

God the Father of all. — The sun does not shine for a few trees and flowers, but for the wide world's joy. The lowly pine on the mountain top waves its sombre boughs, and cries, "Thou art my sun." And the little meadow violet lifts its cup of blue, and whispers with its perfumed breath, "Thou art my sun." And the grain in a thousand fields rustles in the wind and makes answer, "Thou art my sun." So God sits effulgent in heaven, not for a favored few, but for the universe of life; and there is no creature so poor or so low that he may not look up with childlike confidence and say, "My Father, Thou art mine." — H. W. Beecher.

God's care. — One adequate support for the calamities of mortal life exists, one only: — an assured belief that the procession of our fate, however sad or disturbed, is ordered by a Being of infinite benevolence and power; whose everlasting purposes embrace all accidents, converting them to good. — Wordsworth.

a "The image is presented in the lit. rendering of a king traveling through the waste, for whom a way is made."—Spk. Com.

b Ex. vi. 3.

c Ps. cxlvi. 9.

Gotthold's prayer.— "Oh God, I have no desire to be anything but what Thou hast made me. I grudge not the great and mighty what Thou givest to them. Nay I know not that I would exchange my poverty for their wealth, my solitude for their lofty rank. One thing, however, I do implore: let me reign over the sin that dwells within me! Teach me to govern myself; and grant that I may one day be permitted humbly to enter that celestial city, welcomed by the holy angels and wearing the crown of life."

7—10. (7) when etc., recalling the march out of Egypt. (8) even Sinai itself, R. V., "Even yon Sinai trembled," Ex. xix. 16, 18.[d] Earthquake and storm, symbols of the Divine Presence and Power. (9) rain, prob. a poetical allusion to the sending of the manna. thine inheritance, so God's Israel was regarded. (10) therein, even in the wilderness, through Thy providings. prepared, i. e. a table in the waste desert. poor, or weary wanderers.

God's love-gifts to His people. — What He did to Israel in the wilderness, He will do to His church to the end of the world. He is the Great Giver of every good and perfect gift, and evermore the thought of His love awakens gratitude and praise. His gifts are characterized by — I. Sweetness. They are sweet in themselves as the "rain," but they are sweeter still as sent from God. They have the impress of His hand. II. Copiousness. Rain may be slight, partial, or temporary. Here it is "plentiful." It is a "rain of gifts" — large, generous, widespread, meeting the needs of all, reaching to the furthest part of the dry and parched land. III. Timeliness. God does nothing in an arbitrary way. It is when His people are "weary" that He visits them with "times of refreshing." They are "weary" from toil, or conflict, or suffering, or long and anxious waiting; and their hearts are like the "parched ground"

d The words of these vss. 7, 8, appear to be borrowed fr. the song of Deborah, Ju. v. 4, 5.

"God always goes at the head of His people through the deserts of suffering and need; in the deserts of trouble they find in Him a true leader." — E. W. Hengstenberg.

"vs. 9 is intelligible either as referring to gifts of refreshment of spirit and courage bestowed on the people, in which case 'rain' is symbolical; or to actual rainfall during the forty years of desert life, by which sowing and reaping were made possible."—Exp. B.

crying for "rain." God hears. IV. Refreshment. "Confirm." This implies renewal of strength, invigoration of faith and hope and love. As the "rain" quickens and calls forth the life in the earth, so that the grass flourisheth and the corn ripens, so it is with God's people when He visits them with the outpouring of the Spirit. It is as if Pentecost were come again.

"As torrents in summer, half dried in their channels, Suddenly rise though the sky is still cloudless,
For rain has been falling far off at their fountains;
So hearts that are fainting grow full to o'erflowing,
And they that behold it marvel and know not That God at their fountains far off has been raining."
—Pul. Com.

a Ex. xv. 20; Ju. v.; 1 Sa. xviii. 6.

11—14. (11) the word, the fiat for attacking the foes, on taking possession of Canaan. God's word is sovereign. He has only to command and the victory is won. great, etc., Heb. "The women declaring good tidings were a great company."[a] "The reference is to the female choirs which took a prominent part in the war-songs of ancient days (see Exod. xv. 20, 21; Judg. v. 1; 1 Sa. xviii. 6, 7)." (12) flee apace, Heb. did flee, did flee. tarried . . spoil, even the women sharing the leavings of the battle-field.[b] The expression is simply a fig. for the housewife. (13) Though, etc., a very difficult vs.[c] The first line clearly alludes to Judg. v. 16 (cp. Gen. xlix. 14, R. V.), where Deborah upbraids Reuben for cowardice and irresolution, and for preferring the ignoble ease of pastoral life to the glorious dangers of the war of independence:

"Why satest thou among the sheepfolds,
To hear the pipings for the flocks?"

The second and third lines describe under the image of a dove basking in the sunshine an idyllic condition of peace and prosperity.
It seems preferable to render thus:

"Though ye may lie among the sheepfolds,
The dove's wings are covered with silver,
And her pinions with yellow gold."

b "There is a wonderful irony in this description of the mighty monarchs fleeing and leaving the treasures of the camp to be shared among the women in the tents." — Jennings and Lowe.

c "When ye return home and lie down among the folds, ye shall be very dove's wings—covered with silver, and with glittering yellow gold."

Though some Israelites may fail in their duty and prefer slothful ease to fighting the battles of Jehovah, yet Israel once more enjoys the blessings of peace and prosperity. In spite of man's backwardness God gives blessing.—Cam. Bib. (14.) in it, i. e. the land. white . . Salmon,[d] R. V., "It was as when it snoweth in Zalmon." "By the thought of the victory won for Israel by God the poet is naturally carried back to the battle scene, and desires to emphasize the fact that the Almighty had fought for Israel, sweeping the foe before Him like the snowflakes swept along by the hurricane."

d A cowhill near Sichem, Ju. ix. 48. vs. 14. "Perhaps in allusion to the bones of the slaughtered foe, which were scattered about, and lay bleaching on the summit of Salmon."

The word.—I. The word given: "The Lord," etc. II. The word proclaimed: "Great," etc. III. The word obeyed: "King," etc. Thus it was in Old Testament times, when to Joshua, to Gideon, to David, etc., the Lord gave the word, and it ran through the hosts, and "kings of armies," etc. Thus it was in apostolic times, when the word of reconciliation was given. Thus it is still, and will be more signally than ever hereafter.— G. Rogers.

"About his chariot numberless were pour'd Cherub, and seraph, potentates, and thrones,
And Virtues, winged Spirits, and chariots win
From the armory of God, where stand of old Myriads."
—John Milton

Housetops in Cairo.—A little before sunset, numbers of pigeons suddenly emerge. They dart upwards, and career through the air in large circles, their outspread wings catching the bright glow of the sun's slanting rays, so that they really resemble shining "yellow gold;" then, as they wheel round, and are seen against the light, they appear as if turned into molten silver, most of them being pure white, or else very light colored. This may seem fanciful, but the effect of light in these regions is difficult to describe to those who have not seen it, and evening after evening we watched the circling flight of the doves, and always observed the same appearance.— Whately.

"The joy of salvation begins in us here, and continues and accompanies us to heaven, and there flows on to an infinite expansion."

15—18. (15) The hill of God, etc., R. V., "A mountain of God is the mountain of Bashan; a high mountain is the mountain of Bashan." After the conquest of the land, God chose for His abode not the stately mountains of Bashan, whose natural pre-eminence might seem to mark them out for that privilege, but the insignificant hill of Zion. (16) Why leap ye, etc., "Why look ye askance, ye high mountains, at the mountain which God hath desired for His abode." The grander mountains of Bashan are represented as looking enviously upon the insignificant mountain of Zion, which God has chosen for His earthly dwelling-place. Sinai had been his temporary abode (Ex. xxiv. 16); on Zion He will dwell forever. (17) thousands of angels, R. V., "thousands upon thousands." God is represented as entering Zion in triumph with a vast retinue of the heavenly host. the Lord is among, etc., Polychr. "The Lord is come from Sinai in holiness." The glory and majesty wh. were revealed at Sinai, are now transferred to God's new abode. (18) hast ascended, into the sanctuary, Mt. Zion; gone up with the ark, when it was transferred thither. captivity,[a] i. e. a body of captives, the captive enemies of Israel. gifts for men, R. V., "among men." The gifts brought to the King for the Temple are regarded as offered to God. for the rebellious, better, "among the rebellious." Even the heathen (or perhaps the Jews who rebelled in the wilderness) pay homage to Jehovah and dwell under His protection.

Gifts for the rebellious (vs. 18). — Turn your eye to the heavenly world, and you will find millions of just such sinners walking in the light of eternal day. There you will find David, once an adulterer and a murderer: there you will find Paul, once a blasphemer and a persecutor; there you will find Peter, who denied his Master, and perjured himself: there you will find an endless multitude more, whose sins, drawn out in order and displayed in their proper colors, would overwhelm you as well as them with amazement and horror. "But they are washed, they are sanctified, they are justified in the blood of the Lord Jesus and by the Spirit of our God." — Dwight.

19–21. (19) daily, etc., the whole verse might be rendered more exactly and forcibly: "Blessed be the Lord; day by day He beareth our burden: God is our salvation." (20) He . . salvation, R. V., "God is unto us a God of deliverance." issues, or means of escape. (21) But, surely. wound, R. V., "smite through." hairy scalp, sign of youth and strength.[b]

The God of salvation (vs. 19). — I. The relation which God sustains. God — 1. Devised the plan of salvation; 2. Accomplished the work; 3. Applied the blessings; 4. And superintends the progress and final results. II. The benefits which God confers. 1. Their nature; 2. Their number; 3. Their frequency. III. The return which God deserves. 1. We should bless Him sincerely; 2. Affectionately; 3. Constantly; 4. Practically. — Brooks.

Benefits. — If from what God hath done for us as men, we look to what He hath done for us as Christians; that He hath embraced us with an everlasting love, that He hath molded us anew, enlivened us by His Spirit, fed us by His word and sacrament, clothed us with His merits, bought us with His blood, becoming vile to make us glorious, a curse, to invest us with blessedness; in a word, that He hath given Himself to us, His Son for us; Oh the height, and depth, and breadth of the rich mercies of our God! Oh the boundless, topless, bottomless load of Divine benefits, whose immensity reaches from the centre of this earth, to the unlimited extent of the very empyreal heavens! "Oh that men would praise the Lord for His goodness, and declare the wonders that He hath done for the children of men." — Joseph Hall.—Our load. — Though some may have more than others, yet every one hath his load, as much as He can carry. Every vessel cannot bear up with the like sail, and therefore God, to keep us from oversetting, puts on so much as will safest bring us to heaven, our desired port. — Ezekiel Hopkins.

22, 23. (22) bring . . Bashan, not God's people, but their enemies; even though fleeing fr. God they hide in inaccessible Bashan, or in the depths of the sea they shall be brought back to suffer righteous vengeance. "Bashan" may refer to Og: "depths of the sea" to Pharaoh. my people, R. V., "them." (23) tongue . . same, Polychr., "the tongues of thy dogs shall have their share of the foes."

Salvation is of God. — Observe what happens when the cry rises at sea. "A man overboard!" With others on deck, you rush to the side, and, leaning over the bulwarks, with beating heart you watch the place where the rising air-bells and boiling deep tell that he has gone down. After some moments of breathless anxiety, you see his head emerge from the wave. Now that man, with the first breath he draws, begins to beat the water; with violent efforts he attempts to shake off the grasp of death, and by the play of limbs and arms, to keep his head from sinking. That drowning one makes

"All I have seen teaches me to trust the Creator for all that I have not seen." — Emerson.

[a] Eph. iv. 8.

"Montserrat, in Spain, is an instance of a mountain deriving its name from its shape; as it is Mons Serratas, or a mountain whose craggy cliffs have, at a distance, the resemblance of the teeth of a saw. The Sierra Morena, in Spain, is named from its shape and color." — Burder.

[b] As Samson and Absalom.

"We all have need of that prayer of the British mariner: 'Save us, O God, Thine ocean is so large, and our little boat so small.'" — Farrar.

vs. 21. "This language, in the East, is equivalent to saying, 'I will kill you.' 'The king will soon break the uche (the scalp) of that fellow.' 'Tamban's uche is broken; he died last week.' 'With those who are buried, it remains three days in its place; but when the body is burned, it immediately takes its departure, which is a great vantage.'" — Roberts.

"As robbers, seeing a man flourishing his sword, will not then set upon him, even so the wicked spirits, seeing us fenced about by prayer, leave us unassaulted." — Cawdray.

"Do not measure the efficacy of prayer by its length, but by its spirit and fervor."

"Heaven is never deaf but when man's heart is dumb." — Quarles.

"A poplar leaf hides our view of the sun; the slight substance of an earthly care may hide from us the immense and radiant God."

instinctive and convulsive efforts to save himself. So, when first brought to feel and cry, "I perish!" when the horrible conviction rushes into the soul that we are lost, our first effort is to save ourselves. Like a drowning man, who will clutch at straws and twigs, we seize on anything, however worthless, that promises salvation. Thus, alas! many poor souls toil, and spend weary, unprofitable years in the attempt to establish a righteousness of their own, and find in the deeds of the law protection from its curse. — Guthrie.

24—27. (24) thy goings, the solemn procession to Mount Zion, wh. God, represented by the ark, is supposed to lead, or a celebration of victory as depicted on the Assyrian monuments. in, R. V., unto." (25) players on instruments, R. V., "minstrels." playing, etc., or beating the tambourine. Ex. xv. 20; Lu. xi. 34. (26) This vs. is prob. a part of the processional hymn, cp. Judg. v. 2, 9. from, etc., R. V., "ye that are of;" lineal descendant from Jacob.[a] (27) There, etc., four tribes are mentioned as representative of the rest. with . . ruler, R. V. omits "with," their ruler may refer to Saul's kingship. and their council, better "company."

Note on vs. 25. — This, no doubt, is a description of a religious procession in the time of David. In the sacred and domestic processions of the Hindoos they observe the same order, and have the same class of people in attendance. See them taking their god to exhibit to the people, or to remove some calamity; he is put into his car or tabernacle, and the whole is placed on men's shoulders. As they move along, the men and women precede, and sing his praises; then follow the musicians, who play with all their might in honor of the god, and for the enjoyment of the people. — Roberts.

28—31. (28) thy strength, i. e. thy dominion, or power; better, "O God, command Thy strength," i. e. put it forth. strengthen, i. e. perfect, and establish. R. V., marg. "Be strong, O God, thou that hast wrought for us," i. e. show Thy power as in time past. (29) Because of thy temple, out of respect for. (30) company of spearmen, lit. beasts of the reeds: poss. the hippopotamus, as representing Egypt; or may be the crocodile.[b] bulls . . calves, fig. for rulers and people. till . . silver, R. V. "trampling under foot the pieces of silver;" i. e. spurning their tribute money. (31) soon, R. V., "haste to." stretch . . hands, with the offerings of submission.

The prayer of the church against those delighting in war (vs. 30).— I. We would first examine the question — Is all war sinful? II. Next we would consider the class undoubtedly sinful, and here denounced, "who delight in war." III. And, in the last place, we would return to the punishment here invoked upon such from God — that they should be dispersed and reduced — "scattered" by the whirlwind they have loved to raise and to ride. — W. R. Williams.

Anthony Benezet. — On one occasion, during the annual convention of the Society of Friends, at Philadelphia, when that body was engaged on the subject of slavery, as it related to its own members, some of whom had not wholly relinquished the practice of keeping negroes in bondage, a difference of sentiment was manifested as to the course which ought to be pursued. For a moment it appeared doubtful which opinion would preponderate. At this critical juncture, Benezet, who was a leading member of the society, and felt a deep interest in the subject of emancipation, left his seat, which was in an obscure part of the house, and presented himself, weeping, at an elevated door in the presence of the whole congregation, whom he thus addressed: "Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God." He said no more. Under the solemn impression which succeeded this emphatic sentence, the proposed measure received the united sanction of the assembly. — R. T. S.

32—35. (32) Sing, on account of God's marvelous doings. (33) heavens of heavens,[c] or the highest heavens. of old, before the creation of our present order of heavens and earth. doth send out, R. V., "uttereth." voice, often used of God's thunder. (34) Ascribe, make hearty acknowledgment. clouds, Heb. "skies," i e. supreme not on earth alone, but throughout the whole vast universe. (35) out of, etc., "the awful power of God being regarded as emanating from the sanctuary."[d] is He that, R. V., "He giveth."

The character of God (v. 35). — I. The description here given us of God — 1. Most glorious; 2. Most endearing. II. The sentiments it should excite within us. — 1. Gratitude; 2. Affiance. Apply — (1) How little ground there a "The patriarch Israel is the fountain fr. wh. the whole nation has issued as a stream."—Perowne.

"Prayer is the key of the day, and the lock of the night. And we should every day begin and end, bid ourselves good-morrow and good-night with prayer. This will make our labor prosperous, and our rest sweet."

Luther says the marrow of the Gospels is in the pronouns "my" and "our."

b "The strongest nations are represented by the strongest beasts." —Fausset.

"Past blessings and graces are a sort of guarantee for future ones." —Faber.

'God is a great God, therefore He will be sought; He is a good God, therefore He will be found." — Mason.

Prayer.—
"A breath that fleets beyond this iron world, And touches Him that made it."
— Tennyson.

"We must ask for the spirit to pray with, and that not once or twice, but constantly, regularly, as for our daily bread; unceasingly, so as to take no denial. If we do this, God will from time to time pour down a fresh supply of that best gift of His, the spirit of grace and supplication."—A. W. Hare.

c De. x. 14; 1 Ki. viii. 27.

d Ps. cx. 2.

is for the excuses of the presumptuous ; (2) How little ground there is for the fears of the desponding. — C. Simeon.

The voice of God. — A strong and powerful voice, such as the gospel is, when accompanied with the power and Spirit of God. It is a soul-shaking and awakening voice ; it is a heart-melting and a heart-breaking one ; it is a quickening and an enlightening voice ; it quickens dead sinners, gives life unto them, and the entrance of it gives light to dark minds ; it is a soul-charming and alluring one ; it draws to Christ, engages the affections to Him, and fills with unspeakable delight and pleasure. — John Gill.

PSALM THE SIXTY-NINTH.

1—3. (1) waters,[a] a familiar Heb. fig. for calamities wh. threaten to flood one's life.[b] (2) deep mire,[c] lit. mud of the abyss; soft, yielding morass. (3) cf. R. V., "with." crying, with the cry of one in distress. dried, with constant calling. eyes fail, Polychr., "are worn out:" De. xxviii. 32. while I wait, better, waiting as I do.

Sorrows and sufferings of Christ (vss. 1-4). — I. Their overwhelming nature. 1. Those which were previous to His apprehension; 2. Those which He sustained during His trial; 3. Those which were consummated in His death. II. Their vicarious use. 1. It was not for His own sins; 2. It was for the sins of others. We see in this mystery — (1) The proper ground for faith; (2) The strongest motive for love; (3) The safest rule for obedience. — C. Simeon.

Waiting. — What becomes of our prayers? Do we look to see whether they strike their mark or any mark? When a merchant counts his assets, he counts not only what he has in his storehouses, but what he has sent across the sea; and when we send forth these barques of prayer, laden with the dearest wishes and the deepest yearnings of our souls, is it nothing to us whether they arrive at their destined haven? "Never was faithful prayer lost at sea. No merchant trades with such certainty as the praying saint." Some one has very pithily said that the man who does not look after the prayers he has put up, is like the ostrich, which lays her eggs and looks not for her young. — M. R. Vincent.

4—7. (4) hate . . cause, quoted by our Lord, Jno. xv. 25.[d] hairs, etc., comp. Ps. xl. 12. destroy, lit., "cut off." are mighty, or are in great force. then . . away, a proverbial expression for the extreme of injured innocence. "Wrong that I have not done I must even suffer for."[e] 5. foolishness, Polychr. "strayings." This word is used only twice in the psalter for "sin." such confession is suitable to the Psalmist, though some think he speaks here ironically, or hypothetically, or merely of the consequences and punishments of sin. (6) ashamed for my sake, or on account of my sufferings: lit. "through me." confounded . . sake, R. V., "brought to dishonor through me." (7) thy sake, comp. Je. xv. 15.

Hiding sin. — I. God's knowledge of sin is an inducement to repent. 1. Because it is foolish to endeavor to hide any sin from Him. 2. Because it is impossible to confess all our sins to Him. II. It is an encouragement to hope for pardon. 1. Because, in the full knowledge of sin, He has declared Himself to be merciful and ready to forgive. 2. Because He has made provision for pardon, not according to our knowledge of sin, but His own. — G. Rogers.

Answers to prayer. — A little girl, about four years of age, being asked. "Why do you pray to God?" replied, "Because I know He hears me, and I love to pray to Him." "But how do you know He hears you?" Putting her little hand to her heart she said, "I know He does, because there is something here that tells me so." — Bishop Atterbury. — Dr. William King, in the Anecdotes of His Own Times, writes: "In 1715, I dined with the Duke of Ormonde, at Richmond. We were fourteen at table. During the dinner there was a jocular dispute — I forget how it was introduced — concerning short prayers. Sir William Wyndham told us that the shortest prayer he had ever heard was the prayer of a common soldier, just before the battle of Blenheim: 'O God, if there be a God. save my soul, if I have a soul!' Bp. Atterbury seeming to join in the conversation, and applying himself to Sir William Wyndham, said, 'Your prayer, Sir William, is indeed very short; but I remember another as short, but a much better, offered up likewise by King Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden, 'O God, if in the day of battle I forget Thee, do Thou not forget me!' This, as Atterbury pronounced it with his usual grace and dignity, was

If you do not get all you ask, it is because the Saviour intends to give you something better. The Christian's motto is, "Upward, onward, heavenward!"

"I desire no other evidence of the truth of Christianity than the Lord's Prayer."— Mad. de Staël.

author,— perhaps Jeremiah

See Jer. xxxviii. 1-13.

A prayer in affliction.

Shoshannim, see Ps. xlv.

a Ps. xviii. 16; xxxii. 6; lxvi. 12; lxxxviii. 17; cxxiv. 5; Is. xliii. 2; La. iii. 54.

b Jno. ii. 5. "The waters are said to rush in unto the soul when they so press upon the imperiled one that the soul, i. e., the life of the body, more especially the breath, is threatened."—Delitzsch.

c Ps. xl. 2.

d "What was true, in some sense, of the suffering Israelite under the law, was still more true of Him in whom was no sin, and whom therefore His enemies did indeed hate without cause."— Perowne.

e Je. xv. 10.

"That which I stole not I must then restore." — Jennings and Lowe.

"The Lord has many treasuries and secrets all shut up from carnal minds with locks which they cannot open ; but he who walks in fellowship with Jesus possesses the master-key which will admit him to all the blessings of the covenant ; yea, to the very heart of God." — Spurgeon.

a very gentle and polite reproof, and was immediately felt by the whole company."

8—12. (8) stranger, or estranged.[a] alien, Ex. xviii. 3.[b] my mother's children, Polychr., "to the sons of my mother" expresses a closer degree of relationship than my brethren, the children of the same mother being always regarded as bound to one another by a closer tie than those of the same father by different mothers. — Kirkpatrick. (9) zeal, etc., "jealousy for Thine house hath consumed me."[c] Reference may be to the profaned and neglected condition of the sanctuary, if Jeremiah wrote the psalm. reproaches, etc., Ro. xv. 3. reproached, R.V., "reproach," by mockery of Thy servant. (10) When, etc., Psalmist refers to acts of devotion and religion, wh. his enemies turned to his reproach.[d] wept, prob. "humbled myself." (11) sackcloth, the Eastern outward symbol of deep sorrow and repentance.[e] proverb, or byword. His serious religious acts were made subjects of ridicule. (12) sit in the gate, the loungers. He is the talk of the city. song, etc., "his oddities and austerities furnish a subject for the latest comic song of the revelers' parties," Job. xxx. 9.

Zeal. — There were many Christian men in Wittemberg who said to Martin Luther, "You don't mean that you are going to hang up those on the church door?" Said Luther: "They are true; they assail damning error; my Fatherland is bowing down to Antichrist." "Pause," said the men who would stand well with everybody. "Is not this zeal without knowledge? Think how you will scandalize the University; how you will drive off men who would follow you in a more discreet course." "Avaunt!" said the Reformer. "The people are perishing in ignorance. The crowds of the common people who come into the city to market will read these words. Yours is not discretion but cowardice." He did the deed; and as the result of that act, Europe received the Protestant Reformation, and the night of the Middle Ages was ended. — Guest.

13—15. (13) acceptable time, lit. time of good pleasure, "when Thou wilt show favor."[f] — Cheyne. (14) mire, the truth, etc., Polychr., "with Thy trustworthy help," as vs. 2. waters, as vs. 1. (15) waterflood, vs. 2. pit, or well.[g] Either the grave (iv. 23) or a dungeon may be meant. shut, etc., one covered in such a well or pit would be buried alive.

Encouragements to prayer. — I. "Why should I pray?" Not that prayer can save us; only Jesus can do that. Prayer only asks salvation. Let us speak of some of the encouragements to prayer. 1. God commands it. 2. God hears and promises to answer prayer. The promises of God's Word. 3. God delights in His people's prayers. Parents like to hear their children's requests; so does our Father in heaven. He delights even in His little ones. 4. All the good and holy, in all ages, have loved prayer. 5. Past answers to prayer should encourage us. — J. H. Wilson.

Deliverance. — A lady had a dream, in which she fancied herself at the bottom of a deep pit. She looked round to see if there were any way of getting out; but in vain. Presently, looking upward, she saw in that part of the heavens immediately above the mouth of the pit a beautiful bright star. Steadily gazing at it, she felt herself to be gradually lifted upward. She looked down to ascertain how it was, and immediately found herself at the bottom of the pit. Again her eye caught sight of the star, and again she felt herself ascending. She had reached a considerable height. Still desirous of an explanation of so strange a phenomenon, she turned her eye downward, and fell to the bottom with fearful violence. On recovering from the effect of the shock, she bethought herself as to the meaning of it all, and once again turned her eye to the star, still shining so brightly above, and yet once again felt herself borne upward. Steadily did she keep her eye upon its light, till, at length, she found herself out of the horrible pit, and her feet firmly planted on the solid ground above. It taught her the lesson that in the hour of danger and trouble, deliverance is to be found, and found only, by looking to Jesus. — Guthrie.

16—18. (16) good, in the sense of sweet and comforting.[h] (17) hide not, Ps. xvii. 8. servant, "the Psalmist pleads his calling; surely God cannot withhold His help from one who is bound to His service. The plea would have special force if the Psalmist was a prophet like Jeremiah," (Am. iii. 7).

[a] Job xix. 13; Ps. xxxi. 11; Is. liii. 3; Jno. i. 11; vii. 5.

[b] Mat. x. 35, 36.

[c] Je. xx. 8, 9; Jno. ii. 17.

[d] "This portion of the Ps. has no direct bearing upon our Lord's life. No such external demonstrations of sorrow, no fasting, no sackcloth, gave occasion to revilings in 'His case; on the contrary, He was reproached for neglecting them." — Spk. Com.

[e] Ps. xxxv. 13.

"I don't know about having too much zeal, but I think it is better the pot should boil over than not boil at all." — Whitecross.

[f] Ps. xxxii. 6; Is. xlix. 8; lv. 6; 2 Cor. vi. 2.

"But I pray to Thee, O Jehovah! A time of favor, O God, through the abundance of Thy mercy." — Hengstenberg.

[g] "A dug pit usually with water in the bottom." — Stanley.

"A credible historian informs us that about one hundred and fifty years ago there was an earthquake in Switzerland, which precipitated part of a mountain upon a village that stood beneath it, and crushed every house and inhabitant to atoms, except the corner of one cottage, where the master of the house, with his poor family, were together praying unto God."

[h] "This appeal to God's tender mercy shows how great was the strait of the holy prophet." — Calvin.

speedily, Heb. make haste to answer me.[a] (18) deliver, R. V., "ransom." because . . enemies, i. e. lest my enemies should glory in my prolonged distress.[b]

God's nearness to the soul (vs. 18).—I. In what relations? 1. As a Father and Friend; 2 As a Guide and Guardian; 3. As a Redeemer and Portion. II. In what circumstances? 1. In reading the Bible: 2. In prayer; 3. In religious ordinances; 4. In affliction and death. III. For what end? 1. To establish communion with the soul; 2. To repel evil from the soul: 3. To prepare the soul for heaven. — G. Brooks.

Trouble.—

Heavier the cross, the heartier prayer;
The bruised herbs most fragrant are.
If sky and wind were always fair,
The sailor would not watch the star;
And David's Psalms had ne'er been sung
If grief his heart had never wrung.—From the German.

19—21. (19) Thou hast known, R. V., "Thou knowest;" "thou" very emphatic. reproach, etc. vss. 7–12.[c] (20) broken my heart, expression of the deepest grief. full of heaviness, Polychr., "sore sick," incurable, comp. Jer. xv. 18. take pity, or sympathize; lament with me.[d] (21) gall, Heb. rosh. Polychr., "poison." Some bitter substance; precisely what cannot be ascertained. vinegar, sour wine, "wh. had gone bad and become nauseous and unfit to drink." — Cam. Bib. Comp. Matt. xxvii. 34, 48.

Vinegar (vs. 21). — The refreshing quality of vinegar cannot be doubted; but a royal personage had reason to complain of his treatment in having this only presented to him to quench his thirst, when it was only made use of by the meanest people. Pitts tells us that the food that he and the rest had when first taken by the Algerines was generally only five or six spoonfuls of vinegar, half a spoonful of oil, a few olives, with a small quantity of black biscuit, and a pint of water a day. The juice of lemons is what those of higher life now use, and probably among the higher orders the juice of pomegranates might be used to produce a grateful acidity. — Harmer.

22—26. "At the thought of the intolerable inhumanity of his enemies he can no longer restrain himself, and breaks out into fierce imprecation." (22) table, their table, with all its sumptuousness and luxury.[e] and welfare, R.V., "and when they are in peace." (23) darkened, comp. vs. 3. loins . . shake, expressive of terror, dismay, and feebleness.[f] (24) wrathful anger, these combined words indicate the strength of the Psalmist's feeling. (25) habitation, R. V., marg. "their encampment," the circular enclosure for cattle. It may be used to include their house and possessions. (26) persecute, etc., those under the judgment of God may surely expect the pity and sympathy of man.[g] and . . wounded, Cheyne, "and they add to the pain of thy mortally wounded."

Suffering. —I. God knows what his people suffer; how much, how long. from whom, for what. His people should find consolation in this knowledge. 1. That trial is permitted by Him. 2. That it is apportioned by Him. 3. That it has its design from Him. 4. That when the design is accomplished, it will be removed by Him. — G. Rogers.

God a deliverer. — The miners of Wales. — There are many coalpits in the principality. There are men down there who hardly have a gleam of sunlight. How are they to get up? There is a string at the bottom; they pull it, a bell up at the top rings; a rope, worked by a steam-engine, is let down, and in this way they ascend to the top. A man gets down into the pit of trouble; he cannot get up himself; he must ring the bell of prayer, and God will hear it, and send down the rope that is to lift him out of it. — T. Jones.

27—30. (27) Add iniquity,[h] instead of taking away their iniquities by forgiveness, let one iniquity accumulate upon another. come . . righteousness, so as to escape the judgment on their sins. (28) blotted, etc., a very painful prayer. book of the living, fig. from the registers of citizens.[i] R. V., "book of life." "But — and this mitigates what would otherwise be the awful character of the imprecation — 'the book of life,' is not here to be understood in the full N. T. sense as 'the book of eternal life.'" (29) poor a Ps. xl. 17.

b "The honor of the all-holy One cannot suffer the enemies of the righteous to triumph over him." —Delitzsch.

"The Psalmist's straits make the black backing which turns his soul into a mirror, reflecting God's promises in its trust."

c "In the certainty that all his sorrows, fears, sickness, reproach, sufferings, are known to God, the Psalmist again finds his consolation."— Perowne.

d "The expressions of this and the foll. vss. should be compared with the account of our Lord's final suffering. Mat. xxvi., xxvii."

e "And to them when at their ease, [let it become] a trap."— Jennings and Lowe.

Ps. xxiii. 5.

f Da. v. 6.

g 2 Chr. xxviii. 9; Job, xix. 21; Is. liii. 4.

"The Eastern table was often a leather flap laid on the ground, which the Psalmist desires may start up as a snare, and close upon the feasters as they sit round it secure."—Exp. Bib.

h "There is no stronger malediction to be found in the Old Testament, unless that in Ps. cix. be considered more virulent. Neither can we say anything in palliation of the bitter spirit it reveals." — Jennings and Lowe.

i Je. xxii. 30; Ez xiii. 9.

and sorrowful, i. e. afflicted and suffering. on high, in a high fortress, 2 Pet. v. 6. (30) magnify, etc., Ps. l. 14.

Humiliation and exaltation. — I. The humilation that precedes exaltation. 1. Deep; "I am poor and sorrowful." 2. Confessed: "I am poor," etc. II. The exaltation that follows humiliation. 1. Divine: "Thy salvation, O Lord." "Though the Lord be high," etc. 2. Complete: God does nothing by halves. 3 Pre-eminent: "Set me up on high." — G. Rogers.

Sin its own punishment. — Sin, carried far enough, becomes its own punishment. Let but a voracious glutton be bound to sit at a well-furnished table but two hours after he had filled his stomach, he would account it an intolerable penance. Let but the drunkard be forced to drink on with those that can drink him down, how he is a burden to himself, and a scorn to his fellow drunkards! Let but a lazy sluggard be confined three days to his bed, and how weary will he be of his bed of down! How is the idle person more weary of his idleness than another is of work! — Samuel Annesley. — The dying master and his slave. — The conscience of the sinner, when aroused, not only accuses himself, but his accomplices also. A rich southern gentleman, careless about his soul, used often to invite his minister, a worldly man and a mere hireling, to hunt, drink wine, play cards, and join parties of pleasure with him. The poor worldling was taken sick, and his case was pronounced dangerous. His mind was terribly agitated; he felt unprepared to die. His physician asked him one day if he would not send for his minister to converse with him, and offer prayer in his behalf. No, he had no confidence in him: he could hardly bear the mention of his name. He had a poor, pious negro servant by the name of Ben. The master had sometimes overheard him at prayer. "Call for Ben," said he. He came. "Ben," said the dying man, "can't you pray for your poor master?" Down he fell on his knees, and pleaded for the salvation of the sinner's soul. — Cheever.

It is recorded of the Duke of Ormond, in the 17th century, that he never prepared for bed, or went abroad in the morning, till he had withdrawn for an hour into his closet.

"The Romans in a great district were put so hard to it, that they were fain to take the weapons out of the temple of their gods to fight with them; and so they overcame. This ought to be the course of every true Christian, in times of public distress, to fly to the weapons of the church — prayers and tears. The Spartans' walls were their spears; the Christian's walls are his prayers." — Spencer.

31—33. (31) This also, R. V., "And it." horns and hoofs, marking his age, as not under three years, and also as being ceremonially clean.[a] (32) humble, R. V., "meek." heart shall live, see Ps. xxii. 26. Polychr., "who seek after God and their heart will revive." (33) prisoners, those who suffer oppression and persecution for His sake.

a Le. xi. 3.

Three greatest things. — I. The greatest thing in man. The "heart." It is the heart that marks character (Prov. xxiii. 7); that settles worth (1 Sa. xvi. 7); that determines destiny (Rom. x. 9, 10; Prov. iv. 23). Even among men, the man who has "no heart," whatever else he may have, is despised; whereas he who has a kind heart, though he may have many failings, is beloved (cf. Nabal and David). II. The greatest work for man. "Seek God." This implies that, though man is separated from God through sin, there is a possibility of return. God has drawn near to us, and we may draw near to God. Christ is the true mercy-seat. In Him God and man meet and are reconciled. The chief object of life is to seek God (Ps. xxvii. 8; Isa. lv. 6). In His works and in His Word, in the person of His Son, and in doing His will by the Spirit, He is evermore to be found of those who truly seek Him (Isa. xlv. 19; Amos v. 8). III. The greatest blessedness for man. "Live." Life is the greatest boon — but only when it is the life of the heart. It is in Christ that we find our true life and our highest blessedness.

Cornelius Scipio, the great Roman general, when once he had assumed the toga, never undertook any affair of importance without having passed some time alone in the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus.

"If you have the sun, you have the rays — if you have the fountain, you have all the living stream. If the Lord is yours, all things are yours." —Stanford.

"We live by admiration, faith, and hope,
And ever as these are well and wisely fixed
In dignity of being we ascend." — Pul. Com.

34—36. (34) moveth, or creepeth. (35) save Zion, expression suitable to the time of the exile. that they may dwell, better, "and men shall abide there." (36) seed, etc., "the young, God-fearing generation, the children of the servants of God among the exiles." — Delitzsch. love his name, i. e. "those who faithfully observe the first and great commandment."

The creation praising God (vs. 34). — Praise is due to God on account — I. Of what He is in Himself. II. Of what He is in His relations. III. Of what He has accomplished. IV. Of His wonderful gifts. V. Of His grand discoveries. — J. Evans.

God looks not at the pomp of words and variety of expressions, but at the sincerity and devotion of the heart. The key opens the door not because of its gilt, but because it fits the lock.

Nature praising God. —

Not a flower
But shows some touch, in freckle, streak, or stain,

Of His unrivall'd pencil. He inspires
Their balmy odors, and imparts their hues,
And bathes their eyes with nectar, and includes,
In grains as countless as the seaside sands,
The forms with which He sprinkles all the earth.
Happy who walks with Him! whom what he finds
Of flavor or of scent, in fruit or flower,
Of what he views of beautiful or grand
In nature, from the broad majestic oak
To the green blade that twinkles in the sun, Prompts with remembrance of a present God. — Cowper.

"No man can hinder our private addresses to God; every man can build a chapel in his breast, himself the priest, his heart the sacrifice, and the earth he treads on the altar." — Jeremy Taylor.

PSALM THE SEVENTIETH.

author,— unknown; see Ps. xl., of which this is a fragment, vss. 13-17.

Prayer of a persecuted saint.

Title, comp. Ps. xxxviii.

1—5. (1) O God, Elohim. to help me, Heb. to my help.[a] (2) my soul, or life. desire my hurt, or delight in my misfortune. (3) reward of their shame, lit. upon the heels of; on account of. shame, disgraceful conduct; or attempts to put me to shame. Polychr., "Let them be appalled when their plans are thwarted." (4) God, Elohim: term Jehovah is used Ps. xl. 16. (5) But I, lit. "but as for me who am afflicted and needy." no tarrying, God never does tarry, but He often seems to His saints so to do.[b]

Urgency in prayer. — It implies — I. A deep sense of present and immediate need. This was awakened in him by — 1. The extremity of the danger to which he was exposed; 2. The limitations of the resources at his command; 3. The conviction that adequate help could be found only in God. II. Apparent delay in answering his prayer. 1. During what may seem delay to us God may be answering our prayer; 2. The seeming delay may be productive of richest blessing. (1) It may teach us the most important lessons; (2) It may develop the noblest attributes of character. It may intensify our desires; may promote patience; may teach and train us to wait calmly and resolutely upon God; may develop trust. III. Strong faith in the entreatableness of God. — William Jones.

A beautiful envelope. — A poor servant girl in London, who had attended the ragged schools and received spiritual as well as mental benefit from them, one evening at the close of the school put into the minister's hand, much to his surprise, a note containing a half-sovereign. Her entire wages were only eight pounds a year. She offered this as a thanksgiving tribute to God for the blessings received from the schools, very modestly remarking that it was not much. "But, sir," said she, "I have wrapped it up with an earnest prayer and many tears." Here is, indeed, a most rare and beautiful envelope. Would that our offerings, as we lay them before God's altar, were more generally enclosed in such golden envelopes. "An earnest prayer and many tears." Assuredly she shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. — Old Jonathan.

a Ps. lxxi. 12.

b Ps. cxli. 1; 2 Co. i. 10.

"Prayer is not a sentiment or a theory; it is a working instrument, which is to do certain things, just as a pen is to write, or a knife to cut."

"The vitality of the church could not continue if the saint of humble and retiring piety, and of fervent prayerfulness were removed, any more than the body can live when there is no heart and no lungs." — Barnes.

PSALM THE SEVENTY-FIRST.

author, — poss. Jeremiah

Prayer of a gray-headed servant of God.

1—5. (1) In thee, etc., see Ps. xxxi. 1–3. put my trust, have I taken refuge. confusion, i.e. disgraced. (2) in thy righteousness, which ensures faithfulness to gracious promises of defense and help. (3) strong habitation, or a rock of habitation, or stronghold on a rock.[c] resort, when danger threatens. (4) unrighteous, etc., the godlessness of the ways of his enemies seems most to have impressed the Psalmist. Polychr. "clutch of outrage and violence." (5) hope, source of my confidence, reliance.[d]

From my youth. — The remembering and acknowledging of God in youth will be great satisfaction in old age. O what joy will reflection upon youthful piety yield! Even Seneca, a heathen, could say: "Youth well spent is the greatest comfort of old age." David could confidently plead with God for deliverance out of the hand of the wicked. "For," saith he, "Thou art my hope, O Lord God: Thou art my trust from my youth." "Cast me not off in the time of old age; forsake me not when my strength faileth." An ingenuous master will not turn off a superannuated servant. When the proconsul bade Polycarp deny Christ and swear by the emperor, he answered: "I have served Christ these eighty-six years, and he hath not once injured me, and shall I now deny him?" Jacob could say: "God hath fed me all my

The expressions are borrowed largely from other Ps. esp. the xxii., xxxi., xxxv., xl.

c De. xxxiii. 27.

d Je. xiv. 8; xvii. 13, 1, 7; 1 Ti. i. 1; Col. i. 27.

"In prayer it is better to have a heart without words than words without a heart." — Bunyan.

life long unto this day; He hath been kind to me all my days, and I trust He will look to me even to the end; and shall I now turn my back on Him?" Whither can I go to mend myself for a master? "Thou only hast the words of eternal life." He that hath been the stay of my youth, will be the staff of my age. I dare venture my soul upon His promise who hath hitherto maintained me by His providence. "In the days of my youth, the secret of God was upon my tabernacle, His candle did shine upon my head, and by His light I walked through darkness;" and, though now "the sun, and the light, and moon and stars be darkened," in this my natural horizon, yet "the Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear?" I have abundant experience of His grace and presence. O the days of mercy I have had many years ago! A good man said: "I got that in my youth, which I would not for all the world have to get now." — Oliver Heywood.

"It is a good beginning, and a recommendation to our prayers, when we can declare our faith and trust to be in God alone." — Edward Walter.

6—9. (6) By . . up, as in a mother's arms.[a] Cam. Bib., "On Thee have I stayed myself from my birth." (7) wonder, prob. as suffering so severely under God's chastisements.[b] Polychr. "as a monster." comp. Is. lxii. 14. Set my mouth, R. V., "my mouth shall be," etc. (9) old age, "this expression, combined with the allusion to old age and gray hairs in vs. 18, indicates that the writer was drawing near to the natural term of human life, and already felt the infirmities of old age creeping upon him."

A wonder. — Consider the text with reference to David, to Christ, and to the Christian. I. With reference to David. 1. David was a wonder as a man. 2. As a king. 3. As a servant of God. II. With respect to Christ. 1. Christ was a wonder in His person. 2. In His life. 3. In His miracles. 4. In His teaching. 5. In His sufferings. 6. In His ascension and mediatorial glory. III. With regard to the Christian. 1. The Christian is a wonder to himself. 2. To the world. 3. To wicked spirits. 4. To the angels in heaven. — John Cawood.

Praying, waiting, and working. — A working man once said "I have often been without a penny in my pocket, or a crust in my cupboard. What do I do then? I go down on my knees, I put up my prayer to God, and then I go out and look for it." He added, "There is no use in praying if you don't expect an answer to your prayer, and I've never been disappointed. But don't suppose when you have prayed you are to stand idle, and expect the answer to drop down on itself. When you have prayed you must put your own shoulder to the wheel, and then God will give you the blessing."

[a] "God is a Father who bears those who trust Him in His arms, and carries them in His bosom; they are as children, who lean all their weight upon Him, and find their sweetest rest in His supporting Hand. This is the very idea of faith, according to its Hebrew signification." — Perowne.

[b] So Job was regarded by his friends; Zec. iii. 8; 1 Co. iv. 9.

"The one permanent unchangeable joy is to have Christ Jesus in the heart and to serve Him in the daily life, and to walk in the sunshine of His love." — T. L. Cuyler.

10—13. (10) against me, so as to depress and crush me; what they say is indicated in vs. 11. counsel together, Ps. lxxxiii. 3–5. (11) God hath forsaken, this was the uttermost of bitterness to the pious trusting soul. persecute, R. V., "pursue." (12) O God, etc., see Ps. xxii. 11, 19. (13) Let, etc., Polychr., "be ashamed and disgraced;" see Ps. xxv. 4, 26; xl. 14; lxx. 2.

"Peace does not dwell in outward things, but within the soul. It springs from acquiescence even in disagreeable things, not in an exemption from suffering." — Fénélon.

Old age. — June 28. This day I enter on my eighty-sixth year. I now find I grow old: (1) My sight is decayed, so that I cannot read a small print, unless in a strong light. (2) My strength is decayed so that I walk much slower than I did some years since. (3) My memory of names, whether of persons or places, is decayed, till I stop a little to recollect them. What I should be afraid of, is, if I took thought for the morrow, that my body should weigh down my mind, and create either stubbornness, by the decrease of my understanding, or peevishness, by the increase of bodily infirmities; but thou shalt answer for me, O Lord my God. — John Wesley.

"There is no such thing in the long history of God's kingdom as an unanswered prayer. Every true desire from a child's heart finds some true answer in the heart of God. Jesus Christ did not pray in vain, or to an unknown God, nor has He spoken in ignorance of God or of His brethren, when He says, 'Ask and receive, that your joy may be full."—Norman Macleod.

The Divine Helper. —

When on my days of life the night is falling,
And in the winds from unsunned spaces blown
I hear far voices out in the darkness calling
My feet to paths unknown,

Thou who hast made my home of life so pleasant
Leave not its tenant when its walls decay;
O Love divine, O Helper ever present,
Be thou my strength and stay! — Whittier.

"A child in the dark is comforted by grasping its father's hand."

14—16. (14) more and more, to keep on praising while help is delayed is indeed the triumph of faith. Polychr., "the longer the more," i. e. the longer he waits the more he praises. (15) righteousness, right doings, wh. are therefore merciful doings. know . . numbers, Ps. cxxxix. 17, 18. (16) go, etc., rend. "I will come (out of my sick chamber), making the mighty acts of Jehovah the subject of praise."[a]

Praise.— I. The determination avowed. 1. To recount the instances of the Divine faithfulness in his deliverances. 2. To recount them publicly; "My mouth," etc. 3. Constantly: "All the day." II. The reason assigned: "For I know not," etc. "Eternity's too short to utter all Thy praise." Therefore. I begin it now, and will continue it. — Spurgeon.

Mercies. — When David spoke of his enemies, he said they were more in number than the hairs of his head; he had, therefore, some idea of their number, and found a figure suitable to set it out; but, in the case of the Lord's covenant mercies, he declares, "I know not the number," and does not venture upon any sort of comparison. To creatures belong number and limit, to God and His grace there is neither. We may, therefore, continue to tell out His great salvation all day long, for the theme is utterly inexhaustible. — Spurgeon.

17—21. (17) hitherto, faithfully up to the present. declared, etc., habitually and constantly. wondrous works, a special term for the singular and conspicuous works of God, both in nature (Job v. 9), and in His dealings with His people (Ex. iii. 20), particularly in the great crises of their history (lxxviii. 4, 11, 32), which declare His power and love, and arouse the admiration of all who behold them. — Cam. Bib. (18) when, etc., Heb. unto old age and gray hairs. strength, etc., lit. "arm," R. V., "Until I have declared . . . unto the next generation." (19) Polychr., "Up to high heaven, O God, reach the great things thou hast done, etc." "Thy righteousness, also," Polychr. adds to vs. 18. (20) me, (3 times) the best commentators trans. "us." depths of the earth, a fig, expression for overwhelming affliction. (21) comfort me, etc., by restoring health and mercies, as to Job. Cheyne, "and turn to comfort me."

The Christian's old age (vs. 18). — I. If this be true, the aged Christian must be happy in the contemplation of his past conduct and influence. II. He is happy in the contemplation of the blessings which have marked his history. III. He is happy in the contemplation of his life's history, because of the lessons which it has served to teach. IV. The aged disciple is happy in the continued possession of his life's chief good. V. The aged disciple is happy in the near prospect of realizing his life's brightest hopes. — Jesse Guernsey.

Old age. — Ossian, in his heathenish darkness, looked upon old age as dark and unlovely. Through the light of revelation I behold in it beauty and glory. It is beautiful in its constancy, beautiful in its complacency, beautiful in its contentment. Beautiful, too, in its childlikeness — feeding by the shepherd's tents with the little lambs of the flock. Old age is beautiful in its wise counsels, and in its patient endurance of the thoughtless scorn and neglect of the inexperienced, and in its persevering buoyancy, in spite of frailty. And it is beautiful in its white locks, waving above the river of death. The aged Christian almost grasps his crown which is held awaiting him, and the brightness of it is already lighting up his earthly brow. His citizenship is more in heaven than upon earth. Full of years and of experience, he is like perfected fruit. He is as a shock of corn fully ripe. There is a golden glory about pious old age. It is altogether beautiful.— S. A. McC.

22—24. (22) psaltery, lit. with an instrument of a lute. Even thy truth, better, "Even thy faithfulness." Holy . . Israel, a name for God only used in the psalms twice.[b] (23) My lips, etc., ring out their joy in a shout. Comp. Ps. xxxv. 28. which . . redeemed, Polychr., "because Thou hast been a redeemer." (24) are confounded, he speaks as if he felt that his prayer was already realized; vs. 13.

Gratitude.— The Marshal D'Armont having taken Crodon, in Bretagne, during the League, gave orders to put every Spaniard to death who was found in the garrison. Though it was announced to be death to disobey the orders of the general, an English soldier ventured to save a Spaniard. He was arraigned for this offense before a court-martial, when he confessed the fact, and declared himself to be ready to suffer death, provided they would still be willing to save the life of the Spaniard. The marshal being much surprised at such conduct, asked the soldier how he came to be so much interested in

[a] "I will come with the mighty deeds of the Lord Jahve, I will praise Thy righteousness, Thee alone." — Delitzsch.

"The verb used never means to go forth, but always to go in, or simply to come." — Perowne.

"Greatness increasing with comfort, and comfort increasing with greatness; very rarely united." — George Rogers.

[a] Is. lii. 40, liii. 1; Eze. iv. 7.

"It is good before you address yourself to the duty of prayer to read a portion of Holy Scripture, which will be of great use to furnish you both with matter and words for prayer, especially David's Psalms and Paul's Epistles. The Holy Spirit hath provided for us a treasury or storehouse of what is suitable for all occasions." — Philip Henry.

"Thank God most High for all His unmerited mercies and loving kindness to me, to this day, now closing my seventy-seventh year. Through waves, and clouds, and storms, He has gently cleared my way. Praise to Him that sitteth on the throne, and maketh all things new. Amen, and Amen. O eternity, blissful eternity! Sin, earth and hell I now defy; I lean upon my Saviour's breast; God be thanked! Amen The end shall soon come; joyful news!" — Gideon Ouseley.

[b] Ps. lxxviii. 41; lxxxix. 18.

"Love is God's loaf; and this is that feeding for which we are taught to pray, 'Give us this day our daily bread.'" — Beecher.

"If we are instant in prayer, every little circumstance awakens the disposition to pray, and desires and words are always ready." — Felix Neff.

the preservation of the life of the Spaniard. "Because, sir," replied he, "in a similar situation he once saved my life." The marshal, greatly pleased with the soldier, granted him pardon, saved the Spaniard's life, and highly commended them both. Oh, that Christians never forgot Him who, while they were yet enemies, died for them, then would they neither at any time deny His name, nor decline sustaining loss in His cause.— Gray.

PSALM THE SEVENTY-SECOND.

author,— prob. Dav. in his old age

A prayer, at the coronation of Solomon.

1, 2. (1) judgments, such knowledge of Thy will, and such a spirit of judgment, that he may worthily take the place of chief magistrate. Just judgment is the crowning characteristic of the ideal king. Is. xi. 3 ff. righteousness, or spirit of rightness, to control all his actions.[a] (2) He shall, better, may he.[b] judge, give sentence; Polychr., "govern." poor, afflicted ones. Polychr., "pious ones."

St. Patrick's prayer.— St. Patrick's prayer was very striking, as he was going to preach at Tara, expecting persecution. "At Tara, to-day, the strength of God pilot me, the power of God preserve me; may the wisdom of God instruct me, the eye of God watch over me, the ear of God hear me, the Word of God give me sweet talk, the hand of God defend me, the way of God guide me. Christ be with me, Christ before me, Christ after me, Christ in me, Christ under me, Christ over me, Christ on my right hand, Christ on my left hand, Christ on this side, Christ on that side, Christ at my back; Christ in the heart of every one to whom I speak, Christ in the mouth of every person who speaks to me, Christ in the eye of every person who looks upon me, Christ in the ear of every one who hears me at Tara to-day."

The true king.—

He's a king,
A true right king, who dares do aught, save wrong;
Fears nothing mortal, but to be unjust;
Who is not blown up with the flatt'ring puffs
Of spongy sycophants; who stands unmoved,
Despite the jostling of opinion;
Who can enjoy himself, mauger the throng
That strive to press the quiet out of him;
Who sits upon Jove's footstool as I do,
Adorning, not affecting, majesty;
Whose brow is wreathed with the silver crown
Of clear content.— Marston.

"A term referring to the inner mind and spirit, the wisdom and discernment which should be the reflex of the Divine mind." — Perowne.

b Is. xi. 3, 4; xxxii. 1.

"The people are fashioned," says Claudian, "according to the example of their king; and edicts are of less power than the model which his life exhibits."

3—5. (3) mountains, the characteristic feature of a country like Palestine.[c] Mountains and hills are used to represent the whole country. by righteousness, by means of; through the righteousness of the rulers.[d] The meaning is: Through the general establishment of "righteousness" shall "peace" overspread the land. (4) judge, vindicate the cause. children . . needy, those born to poverty.[e] Job xxix. 12–17. (5) They shall, better, so that they. fear thee, i. e. God. sun and moon,[f] the types of durability, "figs. of eternity as compared with the fleeting generations of men;" trans. "while the sun endureth, and as long as the moon doth shine throughout," etc.

Judging the needy. — Mr. Sherman had an excellent Christian wife, greatly beloved by all who knew her, and especially so by the poor. A lady overheard some poor women speaking of her. "There she is," said one of them," "the dear creature; she is like Jesus Christ." "How so?" asked another. "I know she is very good; but why is she like Jesus Christ?" "Because," was the reply, "she never despises any one, and has always a smile and a kind word for the poor." — Anec. Illus. of O. T. Texts.

c Joel iii. 18.

d Is. xxxii. 17.

e "Those who are born to poverty are more or less regarded, by an unrighteous government, as having no rights." — Delitzsch.

f "Lit. with the sun, coeval with its existence, and before, or in presence of the moon while it lasts."—Fausset.

6, 7. (6) He shall come down, fig. for "He shall be like rain coming down." mown grass,[g] fields recently mown, and looking bare and brown. (7) the righteous, better Polychr., "righteousness." so . . endureth, lit. till there be no moon.[h]

The reign of Christ (vss. 6–11). — I. The nature of Christ's reign. 1. It is gentle in its influence; 2. It is progressive in its development; 3. It is mighty in its results. II. The extent of Christ's reign. 1. It shall include the most g "The mown meadow is particularly mentioned, bec. the roots of the grass would be most exposed to the summer heat, after the crop had been gathered in, and the effect would be most striking in the shooting of the green blade after the shower." — Perowne.

h Job xiv. 12.

distant regions; 2. The rudest tribes; 3. The most exalted individuals. — G. Brooks.

Righteous — Peace.— Do you ask what he is individually? The answer is, "King of Righteousness;" a being loving righteousness, working righteousness, promoting righteousness, procuring righteousness, imparting righteousness to those whom he saves, perfectly sinless, and the enemy and abolisher of all sin. Do you ask what he is practically, and in relation to the effect of his reign? The answer is, "King of Peace:" a sovereign whose kingdom is a shelter for all who are miserable, a covert for all who are persecuted, a resting-place for all who are weary, a home for the destitute, and a refuge for the lost.— Charles Sanford.

8—11. (8) dominion, etc., a prayer, "may he have," etc. Ex. xxiii. 31. the river, i. e. the Euphrates.[a] "The sovereignty of Solomon over tributary peoples extended to the Euphrates." (9) in the wilderness, the Bedouin tribes of the desert districts S. and E. of Sol.'s kingdom. Polychr., "Before him opposers will bow." lick the dust, the bowed attitude of profound submission is indicated. (10) Tarshish, farthest point commerce reached in the Mediterranean.[b] "The El Dorado of the Hebrews." isles, rather "coast-land" of the Medit. sea. presents, in acknowledgment of benefits received. Seba, the great South Arabian kingdom. Seba, or Saba, Josephus identifies with the island of Meroë.[c] (11) all kings, hyperbolical expression. All, in the sense of very many.

Eastern prostrations (vs. 9).— In Mr. Hugh Boyd's account of his embassy to the king of Candy, in Ceylon, there is a paragraph which signally illustrates this part of the Psalm, and shows the adulation and obsequious reverence with which an Eastern monarch is approached. Describing his introduction to the king, he says, "The removal of the curtain was the signal of our obeisances. Mine, by stipulation, was to be only kneeling. My companions immediately began the performance of theirs, which were in the most perfect degree of Eastern humiliation. They almost literally licked the dust; prostrating themselves with their faces almost close to the stone floor, and throwing out their arms and legs; then rising on their knees, they repeated in a very loud voice a certain form of words of the most extravagant meaning that can be conceived; that the head of the king of kings might reach beyond the sun: that he might live a thousand years," etc. "When the king changed his place of residence, or traveled, the elders of his tribe assembled, and carried before him a sceptre, and a lance with a kind of flag upon it to give notice of the king's approach to all who might be traveling on the road, that they might pay him the customary homage, which was by prostrating themselves before him on the ground, wiping off the dust from his feet with the corners of their garments, and kissing them."— Glasse.

12—15. (12) shall deliver,[d] better "he delivereth," this is the spirit of His rule. "He merits such submission by the exercise of every royal virtue." poor, Polychr., "the pious;" Cam. Bib., "the afflicted." no helper, such as the friendless orphan. (13) poor, or weak. (14) their soul, i. e. "their lives." from deceit, R. V., "oppression," the schemes of deceitful enemies. precious . . sight, so He will act as a righteous avenger Cheyne, "costly," i. e. something to be rescued at all costs. (15) he shall, better regarded as the expression of desire and prayer, may he live, etc., or with Polychr., "So that they live, and give him gold of Sheba."[e]

Contrasts.— The Angolani so despised their slaves that they would sometimes give as many as twenty-two for one hunting dog. . . . But Christ prefers the soul of one of His servants to the whole world, since He died that it might be made more capable of entering into eternal felicity. For breaking one goblet the Roman cast his slave into the pond to be devoured by the murænæ. But the Son of God came down from heaven to earth to deliver mankind, His vile, ungrateful, faithless servants, from the pangs of the serpent, like the golden fleece, and save them as Jonah from the whale. Is not their blood precious in His sight? Alexander the Great acknowledged at death that he was a frail and feeble man. "Lo! I," said he, "am dying, whom you falsely called a god." But Christ proved that he was God when, by His own death, he overcame, and, as I may say, slew death.— Thomas Le Blanc. — Praise to Christ (vs. 15) — See yon starry host! see the mighty cohorts of cherubs and seraphs! Let men begone, and they shall praise Him; let the Comp. for the fig. De. xxxii. 2; Job xxix. 22, 23; Pr. xvi. 15; 2Sa. xxiii. 4.

"The king is the shadow on earth of God's righteousness, and the organ for the manifestation thereof, so as to draw men to true devotion."

a "The Psalmist is here describing the universal monarchy of Christ."— S. Cyril.

b "Tartessus, a colony of the Phœnicians, in the S. of Spain. It traded with Tyre in silver, iron, tin, and lead."— Perowne.

c "It may be safely concluded that Seba denotes the African tribe inhabiting this very fertile district."— Jennings and Lowe.

Is. lx. 6, 9.

"The Lord's Prayer, for a succession of solemn thoughts, for fixing the attention upon a few great points, for suitableness to every condition, for sufficiency, for conciseness, without obscurity, for the weight and real importance of its petition, is without an equal or a rival."— Paley.

d "The connection of thought is observable. The extension of the king's dominion is the result not of military force, but of moral influence; all nations will be won by the righteousness of His sway, more esp. by His care for the poor and afflicted."— Spk. Com.

e Some think the reference is to the man whom the king saves; he will bring presents in recognition of the king's kindness, and he will pray for the king's prosperity.

A poor man once went to a pious minister, and said, "Mr. Carter, what will become of me? I work hard, and fare hard, and yet I cannot thrive." Mr. Carter answered, "Still you want one thing; I will tell you what you shall do. Work hard, and fare hard, and pray hard; and I will warrant you shall thrive."

troops of the glorified cease their notes, and let no sweet melodies ever come from the lips of sainted men and women — yet the chariots of God are twenty thousand, even many thousand of angels, who always in their motion chant His praise. There is an orchestra on high, the music of which shall never cease, even were mortals extinct and all the human race swept from existence. Again: if angels were departed, still daily would He be praised; for are there not worlds on worlds, and suns on suns, and systems on systems, that could forever sing His praise? Yes! The ocean – that house of storms — would howl out His glories; the winds would swell the notes of His praise with their ceaseless gales; the thunders would roll like drums in the march of the God of armies; the illimitable void of ether would become vocal with song; and space itself would burst forth into one universal chorus, "Hallelujah, hallelujah, hallelujah! still the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." And if these were gone, if creatures ceased to exist, He who ever liveth and reigneth, in whom all the fulness of the Godhead bodily dwells, would still be praised, praised in Himself, and glorious in Himself; for the Father would praise the Son, and the Spirit would praise Him; and mutually blessing one another and rendering each other beatified, still "daily would He be praised."

"This king's treasure is the life of his subjects. Therefore he will put forth his power to preserve them and deliver them."

16, 17. (16) There shall be, better through vss. 16, 17, may there be . . . may . . . call him happy. handful, should be abundance. top of the mountains, the least fruitful parts of the land. Rich harvests even crowding up to the mountain tops.[a] fruit thereof, ripened corn ears. shake, the word used denotes movement and sound. Lebanon, covered with mighty forest trees.[b] and . . earth, Polychr., "Like the herb of the field may inhabitants flourish in cities." (17) His name shall, or may his name endure. continued, R. V., marg. "have issue," be renewed, by his having a long posterity. blessed in him, or bless themselves in him: cite his case as an example of blessedness. — Cam. Bib. "May all nations bless themselves in him, (and) call him happy."

a "May corn cover even the mountain tops, and wave high and conspicuous as now does the Lebanon forest."— Jennings and Lowe.

b "Like Lebanon by soft winds fann'd, rustles the golden harvest far and wide."—Keble.

The greatness of the Redeemer's life (vss. 16, 17). — Applying these words to Christ, we observe — I. That the greatness of His life is seen in the magnitude of its influence. 1. It is co-extensive with creation; 2. Abiding; 3. Blissful; 4. Glorious. II. The greatness of His life is developed through means. 1. Truth; 2. Wealth; 3. Prayer. III. The greatness of His life is experienced in the heavenward direction it gives to mankind — He makes men pray to and praise Him. 1. Such persons owe their existence to Christ; 2. They are the finest specimens of human excellence; 3. They alone fully give scope to their faculties to honor him. IV. The greatness of His life is seen in the realization through eternity of His work on earth. He shall live — 1. In all that relates to men on earth — literature, institutions, etc.; 2. In the affectionate remembrance of a redeemed people; 3. As the expression of all excellence; 4. As the centre of all attraction to the glorified church. — J. H. Hill.

"For my own part, if I had an insupportable burden — if, from any cause, I were bent upon sacrificing every earthly hope as a peace offering towards heaven, I would make the wide world my cell, and good deeds to mankind my prayer. Many penitent men have done this, and found peace in it."—Hawthorne.

Growth of grass in the East (vs. 16). — The rapidity with which grass grows in the East is the idea here referred to. "When the ground there hath been destitute of rain nine months together, and looks all of it like the barren sand in the deserts of Arabia, where there is not one spire of green grass to be found, within a few days after those fat enriching showers begin to fall, the face of the earth there (as it were by a new resurrection) is so revived and, as it were, so renewed, as that it is presently covered all over with a pure green mantle."— Sir T. Roe.

"This Psalm was penned by a king, it is dedicated to a king, and is chiefly intended concerning him who is 'King of kings.'"— Joseph Caryl.

18—20. (18) Blessed, etc.,[c] Ps. xli. 13. wondrous things, Job ix. 8. (19) his glorious name, the name of His glory. "A compendious expression for the majesty of His Being, as it is revealed to men." (20) prayers of David, on the ground of this expression we must not assert that no Davidic compositions are found in the later books. This vs. 20 is a compiler's note, intimating the end of Bk. II.

c "This and foll vss are a later dóxology, appended here to mark the close of the Second Book of the Psalter."—Perowne.

Note on the 72d Psalm. — If the primary reference of the psalm is to some actual king of Judah, it is plain that it reaches far beyond him. It is a "Messianic" psalm. It presents a picture of the kingdom of God upon earth in its ideal character of perfection and universality. It is thus in its nature not only a prayer and a hope but a prophecy. As each successive king of David's line failed to realize the ideal, it became clearer and clearer that its words pointed forward to One who was to come, to the true "Prince of "The influence of believing prayer has a good analogy in the daguerreotype When the character of God is, by means of prayer, brought to bear upon the mind of the be-Peace." — Cam. Bib. — The power of prayer. — No human creature can believe how powerful prayer is, and what it is able to effect; none but those who have learnt it by experience. It is a great matter where, in extreme need, one can lay hold on prayer. I know that so often as I have earnestly prayed I have been richly heard, and have obtained more than I have prayed for. Indeed, God sometimes deferred the matter; nevertheless He came. Oh! how great an upright and godly Christian's prayer is! how powerful with God! That a poor human creature should speak with God's high majesty in heaven and not be affrighted, but know, on the contrary, that God smileth friendly upon him for Christ's sake. His dearly beloved Son! — Luther.

PSALM THE SEVENTY-THIRD.

author, — unknown

Subject the perplexity of the good at the temporal prosperity of the wicked, and the sorrows of the righteous.

This psalm begins Bk. III. generally designated the Psalms of Asaph. 1—4. (1) Truly, same Heb. word as in vs. 13, "verily" and vs. 18, "surely," always "surely," in R. V. He begins the Ps. by affirming the conclusion to which he has been led.[a] Israel, as hinted in the next clause. clean heart, R. V., "pure in heart," upon wh. admission to God's presence depends. Matt. v. 8; Ps. xxiv. 4. (2) for me, pronoun emphatic, contrasting himself with the Israel to wh. God is good. gone, turned aside fr. the right way. slipped, Polychr., "There was nothing to keep my feet from slipping." (3) envious. indignant, an altogether unworthy disposition for a servant of God.[b] foolish, R. V., "the arrogant," noisy blusterers puffed up with self-importance. prosperity, merely in temporal things.[c] (4) bands, tight cords, or fetters, only used besides in Is. lviii. 6. "They have no torments of pain and disease in their death." in their death, some think this should be up to their death, until they come to die.[d] their strength, etc. Cam. Bib., "sound and stalwart is their body," i. e. "they drop into their grave while their strength is still undiminished." — Pul. Com. This fact puzzles the Psalmist, who has no vital conception of the future life.

The goodness of God to Israel (vs. 1). — I. The description here given of the people of God. 1. They are represented by their name; 2. By their character. II. The considerations by which their interest in the Divine love may be proved. 1. By His Son He saved them from hell; 2. By His Spirit He purifies them from sin; 3. By His providence He guides and guards them on earth; 4. At their death He receives them to Heaven. Apply: — (1) Let Israel love and trust God; (2) Let others seek to be of Israel.

Envy. — Actius Sincerus, a man of rare wit and great reputation, when in the presence of King Frederic, witnessed a discussion among physicians on what would most effectually sharpen the eyesight? The fumes of fennel, said some; the use of a glass, said others, some one thing, some another: but I, said he, replied envy. The doctors were astonished, and much amusement afforded to the audience at their expense. Then I continued: Does not envy make all things seem larger and fuller? And what could be more to your purpose than that the very faculty of seeing should itself be made greater and stronger. — Thomas Le Blanc. — Narrow escapes. — "The victorious general, in the hour of triumph, has not unfrequently reason to remember how nearly, through oversight or miscalculation, he had lost the day. A little more pressure on this wing or that, a trifling prolongation of the struggle, a few moments' further delay in the arrival of reinforcements, and his proud banner had been dragged in the dust. The pilot, steering his barque safely into port, sometimes knows how, through lack of seamanship, he nearly made shipwreck. And the successful merchant remembers crises in his history when he found himself on the brink of ruin — when the last straw only was wanting to precipitate the catastrophe." And like narrow escapes occur in the spiritual life. — Pul. Com.

5—9. (5) not in trouble, lit. "in the trouble of man they are not, and with mankind they are not plagued."[e] plagued, lit. "smitten," a term specially used of God's chastisements. (6) pride . . chain, "hath encircled their neck."[f] The neck being regarded as the seat of pride: i. e. pride and brutality riot in their lives unchecked. garment, long, luxurious robes.[g] (7) with fatness,[h] according to A. V., the first line describes "the insolent look of these sleek-faced villains." They gloat over their luxuries. But Heb. parallelism is best suited by the LXX., "Their iniquity cometh forth from a Yes it is so; after all, God is good, notwithstanding all my doubts." — Perowne.

b Job xxii. 6; xxi. 7; Ps. xxxvii. 1; Pr. xxiii. 17.

c "The great trial was to see the boastfulness of the wicked apparently justified by their security and success." — Spk. Com.

d "They have (suffer) no pangs, vigorous and well nourished is their belly." — Delitzsch.

"For they are in no peril of death, but are lusty and strong." — Luther.

e "These men seem exempt not only fr. the frailties and infirmities of men, but even fr. the common lot of men." — Perowne.

f "The original is far more striking but quite untranslatable. Pride, so to speak, necks them, covers their neck, gives it stiffness, clings to it as a chain of massive gold." — Spk. Com.

Pr. i. 9; iii. 22.

g Ps. cix. 18.

h Job xv. 27; Ps. xvii. 10.

llever — that mind being rendered sensitive by the Holy Spirit — it impresses there the Divine image. In this manner the image of Christ is formed in the soul, the existence of which the Scripture represents as inspiring the believer with the hope of glory." — Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation.

the heart." they . . wish, "the imaginations of their hearts leap over all bounds." "The thoughts of their heart break forth into act.—Wellhausen. (8) corrupt, lit. they deride, or speak maliciously and blasphemously. loftily, lit. "on high," "haughtily," as if they were gods uttering an oracle. (9) against the heavens,[a] in boasting and blasphemy, claiming Divine authority. through the earth, all wh. they presume to order at their will.

Pride (vs. 6).— A young minister, addressing a rather fashionable audience, attacked their pride and extravagance, as seen in their dresses, ribands, ruffles, chains, and jewels. In the afternoon, an old minister preached powerfully on the corruption of human nature, the enmity of the soul towards God, and the necessity for a new heart. In the evening, as they sat together in private, the young minister said, "Father D., why do you not preach against the vanity and pride of the people for dressing so extravagantly?" "Ah, son Timothy," replied the venerable man, "while you are trimming off the top and branches of the tree, I am endeavoring to cut it up by the roots, and then the whole top must die!"—R. T. S.

10—12. (10) his people,[b] "rather, therefore he turns his people hitherward; i. e. by his great pretensions and his audacity, he (the wicked man) turns his followers to his own courses, and induces them to act as he acts." —Pul. Com. waters, etc., or fullness of water is drained by them, i. e. broad and deep are the sinful pleasures they drink.[c] Polychr., "Yet are they sated with bread, and water stands ready for them in abundance." (11) they say, these tempted ones, who are led away by the prosperity of the wicked. And . . High? Polychr. "How could knowledge of this ever reach the Most High?" (12) Behold . . world, lit. "Such are the wicked!" or "this is it with," etc., this is the fact that appears; it seems to pay better to be wicked.

Contentment.— "You sometimes think your case hard," says a writer in the New York Christian Advocate, "but if you want to make yourself contented with your lot and station; if you wish your soul to overflow with gratitude to God for your unspeakable privileges and blessings; if you would shout aloud unto God for redeeming love, for Christianity, for the enjoyment of its blessings, even in the lowest, most degraded station on earth, then read the history of Lord Byron, then look into the miseries of those in high life, who know nothing of this sovereign balm. You will then no longer say with David, that you had 'washed your hands in innocency in vain.' 'When you go into the sanctuary, you will see their end.' Yes, you will see that it is all 'vanity and vexation of spirit.' You will not then be envious at the wicked.'"—Whitecross.

13—17. (13) in vain, his diligent efforts after a holy life seemed unrecognized. washed, etc., Ps. xxvi. 6. (14) plagued, vs. 5. chastened, "My chastisement starts every morning afresh," as compared with the ease and substance of the wicked. (15) If I say, "this vs. expresses a supposition, and intimates that he had kept his troubles to himself. offend, etc., or have betrayed;[d] "dealt unfaithfully with." generation, etc. In the O. T. Israel is called Jehovah's sons. Whatever the motive of his words, they might have shaken some lowly believers. Therefore he resolved on silence. Like all wise and devout men, he swallowed his own smoke, and let the process of doubting go on to its end of certainty, one way or another, before he spoke.— Exp. Bib. (16) to know this, by meditation to get at the reconcilement of social anomalies with God's moral government. painful, grievous. "The brain grew wearier, and the heart heavier." (17) sanctuary, as place of devout meditation and prayer, where God's presence and illumination are vouchsafed.[e] "The calmness of the sacred courts." Then . . end, lit. "And considered their final end;" "marked their final days."

A right act, but a wrong opinion (vs. 13).— I. Here is a right act. Implying—1. The consciousness of personal defilement; 2. The possession of a cleansing element; 3. The effort of personal application. II. Here is a wrong opinion. Three facts show that it was a mistake to think the act in vain. 1. Moral holiness involves its own reward; 2. It is promoted by temporal adversity; 3. It will meet with its perfect recompense hereafter.— Thomas.

Their end.— Providence is often mysterious and a source of perplexity to us. Walking in Hyde Park one day, I saw a piece of paper on the grass. I picked it up; it was a part of a letter: the beginning was wanting, the end was not there; I could make nothing of it. Such is providence. You cannot see

---

[a] "In the heavens."—Revised Eng. Bib.

"In the Kensington museum there is a picture of Dr. Johnson waiting outside in the anteroom of nobility or royalty to take his turn for an audience. The Lord our God, the King of kings, will give us an audience at any moment of the day, and meeting with us, will bless us there."—Rev. W. M. Statham.

[b] "Therefore fall the people unto them, and thereout suck they no small advantage."—Pr. Bk. Version.

[c] "And they (even God's people) will drink waters of surfeiting for themselves fr. the overflowing cup of our prosperity."—Wordsworth.

Ps. lxxv. 8; Is. li. 17; Eze. xxiii. 34.

Hengstenberg and Hupfeld suppose the reflections of the Psalmist to begin at vs. 12.

vss. 11-13. G. Marriott, 27.

[d] "Been guilty of treason to Thee, and to Thy people, if I had said that it is vain to serve God, because the wicked often prosper, and the righteous often suffer in this world."—Wordsworth.

[e] "A light arose upon him when he withdrew fr. the bustle of the world into the quiet of God's dwelling-place, and there devoutly gave his mind to the matter."—Delitzsch.

"The Heb Psalmist, instead of telling his painful misgivings, harbored them in God's presence till he found the solution. The delicacy exhibited in forbearing unnecessarily to shake the faith of others is a measure of the dis-beginning or end, only a part. When you can see the whole, then the mystery will be unveiled.— Thomas Jones.

18—21. (18) Surely, i. e. after all. slippery places, however good to look at, utterly insecure. thou casteth, with the idea of suddenness; (quite unexpectedly. destruction, utter and irremediable ruin. (19) moment, the suddenness of their judgment esp. striking the Psalmist's attention.[a] they . . terrors, "Gone! Ended by terrors!" (20) As a dream, which seems real till we awake. thou awakest, lit. "arousest thyself," to take notice of the doings of the wicked. image, or outward show, phantom. All their brave pomp is a phantom. (21) Thus, R. V., "for," explaining the whole of the prev. struggle. was grieved, embittered itself.[b]— Cam. Bib. When my heart grew sour "I was pricked in my veins." He recognizes now the folly of his former impatience against God's ways. reins, kidneys, the seat of the emotions.

Slippery places (vs. 18).— I. There are slippery places in life. As— 1. Scenes of animal excitement; 2. Opportunities of selfish gratification; 3. Company of the ungodly; 4. Times when tempted to doubt God's love and mercy. II. Those who walk in slippery places are in danger of falls. 1. Insecurity; 2. Risk of injury; 3. To peace, character, usefulness. III. Slippery places prove fatal to the wicked. 1. Unmask the evil of their character; 2. Reveal the worthlessness of their hopes; 3. Manifest that they are the objects of God's displeasure.— W. Forsyth.

Note on Ps. lxxiii.— Psalm seventy-third is Asaph's miserere, his confession to all the world of a spiritual decline, and the sad obscuration of faith under which for a time he suffered. Along some line of mistaken reasoning and feeling he had worked himself into a dangerous position— had come to fret on account of inequalities in the Divine distribution of worldly favors. Thus he permits himself to drift into a quarrel with Providence, and lacked but little of losing all evidence that he was a child of God. "My feet were almost gone." He had traveled among rocks and mountain defiles. Any such perilous way may well make one think of verse second. God designs that the mysteries of His providence should be a discipline to faith. He would teach us that danger attends the possession of worldly wealth, luxuries, and comforts; that the abuse of these good things is an unspeakably greater evil than the absence of them. At verses 23–26 the psalm culminates. Here the man of God, who has been down among the mists and mire of a marshy region, regains an elevated plateau, and regales himself in its clear, pure, bracing atmosphere. The remainder of this psalm runs on in the calm, full flow of chastened yet exulting song. Matchless forbearance of God!

22—25. (22) foolish, brutish.[c] before thee, in relation to thee, trans. "I was brutish and ignorant, I became a mere beast with Thee![d] Unbelieving thoughts had fermented in his mind, and a pang of passionate discontent had pierced his inmost being. But the higher self blames the lower for such folly. Cheyne. (23) Nevertheless, etc., passing doubts had not severed him fr. God's gracious hold.[e] thou hast holden, while his feet were slipping, he had thus been kept fr. falling. (24) shalt guide, the past and present pledge the future.[f] glory, this expression must have reference to the after life,[g] "the poet has that religious intuition which forms the kernel of the hope of immortality." Kirkpatrick questions this interpetration as follows: It seems therefore that as the Psalmist anticipates that judgment will overtake the wicked in this world, so he looks for such a deliverance and advancement in this world as will visibly demonstrate that he is the object of God's loving favor, and prove that "there is a reward for the righteous." (25) beside thee, to be applied, according to Heb. form, to both clauses of the verse. "Having God, earth has become a heaven."

Need of Divine guidance (vs. 24).— A few years ago a most painful sensation was created in the public mind by the intelligence of a distressing and fatal accident which had happened to a distinguished archdeacon of the Established Church. This gentleman, eminent alike for his character and his writings, was spending a short time on the Continent, and having with some friends ascended a mountain, expressed a strong wish to return alone by a new route. His companions remonstrated, pointed out the danger of attempting to follow an unknown path, and urged that at least their friend would accept the services of a guide. Unhappily, he would not be persuaded, and presently com-interestedness of the doubter."— Farrar.

a "This vs. almost points to some recent instance of Divine judgment." Ewald.

"That which dispels the Psalmist's doubts and restores his faith is the end of the ungodly in this world—their sudden reverses, their terrible overthrow in the very bosom of their prosperity."— Perowne.

b "The word 'was grieved' is very forcible, was in a state of ferment, of diseased excitement and disturbance; 'was pricked,' pierced as with the sharp fang of an adder."— Spk. Com.

"The field wherein bees feed is no whit the barer for their biting; when they have taken their full repast on flowers and grass, the ox may feed, the sheep fat, on their reversions. So ejaculations bind not men to any bodily observance, only busy the spiritual half, which maketh them consistent with the prosecution of any other employment."— Thomas Fuller.

c Pr. xxx. 2, 3.

d "The poet surely has the water-ox, the hippopotamus, in mind, wh. as a plump colossus of flesh, is at once an emblem of colossal stupidity."— Delitzsch.

e 2 Ti. ii. 13.

"Though all else in heaven and earth should fail, the one true everlasting Friend abides."— Ewald.

f "With confidence he commits himself to the Divine guidance, though he does not see clearly the mystery of the Divine purpose in that guidance."— Delitzsch

g "The glory must be the manifestation of that abiding Presence, wh. even here sustains, preserves and guides the faithful."—Spk. Com.

"Of all Thy gifts Thou art Thyself the crown; Give what Thou will, without Thee we are poor, And with Thee rich—take what Thou wilt away."

menced his perilous descent. The rest of the party reluctantly pursued their course, and waited his arrival at the inn. As time passed on, and the archdeacon did not appear, their fears were reawakened, and search was ordered to be made. Soon they were horrified, but not surprised, to hear that the lifeless body of their friend had been found beneath a precipice, over which he had fallen in his attempt to reach the inn. How striking an illustration does this sad incident afford of the fatal obstinacy of those who persist in relying on their own wisdom and strength of purpose in the journey of life! What can await them but destruction if they refuse to accept guidance? Yet a guide is not enough at all times. Only recently, a party of travelers on Mont Blanc, accompanied by skillful guides, were overtaken by an avalanche; and not only two of their number, but one of the guides also, perished in a moment. We need an unerring guide; and where shall it be found but in Him who is infinite Wisdom as well as infinite Love?

26—28. (26) faileth, or may have failed, in this time of struggle. strength, Heb. rock: the usual fig. for strength. for ever, plainly meaning in, and beyond, this present life. The meaning is, "Though my flesh and my heart fail utterly, though my whole corporeal and animal nature fade away and come to nothing, yet something in the nature of a heart—the true 'I,' consciousness, will remain, and will be upheld by God."—Pul. Com. (27) a whoring, the Scrip. fig. for apostasy fr. God.[a] (Hos. ii.) (28) draw . . God,[b] Ja. iv. 8.

The strength of the heart.—Under outward ills a resolute heart may bear up; but when the foundation of courage and cheerfulness itself gives way, when the very fountain of fortitude itself runs dry, what shall be done? Who does not know what sinking of soul means? Is there anything to keep one from utter prostration—from falling irrecoverably into despondency or despair? "God is the strength of my heart," the rock of my heart. I am resting on a firm foundation. I lean upon no arm of flesh. I have not only a strong foundation, but strong consolation. In each of the four thousand hourly strokes of this heart He sustains and quickens. When this frail organ, beating fainter and fainter, ceases at length altogether, when body and soul are rent apart, shall I be confounded? No, indeed. Cecil states that John Newton, about a month before his death, said, "It is a great thing to die, and, when heart and flesh fail, to have God for the strength of our heart, and our portion forever. I know whom I have believed, and He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that great day." "It is come!" said the Rev. J. Sutcliffe; "perhaps a few moments more. Heart and flesh fail! But God—that God is the strength of His people, is a truth that I now see as I never saw it in my life."

a "Israel is the spouse of God, and idolatry is a breaking of the marriage vow."—Perowne.

b "This is my summum bonum—not to question His doings, but to cleave closely to Him. 'Nearest to God is best.'"—Wordsworth.

"To be absent from God is to perish. Distance from Him is separation from life. Drawing near to Him is the only good; and the Psalmist has deliberately chosen it as his good, let worldly prosperity come or go as it list, or, rather, as God shall choose."—Exp. Bib.

author,—unknown; one of the school of Asaph; date, after the Bab. destruct. of Jerus., time of the Maccabees Subject, wailing over the desolation of the sanctuary.

Maschil, Ps. xxxii.

c Ps. lxxvii. 20; lxxviii. 52; lxxix 13.

d "A phrase wh in Eastern language still signifies to walk quickly, to reach out, to be in good earnest, not to hesitate."—Kitto.

e "Or the tokens of their idolatrous worship."—Wordsworth.

PSALM THE SEVENTY-FOURTH.

1—4. (1) for ever, so terrible was the desolation the Psalmist fears it may be permanent. anger . . smoke, fig. for the signs of the fire of wrath, Ps. xviii. 8. sheep, etc., Jer. xxiii. 1.[c] (2) thy congregation, Ex. xv. 16. The people of Israel in their religious aspect. purchased of old, i. e. God Himself initiated the relationship with Israel. rod, the people in their national and political aspects, lit. tribe. redeemed, out of Eg. bondage, R. V., "which Thou hast redeemed to be the tribe of Thine inheritance." Zion, regarded as permanent habitation of God. (3) Lift . . feet, i. e. come quickly,[d] Ge. xxix. 1. perpetual desolations, ruins of the sanctuary in such a state of destruction that hope of restoration has failed. even . . sanctuary, Polychr., "the foe has dishonored all things in the sanctuary." (4) roar, fill the temple with the battle-cry instead of praises to Jehovah. thy congregations, thy place of meeting. ensigns, Chaldæan military banners.[e] for signs, tokens of victory.

The power of prayer.—I. On one side were—1. Desolation: "perpetual," etc.; 2. Desecration; 3. Declamation: "enemies roar;" 4. Demonstration: "they set up." II. On the other side is—1. Supplication; 2. This brings God to the rescue effectually and quickly.—Spurgeon.

Psalm 74.—A cry of the church, on the brink of despair to God, who seems to stand with face averted and arm inactive; and yet it is certain He wrought wonders of deliverance in the past, and that He is still the living God in His works around. The appeals to Him are bold beyond measure, yet deep in their humility; agonizing in the feeling of forsaken neglect, yet full of faith; in the spirit of Jacob, "I will not let Thee go," or of Jeremiah, "Why shouldest Thou be as a man astonied, as a mighty man that cannot save? Yet Thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us; leave us not." — Ker.

5—9. (5) famous, etc.,[a] Jer. xlvi. 22. (6) but now, better, and now. carved work, 1. Ki. vi. 29; vss. 5 and 6 are very difficult; the prob. sense is conveyed by the R. V., "They seem as men that lift up axes upon a thicket of trees. And now all the carved work thereof together they are battering down with hatchet and hammers." (7) cast fire, or "they have hurled Thy sanctuary (as if it were a mere log of wood) into the fire."[b] defiled, omit the words by casting down. Comp. Ps. lxxxix. 39. (8) synagogues, lit. "meeting places;" "every house of God." (9) our signs, the outward and visible symbols of our religion, such as Sabbath and festival, which God "had caused to be forgotten in Zion," vs. 4. how long, such desolation is to continue.

The constructive and the destructive. — I. The constructive is greater and more difficult than the destructive. An idiot might destroy St. Paul's Cathedral, London; but it needed the genius of Sir C. Wren to design it. A child might destroy a young oak sapling; but the mightiest man cannot create a daisy. A fool might unsettle a man's faith and destroy his character; but the wisest and holiest of men cannot of himself establish a man's faith and build up his character. II. In the kingdom of the truth it is wiser and nobler to aim at building up the true than destroying the false. III. How terrible is it to destroy the true and good. IV. God is the great Constructor of the good. — Hom. Com.

Destruction. — It enhances the cruelty of the enemy that the temple which had been built at the cost of so much treasure, adorned with such great elegance and splendor, and finished with untiring industry and consummate skill, was not saved thereby from their barbarous hands, but was utterly overthrown. There is a simile in these verses. The enemies breaking to pieces with great violence and casting down the altars and beams of the temple, are compared to the woodman, who with axe in hand cuts down the strong trees of the wood. Even barbarian invaders are wont to spare the more splendid buildings for art's sake. Demetrius, when he had taken a picture painted by Protogenes in the suburbs of Rhodes, was besought by the Rhodians to be lenient towards art, lest he should destroy the painting. He replied that he would sooner burn the statues of his father than so great a work of art. The ferocity of these enemies, therefore, outdoes the barbarity of others, for they ruthlessly cast down an edifice sculptured and polished with the greatest skill. — Mollerus.

10—12. (10) O God, etc., see vss. 18, 22. The Psalmist feels the dishonor put on God's name more than the desolation afflicting the people.[c] (11) withdrawest, etc., Polychr., "why keepest thou thy hand hidden." pluck it out, lit. out of Thy bosom make an end. "Put forth Thy right hand and destroy by one blow."[d] (12) my King, Ps. xliv. 4.[e] midst of the earth, not in Canaan as the center of the earth, but in sight of all the nations.

Bosom and right hand. — The word which we translate bosom does not always, in Eastern language, mean the breast; but often the lap, or that part of the body where the long robe folds round the loins. Thus, in the folds of the garment, in front of the body, the Orientals keep their little valuables, and there, when they are perfectly at ease, they place their hands. To a king, whose enemies have invaded his territories, and are ravaging his kingdom, it will be said, should he not make any exertions to repel them, "Why does your majesty keep your hands in your maddeyila (bosom)? Take your sword, your heroism thence." When two men go to a magistrate to complain of each other, perhaps one says, "He has beaten me severely, my lord." Then the other replies, "It is true, I did strike him, but these wounds on my body show he did not keep his hands in his bosom." "Thy right hand," which is the hand of honor. Hence, "the right hand of the Most High." The Hindoos have a right-hand caste, and when they take a solemn oath they lift up that hand to heaven. The whole of the right side of a man is believed to be more honorable than the left, and all its members are said to be larger and stronger." — Roberts.

"And yet we are greedy, covetous, avaricious, proud, envious. Man! be rich through God; everything comes to you from God." — Sergieff.

[a] "Each man was seen as if plying aloft hatchets in a copse of wood." — Kay.

"This vs. compares the scene of ruin in the interior of the sanctuary, the destruction of the carved work, etc., to the wide gap made in some stately forest by the blows of the woodman's axe." — Perowne.

[b] "This certainly denotes the burning either of a part of the sanctuary or of consecrated things." — Spk. Com.

Heb. moêd, properly a set time, a stated season, and so a festival.

Constantine the Great was one day looking at some statues of noted persons, who were represented standing. "I shall have mine taken kneeling," said he, "for that is how I have risen to eminence."

[c] Comp. Ex. xxxii. 12, 13; Nu xiv. 13-16; De. ix. 28.

[d] "The expression denotes a state of inactivity, the hand being enveloped in the ample folds of the Eastern robe." — Perowne.

[e] Hab. i. 12.

"It is a fact that God's care is more evident in some instances of it than in others to the dim and often bewildered vision of humanity. Upon such instances men seize and call them providences. It is well that they can, but it would be gloriously better if they could believe that the whole matter is one grand providence." — George Mac Donald.

"Remembrance of past wonders made present misery more bitter, but it also fanned into a flame the spark of confidence that the future would be like the past."

"Wherever there is a man who is conscious that he has done wrong again, and again, and again, and that in his own strength he never can stand, and that he needs help, he has a right to ask for it: 'I am lost in sin; I have no strength to rescue myself; Thou art God; save me!'—that is an argument which knocks louder at the bosom of God than any battle-axe at the gate of any castle on earth." — Beecher.

[a] "Save Thy turtle-dove fr. the talons and beak of the eagle, the emblem of Babylon. Da. vii. 4." — Wordsworth.

[b] Ps. lxxviii. 10; Is. lxiv. 8.

[c] Ge. iv. 10; xviii. 20; Ex. iii. 7-9.

"When a gentleman, who had been accustomed to give away some thousands, was supposed to be at the point of death, his presumptive heir inquired where his fortune was to be found. To whom he answered, 'that it was in the pockets of the indigent.'" — Bib. Ill.

Melancthon, going once upon some greatservice for the church of Christ, and having many doubts and fears about the success of his business, was greatly relieved by a com-

13—17. (13) divide the sea, Ex. xiv. 21. dragons, sea-monsters, regarded as emblems of Egypt. (14) leviathan, crocodile, Job iii. 8 meat, etc., reference is to the dead bodies of the Egyptians cast on the shores of the Red Sea, to be devoured by the wild beasts of the desert. For "people" applied to animals, cp. Prov. xxx. 25, 26. (15) cleave, etc., Ex. xvii. 6; Nu. xx. 11. driedst, etc., "ever flowing," perennial rivers. Jos. iii. 13. (16) day, etc., affirmation of God's rights as Creator as well as Redeemer. light, Polychr., "starry light." (17) borders, etc., divisions of land and sea, also national boundaries. summer and winter, Ge. i. 14.

God. — I. The God of grace is the God of nature: "The day is thine," etc. II. The God of nature is the God of grace: the wisdom, the power, the faithfulness the same. See Psalm xix. — G. Rogers.

Made perfect thro' suffering. — Juliana Horatia Ewing, the favorite writer of children's stories, suffered greatly before her death. She was seldom able in her illness to concentrate her attention on solid works, and for religious exercise chiefly relied on what was stored in her memory. She liked to repeat the alternate verses of the Psalms when the others were read to her. After one night of great suffering, in which she had been repeating George Herbert's poem, "The Pulley," she said that the last verse had helped her to realize what the hidden good might be which underlay her pain: —

> "Let him be rich and weary: that at least
> If goodness lead him not, yet weariness
> May toss him to my breast."

She had each week a calendar written out, with a text chosen by herself at the top, and as each day passed it was struck through by her pencil. One week she had, "In patience possess ye your souls." For the text of another week she had, "Be strong, and of a good courage," as the words had been said to her by a dear friend to cheer her just before undergoing the trial of an operation. Later still, she chose, "The day is Thine, the night also is Thine." — Anec. Illus. of O. T. Texts.

18—23. (18) foolish people, better, "reprobate people," denoting moral perversity. thy name, wh. as Creator and Redeemer is so great. (19) thy turtledove,[a] Song Sol. ii. 14. "The meek and lowly church." multitude, etc., R.V., "unto the wild beast." congregation, etc., Polychr., "the race of Thy pious ones." (20) covenant,[b] made with Abraham, and renewed with the fathers. For . . cruelty, Polychr., "For finished is the darkness of the land, the reign of violence," i. e. righteousness reigns and God should renew covenant relation with His people. (21) return, i. e. turn away from God unanswered and disappointed. (22) reproacheth, vs. 18. daily, R.V., "all the day." (23) increaseth, "ascendeth;" goes up to Heaven crying aloud for vengeance.[c]

God's interest in His people (vs. 22). — I. God has a cause on earth which He owns. 1. It is the cause of truth; 2. Of holiness; 3. Of happiness. II. The cause of God has enemies who oppose it. 1. By reasoning; 2. By ridicule; 3. By organization; 4. By persecution. III. Prayer should be addressed to God to plead His own cause. 1. Why should prayer be offered for this purpose? 2. How may we expect this prayer to be answered?

Cruelties of the heathen. — When Mr. Medhurst resided in Penang, a Chinese came to him for medicine, who said he had three sons and one daughter, adding, "I had another daughter, but I did not bring her up." "Not bring her up! what, then, did you do with her?" "I smothered her; and this year I heard by letter that another daughter was born; I sent word to have that smothered also, but the mother has preserved it alive." Mr. Medhurst, shocked at this speech, and still more at the horrid indifference with which it was uttered, exclaimed, "What! murder your own children! Do you not shudder at such an act?" "Oh, no," replied the man; "it is a very common thing in China; we put the female children out of the way, to save the trouble of bringing them up; some people have smothered five or six daughters!" — R. T. S. Infanticide was fearfully common among the Hawaiian islanders before the introduction of Christianity. We are told of an old woman who was seen on the outskirts of a Sunday-school celebration, beating her breast and wailing. A missionary went to her, and said, "What is the matter that you should weep over such a beautiful sight? You should be happy to see such a sight, for you can remember when things were very different among our people." And the poor soul cried out in anguish, "Why didn't the missionaries come before? These hands are stained with the blood of my twelve children, and not one of my flesh to rejoice here to-day!" And again she wailed, "Oh, why didn't the missionaries come before?"—Anec. Illus. of O. T. Texts.

PSALM THE SEVENTY-FIFTH.

author,—unknown; time of Hezekiah

Proclam. of God's righteous judgment.

Al-taschith, Ps. lvii.

1—3. (1) name is near, name is put for God Himself, the manifestation of God's attributes. God's providence and care are close to us.[a] wondrous works declare, such a personification is without analogy, consequently modern commentators trans. with R. V., "men tell of Thy wondrous works." Polychr., "They who invoke Thy Name rehearse Thy wonders." (2) When, etc., this appears to be the response of God. Lit. when I shall take a set time, i. e. for executing My judgments. (3) dissolved, with terror of God's judgments. bear . . pillars, or I have poised them,[b] i. e. though it seems to men by reason of the inexplicableness of temporal affairs as if Chaos reigned, yet I (emphatic) have est. a moral order wh. shall in due time be executed.

Perfection of nature.—I have seen the back of a splendid painting, and there, on the dusty canvas, were blotches and daubs of color—the experiments of the painter's brush. There is nothing answering to that in the works of God! I have seen the end of a piece of costly velvet; and though man had in it fairly imitated the bloom of the fruit and the velvet of the flowers, there was a common, unwrought, worthless selvage—a coarse, unsightly selvage. There is no selvage in the works of God!—H. Wonnacott.

a Ps. ix. 16.

b Is. xl. 12.

"God's servants are tempted to think that He delays too long; His enemies, that He will never break His silence. But the slow hand traverses the dial in time, and at last the hour strikes and the crash comes punctually at the moment."

4—7. (4) fools, "the arrogant," "those who rage," always in Scrip. with added idea of wicked. horn, i. e. overweening self-importance; for the fig. see 1 Sam. ii. 1; and also Da. viii. 3. (5) stiff neck, the sign of pride "with impudent arrogance." (6) promotion, lifting up; take in general sense of success or prosperity. "Israel looks not to any quarter of the compass for human help, but to God alone. The North is not mentioned because the Assyrians were approaching from that quarter." (7) God, our God; He alone.

Lifting up the horn.—Mr. Munroe, speaking of the females in a Maronite village in Mount Lebanon, observes: "But the most remarkable peculiarities of their dress are the immense silver ear-rings hanging forward upon the neck, and the tantoura, or 'horn,' which supports the veil. This latter ornament varies in form, material, and position, according to the dignity, taste, and circumstances of the wearer. They are of gold, silver-gilt, or silver, and sometimes of wood. The former are either plain or figured in low relief, and occasionally set with jewels; but the length and position of them is that upon which the traveler looks with the greatest interest, as illustrating and explaining a familiar expression of Scripture. The young, the rich, and the vain wear the tantoura of great length, standing straight up from the top of the forehead; whereas the humble, the poor, and the aged place it upon the side of the head, much shorter, and spreading at the end like a trumpet. I do not mean to say that these distinctions are universal, but I was told that they are very general, and thus the 'exalted horn' still remains a mark of power and confidence, as it was in the days of Israel's glory."—Summer Ramble in Syria.

"A man of lofty bearing is said to carry his horn very high. To him who is proudly interfering with the affairs of another it will be said, 'Why show your kombu (horn) here?'"—Roberts.

"God's servants are His instruments in carrying out His judgments; and there is a very real sense in which all of them should seek to fight against dominant evil and to cripple the power of tyrannous godlessness."

8—10. (8) wine is red, lit. it foams[c] with wine, full of mixture, i. e. strong spiced wine. dregs, at bottom of the cup. (9) declare, God's righteousness and rule. Polychr., "glorify and praise with song the God of Jacob." (10) cut off, and so utterly humiliate them by the destruction of their power. "If the poet is the speaker, he speaks in the name of Israel, confident that in God's strength they will be able to complete the humiliation of their proud foes. Cp. Mic. iv. 13. But the speaker may be God, answering the vow of praise with a fresh promise. Cp. xlvi. 10."

Praise.—In some of the old monasteries it was a rule that the chanting of praise should never be interrupted, and that one choir of monks should relieve another in the sacred service. Let us learn a lesson from this. "Let not thy praises be transient—a fit of music, and then the instrument hung by the wall till another gaudy day of some remarkable providence makes thee take it down. God comes not guest-wise to His saints' house, but to dwell with them. David took this up for a life-work: 'As long as I live, I will praise Thee.'"—Wm. Jones.

c "Foameth as it is poured in the cup fr. the wine jar."—Perowne.

"Mr Bruce has observed that the Abyssinian kings have a horn on their diadem; and that the keeping it erect, or in a projecting form, makes them appear as if they had a stiff neck; and refers to this passage for the antiquity of the usage, and the appearance also."—Adam Clarke.

PSALM THE SEVENTY-SIXTH.

author,— unknown; date, as prev. Ps.

Praise for a great deliverance.

Historical connection, prob. 2 Ki. xix. 35; Is. xxxvii.

Neginoth, Ps. iv.

a Ge. xiv. 18; He. vii. 1, 2.

b "Arrows being so regarded fr. their rapid flight, and their glittering in the air; or poss. with an allusion to the burning arrows employed in ancient warfare." —Perowne.

2 Ki. xix. 32.

Man without patience is the lamp without oil; and pride in a rage is a bad counselor.

1—3. (1) known, by many gracious defendings and deliverings. Cheyne, "renowned." great, highly esteemed and praised. Israel, the covenant name of the Hebrews: not used locally. (2) Salem, prob. poetic for Jerusalem.[a] is his tabernacle, covert, bower, pavilion. (3) arrows of the bow, lit. the lightnings of the bow.[b] battle, lit. "the weapons of war."

Psalm seventy-six. — At this time, (1679) in Scotland, those who met for worship elsewhere than in the churches sanctioned by government were given over to martial law, frequently shot in the fields or on the moors, without trial, and their bodies left where they fell. It was this period which, in the words of Renwick, "flowered the mosses with martyrs." One of their gatherings was held, not long before midsummer, on a Sabbath morning, at Drumclog, where the head-waters of the Avon and Ayr approach each other, and close to the peak of London hill, where gray cairns commemorate battlefields of Wallace and Bruce, who struggled for national freedom, as the Covenanters did for spiritual,— these services for which they "jeoparded their lives in the high places of the field," winning for us our quiet Sabbaths. Claverhouse had heard of the intended meeting, and came with a strong body of his troopers; but the Covenanters, though poorly armed, were skilfully led, and resolute of heart. After a severe action the dragoons were entirely defeated, Claverhouse escaping with difficulty. The psalm sung by the Covenanters, as they descended the hill to the encounter, was the noble burst of triumph which celebrated the overthrow of Sennacherib and his host, and the tune was the plaintive but lofty Martyrs. — Ker.

c Na. ii. 11, 12; iii. 1. Is. xli. 15; Eze. xxxviii. 11, 12; Zec. iv. 7.

"By the 'mountains of spoil' Hupfeld understands Jerusalem as the stronghold where the spoils of the invaders are divided."—Spk. Com.

d 2 Ki. xix. 35.

"Charles Kingsley had a special love for the psalm. When sailing up the Rhine, and looking on the ruined strongholds of the old freebooters, he writes, 'How strange that my favorite psalm about the hills of the robbers (hills of prey) should have come in course the very day I went up the Rhine!'"—Ker.

4—7. (4) mountains of prey,[c] R. V., "Glorious art Thou and excellent from the mountains of prey." So translated, the vs. "describes God either as issuing forth from Mount Zion to spoil the foe (lxviii. 35); or better, as a lion returning from the mountains where he has hunted his prey." But Cheyne suggests a different meaning, "Terrible art Thou and glorious (in Thy ruling) from the everlasting mountains." (5) slept their sleep, of death: as in sudden night destruct. of Sennacherib's army.[d] found their hands, Polychr., "could move a hand;" a fine expression of hopeless, helpless bewilderment. (6) chariot and horse, poetically united in the sudden destruction. (7) thou, repeated to give emphasis and solemnity. God's people should learn humbling lessons from His dealings with their enemies.

Preston's last words. — The more you are acquainted with God while you live, the more willing you will be to die, to go to Him; for death, to a child of God, is nothing else but a resting with God, in whose bosom he hath often been, by holy meditation, when he was alive. Dr. Preston, when he was dying, used these words: "Blessed be God, though I change my place I shall not change my company; for I have walked with God while living, and now I go to rest with God." — Cheever.

8—12. (8) judgment, R. V., "sentence," the view of God as judge is peculiar to the Psalms ascribed to Asaph. from heaven, the true seat of the Divine being. (9) meek, the nation Israel, as contrasted with the proud heathen whom He destroys. (10) the wrath, all rebellion against God's will must in the end redound to God's glory. the remainder,[e] etc., R. V., "The residue of wrath shalt thou gird upon thee." God girds on Himself as an ornament the last futile efforts of human wrath, turning them to His own honor; or girds them on as a sword, making the wrath of His enemies to minister to their final discomfiture. — Cam. Bib. (11) to be feared, lit. the terrible one.[f] (12) cut off, fig. for complete judgment.[g] spirit, i. e. pride, fury.

e "The residue of wrath Thou girdest on." — Revised Eng. Bib.

f Is. viii. 13.

g "Like a vine-dresser, who prunes away the rank boughs, or cuts off the ripe clusters of the vine." — Perowne

"Two great streams of spiritual force meet our view, alike in the Wrath of man overruled (vs. 10). — "Who would have thought," says Saurin, "that King Henry VIII., a cruel and superstitious king, the greatest enemy the Reformation ever had — he who, by the fury of his arms, and by the productions of his pen, opposed this great work, refuting those whom he could not persecute, and persecuting those whom he could not refute — who would have thought that this monarch should first serve the work he intended to subvert, clear the way for reformation, and by shaking off the yoke of the Roman pontiff, execute the plan of Providence, while he seemed to do nothing but satiate his voluptuousness and ambition?"

— Whitecross. — Uncertain glory. — How great uncertainty have many great ones, by their miserable experience, found in their outward glory and worldly felicity! What a change hath a little time made in all their honors, riches, and delights. That victorious emperor Henry the Fourth, who had fought two-and-fifty pitched battles, fell to that poverty before he died, that he was forced to petition to be a prebend in the church of Spier, to maintain him in his old age. And Procopius reports of King Gillimer, who was a potent king of the Vandals, who was so low brought as to entreat his friend to send him a sponge, a loaf of bread, and a harp; a sponge to dry his tears, a loaf of bread to maintain his life, and a harp to solace himself in his misery. Philip de Comines reports of a duke of Exeter, who though he had married Edward the Fourth's sister, yet he saw him in the Low Countries begging barefoot. Belisarius, the chief man living in his time, having his eyes put out, was led at last in a string, crying, "Give a halfpenny to Belisarius." — Jeremiah Burroughs.

PSALM THE SEVENTY-SEVENTH.

author,— unknown:

date the age of Habakkuk

Subject, despondency relieved by remembering God's deliverances.

To Jeduthun, or after the manner of Jeduthun.

1—4. (1) he gave ear, or may He hearken unto me. Polychr., "I hoped He would hear me." (2) my sore, R. V., "my hand was stretched out" in prayer.[a] ceased not, to be outstretched. (3) Trans., "I cried unto God, and I wailed, I mused in prayer, my spirit fainted." overwhelmed, "wrapped in gloom." (4) Thou . . waking, "heldest open the lids of mine eyes;" a feature of his suffering was sleeplessness.

Individualism manifest. — Whenever, and by whomsoever, the psalm may have been written, it clearly is individual, not national. It utterly destroys all the beauty, all the tenderness and depth of feeling in the opening portion, if we suppose that the people are introduced speaking in the first person. The allusions to the national history may indeed show that the season was a season of national distress, and that the sweet singer was himself bowed down by the burden of the time, and oppressed by woes which he had no power to alleviate: but it is his own sorrow, not the sorrow of others under which he sighs, and of which he has left the pathetic record. — Perowne.

An aged mariner. — A terrible shipwreck occurred, not many years ago, on the west coast of Scotland. Those who were saved out of a large number that perished owed their lives to one wakeful man. He was no watchman of the coastguard, no pilot on the look-out for homeward-bound ships, but only an old, infirm seaman, who had gone to bed with the rest of the world. He had courted sleep that night, but, for no reason he could fancy, his eyes were kept waking. Weary of turning and tossing on a sleepless bed, he rose and walked the floor. With an old sailor's love of the sea, he drew aside the curtain of his cottage window, to gaze out on the heaving deep, and while the sight of it was waking up the memory of former years, his eye, ere a landsman could have descried it, caught an object coming shoreward through the gloom. Horror seized him. Like a reckless soul, bent on destruction, it was an ill-fated ship rushing on that iron-bound coast, and right into the jaws of death. Many were hurried that night into a watery grave; yet, but for the circumstance that sleep had fled the old man's couch, but for the alarm he gave, but for the boats that were launched to the rescue, many more had been drowned; God held his eye waking; He had His work for that ancient mariner to do. — Guthrie.

5—9. (5) days of old, past times of prosperity. (6) I call, etc., better, "let me call, . . . let me commune." song in the night, joy keeping from sleep, as suffering and grief now do. (7) Will, etc., this was the kind of despondent questioning with which his soul was burdened. (8) clean gone, so that there is no hope of its return. doth . . evermore, Polychr., "and His faithfulness — is it clean gone for all time to come?" (9) forgotten, etc., i. e. deliberately abandoned his graciousness; Is. xl. 27–31.

Remembrance. — A good memory is very helpful and useful. 1. It is a great means of knowledge; for what signifies your reading or hearing, if you remember nothing? 2. It is a means of faith: 1 Cor. xv. 2. 3. It is a means of comfort. If a poor Christian in distress could remember God's promises they would inspire him with new life; but when they are forgotten, his spirits sink. 4. It is a means of thankfulness. 5. It is a means of hope; for "experience worketh hope" (Rom. v. 4), and the memory is the storehouse of

[a] "The stretched out, weak, and powerless hand, conveys the picture of a relaxation of the whole body." — Hengstenberg.

Bible and in human life and history, crossing one another every instant, as waves of light and waves of sound, in closest vital relation, yet each holding its course unhindered — the will of man and the will of God. Yet God's will must needs be sovereign, supreme; even as God's conscience must be supreme arbiter of right and wrong."—Pul. Com.

"At the second knock, the door of grace flew open." —John Collings.

"Wait patiently on God. It is becoming of a dutiful child, when he hath not presently what he writes for to his father to say, 'My father is wiser than I; his own wisdom will tell him what and when to send to me.' O Christian, thy heavenly Father hath gracious reason which holds His hands for the present, or else thou hadst heard from Him ere now."—Gurnall.

"Colton declares that in moments of despondency Shakespeare thought himself no poet, and Raphael doubted his right to be called a painter. We call such self-suspicions morbid, and ascribe them to a hypochondriacal fit; in what other way can we speak of those doubts as to their saintship, which occasionally afflict the most eminently holy of the Lord's people?"

"Meditation is the life of the soul; action is the soul of meditation; honor is the reward of action."—Quarles.

experience. 6. It is a means of repentance; for how can we repent or mourn for what we have forgotten? 7. It is a means of usefulness. When one spark of grace is truly kindled in the heart, it will quickly endeavor to heat others also. — R. Steele.

Divine comforts. — How gladly, when the body is sick, would we use, and receive, and drink the medicine which would remove sickness and restore health, how unpleasant and bitter soever it was! But oh, how much more ought we with patience and thanksgiving to receive this medicine of our Father's hand, which, His Holy Spirit so working the same, removes many mortal diseases from our souls, such as pride, contempt of grace, and unthankfulness, which are the very mortal diseases that, by unbelief, slay the soul, and restores unto us lowliness, fear, invocation of God's name, remembrance of our own weakness and of God's infinite benefits, by Christ received, which are very evident signs that Jesus Christ lives in us. — J. Knox (1554).

10—12. (10) infirmity, etc., it is a chastening from God.[a] This apparent desertion of Israel by God is my suffering, and I must bear it; but for my consolation I will recall the years of the right hand of the Most High, "the years of ages past" (vs. 5), in which the sovereign power of the Ruler of the world was put forth on behalf of His people. — Cam. Bib. (11) remember, or make mention of. Lord, Jah, or Jehovah, the covenant God. (12) talk, Polychr., "devoutly consider Thy deeds," as in vs. 13.

Meditation (vs. 12). — I. Motives to meditation. 1. It is the proper occupation of the mind; 2. Our character in the sight of God depends on the character of our thoughts: 3. Meditation is essential to the success of God's Word. II. Subjects for meditation. 1. God's existence and attributes; 2. His works; 3. His claims; 4. Our future. III. Aids to meditation. 1. Be impressed with its value; 2. Remember the influence of habit; 3. Frequently review your thoughts; 4. Determine to communicate good thoughts to others. Apply: — (1) See one reason why the Gospel is not more successful — My people do not consider; (2) Beware of being in the midst of means of grace, and yet without thought; (3) Teach children to think.

Memory. — The hound, when he hath lost his scent, hunts backward, and so recovers it, and pursues his game with louder cry than ever. Thus, Christian, when thy hope is at a loss, and thou questionest thy salvation in another world, then look backward and see what God hath already done for thee. Some promises have their day of payment here, and others we must stay to receive in heaven. Now the payment which God makes of some promises here, is an earnest given to our faith that the others also shall be faithfully discharged when their date expires; as every judgment inflicted here on the wicked is sent as a pledge of that wrath the full sum whereof God will make up in hell. — William Gurnall.

"I am mine appointed lot and trial, that the right hand of the Most High has turned against me."

"Thus was he going on with his dark and dismal apprehensions, when on a sudden he first checked himself with that word, "Selah;" stop there; go no further; let us hear no more of these unbelieving surmises; and he then chid himself, "This is mine infirmity." — Matthew Henry.

"In meditation, those who begin heavenly thoughts and prosecute them not are like those which kindle a fire under green wood, and leave it so soon as it begins to flame." — Bp. Hall.

13—15. (13) in the sanctuary, or in holiness,[b] in a sphere separate from all sin and imperfection. (14) the God, Heb. "El," the living Almighty God. declared, or displayed Thy strength; with special reference to the Exodus. (15) sons . . Joseph, Joseph mentioned here as the progenitor of Ephraim and Manasseh, who rep. the kingdom of Israel: and the full expression gives the recognized fathers of both the kingdoms, Judah and Israel.

The God of wonders. — All Israel, the two tribes of Joseph as well as those which sprang from the other sons of Jacob, were brought out of Egypt by a display of Divine power, which is here ascribed not to the hand but to the arm of the Lord, because it was the fullness of His might. Ancient believers were in the constant habit of referring to the wonders of the Red Sea, and we also can unite with them, taking care to add the song of the Lamb to that of Moses, the servant of God. The comfort derivable from such a meditation is obvious and abundant, for He who brought up His people from the house of bondage will continue to redeem and deliver till we come into the promised rest. — Spurgeon.

"A sorrow's crown of sorrow is remembering happier things." — Tennyson.

"Was it Joseph or was it Jacob that begat the children of Israel? Certainly Jacob begat; but as Joseph nourished them, they are called by his name also." — Talmud.

"There shall never be one lost good! What was shall live as before."

"But if we neglect prayer it is difficult for us to pray; for the water in the well gets low." — Felix Neff.

16—20. (16) waters, of Red Sea. (17) clouds, etc., reference is to the accompaniment of the passage of the Red Sea, such a storm as filled the Egyptian hosts with fear. sent . . sound, i. e. thundered. arrows, fig. for lightning. (18) in the heaven, R. V., "in the whirlwind." (19) Thy way, in delivering Thy people. is . . are, R. V., "was . . . were," ref. to the historical event. footsteps, etc., by the sea rolling back the marks of Jehovah's passage over the Red Sea were obliterated. (20) like a flock, Eastern flocks being led to their pasturage by the shepherds.

[a] "It is mine appointed lot and trial, that the right hand of the Most High has turned against me."

[b] Ex. xv. 11.

The Red Sea.— As soon as ever the whole Egyptian army was within it, the sea flowed to its own place, and came down with a torrent raised by storms of wind and encompassed the Egyptians. Showers of rain also came down from the sky, and dreadful thunders and lightning, with flashes of fire. Thunderbolts also were darted upon them; nor was there anything which used to be sent by God upon men, as indications of His wrath, which did not happen at this time; for a dark and dismal night oppressed them. And thus did all these men perish, so that there was not one man left to be a messenger of this calamity to the rest of the Egyptians.— Josephus.

"The constitution of the world, and God's natural government over it, is all mystery as much as the Christian dispensation. Yet, under the first, He has given men all things pertaining to life; and under the other, all things pertaining to godliness." — Butler.

PSALM THE SEVENTY-EIGHTH.

author,— unknown; date, late in Jewish history.

Résumé of the national history.

1—4. (1) law, or religious teachings. "A law of life to those who hear." (2) parable, used generally of any wise, sententious utterances. dark sayings, lessons drawn from the history of ancient times, wh. hide some deep truth to be studied and thought out.[a] (3) have heard, sayings of old, see vs. 2.[b] (4) not hide, De. iv. 9; vi. 7; xi. 19. shewing, Cheyne, "rehearsing it." praises of the Lord, Polychr., "the praiseworthy actions," etc.

Of old.— I. Truths are none the worse for being old: "sayings of old." "Old wood," says Lord Bacon, "is best to burn; old books are best to read; and old friends are best to trust." II. Truths are none the worse for being concealed under metaphors: "I will open," etc., "in a parable;" "dark sayings." 1. They lead to more research; 2. They become eventually better known. III. Truths are none the worse for being often repeated. 1. They are more tested; 2. They are better testified.— G. Rogers.

Note on Ps. lxxviii. — The author speaks of it as a parable: not in the sense, certainly, of a fictitious narration, for it contains an orderly arrangement of facts, but rather with this meaning, that the history of the Jewish nation, like Christ's parables, had hidden lessons and similitudes referring to Gospel times, of which many, or perhaps most, then living understood nothing.

a Pr. i. 6.

b Ps. lxxvii. 5, 11.

"History is a sacred kind of writing, because truth is essential to it, and where truth is, there God Himself is, so far as truth is concerned."— Cervantes.

5—8. (5) testimony, "the express precept which enjoined upon Israelite parents the duty of teaching their children the great facts of Israel's history, that the remembrance of them might be handed down from generation to generation."[c] (6) should be born, better to trans. thus: "That another generation might know, that sons which should be born might arise and tell their sons." See Ps. xxii. 31. (7) set . . God, as their fathers had done, or should have done. (8) stubborn, etc., so the people proved during their long journeyings in the wilderness. not stedfast, "was not faithful," but wavering in allegiance.

Teaching children. — The Jewish rabbis speak of a very strict custom and method for the instruction of their children, according to their age and capacity. At five years old they were filii legis, sons of the law, to read it. At thirteen they were filii præcepti, sons of the precept, to understand the law. At fifteen they were Talmudistæ, and went to deeper points of the law, even to Talmudic doubts. — Swinnock.

A father's gift. — "The Lord bless you, sir, in your work," said an old sailor, who had just got on board, to see his son. "My poor old father put a Bible into my chest when I first went to sea. I read but little for some time, and practised still less; but that was the book which led me to know myself as a condemned sinner, and Jesus Christ as a suitable Saviour for such a sinner; and I hope, at last, to reach in safety the port of everlasting rest. I have a boy here, and sons in other ships; and I cannot do better, I think, than follow my poor old father's example, by putting into each of my boys' chests a Bible." — Whitecross.

c Ps. xix. 7; Ex. x. 2; xii. 26-27.

"As the officer of an army commences his drill by calling for 'Attention,' even so every trained soldier of Christ is called upon to give ear to his words." —Spurgeon

"Providence conceals itself in the details of human affairs, but becomes unveiled in the generalities of history."—Lamartine.

"Heav'n doth with us as we with torches do,
Not light them for themselves,
For if our virtues do not go forth of us
'Twere all alike as if we had them not."
—Shakespeare.

9—11. (9) children of Ephraim, why this tribe is singled out does not appear. We cannot fix the event here recalled.[d] The term Ephraim may be intended to stand for Israel, bec. it was in later ages the leading tribe. (10) kept, etc., prob. the defection fr. the worship of God to idolatry began with this tribe. (11) his works, esp. the redemption fr. Egypt, wh. was the great witness to His claims on the nation.

d Unless it be Ju. ii. 10, 16, or xx. 39, 41.

"Robert Hall, hearing that some worldly-minded persons objected to family prayer as taking up too much time, said that what might seem a loss will be more than compensated by the spirit of order and regularity which the stated observance of this duty tends to produce. It serves as an edge and border, to preserve the web of life from unraveling."

Ephraim. — For more than four hundred years Ephraim, with its two dependent tribes of Manasseh and Benjamin, exercised undisputed pre-eminence. Joshua, the first conqueror; Gideon, the greatest of the judges, whose brothers were "as the children of kings," and whose children all but established hereditary monarchy in their own line; Saul, the first king — belong to one or other of these three tribes. The haughty spirit of the tribe could brook no equal or superior, and chafed against the rise even of the kindred tribe of Manasseh in the persons of Gideon and Jephthah, and yet more against the growing dominion of Judah in David and Solomon, till it threw off the yoke altogether, and established an independent kingdom. — Stanley. — Bravery and cowardice. — A brave English drummer boy was taken captive in some battle by the French. He was ordered to beat several military signals, and obeyed. But, being commanded to beat a retreat, he pertinaciously refused. He had never beaten a retreat, and he never would do so. Unlike this heroic lad, the Israelites, with the strong and warlike tribe of Ephraim, turned their back to their foes and fled. A picture of what has often been the case in your spiritual history. We have been bold and courageous in speech, we have been supplied with weapons from the Divine armory, yet we have fled before our foes, have weakly yielded to temptations, and dishonored our uniform and our colors. — W. Jones.

"The gradations of sin; neglecting, rejecting, forgetting God." — C. Davies.

Conscience. —

What stronger breastplate than a heart untainted?
Thrice is he arm'd that hath his quarrel just;
And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted. — Shakespeare.

12—16. (12) field of Zoan, Gk. Tanis, now San.[a] (13) divided, lit. "clave," comp. vs. 15. as an heap, Ex. xiv. 22. (14) cloud, Ex. xiii. 21, xiv. 24. (15) clave, etc., at Rephidim and Kadesh to supply water. depths, reservoirs of water hidden in the earth. Ex. xvii. 6; Nu. xx. 11. (16) rock, better cliff.

Christ our burden-bearer. — Mrs. Pearsall Smith recently stated that she remembered hearing a story of a man who was going through the Western country traveling along the road. He met a man with a heavy burden on his back, and he asked him to get into his wagon to ride along, but when he got in he still kept bowed down with the heavy burden on his shoulders. "Why don't you lay down your burden?" he asked, "Oh, it is a great deal to ask you to carry me," was the reply, "and I should not like to ask you to carry my burden too." That is the way with many Christians. They have given themselves to the Lord, but are carrying their burdens, for they feel as if it would not be quite delicate or proper to ask Him to carry their burdens along with themselves. A missionary in Persia came home from a long, tiring walk, and sat down on the floor — as is the custom of missionaries out there — and she had no support for her back. At length a native women crept up behind her and put her broad shoulder against her to lean on, and whispered, "Lean on me." She leaned a little bit, but felt a delicacy about leaning hard, and presently the woman whispered again, "Do you love me? If you love me, lean hard." The Lord Jesus says, "Commit your care and burden to Me, and rest on Me," and Christians honestly feel a delicacy about leaning too hard, but He is saying all the time, "If you love Me, lean on Me."

[a] The chief residence of the Pharaohs of the 18th and 19th dynasties. S. W. of Port Said, now a village of fishermen.

Vs. 12, "Field here means an open expanse of country. In the territory of Zoan, on an easterly branch of the Nile, was the capital city of the land of Egypt at one time; the princes of Zoan are spoken of, Isa. xix. 12, 13. It is said to have been about two miles from Heliopolis." —Gill and Clarke.

17—20. (17) provoking, Cheyne, "defying." Cam. Bib., "rebelling against . . . . in the land of drought." (18) they tempted God, demanding, in their unbelief, signs and proofs of His power, instead of simply waiting by faith on Him. lust, "hunger," "appetite." (19) furnish, or order, set out. wilderness, which yielded little or no food for man, though there might be grass for the cattle. (20) bread . . flesh, the food that seemed necessary for men. These words are the climax of Israel's unbelief. They seem to question the fact that "they were God's people."

"It is not the quantity of the meat but the cheerfulness of the guests which makes the feast." Lord Clarendon.

The evil of unbelief (vss. 19–22). — I. The evil of unbelief. It often assumes the garb of humanity; but its evil appears — 1. From the construction which God Himself puts upon it; 2. From the indignation which He manifested on account of it. II. The disposition of mind which God approves — faith. Address — 1. The querulous; 2. The doubting; 3. The true believer. — Simeon.

"Prayer, I consider, is like one of those high places to which men climb in order to get a wider view of all that lies below Whenever I want to see how small my trials are, I climb up that Divine mountain and look down at them. How different they Unbelief. — After all their experience they doubted the Divine omnipotence, as if it were to be regarded as nothing, when it refused to gratify their lusts. Unbelief is so deeply rooted in the human heart, that when God performs miracles on earth, unbelief doubts whether He can perform them in heaven, and when He does them in heaven, whether He can do them on earth. — A. F. Tholuck. Ingratitude.— O how sad is this, that after God hath entertained a soul at His table with choice mercies and deliverances, these should be so ill husbanded, that not a bit of them should be left to give faith a meal, to keep the heart from fainting, when God comes not so fast to deliver as desired. He is the most thankful man that treasures up the mercies of God in his memory, and can feed his faith with what God hath done for him, so as to walk in the strength thereof in present straits. — William Gurnall.

21—24. (21) was wroth, De. iii. 26. a fire, symbol of outpouring of Div. judgment. Nu. xi. 1 ff. (22) salvation, Polychr., "in His help," from all their disabilities and anxieties. (23, 24) manna, Ex. xvi. 14.[a]

Evil consequences of unbelief. — I. The sin itself; they doubted the ultimate certainty, completeness, and reality of God's salvation from Egypt. II. The aggravations of it: the object of it was God; they who entertained it were God's people: The aids to faith were overlooked: "though." III. What it led them to; inward sin — vs. 13: outward sin — vs. 19, etc. IV. What it brought upon them; vs. 21. Fiery serpents, etc. — C. Davies.

The finger of Providence. — One of the three letters written by the Duke of Wellington from the field of Waterloo was a brief note which, having enumerated some who had fallen, ended thus: "I have escaped unhurt; the finger of Providence was on me." When the dreadful fight was over, the Duke's feelings, kept so long at the highest tension, gave way; and as he rode among the dying and the wounded, and saw the reeking carnage, and heard the roar of the vanquished and the shouts of the victors, fainter and fainter through the gloom of the night, he wept, and soon after wrote the words which we have quoted from his letter. It is in such trying hours that man feels his frail mortality, instinctively turns to God, and, referring his actions to the will of Him who guides and governs all things, with reverence says, "The finger of Providence was on me." It was in the same hour of triumph that the conqueror uttered these memorable words: "Next to the calamity of losing a battle is that of gaining a victory."

seem when seen from that distance! Some have vanished utterly. And there have been times, happy times, when, dwelling there, I, as it were, saw nothing else. All lay below, miles away, and forgotten." — Kavanagh.

a Jno. vi. 31.

"The ordinary manna gathered for daily use did presently corrupt, but that which was laid up before the Lord did keep without putrefaction. So our life, which we have here in the wilderness of this world, doth presently vanish; but our life which is hid with Christ in God never runs to death."

"Nothing is more provoking to God, than our quarreling with our allotment, and indulging the desires of the flesh." — Matthew Henry.

25—29. (25) angels' food, lit. bread of mighty ones, or the finest, most delicate bread. Some think "food supplied by angel ministrations." (26) east wind, not fr. two directions at different times but a S. E. wind fr. the Red Sea. Nu. xi. 31. (27) feathered fowls, quails. (28) let it fall,[b] indicating that they had no trouble to obtain it, and were easily surfeited with it. (29) well filled, spoken in satire. their own desire, "that they lusted after."

Human sin and Divine judgment. — I. Human sin. 1. The nature of their sin. 2. The aggravation of their sin. (1) He had hitherto supplied them with food. (2) He had supplied them with choice food. (3) He had supplied them with choice food in abundance. (4) He had supplied them with choice food supernaturally. II. Divine judgment. 1. Reveals God's observation of man's life. 2. Reveals God as affected by man's life. 3. Reveals the punishment as growing out of man's sin. (1) In the granting of their own demand. (2) In their gluttony. 4. Reveals the punishment as being brought about by the forces of nature. — Hom. Com.

Our Father's care. — By a merciful provision of Providence, there is one kind of rice, the stalk of which grows at the same rate as the waters rise, so that the ear is always at the surface; and famine is averted even in years when the floods are heaviest in Lower Siam and Cambodia. A pint or two of the seed was carried from Bangkok to Bassein by the Karen preacher who went with Mr. Carpenter to Siam in 1872. It has already increased to a hundred bushels, sufficient to supply a whole district, and will prove a great boon.

b "The word aptly describes the settling of these birds after a long flight, and wearied by their passage across the gulf. Pliny says that quails settle on the sails of ships by night, so as to sink, sometimes, the ships in the neighboring sea." — Perowne.

"O my God, deny me my most urgent prayers sooner than answer them in displeasure. Better hunger and thirst after righteousness than to be well filled with sin's dainties." — Spurgeon.

30—33. (30) estranged from, "cloyed with." while, etc., Nu. xi. 33. (31) fattest, lustiest. chosen men, or young and most vigorous. "God punishes men by answering their prayers." (32) all this, teaching of Divine chastisement. (33) consume, etc., reference is to the fact that the whole generation died out prematurely.[c] in trouble, Polychr., "in a haste that was sudden."

c "Then He made their days vanish in a breath, and their years in sudden haste." — Delitzsch.

"A transcendent faith, a cheerful trust, turns the darkness of night into a pillar of fire, and the clouds by day into a perpetual glory. They who thus march on are refreshed even in the wilderness, and hear streams of gladness trickling among the rocks."—Chapin.

"Experience ought to strengthen faith; but there must be present faith to use experience."—J. N. Darby.

a Nu. xxi. 7; Is xxvi. 16; Ho. v. 15; vii. 14.

b Ps. lxiii. 1.

c "The Masorites have noted here that this vs. ends the first half of the Psalms"—Wordsworth.

d "Fr. flater, fr Lat. flare, to blow. Used of the effect of music on the ear, and formerly employed to denote stroking and caressing."—Woolrych.

1 Cor. xv. 58.

"How blunt are all the arrows of thy quiver in comparison with those of guilt!"—Blair.

"Adversity borrows its sharpest sting from our impatience."—Bishop Horne.

"Good resolutions called at their hearts as men do at inns; they tarried awhile, and then took their leave."

e Ps. ciii. 14, 16.

"The gods have overwhelmed with ruin whole multitudes, merely by indulging them with everything for which they prayed."—Juvenal.

"God sends His children many a storm to dash them on the Rock, that they may find out its firmness, security and elevation."

f Nu. xiv. 22.

g "Pr. Bk. Vers. has, they moved, i. e. they exasperated. They marked him with a Obstinacy of sin reproved (vs. 32).—In illustration of this I will set before you—I. The state of Israel in the wilderness. 1. They had begun their wickedness early; 2. They continued it with scarcely any intermission; 3. They were utterly irreclaimable by any dispensations, whether of mercy or judgment. II. Yet a parallel may be found in the state of the Christian church at this day. 1. Our guilt resembles theirs: 2. The gradations of our guilt are the same; 3. The aggravations of our guilt are greater far. Personal application:—(1) What is your state at this time? (2) What will your state very shortly be?—Simeon.

The white flag.—One evening the wife of the old flagman at a railway station said to her husband, "John, there will be a flag held out to-night—a flag in the hand of Jesus. It will not be a red flag, for there is no danger; and it will not be a green one, for, thank God, there is no doubt; but it will be a pure white flag, for all is perfect safety and peace, and I am very nearly at my journey's end." That night she died.

34—37. (34) slew them, their most vigorous and healthy warriors: as vs. 31.[a] enquired early, or earnestly[b] after God. (35) their rock, De. xxxii. 4, 15. high God, Heb. El Elyon, "God Most High." redeemer, De. vii. 8; xli. 14; xliv. 6; lxiii. 9.[c] (36) flatter,[d] offered the homage of insincerity. They returned to God under pressure of fear. (37) stedfast, vs. 8.

Man under Divine chastisement.—I. Sorely smitten. II. Remembering God. 1. As their Rock. (1) Security. (2) Stability. (3) Shelter. 2. As their Redeemer. III. Seeking God. IV. Offering to God unreal repentance. Two main features of true repentance were wanting to them. 1. Change of heart. 2. Reformation of life.—Hom. Com.

Hypocrisy.—Like whipped curs, they licked their Master's feet. They obeyed only so long as they felt the whip about their loins. Hard are the hearts which only death can move. While thousands died around them, the people of Israel became suddenly religious, and repaired to the tabernacle door, like sheep who run in a mass while the black dog drives them, but scatter and wander when the shepherd whistles him off. They could not be too zealous, they were in hot haste to prove their loyalty to their Divine King. "The devil was sick and the devil a monk would be." Who would not be pious when the plague is abroad? Doors, which were never so sanctified before, put on the white cross then. Even reprobates send for the minister when they lie a-dying. Thus sinners pay involuntary homage to the power of right and the supremacy of God, but their hypocritical homage is of small value in the sight of the Great Judge.—Spurgeon.—Deceit.—The heart is the metal of the bell, the tongue is but the clapper; when the metal of the bell is right and good (as silver) such will the sound be; if the metal of the bell be cracked, or lead, the sound will soon discover it to a judicious ear. God can see the diseases and spots of the heart upon the tongue. As Jacob said to his mother, "If I dissemble, my father will find me out, and I shall meet with a curse instead of a blessing."—George Swinnock.

38, 39. (38) full of compassion, Ex. xxxiv. 6; Nu. xiv. 18, 20. turned . . away, Polychr., "put a check on His anger;" Is. xlviii. 9. (39) but flesh, denotes the frailty of human life, Ge. vi. 3.[e] a wind, symbol for transitoriness, Job vii. 7. passeth away, or goeth, Ho. vi. 4; xiii. 3.

Wrath of God.—When His wrath is kindled but a little men are burned up as chaff; but were He to let loose His indignation, the solid earth itself would melt, and hell would engulf every rebel. Who knoweth the power of Thine anger, O Lord? We see the fulness of God's compassion, but we never see all His wrath.—Spurgeon.—If He had stirred up all His anger, He had taken away all, and our lives to boot. He rakes up but a few sparks, takes but one firebrand to fling upon men, when He might discharge the whole furnace upon them; He sends but a few drops out of the cloud, which He might make to break in the gross, and fall down upon our heads to overwhelm us; He abates much of what He might do.—Stephen Charnock.

40, 44. (40) provoke, defy, rebel against, Nu. xiv. 11. "There were ten temptations."[f] grieve, "pain," Eph. iv. 30. (41) they turned back, Polychr., "time after time they." limited,[g] Heb. tavah, to note with a sign or mark, "incensed." (42) not his hand, poetical for the signs of His working. delivered them, fr. the afflictions brought on their enemy. Goshen was free from the great plagues. (43) field of Zoan, vs. 12. (44) rivers, Cheyne, "Nile canals." blood, into a resemblance of blood, Ex. vii. 20. floods, streams of running water.

Wait.—Let us carefully and steadily fasten the mind upon this astounding fact. God made us, yet we disobey Him; God made us, yet we grieve Him: God made us, yet we are not godly. How is that? There is no answer to the question in mere argument. For my part I simply wait. I begin to feel that, without the power of sinning, I could not be a man. As for the rest, I hide myself in Christ. Strange, too, as it may appear, I enjoy the weird charm of life's great mystery as a traveler might enjoy a road full of sudden turnings and possible surprises, preferring such a road to the weary, straight line, miles long, and white with hot dust. I have room enough to pray in. I have room enough to suffer in. By and by I shall have large space, and day without night to work in. We have yet to die; that we have never done. We have to cross the river—the cold, black, sullen river. Wait for that, and let us talk on the other side. Keep many a question standing over for heaven's eternal sunshine. If we would see God's conception of man, we must look upon the face of His Son—Him of whom He said, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." That is man; that is the ideal humanity. It is useless to look in any other direction for God's purpose and thought.—J. Parker.

45–49. (45) He sent, etc.,[a] R. V., "swarms of flies;" prob. not a ref. to numbers, but to some venomous kind of fly peculiar to Egypt. See Ex. viii. 17, 21, 22, 24. (46) caterpillar,[b] poss. the locust in its larva state is referred to. labour, lit. "the fruit of their toil." (47) vines, in Ex. ix. these are not mentioned, and some have asserted that the vine was not cultivated in Egypt.[c] sycamore, 1. Ki. x. 27. frost, prob. with Cheyne, with "stones of ice." (48) hot thunderbolts, comp. Ex. ix. 23. (49) evil angels, "a mission of angels of woe."—Kay. Evil is their mission, not their character.

Small things may be a great scourge (vs. 45).—The frog—I. This very harmless creature by its great multiplication became a great scourge; so things, words, deeds, in their due measure and season innocuous, become, when unseasonable and often repeated, a source of mischief (a laugh is a good thing, but much laughter, or at the wrong time, is madness; a shower of rain is refreshing, but long continued it may make a flood; a small fire may warm a house, but London was once destroyed by fire). II. Verse forty-five teaches us that instruments by which our good has been effected are not to be forgotten; the Israelites were not suffered to forget the frogs of Egypt. III. Even these creatures thus multiplied did Israel no harm; "nothing shall harm," etc.—Topics for Teachers.—Attacked by locusts.—A detachment of Russian troops, bound for General Lazareff's expedition against the Turcomans, is reported by the Kavkaz to have met with a curious misadventure near the Georgian town of Elizavetopol. At a few versts from the town the soldiers encountered the wing of an army of locusts reputed to be twenty miles in length and broad in proportion. The officer in charge did not like to turn back, repelled by mere insects, and, pushing on, soon became surrounded by the locusts. These appear to have mistaken the soldiers for trees, and swarmed by thousands around them, "crawling over their bodies, lodging themselves inside their helmets, penetrating their clothes and their knapsacks, filling the barrels of their rifles, and striving to force themselves into the unfortunate men's ears and noses." The commander gave the order for the troops to push on double quick for Elizavetopol, but the road was so blocked with locusts that the soldiers grew frightened, and, after wavering a few minutes, a regular stampede took place. Led by a non-commissioned officer of keen vision, who had observed a few huts a short distance from the road, the troops dashed across the fields, "slipping about over the crushed and greasy bodies of the locusts as though they had been on ice." The huts were soon reached, and the officers rushed inside, but the refuge proved to be of little value, as the premises were already in the possession of the enemy. The soldiers were detained prisoners by the insects for forty-eight hours, and on their march to Elizavetopol, in the rear of the locust army, they found every blade of grass and green leaf destroyed, and the peasants reduced to beggary.

50–54. (50) made a way, lit. leveled a path: made a straight path so as to give it free course. their life, "though no 'pestilence' is expressly mark, i. e. they branded or stigmatized him."—Targum, and so Delitzsch.

"They irritated, lit. they pricked with a sharp instrument, like a stylus, used for making marks."—Wordsworth.

"His confidence in heaven sunk by degrees."—Claudius.

"Eaten bread is soon forgotten. Nothing so soon grows stale as a favor."—John Trapp.

a "He sent gadflies against them, wh. devoured them."—Delitzsch.

b Comp. Joel i. 4.

c "Vines were extensively cultivated in Egypt, and there were several different kinds of wine, one of which, the Mareotic, was famous among the Romans."—R. S. Poole.

"The mural paintings at Thebes, at Beni-hassan, and in the Pyramids, contain repres. of vineyards. Boys are seen frightening away the birds fr. the ripe clusters, men gather them and deposit them in baskets, and carry them to the wine press, etc."—Perowne.

"God is now spoiling us of what would otherwise have spoiled us. When God makes the world too hot for His people to hold, they will let it go."—Powell.

"There is a mercy in affliction's smart; it heals those wounds of sin which mock all human art."—H. Caunter.

"He is a conqueror worthy of no mean fame who triumphs over adversity."

mentioned in Ex. xii. as having caused the death of the firstborn, yet pestilence may assuredly have been the means employed." (51) chief . . strength, "firstlings of manly strength." — Delitzsch. Ham, land of Ham, so called because peopled by the Mitsrim, the sons of Ham.[a] (52) guided them, as with a shepherd's care. (53) sea overwhelmed, Ex. xiv. 29. (54) this mountain,[b] either Zion is referred to, or the term is used generally for the mountain-country of Palestine.

They feared not. — First, they had no cause for fear, in their departure from Egypt. Though they saw the Egyptians slain, yet against them not even a dog moved its tongue. 2. They were all in sound health. 3. They were enriched with the spoils of the Egyptians. 4. They went forth a great multitude. 5. They supplied themselves with arms. Secondly, they feared not to enter the Red Sea, for the fear started by the approach of Pharaoh was swiftly suppressed. Thirdly, they feared not to wander in the desert for forty years, God going before His pillar. Fourthly, they feared not, though enemies attacked them. — Thomas Le Blanc.

Like sheep. — It is not said that they went forth like sheep; but that He made them go forth like sheep. It is not a description of the character of the people, but a commendation of the providence and goodness of God, by which, after the manner of a good shepherd, He led forth from Egypt His own people with all security, like sheep snatched from the midst of wolves. — Musculus. — God in Israel. — What a grand narrative have we been considering. Well might the mightiest master of sacred song select "Israel in Egypt" as a choice theme for his genius; and well may every believing mind linger over every item of the amazing transaction. The marvel is that the favored nation should live as if unmindful of it all, and yet such is human nature. Alas, poor man! Rather, alas, base heart! — Spurgeon.

55—58. (55) by line, Polychr., "and divided their land as a heritage," "as an inheritance measured out and partitioned." — Jennings and Lowe. (56) tempted, etc., vss. 17, 18, 41.[c] provoked . . God, rebelled against God, the Most High. (57) unfaithfully, R.V., "treacherously." deceitful bow, on wh. an archer can place no confidence; wh. will not respond to his aim. (58) high places, where Israel little by little adopted the culture of the Canaanitish idolatries. jealousy, see Nu. xxv. 11.[d]

The patience of Divine mercy. — When Alexander encamped before a city, he used to set up a light to give notice to those within that if they came forth to him while that light lasted, they should have quarter: if otherwise, no mercy was to be expected. But such is the mercy and patience of God to sinners, that He sets up light after light, and waits year after year. When they have done their worst against Him, then He comes with His heart full of love, and makes a proclamation of grace, that if now at last they will accept of mercy, they shall have it. — C. Buck. — The world's treatment of the Holy Spirit. — It is sad, when the physician, having exhausted all the resources of his skill, gives up his patient and retires. It is sad when the parent, having tried severity and kindness, correction and encouragement, in vain, at last, heartbroken and hopeless, desists from his endeavors to reform his wayward child. But it is sadder still when Almighty God foiled, as it were, by human obduracy, in all the manifestations of His grace and mercy, at last gives up His efforts for the salvation of men, and retires exclaiming, "How often would I have gathered you under My wing, and ye would not." — J. Milne.

59—61. (59) wroth, etc., passages attributing human feelings to God require to be carefully explained. In God, wrath is righteous altogether, without the passion that mars man's anger. abhorred Israel, not the people, but their sinful and defiling ways. (60) forsook, 1 Sa. iv. 11.[e] the tent, etc., Cheyne, "His pavilion where He had dwelt among men." (61) strength, the ark of the covenant, as Ps. cxxvii. 8. glory, 1 Sa. iv. 21.

Majesty of the Divine patience. — Did you ever, in a summer's day, when you had drawn from the bottom of the well the cooling draught to slake your thirst, stand and dream, and gaze at a drop, orbed and hanging from the bucket's edge, reflecting the light of the sun? What the rounded form and size of that drop is in comparison with the whole earth itself, that the round earth itself is in comparison with God's majesty of being, or degree of magnitude! And that such an One living in such a wise — so far above the earth; so far above its inhabitants; so far above the noblest spirit that stands in the a Ge. x. 6.

b Ex. xv. 17; Is. xi. 9.

"This famine has a sharp and meagre face; 'tis death in an undress of skin and bone, where age and youth, their landmark taken away, look all one common sorrow."—Dryden.

"You have chosen 'the kingdom of God, and His righteousness, other things therefore shall be added unto you;' and if any which you desire should not be added, comfort yourselves with this thought, that you have the good part which can never be taken away." — Doddridge.

c "The special act of provocation here is the worship of idols in the high places."—Perowne.

d De. xxxii. 16, 21.

"The fig. of a 'deceitful bow,' well describes the people as failing to fulfil the purpose of their choice by God. Israel foiled all Divine attempts, and failed to carry God's message to the world, or to fulfil His will in themselves."—Maclaren.

"Prayer is to religion what thinking is to philosophy. To pray is to make religion." — Novalis.

e "The mode of expression is very emphatic: that God was so offended with the sins of His people that He was forced to forsake the one place in the whole world which He had chosen."— Calvin.

"Let God abandon a man and all moral and spiritual power are gone. Let Him withdraw from a church and the unlost purity of heaven — that such an One should deal with His erring creature with a gentleness and patience such as characterize the administration of God towards man, is sublime and wonderful! — H. W. Beecher.

62—64. (62) unto the sword, as narrated 1 Sa. iv. 10. (63) fire, evidently the fire of war is meant. not given, etc., lit. were not praised in the nuptial song.[a] (64) priests, Hophni and Phinehas. widows, "the solemn funeral dirge could not take place since the bodies remained on the battle-field;" see case specially referred to, 2 Sa. xi. 26, 27.

Not given in marriage (vs. 63). — This is described as one of the effects of God's anger upon Israel. In Hindoo families, sometimes, the marriage of daughters is delayed; this is, however, always considered as a great calamity and disgrace. If a person sees girls more than twelve years of age unmarried in a family, he says, "How is it that that Brahmin can sit at home, and eat his food with comfort, when his daughters, at such an age, remain unmarried?" — Burder. — Absence of mourning (vs. 64). — When the cholera swept off such multitudes, the cries from every house had a fearful effect on the passers by; but after some time, though the scourge remained, the people ceased to lament, asking, "Why should we mourn? the Amma, i. e. the goddess, "is at her play." Thus, instead of the shrieks and howls, so common on such occasions, scarcely a sigh or whisper was heard from the survivors." — Roberts. — Sorrow, the way to receive it. — Our instinct, our feelings, our hopes, all claim joy, not sorrow, as our portion. Christ sets His seal to these aspirations. Sorrow is but for a time, joy is forever. He will set the impress of immortal power upon all the innocent and far-reaching wishes of our hearts. This the close of the incident of the raising of Lazarus teaches us, for the broken home is made one again, the gap they mourned over is filled, the joy of the sisters is complete, for Lazarus is there, and Christ is there. And what is all this but a sweet prophecy of the joys that remain for the people of God? Sorrow enters our doors now, but let us remember she is only a guest come to tarry with us for the nighttime of life. Let us treat her with the courtesy due to a guest, though her presence be irksome and her manners rough. Her elder sister Joy, will greet us when the morning breaks over the shore of God's fair land. She will take us by the hand and set us in our Father's home, where the many mansions are, and we shall be glad indeed; for no sorrow shall be there, no sighing, no tears; and our loved ones will be there, and He who loved us and gave Himself for us, who was dead and is now alive, will be there; and from that sunny home we shall go out no more. — W. B. Carpenter.

65—69. (65) awaked, a strong poetic figure.[b] by reason of wine, "whose consciousness of power is heightened by wine." — Cheyne. (66) hinder parts, better trans. He smote His adversaries backward; defeating them utterly. Ref. to victories of Samuel, Saul and David. (67) refused, rejected, "despised the house of Joseph."—Polychr. Joseph, the tribe of Ephraim from this time ceased to provide a center for the national religion. (68) Judah, "the sanctuary was really on the borders of Judah and Benjamin." (69) like, etc., i. e. "exalted as the heights of heaven, stable as the earth with with its undeviating natural laws."

Shiloh and Zion. — The moving of the ark is not the removing of it: Shiloh has lost it, but Israel has not. God will have a church in the world, and a kingdom among men, though this or that place may have its candlestick removed; nay, the rejection of Shiloh is the election of Sion. — Matthew Henry.

70—72. (70) chose David, 1 Sa. xvi. 11, 12. (71) ewes, properly the milch ewes, those having their young beside them. feed Jacob,[c] "to be the shepherd of Jacob," 2 Sa. vii. 7, 8. (72) according . . heart, Polychr., "with an upright heart" skilfulness, discernment, prudence.

David. — Under David, the Jewish kingdom first rose to an honorable position among the nations, and exercised an influence over its neighbors. In closing the psalm which has described the varying conditions of the chosen nation, we are glad to end so peacefully; with all noise of tumult or of sinful rites hushed into silence. After a long voyage over a stormy sea, the ark of the Jewish state rested on its Ararat, beneath a wise and gentle reign, to be wafted no more hither and thither by floods and gales. The Psalmist had all along intended to make this his last stanza, and we too may be content to spiritual life and glory passeth away."— Wm. Jones.

a "The utter desolation of the land strikingly pictured by its silence. Neither the joyous strains of the marriage song nor the sad wail of the funeral chant fell on the ear. It was a land of silence, a land of the dead." —Perowne.

"How poor are they who have not patience! What wound did ever heal but by degrees?" — Shakespeare.

"Famine so fierce that what's denied men's use — ev'n deadly plants, and herbs of poisonous juice, wild hunger eat, and to prolong our breath, we greedily devour our certain death; the soldier in the assault of famine falls, and ghosts, not men, are watching on the walls." — Dryden.

"Affliction is the good man's shining scene: prosperity conceals his brightest ray; as night to stars, woe lustre gives to man." — Young.

b "The Psalmist, in an anthropomorphic figure, depicts the Almighty awaking. 'As one (hitherto) sleeping, as a warrior exulting by reason of wine,' i. e. as one who rouses himself from a lethargic slumber, or as one who has renewed his energies, exhausted in battle, by the exhilarating influence of wine." — Jennings.

c "There is a play on the verb rââh, fed, inasmuch as it is used primarily of giving food to flocks, but also by a kind of stereotyped metaphor signifies the tending of a people by a king, judge, or prophet. He who had hitherto tended a few sheep was called away to tend a sacred nation."—Jennings and Lowe.

"The art of feeding cattle, and the art of ruling men are sisters, saith Basil."—John Trapp.

author, — unknown; date, that of the Maccabees

Alamentation over the destruction of Jerusalem.

a "The defilement and desecration of the temple was a special feature of the persecution under the Syrian king, Antiochus Epiphanes."

b Mic. iii. 12; Jer. xxvi. 18.

c "Sophocles' play of Antigone turns upon the natural desire to show respect by covering and burying the dead."

d La. v. 1; Da. ix. 16.

"It was not easy to hold fast by the reality of God's special relation to a nation thus apparently deserted, but the Psalmist's faith stood even such a strain, and is not dashed by a trace of doubt. Such times are the test and triumph of trust. If genuine, it will show brightest against the blackest background."—Exp. Bib.

e "A favorite image in all this group of Psalms."—Perowne.

"The 79th Psalm was one of those which came closely home to the hearts of our countrymen and countrywomen in the days of the Indian Mutiny. Think of it as read amid the horrors of Cawnpore and Lucknow."—Ker.

Is. lxiv. 10, 11.

"Patience is the ballast of the soul, that will keep it from rolling and tumbling in the finish all our songs of love with the reign of the Lord's anointed. Only we eagerly enquire, when will it come? When shall we end these desert roamings, these rebellions, and chastisings, and enter into the rest of a settled kingdom, with the Lord Jesus reigning as "the Prince of the house of David?" Thus have we ended this lengthy parable, may we in our life-parable have less of sin and as much of grace as are displayed in Israel's history, and may we close it under the safe guidance of "that great Shepherd of the Sheep." AMEN. —Spurgeon.

PSALM THE SEVENTY-NINTH.

1—4. (1) heathen, whose presence in Jehovah's temple was regarded as a defilement.[a] thine inheritance, i. e. the holy land. on heaps, lit. they have made Jerusalem heaps of ruins.[b] (2) dead, etc., the lack of proper tending of the dead was in ancient times regarded as a terrible distress and indignity.[c] (3) shed, or poured out. (4) reproach,[d] see Ps. xliv. 13.

The Jews wailing-place. — Entering the inhabited part of the old city, and winding through some crooked, filthy lanes, I suddenly found myself on turning a sharp corner, in a spot of singular interest; the "Jews' place of wailing." It is a small paved quadrangle; on one side are the backs of low modern houses, without door or window; on the other is the lofty wall of the Haram, of recent date above, but having below five courses of bevelled stones in a perfect state of preservation. Here the Jews are permitted to approach the sacred enclosure, and wail over the fallen temple, whose very dust is dear to them, and in whose stones they still take pleasure (Ps. cii. 14). It was Friday, and a crowd of miserable devotees had assembled — men and women of all ages and all nations dressed in the quaint costumes of every country of Europe and Asia. Old men were there, — pale, haggard, care-worn men, tottering on pilgrim staves; and little girls with white faces, and lustrous black eyes, gazing wistfully now at their parents, now at the old wall. Some were on their knees, chanting mournfully from a book of Hebrew prayers, swaying their bodies to and fro; some were prostrate on the ground, pressing forehead and lips to the earth; some were close to the wall, burying their faces in the rents and crannies of the old stones; some were kissing them, some had their arms spread out as if they would clasp them to their bosoms, some were bathing them with tears, and all the while sobbing as if their hearts would burst. It was a sad and touching spectacle. Eighteen centuries of exile and woe have not dulled their hearts' affections, or deadened their feelings of devotion. Here we see them assembled from the ends of the earth, poor, despised, down-trodden outcasts, — amid the desolations of their fatherland, beside the dishonored ruins of their ancient sanctuary,— chanting, now in accents of deep pathos, and now of wild woe, the prophetic words of their own Psalmist, — "O God, the heathens are come into thine inheritance; thy holy temple have they defiled . . . We are become a reproach to our neighbors, a scorn and derision to them that are round about us. How long, Lord? wilt thou be angry forever?" — J. L. Porter.

5—7. (5) How long, Ps. xiii. 1. jealousy, God cannot endure a divided allegiance, see Ex. xx. 5. like fire, De. xxxii. 22. (6) Pour, etc., comp. Je. x. 25. have not known, Polychr., "who do not acknowledge Thee!" (7) dwelling place, or pasture,[e] referring to the pastoral district. Some, however, prefer to think that by this term the sanctuary is meant.

The anger of God.— I. The cause of the anger: jealousy. II. The moderation of it. If it continued forever, the people would perish, the promises be unfulfilled, the covenant fail, and the Lord's honor be impeached. III. The staying of it. By prayer; by pleading His name, His glory, and the blood of Jesus.— Spurgeon.

God worketh slowly (vs. 5).—

God worketh slowly; and a thousand years
He takes to lift His hand off. Layer on layer
He made earth, fashioned it and hardened it Into the great, bright, useful thing it is;
Its seas, life-crowded, and soul-hallowed lands,
He girded with the girdle of the sun,
That set its bosom glowing like Love's own

Breathless embrace, close clinging as for life :
Veined it with gold, and dusted it with gems, Lined it with fire, and round its heart-fire bowed Rock-ribs unbreakable ; until at last Earth took her shining station as a star
In Heaven's dark hall, high up the crowd of worlds.
All this and thus did God ; and yet it ends.
The ball He rolled and rounded melts away
E'en now to its constituent atomies.— Bailey.

8—13. (8) former iniquities, R. V., "the iniquities of our forefathers."[a] prevent us,[b] lit. "come to meet us ;" see on Job iii. 12. (9) for . . name, Ez. xxxvi. 22. purge away, lit. cover over. (10) Where . . God? Ps. xlii. 3. If Israel, sinful though it is, is destroyed, there will be a blot on God's name, and the "heathen" will take it as proof, not that Israel's God was just, but that He was too feeble or too far off to hear prayers or to send succors.— Exp. Bib. revenging, or avenging, trans.: "Let vengeance for Thy servants' blood that is shed be made known among the heathen in our sight," i. e. do not delay avenging until some future generation. (11) appointed to die, Heb. sons of death. Reference is prob. to those who were carried away captive by Antiochus. (12) our neighbors, those dwelling round, who scorned God's people while under suffering. (13) pasture, see on vs. 7.

The prisoner. — I. His condition. 1. Under forced bondage to sin. 2. Under the bondage of conviction. 3. In the dungeon of despair. II. His application for relief. III. The source from which he looked for help.— P. B. Power.

The sighing of the prisoner (vs. 11).— To illustrate the miserable condition of an Oriental prisoner, Chardin relates a story of a very great Armenian merchant, who for some reason was thrown into prison. So long as he bribed the jailer with large donations, he was treated with the greatest kindness and attention ; but upon the party who sued the Armenian presenting a considerable sum, first to the judge and afterward to the jailor, the prisoner first experienced a change of treatment. His privileges were retrenched ; he was then closely confined ; then treated with such inhumanity as not to be permitted to drink but once in twenty-four hours, and this in the hottest time of the year ; and no person was suffered to see him but the servants of the prison. At length he was thrown into a dungeon, where he was in a quarter of an hour brought to the point which all this severe usage was intended to gain. After such a relation, we cannot be surprised to find the sacred writers placing so strong an emphasis on "the sighing of the prisoner," and speaking of its coming before God, and the necessity of Almighty power being exerted for his deliverance. — Paxton.

PSALM THE EIGHTIETH.

author, — unknown: date, probably Maccabæan

A prayer in time of national disaster.

Shoshannim-Eduth, see titles of Ps. xlv. lxix.

1—3. (1) leadest Joseph, Ge. xlviii. 15. dwellest, etc., better, "sittest enthroned upon the Cherubim ;" suggests the twofold idea of the King enthroned in heaven, yet manifesting His presence fr. the mercy-seat above the ark. Ps. xcix. 1. (2) Before, etc., these three tribes are the children of Rachel,[c] and rep. the northern kingdom ; "only a small portion of Benjamin adhered to Judah at the division of the kingdoms, the greater part attaching itself to the rival power." (3) Turn us again, an expression suitable to any recovery from calamity, and not to be strictly applied to return from captivity. face to shine, show us thy favor as of old ; Ps. iv. 6 ; lxvii. 1.

The shepherd of Israel. — Yon shepherd is about to lead his flock across the river ; and, as our Lord says of the good shepherd, you observe that he goes before, and the sheep follow. Not all in the same manner, however. Some enter boldly, and come straight across. These are the loved ones of the flock, who keep hard by the footsteps of the shepherd, whether sauntering through green meadows, by the still waters, feeding upon the mountains, or resting at noon beneath the shadow of great rocks. And now others enter, but in doubt and alarm. Far from their guide, they miss the ford, and are carried down the river, some more, some less, and yet, one by one, they all struggle over and make good their landing. Notice those little lambs. They refuse to enter, and must be driven into the stream by the shepherd's dog, mentioned by Job in his "parable." Poor things! how they leap and plunge, and greatest storms ; and he that will venture out without this to make him sail even and steady will certainly make shipwreck and drown himself, first in the cares and sorrows of this world, and then in perdition." —Hopkins.

a "The physical and moral consequences of sin pass on from generation to generation, but 'Scripture nowhere teaches that a man is guilty in the sight of God for any sins but his own. Sinning himself, he allows the deeds of his fathers; he is a partaker in their iniquities; but his condemnation, if he be condemned, is for his own transgression, not for those of his fathers."—Perowne.

b "Never used in the sense of hinder in the Bible or books of its age." —Woolrych.

"If you take exceptional cases of the men who are, for the sake of integrity and principle, persecuted and cast out, there is more joy in a prison than the palace that is over it."—Beecher.

c "These three tribes are doubtless here associated as having occupied the station nearest to the holy of holies during the march through the wilderness." — Jennings and Lowe.

"Patience was like a privy coat upon His soul, that when the devil struck at Him, he was stricken himself; when death came to kill Him, he was killed himself; and all their shot could not hurt Him, because of His preservation which He had about Him, like Samson's hair, which saved him from all his enemies." — Henry Smith.

"Tear-bread is even more the fruit of the curse than to eat bread in the sweat of one's face, but it shall by Divine love be turned into a greater blessing by ministering to our spiritual health."

a Comp. Eng. word fume.

b "That wh. seems so mysterious, that wh. calls for the expostulation and the entreaty is, that even whilst they pray, in spite of that prayer, God's wrath is hot against them."— Perowne.

c "Still an Eastern figure for affliction." — Fausset.

"Thou that leadest Joseph like a flock art considered by the unbelieving to have no thoughts for our affairs; therefore stretch forth Thine hand for our assistance, that the mouth of them that speak iniquities may be shut. We long for Thy light, we desire more ardently to know Thee, therefore 'shine forth.'" — Savonarola.

"To be 'saved' means here to be rescued from the assaults of hostile nations. The poet was sure that Israel's sole defense was God, and that one gleam of His face would shrivel up the strongest foes, like unclean, slimy creatures which writhe and die in sunshine." — Exp. Bib.

bleat in terror! That weak one yonder will be swept quite away, and perish in the sea. But, no; the shepherd himself leaps into the stream, lifts it into his bosom, and bears it trembling to the shore. All safely over, how happy they appear. The lambs frisk and gambol about in high spirits, while the older ones gather round their faithful guide, and look up to him in subdued but expressive thankfulness. Now can you watch such a scene and not think of that Shepherd who leadeth Joseph like a flock; and of another river, which all His sheep must cross? He, too, goes before, and, as in the case of this flock, they who keep near Him fear no evil. They hear His sweet voice saying, "When thou passeth through the waters I will be with thee, and through the floods they shall not overflow thee." With eye fastened on Him, they scarcely see the stream or feel its cold and threatening waves. The great majority, however, "linger shivering on the brink, and fear to launch away." They lag behind, look down upon the dark river, and, like Peter on stormy Gennesaret when faith failed, they begin to sink. Then they cry for help, and not in vain. The Good Shepherd hastens to their rescue, and none of His flock can ever perish. Even the weakest lambkins are carried safely over. I once saw flocks crossing the Jordan "to Canaan's fair and happy land," and there the scene was even more striking and impressive. The river was broader, the current stronger, and the flocks larger, while the shepherds were more picturesque and Biblical. The catastrophe, too, with which many poor sheep were threatened — of being swept down into that mysterious Sea of Death which swallows up the Jordan itself — was more solemn and suggestive. — Thomson.

4—7. (4) Lord God of Hosts, "this title denotes His universal sovereignty, hence His ability to help Israel; "a form not common in the Psalms, but occuring in Ps. lix. 5; lxxxiv. 8." angry, lit. hast thou smoked.[a] against, lit with, in the sense of notwithstanding, in spite of.[b] (5) bread of tears,[c] as if tears were their food. great measure, lit. by the tierce, or third part of some larger measure; "copious draught." (6) strife, an object which they vied with one another in assailing. neighbours, petty states bordering their country. among themselves, to their heart's content: "make their game of us." — Cheyne. (7) Turn, etc., as vs. 3.

Anger of God against His praying people (vs. 4). — I. Why God may be angry with His people. 1. For their dullness in attainment of a knowledge of His will; 2. For the weakness of their faith; 3. For the earthliness of their affections; 4. For the evil of their spirits; 5. For their unprofitableness in His service; 6. For their apostasy. II. When God may be angry with the prayers of His people, 1. When they are formal; 2. When they are without charity and love; 3. When they are substituted for obedience; 4. When they are not presented in faith. III. How we should regard the possibility of Divine anger. 1. There should be earnest inquiry; 2. Faithful self-examination; 3. We should seek a spirit of self-devotion; 4. Make a believing appeal to our Divine advocate. — J. Burns.

Note on vs. 4. — Hebrew, "wilt thou smoke?" Ainsworth, "Jehovah, God of hosts, how long wilt Thou smoke against the prayer of Thy people?" Of an angry man it is said, "He is continually smoking." "My friend, why do you smoke so to-day?" "This smoke drives me away; I cannot bear it." "How many days is this smoke to remain in my house?" "What care I for the smoke? It does not hurt me." — Roberts. — Drinking tears (vs. 5). — When a master or a father is angry, he says to his children or servants, "Yes, in future you shall have rice and the water of your eyes to eat." "You shall have the water of your eyes in abundance to drink." "Alas! alas! I am ever drinking tears." — Roberts.

Turn us, and cause Thy face to shine. — To Thyself convert us, from the earthly to the heavenly; convert our rebellious wills to Thee, and when we are converted, show Thy countenance that we may know Thee; show Thy power that we may fear Thee; show Thy wisdom that we may reverence Thee; show Thy goodness that we may love Thee; show them once, show them a second time, show them always, that through tribulation we may pass with a happy face, and be saved. When Thou dost save, we shall be saved; when Thou withdrawest Thy hand, we cannot be saved. — Savonarola.

8—13. (8) a vine, this fig. is borrowed from Ge. xlix. 22. cast out, Ps. xliv. 2. (9) preparedst room, by destroying the Canaanites. (10) hills,

R. V., "the mountains." goodly cedars, Heb. cedars of God, the indigenous cedars of Lebanon; with ref. to the N. boundary of Canaan. (11) sea, the Mediterranean; the W. boundary. river, the Euphrates.[a] (12) hedges, R. V., "fences;" vineyards were carefully fenced in. Comp. Is. v. 5. (13) boar . . wild beast,[b] general description of the invaders.

Wild boar. — No image of a destructive enemy could be more appropriate than that which is used. We have read of the little foxes that spoil the vines, but the wild boar is a much more destructive enemy, breaking its way through fences, rooting up the ground, tearing down the vines themselves, and treading them under its feet. A single party of these animals will sometimes destroy an entire vineyard in a single night. We can well imagine the damage that would be done to a vineyard even by the domesticated swine, but the wild boar is infinitely more destructive. It is of very great size, often resembling a donkey rather than a boar, and is swift and active beyond conception. The wild boar is scarcely recognizable as the very near relation of the domestic species. It runs with such speed that a high-bred horse finds some difficulty in overtaking it, while an indifferent steed would be left hopelessly behind. Even on level ground the hunter has hard work to overtake it; and if it can get upon broken or hilly ground, no horse can catch it. The wild boar can leap to a considerable distance, and can wheel and turn when at full speed, with an agility that makes it a singularly dangerous foe. Indeed, the inhabitants of countries where the wild boar flourishes would as soon face a lion as one of these animals, the stroke of whose razor-like tusks is made with lightning swiftness, and which is sufficient to rip up a horse, and cut a dog nearly asunder. — J. G. Wood.

14—16. (14) Return, Polychr., "turn Thou again!" see vs. 3. (15) vineyard, better, the stock. This is a difficult vs. R. V. marg. suggests, "And protect that which thy right hand hath planted." branch, lit. "the son," ref. to the nation. Cheyne trans., "and to the leaves of the bough that thou didst choose thee." madest strong, didst carefully rear till it reached maturity.[c] (16) cut down, comp. Jno. xv. 6. The word is used of thorns cut for burning. They, Israel.

Visit this vine. — Still it has roots, still some branches are living. In the beginning of the world it began, and never has failed, and never will. For thou hast said, Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. It may be diminished, it can never utterly fail. This vine is the vine which thou hast planted. There is one spirit, one faith, one baptism, one God, and Lord of all, who is all in all. Visit, then, this vine, for thy visitation preserves her spirit; visit by thy grace, by thy presence, by thy Holy Spirit. Visit with thy rod, and with thy staff: for thy rod and thy staff comfort her. Visit with thy scourge that she may be chastened and purified, for the time of pruning comes. Cast out the stones, gather up the dry branches, and bind them in bundles for burning. Raise her up, cut off the superfluous shoots, make fast her supports, enrich the soil, build up the fence, and visit this vine, as now thou visitest the earth and waterest it. — Savonarola.

17—19. (17) man of thy right hand, the people of Israel, "so called as delivered by God's power and strengthened for His special service." — Spk. Com. "Israel's sacred calling, its own weakness, and the strength of the God who endows it are all set forth, not now as lessons to it, but as pleas with Him, whose gifts are without repentance, and whose purposes cannot be foiled by man's unworthiness or opposition." — Exp. Bib. (18) quicken us, with inward life; the secret of all right and good conduct. (19) Turn, as vs. 3.

The efficacy of prayer (vss. 7–19). — I. How to approach God in a season of trouble. 1. We are especially invited to seek God at such times; 2. The Lord Jesus is the appointed Head of the church; 3. Through Him then we must seek for God's effectual help. II. What should we seek for at His hands? 1. The communications of His grace; 2. The manifestations of His favor. III. The fruit and consequences of accepted prayer. 1. Stability in God's ways; 2. The everlasting enjoyment of His favor. Hence — (1) See how little reason there is for any man to despond; (2) How little ground there is for any one to glory. — C. Simeon.

The man of Thy right hand (vs. 17). — If we would understand the genuine import of this phrase we must attend to a custom which obtained in Judæa and other Eastern countries. At meals the master of the feast placed the

a "The extreme limit eastward of the Israelitish kingdom in its ideal extent, nearly realized under Solomon." — Spk. Com.

b Je. v. 6. The only Bib. reference to the boar.

"Maundrel, in giving a description of the cedars of Lebanon, says: 'I measured one of the largest, and found it twelve yards six inches in girth, and yet sound, and thirty-seven yards in the spread of its boughs. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree.'" — Whitecross.

c Is xliv. 14.

"There is more mercy in the merciful God than e'er inhabited the pregnant eyes of men, who waste unprofitable tears for all imaginable woes, and leave the poor, uncomforted, to wail their own." — Coleridge.

"Great Husbandman, at least note the mischief which the beasts have done, for then it may be thy heart will pity, and thy hand will be outstretched to deliver." — Spurgeon.

"The man whom thou art wont to protect with thy right hand." — Jennings and Lowe.

"How well that we can look to God when our face is set wrong, that he may turn us, and so his face shine on us, as to bring blessing and present deliverance to his people." — J. N. Darby.

"During distress God comes; and when he comes it is more distress." — Gaelic Proverb.

person whom he loved best on his right hand, as a token of love and respect; and as they sat on couches, in the intervals between the dishes, when the master leaned upon his left elbow, the man at his right hand, leaning also on his, would naturally repose his head on the master's bosom, while at the same time the master laid his right hand on the favorite's shoulder or side, in testimony of his favorable regard.— Burder.— Presence of God.— It is God's presence which constitutes the saint's morning. As the stars may impart some light, and yet the brightness of all combined cannot form the light of day, but when the sun appears there is day forthwith; so God may make some comfort arise to a soul from secondary and inferior means; but it is He Himself alone who, by the shining of His face and the smiles of His countenance causes morning.— Burroughs.

"Those who hearken to God's voice will have all desires satisfied and needs supplied. They will find furtherance in hindrances, fertility in barrenness; rocks will drop honey and stones will become bread."—Exp. Bib.

author,— unknown: date, that of the rebuilt Temple

Psalm for recitation at a festival.

Gittith, see title Ps. viii.

a Le. xxiii. 24; Nu. xxix. 1; Ps. xlvii. 1.

b "These instruments are commonly made of cows' or rams' horns; they differ somewhat in shape, some being much more curved than others, and the tube of some not being round but flattened. Engel mentions one in the great synagogue of London, wh. has this vs. of the Ps. inscribed upon it."—Perowne.

"We, ignorant of ourselves, beg often our own harms, which the wise powers deny us for our good; so find we profit by losing of our prayers."—Shakespeare.

"The religion of Israel allowed and required exuberant joy. It sternly rejected painting and sculpture, but abundantly employed music, the most ethereal of the arts, which stirs emotions and longings too delicate and deep for speech."—Exp Bib.

c Le. xxiii. 24; Nu. x. 10.

d "Once Joseph had gone forthwith the title 'Saviour of the Age' (Tsophnath-paneah), over their land to benefit them. Afterwards

PSALM THE EIGHTY-FIRST.

1—3. (1) joyful noise, a term used of the blare of trumpets.[a] (2) Take a psalm, or take music. Polychr., "Let stringed instruments and timbrels sound." timbrel, Ex. xv. 20. harp, Ge. iv. 21. psaltery, 1 Sa. x. 5. (3) trumpet, Heb. shophar.[b] new moon, any new moon festival, or the special festival of the seventh month. in the time appointed, trans. at the full moon, wh. would denote the Feast of Tabernacles.

Praise.—I. Praise should be sincere. It can come from the people of God only. II. It should be constant: they should praise God at all times. III. It should be special. There should be seasons of special praise. 1. Appointed by God, as Sabbaths and solemn feasts. 2. Demanded by Providence on occasion of special deliverances and special mercies. IV. It should be public: "sing aloud:" "bring hither," etc.— G. Rogers.

Design of Psalm lxxi.— "It is well remarked by De Wette that as the Hebrews were required to make known to their children the design of the ordinance of the Passover (see Ex. xii. 26,27), nothing would be more natural than that the sacred poets should take occasion from the return of that festival to enforce the truths pertaining to it in songs composed for the celebration. Such seems to have been the design of this psalm,—reminding the people of the goodness of God in the past, and recalling them from their sins by a remembrance of His mercies, and by a view of what would be the consequences of fully obeying His law."—Barnes.— Blow up the trumpet.— The Jews say this blowing of trumpets was in commemoration of Isaac's deliverance, a ram being sacrificed for him, and therefore they sounded with trumpets made of ram's horns; or in remembrance of the trumpet blown at the giving of the law; though it rather was an emblem of the Gospel and the ministry of it, by which sinners are aroused, awakened and quickened, and souls are charmed and allured, and filled with spiritual joy and gladness.— John Gill.— In the new moon.— The feast of the new moon was always proclaimed by sound of trumpet. For want of astromical knowledge, the poor Jews were put to sad shifts to know the real time of the new moon. They generally sent persons to the top of some hill or mountain about the time which, according to their supputations, the new moon should appear. The first who saw it was to give immediate notice to the Sanhedrim; they closely examined the reporter as to his credibility, and whether his information agreed with their calculations. If all was found satisfactory, the president proclaimed the new moon by shouting out, mikkodesh! "It is consecrated." This word was repeated twice aloud by the people; and was then proclaimed everywhere by blowing of horns, or what is called the sound of trumpets. Among the Hindoos some feasts are announced by the sound of the conch, or sacred shell.— Adam Clarke.

4—7. (4) was, R. V., "is." statute, appointed Mosaic ordinance.[c] (5) in Joseph, Joseph seems to stand for "Israel in Egypt." testimony, or witness to Himself, and His claim to the obedience of the people. when he, i. e. God. through, more correctly against.[d] heard, etc. Ref. may be to the strange language of the Egypt. taskmasters. But better to trans. as follows: "The speech of one that I knew not did I hear." "The Psalmist speaks in the person of Israel at the time of the Exodus. Israel then began to hear Jehovah, whom it had not yet learned to know as the self-revealing God of redemption, speaking to it in the wondrous works of the deliverance from Egypt."— Cam.

Bib. (6) pots, baskets. (7) secret . . thunder, dark thunder-clouds, fr. behind wh. God spoke to the Israelites. Meribah, Ex. xvii. 6, 7.

The voice. — The explanation implied by the A. V. and R. V., that the collective Israel speaks, and that the reference is, as in Psalm cxiv. 1, to the "strange language" of the Egyptians, is given by most of the older authorities, and by Ewald and Hengstenberg, but has against it the necessity for the supplement "where," and the difficulty of referring the "I" to the nation. The more usual explanation in modern times is that the speaker is the Psalmist, and that the language which he hears is the voice of God, the substance of which follows in the remainder of the psalm. As in Job iv. 16, Eliphaz could not discern the appearance of the mysterious form that stood before his eyes, and thus its supernatural character is suggested, so the Psalmist hears an utterance of a hitherto unknown kind, which he thus implies to have been Divine. God Himself speaks, to impress the lessons of the past, and to excite the thoughts and feelings which would rightly celebrate the feast. The glad noises of song, harp, and trumpet are hushed; the Psalmist is silent, to hear that dread Voice, and then with lowly lips he repeats so much of the majestic syllables as he could translate into words which it was possible for a man to utter. — Exp. Bib.

8—12. (8) wilt hearken, comp. our Lord's expression, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." (9) no strange god, absolute fidelity to God was the fundamental requirement of Jehovah's covenant.[b] (10) open, etc., Ps. xxxvii. 4; Eph. iii. 20. (11) would, or desired. (12) gave them up, Ac. xiv. 16. The greatest and most fearful of God's punishments. unto . . lust, Polychr., "to thier stubborn heart."

Divine expostulation (vss. 8–10). — We have here — I. A compassionate Father calling to His child, "O Israel, if thou wilt hearken unto Me." II. A jealous sovereign laying down the law, "There shall no strange god be in thee." III. An all-sufficient Friend challenging confidence, "I am the Lord thy God; open thy mouth wide and I will fill it." — R. Cecil.

Refusing to hearken. — A gentleman called his sons around his dying bed, and gave them the following relation: "When I was a youth the Spirit strove with me and seemed to say, 'Seek religion now;' but Satan suggested the necessity of waiting till I grew up, because it was incompatible with youthful amusement; so I resolved I would wait till I grew up to be a man. I did so, and was then reminded of my promise to seek religion — but Satan again advised me to wait till middle age, for business and a young family demanded all my attention. Yes, I said, I will do so — I will wait till middle age. I did so — my serious impressions left me for some years. They were again renewed, conscience reminded me of my promises; the Spirit said, 'Seek religion now;' but then I had less time than ever; Satan advised my waiting till I was old; then my children would be settled in business, and I should have nothing else to do — I could then give an undivided attention to it. I listened to his suggestion, and the Spirit ceased to strive with me. I have lived to be old, but now I have no desire as formerly to attend to the concerns of my soul — my heart is hardened. I have resisted and quenched the Spirit; now there is no hope; already I feel the beginning of an eternal misery. Take warning! seek religion now — let nothing tempt you to put off this important concern." — Whitecross. — Open wide. — Let us seek after greater things. God can do more than we can ask. He that craves spiritual good will have it — God will be sure to give it. It is in His way to give great things. We should not ask trifles, nor be satisfied with being little Christians. Then we must attempt great things. William Huntingdon prayed for a pair of leather breeches, and he got them. William Carey prayed for India. The one was a little thing, soon done with; the other is still being answered. — Wm. Jones.

13—16. (13) Oh that, or, how I wish that. in my ways, is in contrast "with their own counsels." (14) soon, in a very little while. (15) submitted, marg. yielded feigned obedience. Cam Bib., "should come cringing unto Him." (16) fed, etc., comp. De. xxxii. 13, 14.[c]

God giving up obstinate transgressors (vs. 13). — I. The perverseness complained of. 1. Nothing could exceed the kindness of God towards His people of old; 2. But their obstinacy was incorrigible. Should we imitate the perverseness of the Jews, let us tremble for fear of — II. The judgment inflicted they forgot their benefactor, and oppressed his children; then Joseph's God arose, and went forth over the land in righteous judgment, yet still as Saviour of that people, in whom dwelt the germ of blessing for all nations." — Kay.

a In wh. Egypt bricklayers bore the clay for bricks." — Spk. Com.

b "In this vs. the key-note of the revelation of the law fr. Sinai is struck; the fundamental command wh. opens the Decalogue demanded fidelity to Jehovah, and forbade idol-worship as the sin of sins." — Jennings and Lowe.

"The custom is said still to exist in Persia that when the king wishes to do a visitor, an ambassador for instance, especial honor, he desires him to open his mouth wide; and the king then crams it as full of sweetmeats as it will hold; and sometimes even with jewels. Curious as this custom is, it is doubtless referred to in Psalm lxxxi. 10: 'Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it;' not with baubles of jewels, but with far richer treasure."— John Gadsby.

"He who made us cannot be unmoved by the sufferings of His children; and in sincerely asking His compassion, we almost feel that we receive it."—Jeremy Taylor.

c Ez. xvi. 19.

"Even bees, the little alms-men of spring bowers, know there is richest juice in poison flowers" — Keats.

on account of it. 1. What a loss they sustained; 2. What misery they incurred. Hence it appears — (1) Whose will be the fault if any be lost. (2) Whose will be the glory if any be saved. — Simeon.

Bees. — Mr. Tristram states that the hive-bee of Palestine much resembles our own Apis mellifica, and still more closely the hive-bee of Italy and Southern Europe, named Apis ligustica, but is smaller and of a lighter color. The swarms or colonies are also generally more numerous, and the cells of the combs a little smaller, while the combs are frequently of great size and weight. It is, he adds, the Apis fasciata of Latreille, and now, as of old, is quite as abundant in a wild state as reclaimed. The same species of wild bees are far more numerous than their hived relatives, and the greater quantity of the honey sold in the south of Palestine is obtained from wild swarms. The abundance of bees in the olden time is attested by the repeated description of the land of promise as "a land flowing with milk and honey." The observant author quoted says: "Few countries are more admirably adapted for bees than this, with its dry climate and its stunted but varied flora, consisting, in large proportion, of aromatic thymes, mints and other labiate plants, as well as of crocuses in spring; while the dry recesses of the limestone rocks everywhere afford shelter and protection for the combs." Hence the allusion to "honey out of the rock." Wild honey is also found in trees; thus, "when the people were come into the wood, behold the honey dropped" (1 Sa. xiv. 25, 26). Bees are more abundant in the wilderness of Judæa than in any other part of Palestine; hence honey was a principal part of the plain fare of John the Baptist in the desert. In the same region the Bedouins of the present day squeeze the honey from the combs, and store it up in skins and jars. There are various species of humble bee in Palestine; and mason bees are also common. — Honey out of the rock. — Most travelers who have visited Palestine in summer have had their attention directed to the abundance of honey, which the bees of the land have stored up in the hollows of trees and in crevices of the rock. In localities where the bare rocks of the desert alone break the sameness of the scene, and all around is suggestive of desolation and death, the traveler has God's care of His chosen people vividly brought to mind as he sees the honey, which the bees had treasured up beyond his reach, trickling in shining drops down the face of the rock. — John Duns.

"When the old Romans attacked a city, it was sometimes their custom to set up a white flag at the city gate. If the garrison surrendered while the white flag was up, their lives were spared; after that, the black flag was run up, and every man was put to the sword. Sinner, to day the white flag of mercy is out. Surrender to Christ, and live, before the black flag of death and doom takes its place."

"Surely God cannot think anything of this world too good for His people, who hath not thought the next world too good for them; certainly God cannot think any of these outward enjoyments too good for His people, who hath not thought His Son too good for his people." — Joseph Caryl.

PSALM THE EIGHTY-SECOND.

author, — unknown; date, the exile

A Psalm of judgment on corrupt magistrates.

Poss. historical connection, 2 Chro. xv. 8-19; xix. 4-11.

a Ex. xxi. 6; xxii. 8; xxii. 28.

b Ex. xxiii. 2; Le. xix. 15; De. i. 17; Ja. ii. 1.

"It seems preferable to regard this passage to vs. 6 as a rebuke addressed, in the true prophetic strain, by the poet himself, to those whose iniquity called for the protest." — Perowne.

"Rulers must understand that they are not placed over stocks and stones, nor over swine and dogs, but over the congregation of God;

1—4. (1) standeth, is stationed. congregation, etc., Polychr., "In the heavenly assembly," one summoned and presided over by the Almighty Ruler of the universe. among the gods, Elohim, a term sometimes used for those high in office.[a] (2) accept the persons, R. V., "respect the persons," common expression for undue partiality.[b] (3) Defend, Heb. judge; do justice to; give them their due. (4) rid, same idea as deliver, "Human authorities are God's representatives to see that the weak and friendless have justice done them." — Kirkpatrick. Pr. xxiv. 11, 12.

The importance of mercy. — Mercy is in the air which we breathe, the daily light which shines upon us, the gracious rain of God's inheritance. It is the public spring for all the thirsty, the common hospital for all the needy. All the streets of the church are paved with these stones. What would become of the children if there were not these breasts of consolation? It is mercy that takes us out of the womb, feeds us in the days of our pilgrimage, furnishes us with spiritual provision, closes our eyes in peace, and translates us to a secure resting place. It is the first petitioner's suit, and the first believer's article, the contemplation of Enoch, the confidence of Abraham, the burden of the prophetic songs, and the glory of all the apostles, the plea of the penitent, the ecstasies of the reconciled, the believer's hosanna, the angel's hallelujah. Ordinances, oracles, altars, pulpits, the gates of the grave, and the gates of heaven, do all depend upon mercy. It is the lodestar of the wandering, the ransom of the captive, the antidote of the tempted, the prophet of the living, and the effectual comfort of the dying; there would not be one regenerate saint upon earth, nor one glorified saint in heaven, if it were not for mercy.

Justice. —

In the corrupted currents of this world,
Offense's gilded hand may shove by justice;

And oft 'tis seen, the wicked prize itself
Buys out the law. But 'tis not so above;
There is no shuffling, there the action lies
In its true nature; and we ourselves compell'd, E'en to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence.— Shakespeare.

they must therefore be afraid of acting against God Himself when they act unjustly."— Martin Luther.

5—8 (5) know not, "moral blindness is the cause of all sin," it is also the effect of sin.[a] walk . . darkness, fig. for their complacent self-satisfaction. Pr. ii. 13. foundations, etc., Polychr., "are shaking." Ps. xi. 3.[b] (6) Ye are gods, Elohim,[c] i. e. "in my law I have called you gods"— I have given you this lofty name (see Exo. xxi. 6; xxii. 8. 9), since ye judge on my behalf, "as my representatives" (Deut. i. 17; 2 Chron. xix. 6; Rom. xiii. 1, 2). children of the most High, not therefore "gods" in the strictest sense, but possessing a derived, and so a qualified, divinity. — Pul. Com. (7) die, they had no ground for presumption, their high title was no exemption from Divine justice and punishment. like men, lit. like Adam, "when he violated the conditions on which he held his life." princes, poss. a special example is referred to, see Ps. lxxxiii. 11. (8) for . . nations, lit. "Thou hast all the nations as Thine inheritance."[d]

The world wrong in its foundations (vss. 5–8). — Referring to kings, etc., the psalm brings under our attention — (1) The lofty position they occupy; 2. The presence of God in their midst; 3. The cardinal rule of their office. I. The radical wrongness of the word. 1. Look at the foundation of man's character individually; 2. Religiously. II. The ephemeral distinctions of the world. 1. The most illustrious must meet with a common event; 2. They must meet this common end in a way peculiar to themselves. III. The true hope of the world. 1. This cry is one of the deepest cries of universal man; 2. It implies the want of confidence in all creature instrumentality; 3. And a confidence in the possibility of securing the Divine interposition. — D. Thomas.

Ye are gods. — But while care ought to be taken to guard the divine right of civil government from abuse, the right itself is not to be forgotten. The state is an ordinance of God, having, like the family, its foundation in the very constitution of human nature. The officers of the state, whether supreme or subordinate, have a divine right to administer justice in the community over which Providence has placed them. They who resort to the civil magistrate for judgment, resort to the judgment-seat of God; just as they who resort to the Ministry of the Word resort to the Great Prophet of the Church. Unless the magistrate had received a commission from God, he could not lawfully bear the sword. To take the life of an unarmed fellow-man, without a commission from the Most High warranting the act, would be to commit murder.— William Binnie.— Alike in death. — Beasts, fat and lean, fed in one pasture, killed in one slaughter. The prince in his lofty palace, the beggar in his lowly cottage, have double difference, local and ceremonial height and lowness: yet meet at the grave, and are mingled in ashes. We walk in this world as a man in a field of snow; all the way appears smooth, yet cannot we be sure of any step. All are like actors on a stage; some have one part and some another, death is still busy amongst us; here drops one of the players, we bury him with sorrow, and to our scene again; then falls another, yea all, one after another, till death be left upon the stage. Death is that damp which puts out all the dim lights of vanity. Yet man is easier to believe that all the world shall die, than to suspect himself. — Thomas Adams.

a Ps. xiv. 4. liii. 4.

b "A figurative expression for the disturbance of those fundamental principles on which the administration of justice rests."— Spk. Com

"Upon three things the duration of the world depends—upon truth, and justice, and peace" — Rabban Simeon.

c Children of the Most High, Jno. x. 34-36.

d "All nations are Thine inheritance. Thou gavest a special inheritance to Israel: but all lands are Thy Canaan, and all will be judged by Thee."— Wordsworth.

"Prayer is to the penitent heart a sweet source of consolation, long even before the answer come; because a generous mind rejoices in acknowledging the obligations it desires to receive, or has received, or the faults, errors, and offenses which it has committed. And, also, that the exercise itself is a drawing nigh unto One who giveth liberally and upbraideth not. God has no frowns for the penitent; He hears their cry, and will help them."— Rev. J. S. Knox.

PSALM THE EIGHTY-THIRD.

author, — unknown; time of the Maccabees

A Psalm against a confederacy of hostile nations.

1—4. (1) Keep, etc., lit. let there be no rest to Thee; or, stillness, as if indifferent to surrounding conditions. (2) lifted up the head,[e] with arrogancy and self-sufficiency. Jer. viii. 28. (3) crafty, lit. make crafty their plot or secret consultation. hidden ones, Polychr., "Thy chosen ones," i. e. Israel, whom God conceals in His pavilion in time of trouble as a peculiar treasure.[f] (4) cut . . nation, 2 Chr. xx. 11.[g]

God's hidden ones (vs. 3). — I. The people of God are hidden in His heart — in the depths of everlasting love. II. In the hollow of His hand — as the objects of His special care. III. In the laboratory of His spirit, where they are created anew in Jesus Christ. IV. They are hidden as leaven — in the character and extent of their influence. — Waddington.

e Job v. 12.

f Ps. xxvii. 5; xxxi. 20.

g Is. vii. 8; Je xlviii. 2.

"Like as if one had a great enemy, and the queen, who is but a mortal woman, should promise to protect and defend him, he would not fear; much more we ought not to fear our enemies, seeing that God, who only is almighty, doth say, 'Fear not; for I am thy Protector and thy Defense!'"—Cawdary.

a "Heb. lêb, here referring prob. not to the hearty earnestness, or the unanimity, of the counsel, but to the intelligence and thought with wh. it was devised."—Jennings and Lowe.

b 1 Chro. v. 10, 18-22.

"I would not enter on my list of friends (though graced with polish'd manners and fine sense, yet wanting sensibility) the man who needlessly sets foot upon a worm. An inadvertent step may crush the snail that crawls at evening in the public path; but he that has humanity, forwarn'd will tread aside and let the reptile live."—Cowper.

"Couldst thou not grant the merciful a time for mercy? Time is a man's good angel; to leave no interval between the sentence and the fulfilment of it, doth beseem God only, the Immutable!"—Coleridge.

"Prayer ardent opens heaven, lets down a stream of glory on the consecrated hour of man, in audience with the Deity: who worships the great God, that instant joins the first in heaven and sets his foot on hell."—Young.

"Are we gods, allied to no infirmities? Are our natures more than men's natures? When we slip a little out of the Duty to enemies. — A soldier, riding over the scene of a battle-field when the fight was done, came, as he picked his steps among the dead, to a body, which, stirring, showed some signs of life. The bleeding form wore the dress of a foe. Regardless of that, he said to his attendant, "Give him a draught of wine;" and, as the officer stopped down to do so, the wounded soldier, discovering through the mist that was gathering on his dying eye, in this good Samaritan, the general of the troops against whom he had been fighting, raised himself on his elbow, drew a pistol, and, with deadly hate, fired it at his benefactor's head. Happily the bullet missed its mark; and the general, as soon as he recovered from his surprise, with a forgiveness, truly magnanimous, said, "Give it to him all the same!"

5—8. (5) one consent, or heart.[a] (6) tabernacles, i. e. tents. Edom, Ge. xxv. 30. Moab, Ge. xix. 37. Hagarenes, dwelling in the land from east of Gilead to the Persian Gulf.[b] (7) Gebal, country of Mount Seir, mountainous region S. of the Dead Sea, in the neighborhood of Petra. Ammon, Ge. xix. 38. Amalek, Ex. xvii. 8. Philistines, Ge. x. 14. Tyre, Jos. xix. 29. (8) Assur, Assyria, Ge. x. 11. children of Lot, i. e., Moabites and Ammonites.

Verses 6-8. — An enumeration of the confederate peoples. From the southeast come the Edomites, who inhabited the mountainous region between the Dead Sea and the Gulf of Akaba, and the Ishmaelites, who roamed over the deserts from the borders of Egypt to the northwest shore of the Persian Gulf (Ge. xxv. 18), from the east of the Dead Sea come the Moabites, and from the northeast the Hagarenes or Hagrites, who lived in the neighborhood of the Hauran, east of Gilead (1 Chr. v. 10, 19, 20); — they are mentioned in the inscriptions of Sennacherib along with the Nabatheans. Gebal is not the Gebal of Ezekiel xxvii. 9 to the north of Tyre (Byblus), but the northern part of the mountains of Edom, southward of the Dead Sea, a district known to Pliny as Gebalene. The Ammonites, ancient and bitter foes of Israel, come from their homes beyond the Jordan, the Amalekites from the southern deserts between the Arabah and the Mediterranean. The maritime states of the Philistines on the west and Tyre on the north have joined them, and even the remote Assyria sends a contingent to support the confederacy. — Cam. Bib.

Gebal. — The Greek name of this place was Byblus. The town is called Jebeil, and has a population of about six hundred. It is about seventeen miles north of Beyroot. The ancient ruins are very extensive. Immense numbers of granite columns are strewn about in the village and over the surrounding fields. These columns are mostly small, varying from one foot to two feet in diameter. Some of the stones measure nearly twenty feet in length. The citadel is the most remarkable ruin. The port is nearly choked up with sand and ruins. — George H. Whitney.

9—12. (9) Midianites, Ge. xxxvii. 28. Sisera, Ju. iv. 22. Jabin, Ju. iv. 23. Kison, Ju. v. 21; 1 Ki. xviii. 40. (10) En-dor, Jos. xvii. 11. dung, the unburied corpses spoken of contemptuously in the light of fertilization. (11) Oreb . . Zeeb, princes of the army, Ju. vii. 25. Zebah, etc., these seem to have been the kings, Ju. viii. 5, 6. (12) Who, refers to Israel's present enemies. houses, lit. pastures or homesteads.

Enmity to God in man. — This may be shown — 1. From man's capability of knowing God, and his indifference to possess this knowledge. 2. Wilful ignorance of God. 3. So seldom thinking of God. 4. So little concerned about the favor of God. 5. So little converse and walk with God. 6. The thoughtlessness concerning God which man manifests in all his daily ordinary affairs. 7. The uncomfortable life which he lives by reason of his distance from God and unacquaintedness with Him. 8. His universal disobedience of the Divine laws. — J. Howe.

The brook of Kison. — The river Kishon traverses the plain of Esdraelon and terminates in the Bay of Acre or Akka. This is the stream regarding which it is written, after Barak and Deborah had gained their victory over Sisera, "The river of Kishon swept them away, that ancient river, the river Kishon. O my soul, thou hast trodden down strength." Although it is now no insignificant stream, yet it needs heavy rains to make it really considerable in magnitude: it is very unequal in size, and seems to be only temporary in its character. At any rate, when Robinson passed its head waters in midsummer, he found the channels all dry, and they had been so for a whole year. On the other hand, in the winter the waters are often exceedingly abundant; particularly in the northern and southern chief tributaries; so that, in 1799, at the time of the French invasion, many of the vanquished Turks perished in the floods which swept down from Deburieh, and which inundated the plain. It was a scene like that described in Judges v. regarding the fate of Sisera's hosts. — Carl Ritter.

13—18. (13) like a wheel, rolling thing, "whirling dust."[a] — Cheyne. As the chaff, dust, sand, anything driven in rolling masses by the wind. stubble, Ps. i. 4. (14) As the fire, etc., fig. fr. rapid burning of brushwood on a hillside; comp. prairie fires. (15) persecute, better visit them, pursue them, punish them. (16) seek thy name, even such judgments being conceived as restorative. "He does not wish Israel's enemies to die before the logic of facts has compelled them to own Jehovah as their God." — Cheyne. (17) for ever, or thoroughly. (18) thou, etc.,[b] see the prayer of Jehoshaphat, 2 Chr. xx. 6.

A wheel. — What sort of vegetable is this whose stems our muleteers are cutting up and chewing with so much relish? It is a wild artichoke. We can amuse ourselves with it and its behavior for a while, and may possibly extract something more valuable than the insipid juice of which our men are so fond. You observe that in growing, it throws out numerous branches of equal size and length in all directions, forming a sort of sphere or globe a foot or more in diameter. When ripe and dry in autumn, these branches become rigid and light as a feather, the parent stem breaks off at the ground, and the wind carries these vegetable globes whithersoever it pleaseth. At the proper season thousands of them come scudding over the plain rolling, leaping, bounding with vast racket, to the dismay both of the horse and his rider. Once, on the plain north of Hamath, my horse became quite unmanageable among them. They charged down upon us on the wings of the wind, which broke them from their moorings, and sent them careering over the desert in countless numbers. Our excellent native itinerant, A—— F——, had a similar encounter with them on the eastern desert beyond the Hauran, and his horse was so terrified that he was obliged to alight and lead him. I have long suspected that this wild artichoke is the gulgal, which, in Psalm lxxxiii. 13, is rendered "wheel," and in Isaiah xvii. 13, "a rolling thing." Evidently our translators knew not what to call it. Hundreds of these globes, all bounding like gazelles in one direction over the desert, would suddenly wheel short round at the bidding of a counter-blast, and dash away with equal speed on their new course. An Arab proverb addresses this "rolling thing" thus: "Ho! 'akkûb, where do you put up to-night?" to which it answers as it flies, "Where the wind puts up." They also derive one of their many forms of cursing from this plant: "May you be whirled like the 'akkûb, before the wind, until you are caught in the thorns, or plunged into the sea." If this is not the "wheel" of David, and the "rolling thing" of Isaiah, from which they also borrowed their imprecations upon the wicked, I have seen nothing in the country to suggest the comparison. — W. M. Thomson.

PSALM THE EIGHTY-FOURTH.

1—4. (1) amiable, a singular adj. to apply to places, better, how lovely. tabernacles, the plural form is used prob. in ref. to the various buildings wh. composed the temple. (2) fainteth, or is consumed with desire. crieth out, "ring out their joy, for the pilgrim can now expect to have his 'thirst for the living God' satisfied." living God, Ps. xlii. 2. (3) sparrow,[c] referred to as familiar to the Psalmist in its association with the sanctuary. thine altars, we need not suppose that these birds built their nests actually in the altars; the poet blends himself with his figure of the birds. "Still the swallow seeks the temple inclosure at Jerusalem, and the mosque of Omar, as a secure and and safe nesting-place."— Tristram. (4) dwell,[d] the officials who are always at the tabernacle. still, Polychr., "all the day long."

Desire. — I. The object of Desire: (1) The house of the Lord; (2) The Lord of the house; the life of God in us and our life in Him. II. The Occasion of the Desire. Exclusion from the Sanctuary. David says not, Oh how I long for my palace, my crown, my sceptre, my kingdom; but Oh how I long to return to the house of God! III The Strength of the Desire. (1) It was an way of virtue, are we lost? Is there no medicine called sweet mercy?" — Beaumont and Fletcher.

a Comp. Is. xvii. 13.

b "There cannot possibly be more than One whose name is Jehovah, and so when His Name is mentioned, of necessity He is mentioned, and therefore 'He is His Name, and His Name is He.'" — Jennings and Lowe.

"We would that all sinners were exterminated by their being regenerated into saints." — Wm. Jones.

"One of the things for which we ought to be most grateful is, that God will not give us what he knows is not best for us, even if we ask for it over and over again. And one prayer that we can always pray in all sincerity and faith is, that God will refuse to give us what is not good, when we do ask for it." — S. S. Times.

"Love and hate are wretched artists — indifference will draw the line true and display the color as it is."

author,— unknown; date, early exile

A Psalm concerning the consolations of Divine worship.

Gittith, see title Ps. viii.

c Tsippor, any small bird. Derôr, the swallow, so called from its gyrations.

d Je. xx. 6.

inward longing, "my soul longeth," etc.; (2) A painful longing, "yea, fainteth;" (3) A prayerful longing, "my heart crieth out;" (4) An entire longing, "my heart and my flesh," etc.; Or, I. The value of God's house is known by attending it. II. It is better known by being afterwards banished from it. III. It is best known by being restored to it. — Geo. Rogers.

Sir Thomas More used to attend the parish church at Chelsea, and there, putting on a surplice, he would sing with the choristers at matins and high mass. It happened, one day, that the Duke of Norfolk coming to Chelsea to dine with him, found him at church thus engaged. As they walked home together arm-in-arm, after service, the duke exclaimed, "My Lord Chancellor a parish clerk! A parish clerk! you dishonor the king and his office!" "Nay," he replied, smiling, "your Grace cannot suppose that the king, our master, will be offended with me for serving his Master, or thereby account his office dishonored." — Spurgeon.

5—7. (5) strength, etc.,[a] reference is to those who do love and rejoice in God, though they are not actual officials in His house. heart . . ways, lit. "ways in their heart." The high roads leading to the city are in their thoughts.[b] Polychr., "To whom a pilgrimage is never out of their mind."— Cam. Bib. "In whose hearts are the highways (to Zion)." (6) Baca, R. V., "Weeping;" marg. "balsam trees," a figurative expression. Prob. no particular valley is referred to. All the ancient versions render Baca by weeping; but some take it to be the name of a kind of a mulberry tree wh. drops, as it were, tears of balm.[c] rain . . pools, R. V., "the early rain covereth it with blessings." (7) strength to strength, ever renewing strength in spite of the toils of the way. appeareth before God, "technical term for visiting the sanctuary at the great festivals."

Who is the blessed man? (vs. 5). — Consider — I. Who this man is that speaks thus. 1. He is a thinking man; 2. A believing man; 3. An obedient man; 4. A devout man. II. His blessedness — he whose strength is in God; not, then, as Samson — he who has spiritual strength. 1. Let the weak learn where his true strength lies; 2. Let all prize the ordinances where this strength may be found. — R. Cecil.

The Valley of Baca. — The pure in heart can find and see God anywhere. He who worships truly carries his Holy of Holies with him. He who takes his own fire need never complain of the cold, and with wood and fire all prepared, he can find or he can build an altar upon any mount. Happy is the soul that has learned to lean upon God, who can say, amid all the distractions and interventions of man, "My soul, wait thou only upon God." To such a one, whose soul is athirst for God, the Valley of Baca becomes a well, while the hot rock pours out its streams of blessing. — Burton.

8—12. (8) hear my prayer, evidently the prayer he offered was for restoration to the city and worship of God. (9) our shield, Ps. iii. 3; xxviii. 7; lix. 11.[d] R. V., marg. "Behold our shield, O God;" i. e. the king is the shield as God's representative. thine anointed, show favor to the king whom Thou didst anoint. (10) For . . thousand, Polychr., "Better is a day in Thy courts than elsewhere a thousand." be a doorkeeper, lit. "lie on the threshold;" occupy the meanest office in God's house.[e] "The poet would rather be the humblest of the guests of Jehovah than dwell at ease among the heathen. He has the spirit of the publican." — Cheyne. (11) Lord God, Jehovah-Elohim. sun, only place in wh. God is so called.[f] grace and glory, present grace and future glory comprise God's full salvation. (12) trusteth in thee, wherever he may be, in Zion, or on pilgrim's road.

"Grace" and "glory." — God being such, "grace and glory" will flow from Him to those who seek Him. These two are given simultaneously, not, as sometimes supposed, in succession, as though grace were the sum of gifts for earth, and glory the all-comprehending expression for the higher bestowments of heaven. The Psalmist thinks that both are possessed here. Grace is the sum of God's gifts, coming from His loving regard to His sinful and inferior creatures. Glory is the reflection of His own lustrous perfection, which irradiates lives that are turned to Him, and makes them shine, as a poor piece of broken pottery will, when the sunlight falls on it. Since God is the sum of all good, to possess Him is to possess it all. The one gift unfolds into all things lovely and needful. It is the raw material, as it were, out of which can be shaped, according to transient and multiform needs, everything that can be desired or can bless a soul. —Exp. Bib.

"A custom, existing among several nations of antiquity, is deemed capable of illustrating the present passage. For birds whose nests chanced to be built on the temples, or within the limits of them, were not allowed to be driven away, much less to be killed, and found there a secure and undisturbed abode." — W. K. Clay.

a "Who makes Thee his strength, and strongly stays himself upon Thee." — Mat Henry.

b "They cherish the remembrance of caravan journeys to the national festivals. Every spot of the familiar road, every station at which they have rested, lives in their heart." — Perowne.

"Like some nomads brought into city life, they are always longing to escape. The caged eagle sits on the highest point of his prison, and looks with filmed eye to the free heavens."

c "The meaning is, Blessed are they who can, by faith and endurance, make the dreary spots of life a source of spiritual joy" — Jennings and Lowe.

d Comp. Ge. xv. 1.

e The Korahites, to whom the Ps. was addressed, were doorkeepers in the temple. 1 Chr. xxvi. 13-19.

f Comp., however, Ps. xxvii. 1; Is. lx. 19; Mal. iv. 2

"This is a Korahite psalm, and the descendants of Korah were, in fact, 'keepers of the gates of the tabernacle, and keepers of the entry,' as well as being permitted to swell the chorus of the inspired singers of Israel." — Bossuet

PSALM THE EIGHTY-FIFTH.

1—3. (1) favourable, or well-pleased. Thou hast dealt graciously. thy land, Canaan being regarded as in a special sense God's. brought Jacob, Polychr., "turned the captivity;" this is naturally applied to the return from Babylon, but it suits recovery from any calamity.[a] (2) iniquity, Ps. xxxii 1. covered, O. T. idea of atonement; "as the covering of an offense, wh. would otherwise meet the eye of the judge and call for punishment." (3) taken away, i. e. withdrawn the wrath wh. was let loose. wrath, comp. 2 Chr. xii. 7. turned, etc., marg. "turned thine anger from waxing hot." The captives might well rejoice that the wrath of God had been limited, and so they had not been wholly destroyed.

A grateful recollection.—I. Of national deliverance. II. Of the removal of the Divine anger. III. Of the bestowal of forgiveness.—Wm. Jones.

Ps. lxxxv.—This beautiful psalm, like some others, has come down to us without name or date; the production of some unknown poetic genius, touched, purified, and exalted by the fire of celestial inspiration; a precious relic of that golden age when the Hebrew music was instinct with a spirit such as never breathed on Greece or Rome. It is interesting to reflect on the anonymous origin of some of the psalms: to remember how largely the church of God is indebted to some nameless worthies who wrote for us hymns and spiritual songs, full of richer strains than were ever poured forth by the most illustrious of pagan name. These holy men are passed away; they have left no record of their history; but they have bequeathed legacies of rich, varied, and inspired sentiments, which will render the church debtors to them to the end of time.—John Stoughton.

4—7. (4) Turn us,[b] or restore us, Je. xxxi. 18: Ps. lxxx. 7. (5) for ever, continuously. Delivered fr. Bab., the exiles hoped for rest, but instead found increasing distress and anxiety, wh., to them, indicated God's continued anger.[c] draw out, prolong it; make it spread over. (6) revive us,[d] as a nation, by giving full rest and prosperity; restore the ancient times. (7) mercy, the cry for mercy always recognizes that judgment is deserved.

Spiritual revival (vs. 6).—In discussing this text establish the following proposition; That a spiritual revival will be the object and prayer of every renewed heart under a sense of spiritual decay. Observe the following points; This prayer will not be understood by the world; it is easy to maintain the form of religion; examine the means by which Christians are revived; note the ground on which this revival is urged.—R. Cecil.

Revival.—Many Christians have come to have a distaste for the word "revival" when used with reference to religious work. There has been so much exaggeration, so much fanatical excitement, and so much transient profession, that I cannot wonder at the revulsion which many sober-minded Christians feel when they hear the very word "revival." All "got-up" revivals are bad. You cannot organize a true revival: you cannot treat spiritual influence as fixed quantities. As a matter of fact, there have been extraordinary visitations of Divine influence; there have been seasons when the Holy Ghost has made the earthquake, the fire, the rending wind, and the stormy tempest His ministers, and when men have been shaken with a wholesome fear, not knowing the way, yet feeling the nearness of the Lord. There have been great birthdays in the church, when prodigals have come back to sonship, when shepherds have returned with recovered flocks, and the dead have risen to immortal life. There have, too, been times when the people have realized with special vividness the personality and life-giving power of the Holy Ghost; when they have had the keys of interpretation wherewith to unlock the boundless treasures of the Divine Word; when prayer was as the speech of love that never wearies; when the Sabbath shed its sacred glory over all the days of the week; when God's house shone with heavenly lustre, and all life throbbed in joyful harmony with the purposes of God. Cannot such delights be more permanently secured? At the same time, we are not constituted for constant rapture; we have to contend with the deceitfulness of the flesh; we have to fight and suffer upon the earth. Still there is danger that we may be content with low attainments. There is a steady and penetrating glow of piety, there is a fervor of love, there is an animated intelligence, a zealous affection, a godly yearning for personal progress and social author,—unknown; date, after the return from captivity

Prayer to realize the full blessings of restoration.

a Comp. Job xlii. 10; Ps. xiv. 7; lxviii. 18

"Mistake is often made by limiting the work of God's ministers to the 'spiritual' and 'personal' part of their work. Every true minister is a leader of his people in recognizing God's work in the nation, and in renewing national thanksgiving and trust."—R. Tuck.

b "This portion of the Ps. implies that the people were in a state of great distress and weakness, such as is described in Ezra and Nehemiah."—Spk. Com.

c Ezr. ix. 8, 9; Is. lvii. 15.

d Ho. vi. 1, 2; Hab iii. 2.

"Constant revival, no autumn, no winter, but perpetual summer, is that which the church needs, and which must precede the coming millenium."

"As meadows parched, brown groves and withering flowers, imbibe the sparkling dew and genial showers; as chill, dark air inhales the morning beam; as thirsty hearts enjoy the gelid stream;—thus to man's grateful soul from heaven descend, the mercies of his Father, Lord, and Friend!"—Sir William Jones.

"We never have been strong and safe except when we leaned on God, and fully opened our heart and life to Divine guidance."

evangelization, which, when found together, make up a life of delight in God, and blessed service for men. — J Parker.

8–10. (8) will hear, wait and listen with expectancy; watching unto prayer.[a] for . . saints, Ps. lxxxix. 15–17. to folly, Polychr., "Lest, at last, they sink into folly!" Best applied to the idolatry which had brought such national calamities. (9) nigh, so ready to be granted as soon as there is readiness to receive. glory, i. e. "the manifest presence of God, as in the Shechinah — to tabernacle in the land. The condition of God's dwelling with men is their acceptance of His salvation. That purifies hearts to be temples." — Exp. Bib. dwell, is the word specially used of the abiding of God among His people, from which later Heb. derived the term Shechinah for the Presence of God in the Tabernacle and Temple. — Cam. Bib. (10) Mercy, etc.,[b] restored Israel will reveal the attributes of God to wh. it owes its existence, by reflecting them in social and civic life.

a Hab. ii. 1.

b "The four virtues mentioned here are the cardinal virtues of Christ's kingdom." —Calvin.

"On God's part gracious goodness and faithfulness have combined, then on man's equity and peace." — Jennings and Lowe.

"A saint, is one who has listened to God; who has heard the words of peace from His lips; who has been reconciled; and who knows that he is so. Therefore he seeks to be holy. He hates his former folly. He does not make his free pardon a reason for returning to it."— Wm. Jones.

The words of the Lord (vs. 8) — I. The listener. Man's duty and privilege to be a listener to God. II. The speaker. God — He speaks powerfully, decisively, attractively, etc. III. The message. Peace — might have been wrath. IV. The confidence. When God speaks we know what to expect. V. The issue. Not to return again to folly, but to lead a holy life."— H. Bonar. — Note on vs. 10. — Dr. Boothroyd, "Righteousness and peace have embraced." In the Hindoo book, called Iraku-Vangesham, it is said the "lotus flowers were kissing each other." When the branches of two separate trees meet, in consequence of strong winds, it is said, "they kiss each other." When a young palmirah tree which grows near the parent stock begins to move (by the wind), the people say, "Ah! the mother is kissing the daughter." A woman says of the ornaments around her neck, "Yes, these embrace my neck." Has a female put on the nose-ring, it is, it is said, kissing her. The idea, therefore, is truly Oriental, and shows the intimate union of righteousness and peace. — Roberts.

11–13. (11) Truth, responsive to God's great mercy there shall be man's fruits of good works. from heaven, like some approving angel.[c] (12) yield her increase, as of old, covenant faithfulness being sealed of God by temporal prosperities.[d] (13) set . . steps, lit. "shall make His steps a way" for us to walk in.[e] Ps. lxxxix. 14.

c Is. xlv. 8.

d "This vs. shows us that the power of fruitfulness was not once for all bestowed on the earth, but that every year it is fertilized by the secret virtue of God, according as He sees fit to testify to us His goodness." —Calvin.

In His steps. — We are apt to provide for the expansion of our plans, but not for shrinkage; and he is the wise man who humbly follows God's leading; who, though his road seems to lie straight and broad before him, out into wide domains of usefulness, happiness, and power, yet when God suddenly turns down some by-path, full of windings, leading he does not dream whither, obediently and cheerfully follows, content to go in dark and crooked ways with God, rather than on the widest path without Him. I remember once, in Italy, climbing a mountain up which a broad, fine carriage road led almost to the summit; but there the road suddenly ceased, and nothing appeared but a narrow foot-path leading round the shoulder of the mountain, and that soon dwindled into a sheep-track; and the sun beat down with terrible power, and the way was rough, and more than once I was tempted to go back; but never shall I forget the vision which burst upon me as at last I reached the end of the narrow way; it repaid all the toil. So, I say, do not be afraid of the narrow way if God turns you into it. The great thing is that He lead you; and if He lead, even though His footsteps are not known, you know that His way is in holiness, and ends at last in eternal good. — M. R. Vincent.

e 1 Pe. ii. 21.

"Righteousness goes forth before Him, and makes its footsteps away." — Hengstenberg.

"Righteousness shall go before Him, and attend unto the way of His steps." — Delitzsch.

Milton must have had this passage in his mind in the Ode on the Nativity:

> Yea, truth and justice then
> Will down return to men,
> Orb'd in a rainbow; and, like glories wearing,
> Mercy will sit between,
> Throned in celestial sheen,
> With radiant feet the tissued clouds down steering;
> And heaven, as at some festival,
> Will open wide the gates of her high palace hall.

"A man may look long and bitterly at his sins and forget that Christ died for him. But if he believes that Christ died for him he cannot help remembering his sins."—Henry Van Dyke.

PSALM THE EIGHTY-SIXTH.

"This psalm is a mosaic of fragments from other psalms and scriptures. Pss. xxv., xxvi., xxvii., xl., liv. are quoted almost verbatim." 1—5. (1) Bow down, Ps. xvii. 6; incline Thine ear. hear, R. V., "answer." poor and needy, "afflicted and poor," Ps. xl. 17.[a] (2) am holy, "the object of the loving-kindness," he claims the covenant relationship.[b] (3) merciful, or favorable. daily, lit. "all day long." (4) lift . . soul, Ps. xxv. 1. (5) ready to forgive, Joel. ii. 13.[c] "It is on the broad ground of God's mercy, and of that mercy as freely bestowed on all who seek it, that he rests."

Ready to forgive. — I. We have not to persuade or argue Him into the mind to forgive; He is ready through what Christ has done. II. He is ready to forgive all sins. III. He is ready to forgive all sinners. IV. He is ready to forgive freely. V. He is ready to forgive now. — J. Bate.

Ready to forgive (vs. 5). — An old author mentions a story of Satan's appearing to a dying man, and showing him a large parchment roll, wherein were written on each side the numberless sins of the sick man. There were written his idle words, which made up three-quarters of all he had ever spoken, together with the false words, the unchaste words, the angry words; afterwards came in order his vain and ungodly words; and, lastly, his actions, according to the commandments: whereupon Satan said, "See here thy virtues; see here what thy examination must be." The man answered, "It is true, Satan: but thou hast not set down all; for thou shouldest have added and set down here below, 'The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin;' and this also ought not to have been forgotten, 'That whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life;'" whereupon the devil vanished.

6—10. (6) supplications, the Heb. form is a peculiar one, prob. meaning "importunate supplications." — Delitzsch. (7) In . . thee, Ps. xx. 1; l. 15; lxxvii. 2. (8) Among the gods, "the imaginary gods of the heathen — not, perhaps, known to the Psalmist to be wholly imaginary — are probably meant." Ex. xv. 11.[d] neither . . works, comp. De. iii. 24. The mere gods have nothing to show that will bear comparison with Thy works. (9) All nations, etc., an anticipation of the conversion of the heathen.[e]

The day of trouble. — I. A period with which all men are acquainted. 1. The individual character of trouble; 2. The limited duration of trouble. II. A resolve which all men should make. III. A result which all men may anticipate. "Thou wilt answer me." 1. Because Thou hast promised to do so; 2. Because Thou hast done so; 3. Because of what Thou art. — Wm. Jones.

The word of God has been the comfort of very many in the prospect of sufferings and death. We are told of the brothers De Witt, the renowned Dutch statesmen, that when their assassins found them, the brothers heard them approach without alarm. Cornelius De Witt, broken down by the agonies of torture, was lying on his bed, and John was seated before a table reading the Bible to his brother, to strengthen him against the fear of death and the anguish of the last hour of life. — Anec. Illus. of O. T. Texts.

11—13. (11) Teach, etc., Ps. xxvii. 11. unite my heart, Polychr., "Direct my heart solely," etc. He desires singleness and simplicity of aim to the glory of God.[f] (12) praise, in order that he may give worthy thanks the Psalmist desires the whole or united heart. (13) lowest hell, R. V., marg. "from sheol beneath:" poetical for exceeding depth of affliction.[g]

Consecration. —

O Infinite of goodness and of glory!
The knee that Thou hast shaped shall bend to Thee;
The tongue which Thou hast tuned shall chant Thy praise,
And Thine own image, the immortal soul,
Shall consecrate herself to Thee forever.

14—17. (14) proud, etc., "the insolent." assemblies, i. e. the "crew," or "rabble." Ps. liv. 3. set thee, do not act, as I ever would, with an earnest desire to Thy glory. (15) compassion, etc. the char of God gives the author, — unknown; time, early exile

Prayer of a persecuted saint.

a "This is not the highest ground that can be taken in pressing for an answer to our prayer, but it is a ground which God suffers us to take." —Perowne.

Ps xxxv. 10; xxxvii. 14; lxxiv. 21.

b "The Psalmist merely declares that he is one whose habit of life is piety, and as such claims God's protection."—Jennings and Lowe.

c Comp. Ex. xx. 6; xxiv. 6, 9; Nu. xiv. 18, 19.

d Ps. lxxi. 19; lxxvii. 13; lxxxix. 6; xcv. 3.

e "The pious Jews believed that God's common relation to all would be ultimately acknowledged by all men. (Ps. xlv. 12-16; xlvii. 9)."—Fausset.

"Sincerity brings a man's will into subjection to the will of God. This is that holy oil which makes the wheels of the soul run nimbly, even in the difficult paths of obedience."—John Flavel.

f "That all the various desires, interests, passions, that agitate the human heart, may have no hold upon him, compared with the one thing needful—'to fear God's name.'"—Perowne.

Je. xxxii. 39.

g "The deep abyss, or the undermost Hades, is the place wherein the departed await the final judgment."—Jennings and Lowe.

Psalmist courage to offer a prayer for help. Ex. xxxiv. 6. longsuffering, R. V., "slow to anger." (16) son . . handmaid, Ps. cxvi. 16. He pleads that he is a servant of Jehovah from his very birth. (17) token, some sign of evident good-will. holpen, an older form for helped, wh. has passed out of use.

Tokens for good (vs. 17). — I. The thing prayed for, a token for good. This may be — 1. Inward, as peace, joy, calmness in the midst of danger and perplexity; 2. Outward, as prosperity, silence of animosity. II. The purpose for which it was asked — 1. That His enemies might see how God helped the man whom men despised; 2. That men might learn how God comforts His servants.

"Is it not the fact that the more we recognize in every daily occurrence God's secret inspiration guiding and controlling us, the more will all which to others wears a common every-day aspect, to us prove a sign and a wondrous work?" — Tholuck.

PSALM THE EIGHTY-SEVENTH.

author,— unknown; date, prob. that of the rebuilding of the Temple

Subj., the flowing of all nations unto Zion.

1—3. (1) His foundation, i. e. the city and temple wh. He has founded. We may render as if the Psalmist pointed to yonder city, saying, "'Tis His foundation on the holy hills." The Polychr. supplies the line: "How fair is the city of God which He has founded," etc. mountains, this the character of the district around Zion.[a] (2) gates, put for the whole of Zion,[b] "specially appropriate with ref. to the thought of the crowd of pilgrims entering it from all nations."— Cam. Bib. dwellings, i. e. better than any other city or town in Israel. (3) Glorious things, by prophets, and by this poet, such as are given in the succeeding verses.

Mountains. — The situation of Jerusalem is in several respects singular amongst the cities of Palestine. Its elevation is remarkable, occasioned, not from its being on the summit of one of the numerous hills of Judæa, like most of the towns and villages, but because it is on the edge of one of the highest table-lands of the country. Hebron, indeed, is higher still, by some hundred feet; and from the south, accordingly, the approach to Jerusalem is by a slight descent. But from every other side the ascent is perpetual; and, to the traveler approaching Jerusalem from the west or east, it must always have presented the appearance, beyond any other capital of the then known world — we may add, beyond any important city that has ever existed on the earth — of a mountain city; breathing, as compared with the sultry plains of the Jordan or of the coast, a mountain air; enthroned, as compared with Jericho or Damascus, Gaza or Tyre, on a mountain fastness. In this respect it concentrated in itself the character of the whole country of which it was to be the capital — the "mountain throne," the "mountain sanctuary," of God. "The 'mount' of God is as the 'mount' of Bashan; a high mount as the mount of Bashan. Why leap ye so, ye high 'mountains'? this is the 'mountain' which God desireth to dwell in." It was emphatically the lair of the lion of Judah, of "Ariel," the Lion of God. "In Judah is God known; His name is great in Israel. In Salem is His 'leafy covert,' and His 'rocky den' in Zion. Thou art more glorious and excellent than the 'mountains of the robbers.'" And this wild and fastness-like character of Jerusalem was concentrated yet again in the fortress, the "stronghold" of Zion. That point, the highest in the city, the height which most readily catches the eye from every quarter, is emphatically the "hill fort," the "rocky hold" of Jerusalem — the refuge where first the Jebusite, and then the Lion of God, stood at bay against the hunters. — Stanley.

"Jerus. was on the ridge, the broadest and most strongly marked ridge of the backbone of the complicated hills wh extend through the whole country fr. the desert to the plain of Esdraelon." — Stanley.

"Zion is founded by God Himself. The mountains on which it stands are made holy by the Divine dwelling. On their head shines a glory before which the light that lies on the rock crowned by the Parthenon or on the seven hills of Rome pales."—Exp. Bib.

b Comp. Ps. cxxii. 2; and for prophecy, Is. lx. 11.

4—7. (4) I will, i. e. the Almighty; these words are the words of God. Rahab,[c] haughtiness or pride; so a name poetically given to Egypt. Babylon, known in David's time as the stronghold of idolatry. to them, better, "as among them." this man, better, this one: this nation; so also in vss. 5 and 6; each one of these nations shall come to claim rights of adopted citizenship in Zion.[d] "It is God's purpose to reconcile all nations to Himself. All shall be incorporated into the commonwealth of Israel." (5) of Zion, concerning Zion.[e] establish, protect, strengthen. (6) count, or number. writeth up, "maketh a census of the Gentile world." (7) singers, etc., this represents the Gentiles coming in a procession, with singing and choral dances, to Zion, and saying, "All my fresh springs, i. e. sources of life and joy, are in Thee."

c Ps. lxxxix. 10; Is. li. 9.

d "A stranger who becomes a proselyte is like a little child that is born." — Hebrew Saying.

Birthplaces. — When events shall be traced to their principles at the last day, many a scene will come forth into prominence, which now is of little regard. Humble churches will then prove to have been the birthplace, and stately palaces the graves of many an immortal soul, while every saved soul e "The Ps. represents the Almighty as presenting every convert to the Holy City, and saying, 'This and this, one and all, belong to thee: every one is thy own child'"—Spk. Com.

will ascribe its springs of glory to its Redeemer, through the instrumentality of that church, which He has ordained. — Edward Garrard Marsh. — The sources of holy joy (vs. 7). — "I have read," says Brooks, "of a company of poor Christians who were banished into some remote part; and one standing by, seeing them pass along, said that it was a very sad condition those people were in, to be thus hurried from the society of men and made companions with the beasts of the field. 'True,' said another, 'it were a sad condition indeed if they were carried to a place where they should not find their God: but let them be of good cheer, God goes along with them, and will exhibit the comforts of His presence whithersoever they go. God's presence with His people is a spring that never fails.'" Psalm 87.— It is God's purpose to reconcile all nations to Himself. Egypt, the world-power of the South, the ancient and hereditary enemy of God's people; Babylon, the world-power of the North, the cruel oppressor of later times; warlike Philistia, by which Israel had so often been harassed; proud Tyre, the haughty representative of commerce and wealth; distant Ethiopia, famous for its stalwart warriors (Is. xviii. 7);—all will be brought to recognize Jehovah as their God; all shall be incorporated into the commonwealth of Israel (Eph. ii. 12). The thought is the same as that of Is. xix. 24, 25, though it is expressed in different language. — Cam. Bib.

"The Hebrews seem to have surpassed all nations in the skill of poetry and music; and every citizen could sing and dance. This preeminence the Psalmist seems to hint at."— Alexander Geddes.

"Let us make our crown nobler with brighter jewels, as we work now in this majestic parenthesis of history between the birth of Christ and his glorious coming in the future."— R. S. Storrs.

PSALM THE EIGHTY-EIGHTH.

author,— unknown: date, early exile.

1—5. (1) of my salvation, the expression of trust, wh. scarcely recurs again in this sad and cheerless Ps. cried day and night, lit. "day I have cried, night (my plaint is) before Thee."[a] "Like Job he must appeal to God even when God seems wholly alienated from him." (2) cry, here cry of mourning; the term is generally used for a shout of exultation. (3) full of troubles, "satiated with evils."[b] grave, sheol, Ps. xvi. 10. (4) no strength, R. V., "that hath no help;" utterly prostrate.[c] (5) Free, castaway; left alone, with none to care for me, as if I were dead. the slain, etc., i. e. the corpse flung without care into a nameless grave. rememberest, sheol is the "land of oblivion," where men neither remember God (vi. 5; xxx. 9) nor are remembered by Him.— Cam. Bib. cut . . hand, Job xii. 10; no longer sustained and guided by the Divine hand.

The God of salvation (vs. 1).— I. Of His many titles this is one of the most endearing. II. If God is the source of my salvation, who shall hinder? III. If He saves me, let me serve Him. IV. If He saves me, who need despair? V. As the God of my salvation, He has the same purpose of mercy and the same plan for all who come to Him that they may be saved.

Psalm 88. — This is the saddest psalm in the whole Psalter. It is a pathetic cry of hopeless despair in the midst of unrelieved suffering. In other psalms the light breaks through the clouds at last; here the gloom is deepest at the close. It is characteristic that the last word is darkness. It seems best to regard it as springing out of the personal experience of some heavily afflicted saint. He had been, it would seem, a victim of the painful and loathsome disease of leprosy from his childhood. Life had been for him a living death. He stood on the brink of the grave: nay, though still alive on earth, he seemed to have been plunged into the darkness of sheol. Banished from society, he could have no part in the joys of life; excluded from the temple, he could have no share in the worship which was the outward and visible sign of God's covenant with His people. The wrath of God seemed to be resting upon him. Nor could he look forward to a life through death in which his soul "delivered from the burden of the flesh" would be "in joy and felicity." Death, as it then seemed, must sever the covenant relation between God and His people. Sheol was the land of oblivion, where neither He remembered them nor they remembered Him. Still less could he console himself with the hope of a joyful resurrection. Such a psalm brings home to us, as no other does, a sense of the shadow which rested upon the life of ancient Israel, and of the preciousness of the revelation of eternal life in Jesus Christ (Heb. ii. 14, 15). It is moreover a noble example of a faith which trusts God utterly in spite of all discouragement, and cleaves to God most passionately when God seems to have withdrawn Himself most completely. — Cam. Bib.

[a] "Expressive of the Psalmist's trouble, gasping, so to speak, for utterance."—Kay.

[b] Job x. 15; Ps. cxxiii. 4; La. iii. 15, 30.

[c] "The Heb. word implies utter failure of bodily power. The man is become a mere shadow." — Spk. Com.

"There is no immunity so long as we are in the flesh; there is no truce, but constant unrest distracts us. Liberty, therefore, is given to us after death, because we rest from our labors."— Franciscus Vatablus.

"Men of tender heart and loving sympathy and gentle touch are wanted to give comfort to the world's sorrow, to help other tempted men in their battles, to rescue the perishing out of their bondage."— J. R. Miller.

"Here the term simply expresses the Psalmist's conviction that He is one of God's people, a child of grace." — Spk. Com.

6—9. (6) deeps, used fig. for the depths of misery, Ps. lxix. 15. (7) Thy wrath, affliction being regarded as Div. chastisement. all thy waves, Ps. xlii. 7.[a] (8) put away, comp. Job's case.[b] acquaintance, better, "familiar friends.' an abomination, as a leper would become; see case of King Uzziah.[c] shut up, either as leper, or by reason of the weakness indicated in vs. 4. (9) eye mourneth, R. V., "wasteth away;" Ps. vi. 7; tears being conceived to injure the eye.

Waves of sorrow (vs. 7). — I. They are many, of various sizes, and succeed each other. II. They often bear others whom we love away from us. III. They carry us away from our creature confidences. IV. They show us what perfect weakness we are. V. But they are God's waves. He made the sea, can bid it arise, and be still if He will, there may be a storm in the calm of life, or a calm in the tempest. VI. Presently there will be no more sea, and His people will be brought to their desired haven, and land safely like the companions of St. Paul.

Thy waves. — The ocean was a fearful mystery, and neither science nor experience mitigated its terrors. You never find in Old Testament poetry any of those musings upon the beauty of the sea, any of those expressions of restfulness and delight in its contemplation, which so abound in the writings of modern poets. David's ideal of happy repose is not a seaside retreat, but a walk by still waters. It is when he wishes to picture trouble, grief, sore extremity, frightful rage, that he brings in the sea. The very extreme of disaster from which God is confidently appealed to as a refuge, is the carrying of the mountains into the midst of the sea. God is our refuge even then; "though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof." — W. R. Vincent.

10—13. (10) shew . . dead? This expresses the Psalmist's feeling of the improbability that he could ever be restored fr. such extreme sickness, which was like a living death: "the consideration urged in other psalms as a reason for Divine intervention (vi. 5; xxx. 9, etc.) is that His power had no field for its manifestation in the grave, and that He could draw no revenue of praise from the pale lips that lay silent there."— Exp. Bib. (11) destruction, Abaddon, a proper name for sheol as a place of ruin.[d] (12) land of forgetfulness, "where the dead have no remembrance, and where they are wholly forgotten." — Spk. Com. (13) have I cried, even in my uttermost troubles.[e] prevent thee, Polychr., "goes to meet Thee," as if ready before God awaked.

The great wonder worker (vss. 10–12). — Does God show His wonders to the dead? Yes, for they shall not all sleep, but behold the King in His beauty; yes, for the silent lips shall praise Him; yes, for the grave shall hear His voice; yes, for God's faithfulness shall be at last seen notwithstanding the destruction of our dearest hopes; yes, for in the darkness of our sorrow His mercy shall appear.

14—18. (14) why, etc., the questioning of all great sufferers, Ps. xlii. 9. hidest, etc., Job xiii. 24. (15) from my youth, poss. as afflicted with a life-long malady.[f] distracted, "the grammatical form of the word indicates a giving way of the will."— Spk. Com. Polychr., "The dread of Thee weighs on me heavily; I faint." (16) terrors, term used in Job.[g] cut me off, "stricken me dumb." (17) daily, all the day. (18) lover, etc., see vs. 8. darkness,[h] Cheyne, "My familiar friends are darkness [and the grave]!"

The hiding of God's face. — Numerous are the complaints of good men under this dark cloud; and to a child of light it is indeed a darkness that may be felt; it beclouds and bewilders the mind; the brightest evidences are in a great measure hid; the Bible itself is sealed and fast closed; we see not our signs nor our tokens for good; ever good thing is at a distance from us, behind the cloud, and we cannot get at it; there is a dismal gloom upon our path; we know not where we are, where to step, nor which way to steer; which way God is gone we know not, but He knoweth the way that we take; and such a prayer as this suits us well — Seek Thy servants, for we are lost.— William Huntington.

a "Now seeing so horrible a flood prevented not the prophet from lifting up his heart and prayers to God, we may learn by his example to cast the anchor of faith and prayer into heaven in all our shipwrecks." Calvin.

b Job xix. 13, 14.

c Job xxx. 10.

"Masters and kings in the East show their dignity by speaking as little as possible. They convey their wishes and express their feelings by their looks, or by simple movements of their hands." — Pul. Com.

d Job xxvi. 6; Re. ix. 11.

e "This unwearied 'continuing instant in prayer' is the victory of faith in the midst of trials which, but for this, would end in despair" — Perowne.

"God always intends His people more comfort from every mercy He gives them than the mercy itself, abstractedly considered, would amount to." — Gurnall.

f "The meaning prob. is that the unhappy sufferer has a constitutional tendency to diseases such as that with wh. he is now so severely afflicted." — Jennings and Lowe.

g Job vi. 4; ix. 34; xiii. 21, etc.

h "The Ps. ends with an energetic expression of its main thought — the immediate vicinity of death. The darkness is thickest at the end, just as it is in the morning before the rising of the sun." — Hengstenberg.

PSALM THE EIGHTY-NINTH.

author,— unknown; date, the early exile

1, 2. (1) mercies, "loving kindness," "gracious acts," "sure mercies of David," Is. lv. 3. (2) built up, like some stately palace. "He is persuaded that one stone after another will continue to be laid in the building of God's loving kindness till it reaches to heaven itself, even though it may now seem to be a deserted ruin." very heavens, i. e. conspicuous as sun and moon;[a] lit. "as for the heavens Thou wilt establish Thy faithfulness in them."

The believer's song (vs. 1).—I. Its subject—Thy mercies, many, great, varied, repeated—Providence, creation, grace. II. Its length—forever, for His mercies are new every morning, and the year is crowned with them. III. Its purpose—To make known, etc., sing them in private, in the family, in the congregation; sing them with the heart, mouth, life. Happy if with my latest breath, etc.

"I will sing."—It is to be observed that he does not say, I will speak of the goodness of the Lord; but, I will sing. The celebration of the Divine goodness has joined with itself the joy and exultation of a pious mind, which cannot be poured forth better than in song. That pleasantness and exuberance of a happy spirit, which by singing is instilled into the ears of the listeners, has a certain wonderful power of moving the affections; so that not in vain were pious minds taught by the Holy Spirit to inculcate the wonderful work of God in songs composed for this purpose, to commit them to memory and to appoint them to be sung.—Musculus.

3—5. (3) covenant, the sum of the promise to David, vss. 14, 19 ff., cf. 2 Sa. vii. 5-16. chosen, so Dav. is spoken of, 1 Ki. viii. 16. (4) Thy seed, fulfilled in Messiah and His spiritual kingdom. build up, establish and confirm. (5) congregation, etc., prob. with reference to the dwellers in heaven, i. e. the angels. saints, R. V., "holy ones."

Covenant.—I. The covenant made. 1. With whom?—with David and in him with David's Lord and Son. The true David—the chosen one—the servant of the Father in redemption. 2. For what?—(1) For his seed. He should have a seed and that seed should be established. (2) For himself, "his throne," etc. II. The covenant confirmed. 1. By decree. "I have made," etc. 2. By promise. "I will establish." 3. By oath. "I have sworn."—Spurgeon.

6—8. (6) compared, etc., God's nature is unique, incomparable. sons of the mighty, Polychr., "the Sons of God?" Ps. xxix. 1; the angels are clearly meant. (7) assembly of saints, R. V., "council of the holy ones;" still the angels, those with Him in the glory of heaven, who comprise the council of the great King. (8) faithfulness, "wh. ever encircles Him, and is as the rainbow, Re. iv. 3, a pledge and token for good unto His faithful ones.—Jennings and Lowe.

Worshiping God with fear (vs. 7).—All who take part in the worship of God should do so with reverential and filial fear. I. Those who officiate. 1. Preachers, as they who must give account; 2. Singers, lest they offer solemn praise upon a thoughtless tongue. II. The congregation, lest they offer the sacrifice of fools. III. All, because God is present to search the heart, and to save the soul. IV. Let us fear lest we miss the good that we may now find. God is here to bless and to save each one.

9—13. (9) raging, etc., "proud swelling," "insolence," "the arrogant sea," fig. for invading hosts.[b] (10) Rahab, Ps. lxxxvii. 4.[c] (11) earth, all the earth, not merely the land of Israel. (12) Tabor and Hermon,[d] "these mts. are named because they are the grandest and most conspicuous natural features of Palestine."—Cam. Bib. (13) mighty arm, whose power Thou canst display on occasion.

Life compared to the sea.—

"'Tis not in man
To look unmoved upon that heaving waste which, from horizon to horizon spread,
Meets the o'erarching heavens on every side, blending their hues in distant faintness there.

[a] "The heavens are the type of unchangeableness and perpetuity, as compared with the restless vicissitudes, the ever-shifting shows of earth."—Perowne.

"The author has heard continual praises from a tongue half eaten away with cancer. What use, beloved reader, are you making of your tongue?"—Philip Bennett Power.

"In the midst of the angels of heaven, in that Church of the Firstborn, God's faithfulness is the theme of their song. Compare the songs of the redeemed as given in the Apocalypse."

"In prayer we are occupied with our needs; in thanksgiving we are occupied with our blessings; in worship we are occupied with God himself."

"All powerful souls have kindred with each other."—Coleridge.

Vs. 6.—"The reply of a French Huguenot to a courtier who was urging Henry IV. to choose the strongest side."—Ker.

[b] Job xxvi. 12; xxxviii. 10, 11; Ps. xlvi 3; lxv. 7.

[c] "God's power in ruling the sea would naturally be connected in the Psalmist's mind with the great manifestation of His power in the deliverance fr. Egypt."—Perowne.

[d] "When we enter the plain of Esdraelon from Samaria, Hermon appears in all its majesty, shooting up on the distant horizon, behind the gracefully rounded top of Tabor."—Porter.

"History records that in the days of Tiberius it was thought a crime to carry a ring stamped with the image of Augustus into any mean or sordid place, where it might be polluted. How much may those who profess to be a holy people learn even from a heathen!"—Bowes.

'Tis wonderful! And yet, my boy, just such is life. Life is a sea as fathomless, As wide, as terrible, and yet sometimes as calm and beautiful. The light of heaven, Smiles on it, and 'tis decked with every hue of glory and of joy. Anon dark clouds Arise, contending winds of fate go forth, and Hope sits weeping o'er a general wreck.
And thou must sail upon this sea a long, eventful voyage. The wise may suffer wreck,
The foolish must. Oh, then, be early wise! Learn from the mariner his skillful art—
To ride upon the waves and catch the breeze and dare the threatening storm and trace a path,
'Mid countless dangers, to the destined port, unerringly secure. Oh, learn from him
To station quick-eyed prudence at the helm, to guard from passion's sudden blasts,
And make religion thy magnetic guide, which, though it trembles as it lowly lies, Points to the light that changes not,—in heaven."—Anon.

14–16. (14) habitation, or foundation;[a] basis: pillars. go . . face, standing ever in Jehovah's presence. (15) joyful sound, "the festival shout," blowing of trumpets at the worship of Jehovah.[b] walk, etc., omit "shalt." See the priestly blessing.[c] (16) thy name, wh. is subject to their praise; or "in the possession or faithful guarding of Thy revelation of Thyself," vs. in present tense.

Walking in light.—A Christian lady was visiting among the poor one day. She called, among others, on a little sick girl. Her home was a dreary-looking one. The room she occupied was on the north side of the house. There was nothing bright or pleasant about it. Everything looked dark and cheerless. "I am sorry you have no sun on this side of the house," said the lady. "Not a ray of sunshine gets in here. This is a misfortune, for sunshine is everything." "Oh, ma'am! you are mistaken," said the sick girl, as a sweet smile lighted up her pale face. "My sun pours in at every window, and through all the cracks." "But how can the sun get round on this side of the house?" asked the visitor. "It is Jesus, 'the Sun of Righteousness' that shines in here," was the reply, "and He makes the best sunshine."—J. Newton.

"An equal administration of justice, reward to the righteous, and punishment to the wicked, is the basis of God's throne."—Jennings and Lowe.

a Ps. xcvii. 2.

b Le. xxiii. 24; Nu. x. 1–10; xxiii. 21.

c Nu. vi. 24–26.

17, 18. (17) Strength, Polychr., "their proud adornment," with prob. reference to the ark.[d] our horn, i. e. "they walk with faces uplifted," 1 Sa. ii. 1. (18) defence, or shield.[e] Read "our shield belongeth to Jehovah, and our king to the Holy One of Israel.

Exalted.—Consider, I. What the believer is exalted above or from, by God's righteousness. 1. It exalts him above the law; 2. Above the world; 3. Above the power and malice of Satan; 4. Above death; 5. Above all accusations (Rom. viii. 33, 34). II. To what happiness or dignity the believer is exalted by virtue of that righteousness. 1. To a state of peace and reconciliation with God; 2. To sonship; 3. To fellowship and familiarity with God, and access to Him; 4. And finally, to a state of endless glory.—E. Erskine.

d "With reference prob. to His presence over the ark, with wh. the word strength is specially connected."—Spk. Com.

Ps. xcvi. 6.

e "For comparison of princes to shields, see Ho iv. 18.

19–21. (19) in vision, see 1 Chr. xvii. 3–15. thy holy one, the traditional text, supported apparently by all the Ancient Versions, reads the plural, to Thy saints, or rather to Thy beloved; i. e. The people of Israel, for whom the promise made through David to Nathan was intended. The word rendered thy beloved denotes Israel as the object of that loving-kindness which the Psalmist is celebrating.—Cam. Bib. laid help, endowed him with power to help.[f] mighty, term used for Dav. 2 Sa. xvii. 10. chosen, 1 Ki. xi. 34. (20) anointed him, 1 Sa. xvi. 12, 13. (21) my hand,[g] or my protection and blessing. Cheyne, "By whose side shall be my hand unmovably."

Anointing.—As the literal David was thrice anointed king, once by Samuel in Jesse's house at Bethlehem; once at Hebron after the death of Saul, as king over Judah; and again at seven years' end, as ruler over all Israel: so also "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power" in f Ps. xxi. 5.

g Ps. lxxx. 17.

"The good of others, the people at large, is the motive of God's exaltations; other ends may be proposed and secured, but this is assuredly the chief. The possession of power is, therefore, a tremendous responsibility, and

His nativity at Bethlehem; a second time over His Church at His resurrection, when the tyrant who sought His life was overcome, and then only over the small "confederation" (which Hebron means) of his Jewish disciples; but a third time in His ascension to the heavenly Jerusalem, the Vision of Peace, where He, now crowned as King of Glory, was anointed over all heaven and earth, supreme over all the princes of God. He was thrice anointed in another sense also, once as Prophet, once as Priest, and once as King.— Neale and Littledale.

22—25. (22) exact, as a severe creditor does.[a] son of wickedness, Heb. for the wicked man. (23) beat, etc. comp. 2 Sa. vii. 9. plague, "smite." (24) his horn, 1 Sa. ii. 1. (25) sea, the Mediterranean. rivers,[b] the Euphrates. These represent the ideal limits of David's kingdom.

Note on (vs. 25).— The meaning is: he shall reign from the Mediterranean sea to the Euphrates. This is figuratively expressed thus: his right hand shall extend to the sea, or his left to the Euphrates. A similar expression was used, according to Curtius, by the Scythian ambassadors to Alexander. "If," said they, "the gods had given thee a body as great as thy mind, the whole world would not be able to contain thee; thou wouldst reach with one hand to the east, and with the other to the west." — Rosenmüller.

26—29. (26) my father, comp. 2 Sa. vii. 14.[c] (27) firstborn, and therefore the heir. higher, etc., Polychr., "the highest of kings," etc., De. xxviii. 1. (28) for evermore, but this, as all God's promises, was conditional. (29) days of heaven, conceived as never ending. All these are to be treated as strong poetical expressions, and they should be regarded as indicating the Div. purpose, wh. may, however, be hindered by human wilfulness and sin.

Our father.— Luther was one day catechizing some country people in a village in Saxony. When one of the men had repeated these words, "I believe in God the Father Almighty," Luther asked him what was the meaning of "Almighty." The countryman honestly replied, "I do not know." "Nor do I know," said the catechist; "nor do all the learned men in the world know. However, you may safely believe that God is your Father, and that He is both able and willing to save and protect yourself and all your neighbors. Almighty God is the lovely Father of mankind." — Anec. Illus. of O. T. Texts.

30—33. (30) If, etc.. here are introduced the conditions on wh. God's gracious promises rest. (31) break, Heb. more forcibly, profane. (32) rod, of chastisement, 2 Sa. vii. 14. (33) not utterly take, "will I not break off." — Cam. Bib. The retention of God's loving-kindness insures that affliction shall not lose its character of chastisement.[d] to fail, Heb. to lie, "neither be false to my faithfulness." — Cam. Bib.

God's displeasure at His people's sins (vs. 30–33). — I. The conduct described is — 1. Far from being uncommon; 2. Exceedingly heinous; 3. Very ungrateful; 4 Highly inconsistent; 5. Truly lamentable. II. The punishment threatened. 1. It will be most righteous; 2. Absolutely certain; 3. Characterized by great diversity. III. Thy mercy proclaimed. 1. This, for two reasons. (1) His regard for the Son of His love; (2) And for the word of His truth.

Trials.— Different men are tried in different ways, but the object of the trial is the same. Your business perplexities are sent to prove your honesty; your bodily afflictions are imposed to test your courage and trust; your family difficulties are allowed to continue that the life of the household may be strengthened and refined; your bitterest rival is permitted to run his course side by side with you that your temper may be sweetened, your charity enlarged, and your whole tone of mind elevated. Thus we are brought to consider the religious uses of opposition and hardships, and to identify their very presence with the distinct purpose of God.— J. Parker.

34—37. (34) break, profane, as vs. 31.[e] (35) Once, in the sense of once for all. by my holiness, "inviolably;" comp. Ps. lx. 6. that I will not, better, surely I will not. (36) forever, God's covenant promises are without limitation;[f] they would go on blessing forever but for the limitations put on them by man's wilfulness and sin. the sun, comp. Ps. lxxii. 5, 7. 17. (37) faithful witness, some refer this to the moon.[g] Luther and others have happy are the peoples whose rulers ever remember and practically recognize this."— Pul. Com.

a "May this refer to claims asserted by Shishak, founded on Solomon's obligations to his predecessors? See e g. 1. Ki. ix. 16."—Spk. Com.

b "The plural 'rivers' is in accordance with poetic usage, and need not be explained of the Euphrates and its separate channels, or the Euphrates and Tigris."—Perowne.

c He. i. 5.

An Indian, when asked what the Lord had done for him, gathered some dry leaves into a circle, and placing a worm in the centre, set them on fire. As the flames drew nearer on every side, and were about to consume the worm, he lifted it out, and placing it safely on a rock, looked up and said, "This is what Jesus did for me."

d He. xii. 5-8.

"In the Hebrew idiom all kings were the sons of God: but David is the chief of these, God's firstborn. The Greeks had a similar mode of expressing themselves. Kings were the nurslings of Jupiter."— Alexander Geddes.

If you are not in a state of salvation now, I do not see on what ground you can expect it hereafter.

Delitzsch. trans. "And the witness in the sky is faithful." And comp. Job xvi. 19.

e Mal. iii. 6; Ja. i. 17.

f Je. xxxiii. 20, 21.

g "The moon is more for certain seasons than any other orb. In all countries she has been the arbiter of festivals." — Perowne.

"Christ left His mother with John, but His saints with His Spirit, to tutor and keep them, that they should not lose themselves in their journey to heaven."—A Divine of the 17th Century.

supposed the rainbow to be meant. But prob. Jehovah Himself, who dwelleth in heaven, is meant.

The victory of Christ.— Christ dwelling in our hearts by faith, as He discovers, reproves, condemns, and destroys sin, so He is called Judgment, and thus is judgment to be understood in the Gospel sense, and not terribly, as in the sense of the law. And this judgment shall at last "break forth unto victory;" that is, though Christ in us hath to do with many strong corruptions and lusts in the soul, yet at last He prevails against them all, and judgment "breaks forth unto victory," because Christ, the Judgment of God in the soul, must needs, in the end, prevail against every sin in man.— J. Dell.

38—41. (38) thou, even Thou the faithful God. The seeming audacity of this expostulation is the boldness of faith rather than irreverence. cast off, etc., the promises and the actual condition of the nation were in striking contrast. anointed, here is not David, but the people of Israel. (39) made void,[a] "abhorred," rendered the promises of the covenant inoperative: acted as if there were no covenant terms. his crown, Polychr., "Thou hast profaned his diadem in the dust;" there is evidently intended a personal reference to some king.[b] (40) broken, etc., "broken through all his walls," as Ps. lxxx. 12. strongholds, etc., comp. case of Shishak, 2 Chron. xii. 3, 4. (41) All . . spoil, Ps. lxxx. 12.

Divine anger. — The Lord had promised not to cast off the seed of David, and yet it looked as if He had done so, and that too in the most angry manner, as if He loathed the person of the king. God's actions may appear to us to be the reverse of His promises, and then our best course is to come before Him in prayer and put the matter before Him just as it strikes our apprehension. We are allowed to do this, for this holy and inspired man did so unrebuked, but we must do it humbly and in faith.— Spurgeon.

a To make void a law is to check its operation. See La. ii. 7.

b "His crown was profaned when he was reduced to vassalage. See 2 Chron. xii. 8."—Spk. Com.

"Our soul is in our body, as the bird is in the shell, which soon breaks, and the bird flies out: the shell of the body breaking, the soul flies into eternity."—T. Watson.

42—45. (42) set . . hand, one chief cause of distress was that God was actually strengthening Israel's enemies to overcome him. This expression means, "Thou hast confirmed the work of his adversaries." (43) turned the edge, not in our sense of blunting it; R. V., "turned back," defeated his attack, as expressed in the second clause. (44) his glory, R. V., "his brightness," or splendor.[c] (45) youth, youthful strength. "This does not seem to mean an actual cutting short by death, but rather a cutting short of youthful energy and vigor, a premature senescence, such as may well have fallen upon Jehoiachin or Zedekiah."—Pul. Com. covered him, Ps. lxxi. 13, cix. 29.

Broken arms.— The arms and military prowess of Thy people are no longer of any use to them; Thou art against them, and therefore they are fallen. In what a perilous and hopeless situation must that soldier be who, defending his life against his mortal foe, has his sword broken, or its edge turned; or, in modern warfare, whose gun misses fire! The Gauls, when invaded by the Romans, had no method of hardening iron; at every blow their swords bended, so that they were obliged, before they could strike again, to put them under their foot or over their knee, to straighten them; and in most cases, before this could be done, their better armed foe had taken away their life. The edge of their sword was turned, so that they could not stand in battle; and hence the Gauls were conquered by the Romans. — Adam Clarke.

c "The express. is peculiar; it implies that the king had contracted defilement, been subjected to treatment which degraded him, an account true of Jeconiah, but not less so of Rehoboam."—Spk. Com.

"They fail, and they alone, who have not striven."—T. B. Aldrich.

"Talk about the questions of the day. There is but one question, and that is the Gospel. It can and will correct everything needing correction."— W. E. Gladstone.

46—48. (46) how long, Ps. lxxiv. 10; lxxix. 5. (47) my time,[d] comp. Job vii. 6; xiv. 1: Ps. xxxix. 5. wherefore, etc., R. V., "For what vanity hast Thou created all the children of men?" i. e. must life end in unsatisfied longing? (48) What man, howsoever strong. The shortness and uncertainty of life are pleaded as a ground for the speedy restoration of God's favor. The Psalmist desires to see the solution of the riddle with his own eyes, and doubtless he gives utterance to the feelings of many pious souls in the Exile, whose faith was tried by the thought that they would not live to see the fulfilment of the prophecies of restoration. — Cam. Bib.

True cheer. — In one of Matthew Arnold's most beautiful poems he pictures a pale weaver working disconsolately at his task in a squalid street. Soon after meeting him, he comes upon a Christian preacher, cheery and hopeful in the same disheartening surroundings, with sickness and overwork pulling him down. "How fare you in this scene?" asks the poet. "Bravely!" is the reply, "for I have been much cheered with thoughts of Christ, the living Bread." And the poet's conclusion is the sum and substance of all:

d "Render, 'Remember what a mere fleeting life I am,' for 'What a mere nothing hast Thou created all the sons of men.'"—Jennings and Lowe.

"There is no armor against fate, Death lays his icy hand on kings."

"The boldest thoughts about the apparent contradiction of God's words and deeds

"O human soul! so long as thou canst so Set up a mark of everlasting light
Above the howling sense's ebb and flow
To cheer thee and to right thee if thou roam,
Not with lost toil thou laborest through the night!
Thou mak'st the heaven thou hop'st indeed thy home."

49—52. (49) former loving-kindness, shown in the reigns of David and Solomon. truth, i. e. "faithfulness." (50) reproach, etc., under the taunts of Israel's enemies. bear . . bosom, the expression of intense sympathy with the afflicted nation. (51) reproached the footsteps, or every step he takes.[a] (52) Blessed, etc., comp. endings of Pss. xli., lxxii, cvi., each of which closes, as this does, a book of Psalms.[b]

Blessed. — I. God is blessed in Himself. II. God is blessed by His creatures. 1. God is praised by His works; 2. God is praised by His people upon earth. (1) For what He is in Himself; (2) For what He has done, and is ever doing for them; 3. God is praised by redeemed men and angels in heaven; 4. God is praised by all His creatures everywhere. III. God is blessed forever. — Hom. Com.

The word of God a shield. — Samuel Proctor enlisted as a soldier in the First regiment of Foot Guards, and was made a grenadier. There were a few in the regiment who met for pious and devotional exercises; he cast in his lot among them, and always carried a small pocket Bible in one pocket, and his hymn book in the other. He took part in the struggle on the plains of Waterloo, in 1815. While thus engaged, he was thrown a distance of four or five yards by a force on his hip, for which he could not account at the time; but when he came to examine his Bible he saw with overwhelming gratitude to the Preserver of his life, what it was that had thus driven him. A musket-ball had struck his hip where his Bible rested in his pocket, and penetrated nearly half through that sacred book. All who saw the ball said that it would undoubtedly have killed him had it not been for the Bible, which served as a shield. "That Bible," said Proctor, "has twice saved me instrumentally — first from death in battle, and second from death eternal.' — R. T. S.

PSALM THE NINETIETH.

1—4. (1) dwelling place, place of refuge, or a home.[c] The Ps. may have been written when Israel only knew temporary resting-places in their journey. in all generations, lit. "in generation and generation."[d] (2) formed, R. V., "gavest birth to;" by a bold metaphor the Divine act of creation is compared to childbirth.[e] "Before the earth and the world were born."[f] the world, a poetic term, usually indicating the fruitful earth. thou . . God, Heb. "El," the strong one. "Israel is the 'everlasting people' only because Jehovah is an 'everlasting God.'" — Cheyne. (3) to destruction, to dust and corruption.[g] "This is the condition of renovation; this alternation of processes makes history." Return, "As men perish by the breath of God, so by His word He calls others into being." — Perowne. (4) when it is past, There is a climax: the past day, short as it seems in retrospect, is capable of measurement. But a watch in the night[h] is for us as though it were not; we sleep it away. So with God the Eternal Now, time is neither short nor long.

The home of the soul. — I. The soul of man needs a home. I argue this from — 1. Our sense of weariness and longing for rest; 2. Our sense of peril and longing for protection; 3. Our shrinking from death and longing for immortality. II. The soul of man may find a home in God. 1. In Him alone can the soul find the rest it craves; 2. In Him alone can the soul find the security it craves; 3. In Him alone can the soul find the permanence it craves. — Hom. Com.

Everlasting. — Try and form some idea of everlasting life, that you may be the better able to realize how little you can merit it. It stands contrasted with all forms of life in this transient world. We read of some who seem to have lived to an extraordinary age in primitive times. Yet each record ends with the words, "And he died." Even Methuselah had to come to this at last. I have seen trees in England that possibly may have been growing in the time of Cæsar, and there are trees in America that may have been young in the days of Moses, but even these have to die at last. Let your mind wanare not too bold, if spoken straight to Him, and not muttered against Him, and if they lead the speaker to prayer for the removal of the anomaly." — Exp. Bib.

a "The Targum interprets this as a reproach, because of the tarrying of the footsteps of the Messiah." — Perowne

b "The Ps. is not directly Messianic. The whole tone of expostulation and prayer belongs to local and temporary circumstances; but the anticipations are grounded on promises which have their true fulfilment in Christ." — Spk. Com.

An aged woman lay on her death-bed. She had been a disciple of Christ for fifty years. She said, "Tell all the children that an old woman, who is near to death, is very much grieved that she did not begin to love the Saviour when she was a little child. Tell them, 'Youth is the time to serve the Lord.'"

author, — Moses

Subj., the brevity of life and unchangeableness of God.

c De. xxxiii. 27; Ps. lxxi. 3; xci 9.

d De. xxxii. 7, marg.

e De. xxxii. 18; Pr. xxvi. 10.

f Ge. ii. 4.

g Ge. iii. 19.

h The night was anciently divided into three watches, later into four.

"God's ways are dark, but soon or late,
They touch the shining hills of day;
The evil cannot brook delay;
The good can well afford to wait."

der backwards until you reach the time when man first appeared, and back further through the long ages in which animal life assumed a thousand forms of wonder and beauty, while type after type appears only to pass away. Go back further still through those past ages whose history is written only in "scarpèd cliff and quarried stone," until you reach the period inconceivably remote, when the earliest forms of life began to exist. Look back beyond that to the time when the world was desolate and lifeless, and back beyond that to the time when it was but a stormy aggregation of gases and vapors, and back beyond that to a time when the planet had no separate existence; and as you contemplate these vast geological periods, which have to be measured by millions of years, reflect that all these are but as a watch in the night as compared with everlasting life, and then tell me who can merit such a destiny as that — W. Hay Aitkin. — The first hymn. — Although some difficulties have been started, there seems no reason to doubt that this psalm is the composition of Moses. From the remotest period his name has been attached to it, and almost every Biblical scholar, from Jerome down to Hengstenberg, has agreed to accept it as a prayer of that "man of God" whose name it has always carried. If so, it is one of the oldest poems in the world. Compared with it Homer and Pindar are (so to speak) modern, and even King David is of recent date. That is to say, compared with this ancient hymn the other psalms are as much more modern as Tennyson and Longfellow are more modern than Chaucer. In either case there are nearly five centuries between. — James Hamilton.

"Be thine own home, and in thyself dwell; inn anywhere; and seeing the snail, which everywhere doth roam, carrying his own home still, still is at home, follow (for he is easy paced) this snail; be thine own palace, or the world's thy jail." —Donne.

"You cannot attend better to your sanctification than by reflecting how you may immerse yourselves ever deeper into the love of God, and bathe more continually in the waves of His graces." — Krummacher.

5—7. (5) with a flood, a familiar image in the wilderness, where the dry wadies suddenly fill with tempestuous rains, and carry everything away in their flood.[a] a sleep, "fantastic, vague, forgotten as soon as it is over." morning, after night of rain.[b] "One generation is swept away in the night season, and in the morning another flourishes. But it also shares the same fate." — Delitzsch. (6) cut down, lit. "one cuts him off."[c] (7) consumed, etc., the Ps. was written when the connection of human transitoriness and human sin had been most impressively illustrated.[d] "The consciousness of sin and the implied view of death in vs. 7–9 are peculiarly Jewish." — Cheyne. troubled, "have we been terrified."

The lessons of the meadows. — I. Grass growing the emblem of youth. II. Grass flowering — or man in his prime. III. The scythe. IV. Grass mown — or man at death. — Spurgeon.

Man a bubble. — "A man is a bubble," said the Greek proverb, which Lucian represents to this purpose, saying, "All the world is a storm, and men rise up in their several generations like bubbles. Some of these instantly sink into the deluge of their first parent, and are hidden in a sheet of water, having no other business in the world but to be born, that they might be able to die; others float up and down two or three turns, and suddenly disappear, and give their place to others; and they that live longest upon the face of the waters are in perpetual motion, restless and uneasy, and being crushed in by a great drop from a cloud, sink into flatness and a froth, the change not being great; it being hardly possible that a bubble should be more a nothing than it was before." — Jeremy Taylor.

a 1 Ki. xviii. 44, 45.

b "In the East, one night's rain works a change as if by magic. The field at evening was brown, parched, arid as a desert; in the morning it is green with the blades of grass. The scorching hot wind blows upon it, and again before evening it is withered." — Perowne.

c Ja. i. 11.

d Nu. xiv.

"So passeth, in the passing of an hour,
Of mortal life, the leaf, the bud, the flower."

7—10. (8) set . . before thee, so as distinctly to notice and consider them. our secret, either sin, or heart,[e] may be added: which we would gladly conceal from ourselves. light, revealing light; wh. shines into the dark recesses of the inner being, bringing its secret sins into painful relief. (9) wrath, "is never predicated of Jehovah in the prose writings of the O. T." as a tale, or as a thought that passes and is forgotten: as a sigh, or groan wh. has gone forth, leaving no trace behind it.[f] (10) days, etc., Ge. xlvii. 9. Seventy years was prob. the average, though Moses, Aaron, and Miriam lived longer. if . . strength, if there be fulness of strength, unusual bodily vigor. their strength, R. V., "pride," all in which men boast, as health, strength, honor, riches, etc.

Our sins. — I. The notice which God takes of sin. 1. Individual. "Our iniquities." 2. Universal notice — "iniquities" — not one only, but all. 3. Minute, even the most secret sins. 4. Constant: "Set them before" him — "in the light," etc. II. The notice which we should take of them on that account. 1. In our thoughts. Set them before us. 2. In our consciences. Condemn ourselves on account of them. 3. In our wills. Turn from them by repentance — turn to a pardoning God by faith. — G. Rogers.

e "The whole inner being, the pollution and sinfulness of wh. is hidden from the man himself, till it is set in the light of God's countenance." — Perowne.

f "The complaint is of the shortness and misery of life through God's wrath; a complaint wh. has a singular propriety if uttered by Moses, who saw a generation of men perish before their time in a few years, and multi-

Man's life. — At the Witan or council assembled by Edwin of Northumbria at Godmundingham (modern name Godmanham), to debate on the mission of Paulinus, the king was thus addressed by a heathen thane, one of his chief men: "The present life of man, O king, may be likened to what often happens when thou art sitting at supper with thy thanes and nobles in winter-time. A fire blazes on the hearth, and warms the chamber; outside rages a storm of wind and snow; a sparrow flies in at one door of thy hall, and quickly passes out at the other. For a moment and while it is within, it is unharmed by the wintry blast, but this brief season of happiness over, it returns to that wintry blast whence it came, and vanishes from thy sight. Such is the brief life of man; we know not what went before it, and we are utterly ignorant as to what shall follow it. If, therefore, this new doctrine contain anything more certain, it justly deserves to be followed." — Bede's Chronicle.

Death. —

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike th' inevitable hour —
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Can storied urn, or animated bust,
Back to its mansions call the fleeting breath?
Can Honor's voice provoke the silent dust,
Or Flatt'ry soothe the dull, cold ear of Death?
— Thomas Gray.

11—13. (11) even . . wrath, R.V., "and Thy wrath according to the fear that is due unto Thee;" i.e. who worthily connects this brevity of life with the Divine recognition of sin? "Who understands, practically for life's guidance, what Thine anger is?" (12) So, with such a godly fear.[a] hearts, R.V., "may get us an heart of wisdom." — Polychr. "Enter the gateway of wisdom." (13) Return, better, turn, from Thy fierce anger. how long? Ps. vi. 3. repent thee, i. e. show compassion towards Thy servants, Ex. xxxii. 12.

Spiritual arithmetic. — I. Add, each day, to the number of your graces. II. Subtract, each day, from your sinful habits. III. Multiply, each day, your endeavors after salvation. IV. Divide each day into its appropriate occupations. V. Proportion, each day, your thankfulness to your mercies. — W. W. Whythe.

Preparation for death necessary. — I have read of a gentleman who died very suddenly, and his jester ran to the other servants, and having told them that their master was dead, he, with much gravity, said, "And where is he gone?" The servants replied, "Why, to heaven, to be sure!" "No," said the jester, "he is not gone to heaven, I am certain." The servants with much warmth asked him how he knew that his master was not gone to heaven? The jester then replied, "Because heaven is a great way off, and I never knew my master take a long journey in his life but he always talked of it some time beforehand, and also made preparations for it; but I never heard him talk about heaven, nor ever saw him making preparations for death, and therefore I am sure he is not gone to heaven." — H. G. Salter.

So teach us to number our days. —

Oh, to be ready when death shall come!
Oh, to be ready to hasten home!
No earthward clinging, no lingering gaze,
No strife at parting, no sore amaze,
No chains to sever that earth hath twined,
No spells to loosen that love would bind.

No flitting shadow to dim the light
Of angel pinions winged for flight;
No phantom clouds to fling a gloom
'Twixt heaven's bright portal and earth's dark tomb,
But sweetly, gently, to pass away From earth's dim twilight into day —

tudes perish in a moment, by special interposition of God."—Spk. Com.

"Life is to be measured by action, not by time; a man may die old at thirty, and young at eighty; nay, the one lives after death, and the other perished before he died." — T. Fuller.

"God needs no other light to discern our sins by but the light of His own face." — Wm. Bradshaw.

"There are tales told that are poor, mean, hurtful, not worth the telling. And so it is with men's lives."

[a] "Even he that is best in arithmetic, and can most precisely and accurately understand and investigate millions of millions, is nevertheless to seek how to count fourscore years in his own life. Surely it is a monstrous thing that men should measure all distances without themselves, know how many feet the moon is distant from the centre of the earth, how much space is between planet and planet, and finally to comprehend all the dimensions both of heaven and earth, and yet cannot number threescore and ten years in their own case." — Calvin.

"Improve Time in time, while the Time doth last,
For all Time is no time, when the Time is past."
—Richard Pigot.

"God is the agent in bringing man to death and the grave. All the natural causes of death are only the modes and means of its accomplishment by the hand of God." — Dwight.

"It is faith's work to claim and challenge loving-kindness out of all the mightiest strokes of God."—S. Rutherford

To list to the music of angel lyres,
To catch the rapture of seraph fires,
To lean in trust on the risen One
Till borne away to a fadeless throne.
Oh, to be ready when death shall come!
Oh, to be ready to hasten home!

14—17. (14) early, in the morning, when the night of sorrow has passed;[a] the poetic figure for speedily, and thoroughly. (15) according, etc., i. e. for a time bearing some proportion to the time of humiliation. God's chastisements are only for a season,[b] and open out into long days of rejoicing. afflicted, or humbled, De. viii. 2. (16) thy work,[c] or working: the signs of Thy power. With special reference to bringing Israel into the promised inheritance. (17) beauty, or graciousness:[d] or the glory of the manifest and gracious Divine presence with them. work, etc., the effort to exhibit righteousness in daily life.

Satisfy. — I. The deepest yearning of man is for satisfaction. II. Satisfaction can only be found in the realization of Divine Mercy. — C. M. Merry.

Establish. — They were content to live and to die as pilgrims, provided only they could feel that in His sterner dealings with them, God was, however slowly, preparing the way for that display of glorious blessedness which should be the lot of their descendants. In a similar spirit they ask God to establish the work of their hands, though they reckoned not that they should behold its results. Their comfort in sowing was the belief that their children would reap. — Joseph Francis Thrupp. — Potters. — Many have reached perfection in this field, and have ennobled clay as if by miracle. Their masterpieces have an incorruptible beauty; no liquid can stain them, no fire can blacken them, no knife can stretch them. Yet they are as smooth to the touch as an infant's flesh. Place a candle behind them and they resemble a fine face lighted up with the best emotions. If potters have done so much for clay, shall they not condemn us if we do not earnestly seek to have the beauty of the Lord our God upon us? — J. Wells.

a La. iii. 32, 33.

b Ps. xxx 5; Is. xii. 1; xl. 1, 2; lxi. 2, 3.

c Hab. iii. 2.

d Gracious favor, propitiousness.

"The order deserves notice. God's work is first to appear, His majesty to be revealed; then man's work, wh. is God's work carried out by human instruments, may look for His blessing." — Perowne.

"There is something in this Ps. that is wonderfully striking and solemn, acquainting us with the profoundest depths of the Divine Nature. . . . The author, whoever he may be, is plainly a man grown gray with a vast experience, here taking his stand at the end of his earthly course." — Ewald.

PSALM THE NINETY-FIRST.

author,— unknown; time, the exile

Subj, the safety of the man who trusts in God. It is called in the Talmud, "a song of accidents," i. e. a protective or talismanic song in times of danger. Comp. with it Job v. 17-23.

1—4. (1) secret place, or covert.[e] most High, far above the rage and malice of enemies. abide, lit. pass the night. Almighty, so that none can withstand His power. (2) I will say, this is prob. the response of a second voice. the Lord, i. e. Jehovah. the covenant God of His believing people. fortress, 2 Sa. xxii. 2. (3) snare, etc., aptly figures the unexpectedness of death. Comp. Ps. cxxiv. 7.[f] noisome pestilence, lit. pestilence of malignity; or plagues of mischiefs. The pestilence is thought of as a destroying angel." — Delitzsch. (4) cover . . trust, R. V., "take refuge;" a figure prob. taken from De. xxxii. 11. buckler, Heb. socherah, prob. coat of mail as worn by Assyrian warriors. — Wordsworth.

The secret place. — I. The secret dwelling-place. There is the dweller in the dark world, in the favored land, in the holy city, in the outer court; but the holy of holies is the "secret place" — communion, acceptance, etc. II. The protecting shadow — security, peace, etc.; like hamlets of olden time clustered beneath castle walls. — Charles A. Davis.

Safety. — We read of a stag that roamed about in the greatest security, by reason of its having a label on its neck, "Touch me not, I belong to Cæsar;" thus the true servants of God are always safe, even among lions, bears, serpents, fire, water, thunder, and tempest: for all creatures know and reverence the shadow of God. — Bellarmine. — A good hiding-place. — One morning a teacher found many empty seats in her schoolroom. The little scholars lay dead at their homes, and others were sick. The few children present gathered around her, and said, "Oh! what shall we do? Do you think we shall be sick, and die too?" The teacher gently touched the bell, and said, "Children, you are all afraid of this disease. You grieve for the death of your little friends, and you fear that you also may be taken. I only know of one thing for us to do, and that is to hide. Listen while I read to you about a hiding-place. Then she read the 91st Psalm. They were all hushed by the sweet words, and then the morning lesson went on as usual. At recess, a dear little girl came up to the desk, and said, "Teacher, aren't you e "It is prob., fr. vs. 4, that the allusion in vss. 1, 2, is to the overshadowing wings of the cherubim in the most holy place, rather than to the shelter fr. heat and storm afforded to the traveler by the rock-hewn caves of Palestine." — Spk. Com.

f Ps. xviii. 5; Ho. ix. 8; 2. Ti. ii. 26. See also Eccl. ix. 12.

"The meaning of the vs. is, 'Loving faith on man's afraid of the diphtheria?" "No, my child," she answered. "Well, wouldn't you be if you thought you would be sick, and die?" "No, dear, I trust not." The child gazed wonderingly at her for a moment; and then her face lighted up as she said, "Oh! I know! You are hidden under God's wings. What a nice safe place that is to hide in!" — R. Newton.

5—8. (5) terror, by night, when alarms are peculiarly affecting.[a] arrow,[b] "used figuratively of the evil plots and slanders of the wicked, as in Ps. lvii. 4; lviii. 7; lxiv. 3." — Jennings and Lowe. (6) walketh, with allusion to the destroying angel, Ex. xi. 4, or "the plague-god is personified and represented as stalking through the land in the hours of darkness." — Pul. Com. destruction that wasted, Polychr. "sudden death which surprises." (7) side, or left hand.[c] it . . thee, "the singular is used as referring to any and every one of the evils mentioned in vss. 5, 6. (8) with thine eyes, so thou shalt be an observer only, and not a sufferer.[d]

The terror by night (vs. 5). — I. What is this terror by night? It may be the cry of fire, or the noise of thieves, or fancied appearances, or the shriek of sudden sickness or death. II. Why we should not fear. God our Father is here, and will be here through all the lonely hours. He is an Almighty watcher, a sleepless guardian, a faithful friend. III. It may be night in the soul, but there need be no terror, for the love of God changes not. — Spurgeon.

Security. — Stier states that some years ago a distinguished physician in St. Petersburg recommended this psalm as the best defense against the cholera. And Tholuck admirably says — "As the general who carries within him the conviction that he is called to a great work, whilst the bullets fall thick as hail about him, stands with calm eye and firm foot, and says: I know that the bullet is not yet cast which can strike me, so stands the man of prophetic faith in the hour of danger, with the conviction that the thunderbolt will turn aside from his head, and the torrent dry up at his feet, and the arrows fall blunted from his breast, because the Lord wills it." — Hom. Com. — A little child's confidence. — A little boy of four years old was sleeping one night in a low bed, in the same room with his mother. He was a lovely and thoughtful child, and though so young had already received fully into his mind the idea of the great God who made him and rules over all. He was happy in having been taught to pray to this great God, and was daily in the habit of asking what he most wanted of his Heavenly Father without fear and without doubt. But this night of which I speak he awoke out of sleep with a loud cry, as if he had been disturbed by a frightful dream. When his mother tenderly inquired what was the matter, he told her that he was afraid, and begged to know if God would indeed take care of him. When his mother assured him that God would take care of him in the darkness as well as in the light, he sank back upon his pillow and sighed out, "How good it is that we have a God!" He then fell asleep peacefully, as if he felt the everlasting arms around him.

9—12. (9) Because, etc, R. V., "For thou, O Lord, art my refuge! Thou hast made the Most High thy habitation;" i. e. "the promise of God uttered to and appropriated by the soul." habitation, as Ps. xc. 1. (10) evil, any kind of external calamity. plague, a term generally used of special Divine visitations. dwelling, R. V., "tent."[e] (11) angels charge, God's ministers in the government of this world, Ps. xxxiv. 7. over thee, for thy benefit.[f] all thy ways, i. e. in the appointed path of duty.[g] (12) in their hands,[h] or upon, "the angels, as flying ones, lift the righteous upon their pinions." dash, etc., a fig. suitable to a journeying psalm.

The power of trust. — In the year 1854, when I had scarcely been in London twelve months, the neighborhood in which I labored was visited by Asiatic cholera, and my congregation suffered from its inroads. Family after family summoned me to the bedside of the smitten, and almost every day I was called to visit the grave. I gave myself up with youthful ardor to the visitation of the sick, and was sent for from all corners of the district by persons of all ranks and religions. I became weary in body and sick at heart. My friends seemed falling one by one, and I felt or fancied that I was sickening like those around me. A little more work and weeping would have laid me low among the rest; I felt that my burden was heavier than I could bear, and I was ready to sink under it. As God would have it, I was returning mournfully home from a funeral, when my curiosity led me to read a paper which was wafered up in a shoemaker's window in the Dover Road. It did not look part shall be met by faithful love on God's part.'" Kay.

a Song Sol. iii. 8; Pr. iii. 23–26.

"In allusion, prob. to night attacks like those of Gideon, a favorite artifice of Oriental warfare, or perhaps to a destruction like that of Sennacherib." — Perowne.

b "The arrow may be God's arrow, as e. g. the pestilence, or any noxious influence, such as the simoom, or sirocco, wh. is said to prevail most commonly in the daytime."—Spk. Com.

c Comp. De. xxxii. 30.

d "Only a spectator shalt thou be, being thyself inaccessible and left to survive, conscious that thou thyself art a living one in contrast with those who are dying." — Delitzsch.

Ex. xiv. 30.

"All before lies the way,
Give the past unto the wind:
All before us is the day,
Night and darkness are behind."
— Emerson.

e "An instance of the way in wh. the patriarchal life became stereotyped, so to speak, in the language" — Perowne.

Possible allusion to Ex. xii. 23.

f He. i. 14.

g "Satan omitted these words when he tempted Jesus to go his way, and to cast himself down fr. the pinnacle of the temple, Mat. iv. 6; Lu. iv. 10, 11." — Wordsworth.

h Ex. xix. 4; De. i. 31; Ps. xxxvii. 24; Is. lxiii. 9.

like a trade announcement, nor was it, for it bore in a good, bold handwriting these words: "Because thou hast made the Lord, which is my refuge, even the most High, thy habitation, there shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling." The effect upon my heart was immediate. Faith appropriated the passage as her own. I felt secure, refreshed, girt with immortality. I went on with my visitation of the dying in a calm and peaceful spirit; I felt no fear of evil, and I suffered no harm. The providence which moved the tradesman to place those verses in his window I gratefully acknowledge, and in the remembrance of its marvelous power I adore the Lord my God. — Spurgeon.— God's providence house.— The city of Chester is remarkable for its quaint old buildings, its curious "rows" and ancient remains; but in nothing, perhaps, is it more so than in the illustration furnished by an incident which took place within its walls, as memorialized by an inscription on the front of one of its houses. It is related that at one time when the plague was raging, and like a destroying angel was entering house after house, until the terrified inhabitants were fleeing for their lives from what appeared to be a doomed city, one man with his family determined to remain, placing themselves under the fatherly protection and good providence of God. In every street and almost every house were the sick and dying or dead. Grass grew in the streets for very want of traffic therein. Nearer and still nearer to the good man's dwelling did the fearful scourge come, until both the houses on either side were attacked; still none within its doors were injured. Gradually the plague was stayed, until it altogether ceased. The people who had fled by degrees took courage and returned. There they found the trusting Christian with his family, all safe amidst surrounding death. To testify his gratitude he had this remarkable inscription carved on the beam in front of the house, "God's providence is mine inheritance." And there it still remains, a silent yet eloquent memorial of God's gracious protection of His trusting servant, and of the Christian's prayerful dependence upon his Father's watchful care.

Ministering angels.—

And is there care in heaven, and is there love
In heavenly spirits to these creatures base,
That may compassion of their evils move?
There is, else much more wretched were the race
Of men than beasts. But oh, the exceeding grace
Of highest God, that loves His creatures so,
And all His works with mercy doth embrace,
That blessed angels He sends to and fro,
To serve us wicked men, to serve His wicked foe!

How oft do they their silver bowers leave,
To come to succor us that succor want!
How oft do they with golden pinions cleave
The flitting skies, like flying pursuivant, Against foul fiends to aid us militant!
They for us fight, they watch and duly ward,
And their bright squadrons round about us plant;
And all for love and nothing for reward.
Oh, why should heavenly God to man have such regard! — Spenser.

13—16. (13) tread, trample under foot.[a] lion, etc., all the enemies, natural and spiritual, of mankind.[b] young lion, regarded as especially fierce. dragon, here, one of the serpent tribe. (14) set his love, Jehovah now speaks; comp. De. vii. 7; x. 15. set him on high, as vs. 12. known my name, my covenant name, Jehovah. (15) with . . trouble, Ps. xlvi. 1. honor him, Polychr., "and bring him to honor;" 1 Sa. ii. 30. (16) long life, the special promise of the O. T. dispensation.[c] show . . salvation, Polychr., "give him joy with the sight of my help," i. e. "make him experience what salvation is."

God's presence. — Again God speaks and acts like a tender-hearted mother towards a sickly child. When the child is in perfect health she can leave it in the hands of the nurse; but when it is sick she will attend it herself; she will say to the nurse, "You may attend a while to some other business, I will watch over the child myself." She hears the slightest moan; she flies to the "God preserveth us, not as we do fruits that are to last but for a year, in sugar, but as flesh for a long voyage, in salt; we must expect in this life much brine and pickle, because our Heavenly Father preserveth us as those whom He resolveth to keep forever, in and by dangers themselves."—John Arrowsmith.

"God doth not say no afflictions shall befall us, but no evil."—Thomas Watson.

"There is much beauty and significance in that contrast of the godly man housing in a transitory abode, which to-morrow may be moved to another camping-place in the desert; but abiding, in so far as his true being is concerned, in God, the permanent dwelling-place through all generations."—Exp Bib.

"The regenerate soul hath three principal faculties, as the natural body hath three principal members; the eye, hand, and foot. In the soul the eye is knowledge, the hand is faith, the foot is obedience. The soul without knowledge is like Bartimeus, blind; without faith, like the man with the withered hand; without obedience, like Mephibosheth, lame."—T. Adams.

a "In the narrow mountain passes of the East obstacles can often be overcome in no other manner than by walking over them."—Spk. Com. Lu. x. 19; Mk xvi. 18.

b "They are called lions and fierce lions fr. the side of their open power, which threatens destruction, and adders and dragons fr. the side of their venomous secret malice."—Delitzsch.

c De. xxxii. 46, 47.

cradle: she takes it in her arms; she kisses its lips, and drops a tear upon its face, and asks, "What can I do for thee, my child? How can I relieve thy pain and soften thy sufferings? Don't weep and break my heart; it is thy mother's arms that are around thee; it is thy mother's lap on which thou art laid: it is thy mother's voice that speaks to thee; it is thy mother that is with thee; fear not." So the Lord speaks to his afflicted children. — William Dawson.

"A dying saint asked that his name should be put upon his tombstone, with the dates of his birth and death, and the one word, 'Kept.'" — Spurgeon.

Long life. —

He liveth long who liveth well!
All other life is short and vain;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of living most for heavenly gain.

He liveth long who liveth well!
All else is being flung away;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of true things truly done each day. — Bonar.

"God, saith Chrysostom, hath given a man two eyes; if he lose one he hath another: but he hath but one soul; if he lose that it is irrecoverable, it can never be made up again." — T. Watson.

PSALM THE NINETY-SECOND.

author,— unknown

time, soon after the return from exile

A Sabbath-day Psalm. Subj., prosperity the reward of righteousness.

1—4. (1) good thing, not merely right, but delightful. sing praises, the word denotes sing with musical accompaniment, as in the sanctuary. name, i. e. concerning the attributes, character of God. (2) every night, or in the nights: with reference to the time of evening sacrifice. "Morning and evening still remain, by common acknowledgment, the most appropriate time for worship." — Pul. Com. (3) upon, etc.,[a] better, "Upon the lute with ten strings; with a solemn sound upon the harp." with, to the accompaniment of. solemn sound, Polychr., "with resounding chords." (4) work, should be works, providential dispensations.

To sing praises. — 1. Singing is the music of nature. The Scriptures tell us, the mountains sing; the valleys sing; the trees of the wood sing. Nay, the air is the birds' music-room, where they chant their musical notes; 2. Singing is the music of ordinances. Augustine reports of himself, that when he came to Milan and heard the people sing, he wept for joy in the church to hear that pleasing melody. And Beza confesses that at his first entrance into the congregation, and hearing them sing Ps. xci., he felt himself exceedingly comforted, and did retain the sound of it afterwards upon his heart. The Rabbis tell us, that the Jews, after the Feast of the Passover was celebrated, sang Psalm cxi., and the five following psalms; and our Saviour and His apostles "sang an hymn" immediately after the blessed supper; 3. Singing is the music of saints. (1). They have performed this duty in their greatest numbers; (2). In their greatest straits; (3). In their greatest flight; (4). In their greatest deliverances; (5). In their greatest plenties. In all these changes singing hath been their stated duty and delight. And indeed it is meet that the saints and servants of God should sing forth their joys and praises to the Lord Almighty; every attribute of Him can set both their song and their tune; 4. Singing is the music of angels. Job tells us, "The morning stars sang together," Job xxxviii. 7. Now these morning stars, as Pineda tells us, are the angels; to which the Chaldee paraphrase accords, naming these morning stars, aciem angelorum, "a host of angels." Nay, when this heavenly host was sent to proclaim the birth of our dearest Jesus, they delivered their message in this raised way of duty. They were αἰνούντων, delivering their messages in a "laudatory singing," the whole company of angels making a musical choir. Nay, in heaven, there is the angels' joyous music, they there sing hallelujahs to the Most High, and to the Lamb who sits upon the throne; 5. Singing is the music of heaven. The glorious saints and angels accent their praises this way, and make one harmony in their state of blessedness; and this is the music of the bride-chamber. The saints who were tuning here their psalms, are now singing hallelujahs in a louder strain, and articulating their joys, which here they could not express to their perfect satisfaction. Here they labored with drowsy hearts, and faltering tongues; but in glory these impediments are removed, and nothing is left to jar their joyous celebrations. — John Wells.

[a] "In skillful playing with the cithern." — Delitzsch.

"The heavens are a point from the pen of His perfection; the world is a rosebud from the bower of His beauty; the sun is a spark from the light of His wisdom; and the sky a bubble on the sea of His power." — Sir W. Jones.

"The great Sovereign sends ten thousand worlds to tell us He resides above them all, in glory's unapproachable recess."—Young.

"The stars hang bright above, silent, as if they watch'd the sleeping earth." — Coleridge.

5—8. (5) how great, the language of adoring faith. thy thoughts, fr. Heb. verb meaning to weave.[a] Cheyne, "thy designs," for training thy people. very deep, Ps. xl. 5. (6) brutish, "man in his rude, uncultivated state, as by nature."[b] fool, Ps. xiv. 1. (7) it is . . for ever, lit. "for, or with reference to, their being destroyed." From time to time God does interpose to put down the wicked and exalt the righteous. (8) most high, or throned on high,[c] and consequently secure from the attacks of the ungodly.

The thoughts of God (vs. 5). — I. They are original. II. They are comprehensive. III. They are searching. IV. They are mysterious. — J. Lee.

Delight in the works of creation. —

Acquaint thyself with God, if thou wouldst taste
His works. Admitted once to His embrace,
Thou shalt perceive that thou wast blind before.
Thine eye shall be instructed; and thy heart,
Made pure, shall relish with Divine delight,
Till then unfelt, what hands Divine have wrought.
The soul that sees Him, or receives sublimed
New faculties, or learns at least to employ
More worthily the powers she owned before, Discerns in all things what with stupid gaze
Of ignorance, till then she overlooked, —
A ray of heavenly light, gilding all forms
Terrestrial in the vast and the minute;
The unambiguous footsteps of the God
Who gives its lustre to an insect's wing,
And wheels His throne upon the rolling worlds. — Cowper.

9—11. (9) be scattered, melt away, dispersed as if without any external agency. (10) unicorn, R. V., "wild-ox," Nu. xxiii. 22.[d] For the figure of of speech see Ps. lxxxix. 17. anointed, etc., Ps. xxiii. 5. The expression, "I am anointed with fresh oil," denotes ease, refreshment, and health. "Israel is imagined as an old man whose strength is restored through the use of oil." — Cheyne. (11) shall see, R. V., "hath seen . . . have heard," etc., or look on, with the calm disdain of perfect security.[e] enemies, lit. those who lie in wait for me. my desire, etc., Polychr., "with joy the downfall of," etc.

The subject of David's confidence was — I. Very comprehensive, including renewed strength, fresh tokens of favor, confirmation in office, qualification for it, and new joys. II. Well grounded, since it rested in God, and his promises. III. Calming all fears. IV. Exciting hopes. V. Causing pity for those who have no such confidence. — Spurgeon.

Destruction of the wicked. — The wicked may unite and confederate together, but the bands of their society are feeble. It is seldom that they long agree together; at least as to the particular object of their pursuit. Though they certainly harmonize in the general one, that of working iniquity. But God will soon by His power, and in His wrath, confound and scatter them even to destruction. — Samuel Burder.

12—15. (12) palm . . cedar, "selected as the loveliest images of verdure, fruitfulness, undecaying vigor, and perpetuity." — Perowne. in Lebanon, where only a few of the ancient cedars now remain. (13) planted, etc., this does not refer to the "trees" of the preceding verse, but to the "righteous," who are viewed as passing their days almost continually in the temple courts, and so as (in a certain ense) "planted" there. — Pul. Com. (14) in old age,[f] the proof of surprising vitality. fat, i. e. full of sap. flourishing, rich in verdure. (15) To shew, to manifest and vindicate the righteousness of God's government. rock, De. xxxii. 4.

The godly like a palm tree. — 1. Flourishes in the desert. II. Has his principle of life from within. III. Reveals the hidden springs whence he derives his support. IV. Is exceedingly useful. V. Yields his richest fruit in his maturity. — J. Muncaster.—The prosperity of the righteous (vs. 12). — I. Who shall flourish? II. How shall they flourish? III. Where shall they flourish? IV. When shall they flourish? V. Why shall they flourish? VI. Who can bear testimony to this? — W. Fay.

The palm and the cedar. — The palm is indigenous to tropical and other warm climates. It grows to a considerable height and size, and presents a a "The word gives a good idea of the wonderful intricacy and contrivance with wh. the Div. Mind designs and executes His plans, till at length the result is seen in a beautifully woven tissue of many delicately mingled and colored threads." — Wordsworth.

b Ps. lxxiii. 22.

c "Therefore that we may behold the judgments of God, that are not seen in the world, the prophet gives us to understand by the word high that God dealeth not after our pleasure, but as comports with His eternity." — Calvin.

"Suggested trans., 'My old age is green with vigor.'" — Jennings and Lowe.

d Job xxxix. 9.

e Ps. xxxvii. 34.

"Little do they think that they are suffered to prosper that like beasts they may be fitter for slaughter." Zachary Bogan.

"Christian illumination, consecration, gladness, graces, are all of them the anointing of the Spirit." — William Garreth Lewis.

"God is the secret of stability, because he is both in the circumstances and in us. They who upset your good, must shift God's relations to it, before they can reach you."

f Ps. xci. 16.

"Throughout the year, the winter's cold as in the summer's heat, the palm continues green; not by years but by centuries is the cedar's age reckoned." — Tholuck.

Refs. to the palm, Song Sol. vii. 7; Jer. x. 5.

beautiful appearance. Its fruits, which are called dates, are much valued, and are eaten both fresh and preserved, and are also pressed for both syrup and wine. But it is not for its fruit alone that the palm is so valuable. From the boughs, which are yearly lopped off from the lower parts of the stem, are made baskets, bird-cages, ropes, and sacks; from the leaves, mattresses, sandals, etc. It is an evergreen, and lives to an extreme old age; the wood is durable and much used. How striking an emblem of a good man — he shall flourish like the palm tree. The cedar was considered by the Hebrews as the monarch of the vegetable world, on account of its magnitude, majesty, the number and extent of its boughs, and the durability of its wood, which was so remarkable that some supposed it to be incorruptible. Moreover, everything about the Oriental cedar has a strong balsamic odor, and hence the forest is so perfumed with fragrance that a walk through it is delightful. Mount Lebanon was in ancient times covered with forests of cedars, of which, however, few only now remain. Again we say to the Christian, Behold your emblem: "He shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon." — J. A. James. — Planted by God. — Even so have I seen a tree standing out in a dreary, stony plain, under the blazing sun, yet fresh and green, and with the stir of life in its leaves and branches; and that though I could see no gleam of water, and hear the gurgle of no stream through the stillness of the shimmering noon. Yet none the less was it planted by the waters. Down deep under the soil flowed the rills which bathed its roots and nourished its life. And the waters by which God feeds these planted lives of His in dry places are seldom seen. They flow in deep channels of God's digging, where the eye of man cannot track them, but where they run, charged with strength and gladness, to the souls which are weary and heavy laden. — M. R. Vincent.

The date palm has been known to produce 600 lbs. weight of fruit.

"The fickleness of professors is a stumbling-block to the world. They all say, as Cato of the civil wars between Cæsar and Pompey — They know whom to avoid, but not whom to follow. And as they honor truth, so the flourishing of your own souls depends on it. A tree often removed from one soil to another can never be expected to be fruitful; 'tis well if it make shift to live."— Flavel.

"We are conscious of the heavenly and spiritual elements of noble natures about us rather by their effect upon us than by any other spectacle of them."— H. W. Beecher.

PSALM THE NINETY-THIRD.

author, — unknown; time, later than xcii.

A Ps. celebrating the majesty of Jehovah as Ruler of the universe.

1—5. (1) reigneth, better, has become King: His kingdom is visibly established. "God is regarded as having for a time laid aside, or hidden, His sovereignty, but as now at length coming forward and inaugurating the theocracy. The writer may have in his mind some recent manifestation of Divine power, or he may be anticipating the final establishment of the reign of Messiah."— Pul. Com. clothed, etc, Is. li. 9; lxiii. 1. world . . moved, "when all the fulness of power involved in Jehovah's government of this universe actualizes itself, then will immovable stability be secured to this convulsed earth." — Delitzsch. (2) throne, this term denotes the righteous sway and government of God. — Calvin. of old, though long disregarded by His creatures. (3) floods, fig. for the great world-powers by wh. the Israelites were successively oppressed. waves, R. V. marg., roaring: the dashing of the surf in thunders upon the shore. (4) on high is mightier, Cheyne, "is more glorious," i. e. capable of exciting æsthetic pleasure in the beholder. (5) testimonies, perhaps generally for the Divine rule and laws. holiness, showing itself in simple trust and hearty obedience. thine house, bec. Jehovah has Himself come to dwell therein among his people.

Jehovah the King. — I. The majesty of the King. II. The might of the King. This is manifested — 1. In the stability of the world; 2. In the subjugation of His enemies. We have here (1) The tumultuous opposers of His reign; (2) The calm Sovereign. III. The eternity of the King and of His kingdom. IV. The truth of His testimonies. V. The purity of His court. — Wm. Jones.

Stability of the kingdom. — The invariable perpetuity of the Divine kingdom is celebrated in these words. No vicissitudes are apprehended there, as in earthly monarchies and kingdoms, where thrones are not infrequently shaken, either on account of the death of their kings or principal men, or by reason of the unfaithfulness of subjects or ministers, or because of the schemes or attacks of enemies; none of which can disturb the Divine rule. — Martin Geier.

This psalm has been described as "an echo of Niagara;" i. e. "thundering water."

"The very first words of this psalm seem to indicate a morning of calm repose after a night of storm, a day of stillness after the tumult of battle."— Barton Bouchier.

"If the King, who sets fast earth and bridles seas, speaks to us, we may utterly confide in His word, and, if we do, we shall share in His stable being, in so far as man is capable of resemblance to the changeless God." —Exp. Bib.

PSALM THE NINETY-FOURTH.

author, — unknown; time, the exile.

1—4. (1) vengeance, "God's revenge is His judicial infliction of righteous punishment." — Fausset. shew thyself, lit. "shine forth." Grant a theophany. (2) Lift up thyself, in judicial majesty; Is. xxxiii. 10. earth, or land of the Hebrews. reward, R. V., "their desert;" wh. would take Subj., an appeal to God against wicked oppressors.

De. xxxii. 35; Je. li. 56.

"This psalm, as may be easily apprehended, is a prayer of all the pious children of God, and of spiritual people, against all their persecutors, so that it may be used by all pious, godly people from the beginning till the end of the world." — Luther.

"Socrates, being asked what would be vexatious to good men, replied, 'The prosperity of the bad.' What would vex the bad? 'The prosperity of the good.'" — Le Blanc.

a Pr. xxii. 22; Is. iii. 15.

"Oh, give me liberty! for were e'en Paradise my prison, still I should long to leap the crystal walls." — Dryden.

"A day, an hour of virtuous liberty is worth a whole eternity in bondage." — Addison.

"That the self-existent and eternal God should not see is a palpable absurdity; and scarcely less so, that the God of Israel should suffer His own people to be slaughtered without even observing it." — J. A. Alexander.

b "Everything which is good and excellent in the creature must be possessed in absolute perfection by the Creator." — Spk. Com.

c Ge. vi. 5.

"He who made the sun itself, and causes it to revolve, being a small portion of His works, if com-the form of a judgment. (3) How long, comp. Rev. vi. 10. (4) The words in italics are not needed. R. V., "They prate, they speak arrogantly." boast themselves, carry themselves high.

Anonymous hymns. — There is no superscription to this psalm. There is no indication of its authorship, of the period at which it was written, or of the circumstances to which it refers. There are many of these anonymous hymns in God's Book, nameless utterances, voices of the night of weeping, shouts from the mountain tops of thought, prayers unto the God of Life, which belong to no individual, can be fathered on no solitary period, but descend as an heirloom to successive ages, and enrich every generation. As the circumstances, the victories, the shortcomings, and the possibilities of man are continually being repeated, so the religious experiences of the church do often reappear in its history, and we may receive the inspired utterances of them in one age as almost equally appropriate to the sorrows and joys of another age. — H. R. Reynolds. — Trust in the living God. — Mrs. Beecher Stowe relates a striking incident which once gave to a speech, which Frederick Douglas was delivering, a startling and almost overwhelming power. Douglas was descanting, in his usually impassioned manner, upon the wrongs and miseries of the negro race. Warming with his subject, and waxing more and more indignant with their persecutors, he seemed to lose all patience, and at last said that they must henceforth trust in the strength of their own right arms, seeing that it was in vain otherwise to hope for deliverance. At this moment there rose a tall, aged negress, who, while perfect silence reigned throughout the hall, said, in a voice not loud but deep, which thrilled every heart in that excited assembly, "Frederick! is God dead?"

5—8. (5) break in pieces, crush.[a] heritage, Ex. vi. 8. (6) widow, etc., those whose distresses ought to excite compassion; "domestic tyrants seem to be aimed at." — Perowne. (7) they say, in their hearts. Foreign enemies did not suppose that Jehovah would not see, but trusted that their own gods were stronger than He, and would protect them. the God of Jacob, would not be a natural expression in the mouth of Israel's foreign foes. They knew nothing of Jacob. But it was an expression frequently used by Israelites. — Pul. Com. (8) understand, R. V., "consider." brutish, Polychr., "ye dullards." Ps. xlix. 10; xcii. 6.

The captive's release. — In the war called Braddock's war, my father was an officer in the British navy. One night as they were running close to the coast of Barbary, the officer on deck heard some person singing. A moment convinced him that he was singing the Old Hundredth psalm tune. They immediately conjectured that the singer was a Christian captive, and determined to attempt his rescue. Twenty stout sailors, armed with pistols and cutlasses, manned the ship's boats and approached the shore. Directed by the voice of singing and prayer, they soon reached the abode of the Christian captive. It was a little hut at the bottom of his master's garden on a small river. They burst open the door, and took him from his knees, and in a few moments he was on the ship's deck frantic with joy. The account he gave of himself was, that his name was M'Donald, that he was a native of Scotland, and had been a captive eighteen years; he had obtained the confidence of his master, was his chief gardener, and had the privilege of living by himself. He said he was not at all surprised when they burst open his door, for the Turks had often done so, and whipped him when on his knees. — Christian Advocate.

9—11. (9) planted,[b] the argument to disprove this practical atheism proceeds from the perfections of the creature to those of the Creator. see, the deeds described, vss. 5, 6. (10) heathen, R. V., "nations," by providential judgments. correct, His own erring people. he . . know? R. V., "even he that teacheth man knowledge?" (11) vanity, R. V., marg. "a breath."[c] God not only observes all that the wicked do. He is able even to read their every thought.

The folly of practical atheism. — I. In supposing that God does not observe their conduct. II. In supposing that God will not recompense their conduct. — W. Jones.

Safeguards. — That is wise counsel of the Rabbins, that the three best safeguards against falling into sin are to remember, first, that there is an ear which hears everything; secondly, that there is an eye which sees everything; thirdly, that there is a hand which writes everything in the Book of Knowledge, which shall be opened at the judgment.— J. M. Neale.— The knowledge of God.— What knowledge have we but that which is derived from Himself or from the external world?— and what is that world, but His Creation?— and what is creation, but the composition, structure and arrangement of all things according to His previous designs, plans, intentions, will, and mandate? In studying creation in any of its departments, we therefore study His mind; and all that we can learn from it must be His ideas, His purposes, and His performances. No author, in His compositions — no artificer, in His mechanisms, can more truly display their talents and ideas to others, than the unseen Creator manifests His thoughts and intelligence to us in the systems and substances which He has formed, and presents to our continual contemplation. In this sense, Nature is an unceasing revelation of them to us.— Sharon Turner.— Organs of sense.— The nervous filaments of the senses are finer than a spider's thread; yet they are the avenues of communication between the world without and the world within. They spread themselves out over a little space at the roots of the tongue, and all the savors of nature become tributaries to our pleasure. They unfold themselves over a little space in the olfactory organs, and we catch the perfumes of all the zones. They are ramified over a little space in the hollow of the ear, and the myriad voices of nature, from the shrill insect or the mellifluous song-bird to the organ-tones of heaven's cathedral, the thunder, the cataract, and the ocean, become our orchestra. They line a spot in the interior of the eye so small that the tip of the finger may cover it; when, lo! the earth and the heavens, to the remotest constellations that seem to glitter feebly on the confines of space, are painted quick as thought in the chambers of the brain. By these senses we hold connection with all external things, as though millions of telegraphic wires were stretched from every outward object, and came in converging lines to find their focus in our organs, and through these inlets to pour their pictures, their odors, and their songs into the all-capacious brain. Nay, better than this; for we have the picture, the perfume, and the music, without the encumbrance of the wires.— Horace Mann.

12—15. (12) thou chastenest, comp. He. xii. 5–9. (13) rest, safety fr. the evil times. Polychr., "To hold himself calm in the days," etc. until, the word rendered denotes the "inevitableness" of the doom reserved for the wicked.[a] (14) neither forsake, for the justice of God must everywhere be ultimately vindicated, comp. Je. xii. 7.[b] (15) judgment . . righteousness, i. e. the disabilities under which the righteous now are placed, as Divine chastisement will presently issue in righteousness. Right will at last prevail, because God reigns. follow it, give in their adhesion to it.[c] Polychr., "And the future be theirs who are upright in heart."

Trust in God.— As rowers in a boat turn their backs to the shore, and trust to the man at the helm, whose eye is fixed upon it, so should we proceed in duty through life,— turn our backs from our anxious cares for the future, and leave the guidance of them all to God, who guides the helm. Do thy part with industry and leave the event with God. I have seen matters fall out so unexpectedly that they have taught me in all affairs neither to despair nor to presume; not to despair, for God can help me; not to presume, for God can cross me. I will never despair, because I have a God; I will never presume, because I am but a man.—Storms.— A storm comes to a ship in mid-voyage. She is driven far out of her course, and is glad at last to find shelter in some friendly port. But there would soon have been shipwreck in the fair weather. The sunken rock, the unknown current, the treacherous sand, were just before the ship. The storm was her salvation. It carried her roughly but safely to the harbor. And such is affliction to many a soul. It comes to quench the sunshine, to pour the pitiless rain, to raise the stormy wind and drive the soul away to port and refuge, away to harbor and home within the circle of Divine tranquillity — in the deep calm of the everlasting Presence.— A. Raleigh.

16—19. (16) Who, among men. Because he found no help in man, the Psalmist turns wholly to God. (17) dwelt in silence, Polychr., "the land that is silent," that of the grave.[d] (18) When . . said, in time of danger. (19) thoughts, lit. branching thoughts, so meaning "anxious ones," cares, distractions.[e] Polychr., "When cares crowd into my bosom."

A common incident of the journey (vs. 18).—I. Some slippery places as — 1.

pared with the whole, is He unable to perceive all things?"— Epictetus.

"The thoughts of man's heart—what millions are there of them in a day! The twinkling of the eye is not so sudden a thing as the twinkling of a thought: yet those thousands and thousands of thoughts which pass from thee; that thou can not reckon, they are all known to God."— Anthony Burgess.

"All's well, all's best, the future's joy and woe
Is in His knowledge who alone will bless;
It is enough to know thou lov'st Him more; to know
He will not love thee less."
—Beatrice Rothenthal.

a Ps. ix. 15; xxxv. 7, 8; Pr. xxviii. 10.

b Ro. xi. 2.

c "Judgment, now so much abused by an ungodly magistracy, shall turn back and again link itself with its fitting companion, impartial equity. All these 'upright in heart' shall hail the change with joy."— Jennings and Lowe.

"Sweet are the uses of adversity;
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous, Bears yet a precious jewel in his head."

d Ps. xxxi. 18; cxv. 17.

e Ps. cxxxix. 23.

"Xerxes offered great rewards to him that could find out a new pleasure; but the comforts of the Spirit are satisfactory, they recruit the heart. There is as much difference between heavenly comforts and earthly, as between a banquet that is eaten and one that is painted on the wall." — Thomas Watson.

"Troubles may be of our own begetting; but true comforts come only from that infinite fountain, the God of consolation; for so He hath styled Himself."— Thomas Adams.

"If the globe were one mass of the purest gold; if the stars were so many jewels of the finest order; if the moon were a diamond; and the sun a ruby; they were less than nothing, when compared with the infinite value of one soul."— Brooksbank.

"Here, then, the matter ends; faith reads the present in the light of the future, and ends her song without a trembling note."— Spurgeon.

Poverty and want; 2. Annoyance and vexation; 3. Dejection and perplexity, 4. Sore bereavement and trial. II. Some things concerning the traveler; rendering these the more perilous. 1. The absence of the staff or negligence in its use; 2. Drowsiness; 3. Carelessness; 4. The lamp untrimmed.— Stems and Twigs.

The mercies of God. — If thy soul would praise the Lord, forget not all His benefits. Recount with thyself what He hath done for the church, for the state in which thou livest, for thyself in thy own person, in thy parents, in thy children, in thy soul, in thy body, in temporal, in eternal favors, corporal and spiritual. When thou hast cast up the account of thy debts, and seest how much praise is due to God, how unable thou art to pay this debt, here is thy remedy: "Lord, open Thou my lips, and my mouth shall show forth Thy praise." — S. Page (1646). — Silence. — Henry Perreyoe, in a letter to a friend, describes with astonishment the life of the Bernardine Sisters, whom he had visited in their convent, a life unequaled for the rigor of its discipline, even in the Church of Rome. The Bernardines give their time to the direction of fallen women who have repented, and whose highest reward is to become Bernardines themselves at last. They live amongst the dreary deserts of sand that stretch along the southern coasts of France, like the first anchorites in the deserts of Africa. They eat black bread, drink water, and never speak — never. A sister of Chartreux may speak once in every week, a Bernardine is silent as the dead.— Anec. Illus of O. T. Texts.

20—23. (20) throne of iniquity, judgment seat marked by iniquity; tribunal of wickedness. fellowship, connection or alliance with God. by a law, hiding their unrighteous doings under the sacred name of law. "It seemed to the Psalmist at first as if all the injustice were not merely permitted but sanctioned by God."— Cheyne. (21) together, in troops, like bands of brigands. against the soul, or life. condemn, Polychr., "pass condemnation on." (22) defence, R. V., "hath been my high tower." rock, etc., Ps. xviii. 2. (23) bring upon, turn back upon. Righteous retribution is certain. in . . wickedness, better, "by means of."

The martyr saved. — It is related, in the memoirs of the celebrated William Whiston, that a Protestant, in the days of Queen Mary, of the name of Barbar, was sentenced to be burned. He walked to Smithfield, was bound to the stake, the faggots were piled around him, and the executioner only waited the word of command to apply the torch. At this crisis tidings came of the queen's death; the officers were compelled to stay proceedings till the pleasure of Elizabeth should be known; and thus the life of the good man was spared, to labor, with some of his descendants, successfully in the service of the Lord Jesus and His church.

PSALM THE NINETY-FIFTH.

author,— unknown; time, after the return from exile

An invitation to the worship of God.

a "The Psalmist shows that the outward worship of God consists not in dead ceremonies, but chiefly in the sacrifice of praise." — Calvin.

"It is a part of Christian duty, and certainly of Christian wisdom, to try to catch the tone of joy in worship which rings in this psalm."— Exp. Bib.

1—3. (1) sing,[a] as so often in the Ps. meaning exult, or shout joyfully. a joyful noise, "a joy which runs beyond all words."— Augustine. rock of our salvation, its firm and sure ground; as Ps. lxxxix. 26; xciv. 22. (2) come before, go forth to meet Him; i. e. anticipate His presence.— Spk. Com. thanksgiving, the offering wh. God specially desires, Ps. i. 23. with, etc. Polychr., "With stringed instruments joyfully sing to Him." (3) Lord, or Jehovah. all gods, i. e. "a great King above all other so-called gods" — above the great of the earth (Ps. lxxxii. 1, 6); above angels (Deut. x. 17); above the imaginary gods of the heathen (Ex. xii. 12, etc.— Pul. Com.

The joys of holy worship. — How sweet are the discoveries made by Christ to believing souls! What a pleasant thing is it for spiritual eyes to behold the Sun of Righteousness, moving and shining in the spirit of a convert, as in its own proper sphere. Such as are dark, are accounted melancholy rooms: well may they be melancholy souls that want the cheering of Christ! Blessed are the people, O Lord, that walk in the light of Thy countenance; they shall know the joyful sound; they shall enjoy a continual jubilee in their hearts.— J. Arrowsmith. — Psalm 95. — This psalm, the Venite exultemus Domino, "O come, let us sing unto the Lord," was the chant of the Templars, the Knights of the Red Cross, when during the crusades they entered into battle with the Saracens for the conquest of Jerusalem. — Ker.

4, 5. (4) deep places, mysteries of the unexplored recesses. strength . . also, the height of the hills; or "To whom belongs the tops of the mountains." — Delitzsch. God is exalted above all things as Creator. "Theodoret sees a polemic reference to the heathen temples on hill-tops." — Cheyne. (5) The sea is his, or whose is the sea. To whom belongeth the sea. formed the dry, Ge. i. 9.[a]

Neptune's cup. — "Almost imperceptible creatures in the sea build in the Indian Ocean a goblet. It is called 'Neptune's cup.' Sometimes it has a height of six feet and a breadth of three. It is erected solely by myriads of polypi. They have no consultation with each other. Each works in a separate cell; each is as much cut off from communication with every other as an inmate of a cell in the wards of Charlestown prison yonder is from his associates. They build the stem to the proper height, and then they begin to widen it. Everything proceeds according to a plan. Is the plan theirs, or does it belong to a Power above them, and that acts through them? As these isolated creatures build Neptune's cup, so the bioplasts, isolated from each other in the living tissues which they produce, build the rose and the violet and all flowers, the pomegranate and the cedar, the oak and palm and all trees, the eagle and all birds, the lion and all animals, the human brain and all men. Neptune's cup alone strikes us dumb. But what shall we say of the mystic structures built by the bioplasts? There is the cup; it is a fact; and the eye is another Neptune's cup; and the hand another Neptune's cup; and all this universe is another Neptune's cup; and out of such cups I, for one, drink the glad wine of Theism!" — Joseph Cook.

a Je. v. 22; Jno. i. 3.

"His power reaches from the loftiest summits of the mountains to the lowest depths of earth, and embraces the liquid expanse of the sea as well as the solid continents of land." — Wordsworth.

"Go where man may, with all his toil and searching in the heights or in the depths of the earth, he cannot find a place beyond the range of God's dominion." — A. R. Faussett.

6–8. (6) worship, the word used to indicate lowly prostration, according to the Eastern mode of adoration; prostrate the body and bow the head. kneel, the attitude of reverent supplication. our maker, including the covenant making of Israel into a nation as well as the original act of creation.[b] (7) our God, a strong affirmation of the claim arising out of God's personal relation to His covenanted people. God is exalted above His people as shepherd. people . . hand, "the subject of comparison and the figure are blended together." — Perowne. to-day,[c] this day: now, the accepted time. (8) provocation, the proper names Meribah and Massah should be retained.[d]

The difference of times (vs. 7). — The following times are not alike. I. Sooner or later in respect to eternity. II. Times of ignorance and knowledge. III. Before and after contracting evil habits. IV. Before and after voluntary commission of known sin. V. The times of God's gracious visitation, and when He withdraws Himself. VI. Times of health and sickness. VII. Now and hereafter, present and future, this world and the world to come, are not alike. — Whichcote.

Verse 8. — In any case there is the same solemn strain of warning and expostulation breaking in upon the very joy and gladness of the temple worship, as we have already observed in lxxxi. 7. Psalms like these seem to have a double purpose. They were not only designed to be the expression of public devotion, the utterance of a nation's supplications and thanksgivings, but they were intended also to teach, to warn, to exhort. They were sermons as well as liturgies. Hence, too, the prophetic character which marks them. The Psalmist, like every true preacher, comes as an ambassador from above, speaking not his own words, but the words which God has given him, the words which God himself has uttered. The warning here rests, as in lxxviii., lxxxi., etc., on the example of their fathers in the desert. — Perowne.

b Comp. Ge. xii. 2; De. xxxii. 15; 1 Sa. xii. 6.

c "Often as they were faithless, the 'to-day' sounded ever anew, for the 'gifts and calling of God are without repentance.'" — Tholuck.

d "As at Meribah; as in the day of Massah." See Ex. xvii. 1–7; Nu. xx. 1–13.

"If self-knowledge be a path to virtue, virtue is a much better one to self-knowledge. The more pure the soul becomes, it will, like certain precious stones that are sensible to the contact of poison, shrink from the fœtid vapors of evil impressions." — Richter.

9–11. (9) tempted, in the sense of tested, assayed. Since God rightly calls for trust, any testing of Him, as if He could fail, is a dishonor to Him. The word Massah means trial. work, of judgment. (10) grieved, disgusted, felt a loathing for. with this generation, R. V., "that generation." people, etc., lit. "a people of wanderers in heart (are) they." Polychr., "Perverted at heart." (11) they should not, or in the usual form of an oath in Heb., "If they shall enter."[e] my rest, the land of promise.[f] But Canaan was a type of the heavenly rest; and the warning given to the Israel of his day by the present Psalmist is to be regarded as a warning that, if they followed in the steps of their forefathers, they might miss of that final and crowning "rest." — Pul. Com.

A dark view of sin. — If a doctor knows that he can cure a disease, he can e "This elliptical form of the oath is equivalent to a strong negative." — Perowne.

f He. iii. 18; iv. 3, 8–11.

"Five persons were studying what were the best means to mortify sin; one said, to meditate on death;

the second, to meditate on judgment; the third, to meditate on the joys of heaven; the fourth to meditate on the torments of hell; the fifth, to meditate on the blood and sufferings of Jesus Christ; and certainly the last is the choicest and strongest motive of all." — Brooks.

"This ungrateful people did not approve of God's ways, they did not conform to His commands, and did not acknowledge the benefits which they received from His hands." — Adam Clarke.

afford to give full weight to its gravest symptoms. If he knows he cannot, he is sorely tempted to say it is of slight importance, and, though it cannot be cured, can be endured without much discomfort. And so the Scripture teachings about man's real moral condition are characterized by two peculiarities which, at first sight, seem somewhat opposed, but are really harmonious and closely connected. There is no book and no system in the whole world that takes such a dark view of what you and I are; there is none animated with so bright and confident a hope of what you and I may become. — Maclaren.

A common mistake. — Lord, I do discover a fallacy, whereby I have long deceived myself. Which is this: I have desired to begin my amendment from my birthday, or from the first day of the year, or from some eminent festival, that so my repentance might bear some remarkable date. But when those days were come, I have adjourned my amendment to some other time. Thus, whilst I could not agree with myself when to start, I have almost lost the running of the race. I am resolved thus to befool myself no longer. I see no day but to-day; the instant time is always the fittest time. In Nebuchadnezzar's image, the lower the members, the coarser the metal; the farther off the time, the more unfit. To-day is the golden opportunity; to-morrow will be the silver season; next day but the brazen one, and so on, till at last I shall come to the toes of clay, and be turned to dust. Grant, therefore, that to-day I may hear Thy voice. And if this day be obscure in the calendar and remarkable in itself for nothing else, give me to make it memorable in my soul, thereupon, by Thy assistance, beginning the reformation of my life. — T. Fuller.

PSALM THE NINETY-SIXTH.

author,— unknown; prob. date, after the captivity

This Ps. is quoted in 1 Chr. xvi. 23–32 and assigned to David. But the phraseology and the style, especially the frequent iteration (vss. 1, 2, 7, 8, 13), belong to the later Hebrew. If David, therefore, was the original author, we must suppose a reconstruction of the composition at a later period. — Pul. Com. 1—3. (1) new song, one referring to the future.[a] New in the sense of suiting the glorious age that is dawning. all the earth, the Psalmist at once makes known his "universalism" by calling on the whole earth to join in his song of praise (comp. Ps. lxvi. 1, 4). This psalm has been well called "a missionary hymn for all ages." — Rawlinson. (2) from day to day, i. e. every day. (3) heathen, or Gentile peoples. wonders, "wonderful acts." all people, or all the nations.[b]

Declare His glory. — I. Declare among the heathen the glory of God's perfections, that they may acknowledge Him as the true God. II. Declare the glory of His salvation, that they may accept Him as their only Redeemer. III. Declare the glory of His providence, that they may confide in Him as their faithful guardian. IV. Declare the glory of His word, that they may prize it as their chief treasure. V. Declare the glory of His service, that they may choose it as their noblest occupation. VI. Declare the glory of His residence, that they may seek it as their best home. — William Jackson.

A prayer for Christ's kingdom. — "O most glorious and powerful Jesus, who with Thine own right hand and Thy holy arm hast gotten to Thyself, on our behalf, the victory over sin, hell, and the grave; remember this Thy mercy and truth, which Thou hast promised to all that believe on Thee; give us pardon of our sins sealed unto us by the testimony of Thy Holy Spirit, and of a good conscience; and grant that we by Thy strength may fight against our ghostly enemies, and by Thy power may overcome them, that we may rejoice in a holy peace, and sing and give Thee thanks for our victory and our crown. Extend this mercy, and enlarge the effect of Thy great victories to the heathen, that all the ends of the world may sing a new song unto Thee, and see the salvation of God; that when Thou comest to judge the earth we may all find mercy, and be joyful together before Thee in the festivity of a blessed eternity, through Thy mercies, O blessed Saviour and Redeemer, Jesus. Amen." — Jeremy Taylor.

A call to all nations to praise God.

a "A new song; for here are set forth expectations strange to the Jewish creed of former days, and God's intention 'that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body and partakers of His promise,' begins to dawn upon the exclusive nations." — Jennings and Lowe.

b Mk. xvi. 15.

"Come, all ye, who, up to this hour, have been giving your worship to dead gods; come and give your hearts to the true and only God in this new song!" — Henry Cowles.

4—6. (4) great, Ps. xlviii. 1. praised, i. e. celebrated in festive songs. all gods, the heathen deities.[c] (5) idols, lit. nothings.[d] made the heavens, therefore is the one living Creator. (6) sanctuary, the original phrase used seems to have been, "Strength and gladness are in his place" (1 Chr. xvi.

c "These are called idols, lit nothings, a favorite word in Is See Ch. xli., xliv., but occurring also as early as Le. xix. 4; xxvi. 1." — Perowne.

d 1 Cor. viii. 4.

27) — terms suiting the simplicity of David's time. When the psalms came to be used in the temple service, loftier language was more fitting. The whole passage has probable reference to the glory of God as seated between the cherubim in the first temple. — Pul. Com.

Strength and beauty (vs. 6). — They meet in the sanctuary of God in undivided perfection. I. There is the strength and beauty of attraction. II. Of an unflinching purpose — to reign, save, judge. III. Of a perfect organization. IV. Of imparted character. — H. T. Miller.

The weakness of idols. — A little boy who lived in the house of a heathen said to him one day: "There is but one God — the one who made the earth, and the sky, and everything. It is He who gives us the rain and the sunshine, and He knows what we do and what we leave undone. He hears us when we pray, and He, the Eternal One, will punish us if we do wrong, and reward us if we do right. He can save us or He can destroy us. But these images that you pray to are only lumps of baked clay. They can't see or hear; how, then, can they do you any good or save you from any trouble? You ought to talk to God's messenger about that." He meant the missionary. The heathen paid no heed to him, but soon afterwards went on a little journey. While he was gone, the boy took a stick and broke all the images except the largest, into the hands of which he put the stick. When the man returned, he was furious to see what had happened, and exclaimed: "Who has done this?" "Perhaps," said the little boy, "the big idol has been beating his little brothers." "Nonsense," said the man. "Don't talk such stuff as that! Do you think I'm a fool? You know as well as I do that the thing cannot even raise its hand. It was you, you little rascal! It was you! And to pay you for your labor of wickedness, I'll beat you to death with the same stick." And seizing the stick, he approached him. "But," said the boy gently, "how can you trust to a god so weak that a child's hand can destroy him? Do you suppose that, if he can't take care of himself or his companions, he can of you and the world, let alone making you?" The heathen stopped to think, for it was a new idea. Then he broke his great idol, and went and kneeled down to pray to the true God, and called Him "My Father." — Schmidt.

7—10. (7) kindreds, etc., the Gentile nations are thus addressed.[a] give, etc., ascribe in joyful, trustful songs. This is the principle of all true prayer; ascribing glory to God, rather than seeking gifts from Him. (8) bring an offering,[b] minchah, an unbloody sacrifice. courts, lit. "before him:" comp. 1 Chr. xvi. 29. (9) beauty of holiness, or "in holy vestments." fear, R. V., "tremble." (10) Lord reigneth, or Jehovah is King: "hath taken to Himself His great power and reigned." world, etc., R. V., "is established that it cannot be moved;" Ps. xciii. 1. judge, in the general sense of ruling. righteously, R. V. "with equity."

The nature and spirit of Divine worship (vss. 8, 9). — I. Religion is essentially connected with worship. II. Divine worship must be personal. III. Personal worship must be public. IV. Holy. V. Adoring and grateful. VI. In the spirit of cheerful liberality. 1. The offerings may be of varied amount; 2. Cheerful and voluntary; 3. Continuous; 4. Grounds of the offering. — J. Burns.

The reign of Jehovah. — At a public festival at Raiatea, a South Sea Island, some of the chiefs and others addressed the company, in brief and spirited appeals to their memory of the abominations of past times, and to their gratitude for the glorious and blessed changes which the Gospel of Christ had wrought among them. They compared their present manner of feasting, their improved dress, their purer enjoyments, their more courteous behavior, the cleanliness of their persons, and the delicacy of their language in conversation, with their former gluttony, nakedness, riot, brutality, filthy customs, and obscene talk. One of the speakers observed: "At such a feast as this, a few years ago, none but kings or great chiefs, or strong men, could have got anything good to eat; the poor, and the feeble, and the lame, would have been trampled under foot, and many of them killed in the quarrels and battles that followed the gormandizing and drunkenness." This," said another, "is the reign of Jehovah — that was the reign of Satan. Our kings might kill us for their pleasure, and offer our carcasses to the Evil Spirit; our priests and our rulers delighted in shedding our blood. Now, behold, our persons are safe, our property is our own, and we have no need to fly to the

"The heavens, which roof over all the earth, declare to every land Jehovah's creative power, and His supremacy above all gods. But the singer's eye pierces their abysses, and sees some gleams of that higher sanctuary of which they are but the floor. There stand Honor and Majesty, Strength and Beauty."—Maclaren.

"Oh, if so much of beauty doth reveal Itself in every vein of life and nature,
How beautiful must be the Source itself,
The Ever-Bright One!"
—Esaias Tegner.

"Dagon could not stand before the ark of the covenant; no more can idols before the power of Christianity." — John Bate.

a "The families of the nations themselves are called upon to take up the song in wh. Israel has made known to them the salvation of Jehovah."—Perowne.

b "A collective singular, in allusion to the Eastern custom of bringing gifts when admitted into the presence of kings and rulers."—Spk. Com.

In Madagascar now, every person entering the presence of the sovereign makes kasina, or a present.

c Delitzsch, comp. with the "wedding garment" of the N. T. parable.

"Idolatry by its reaction of the character worshiped upon the character of the worshiper, causes its devotees to become corrupt, depraved or bestial."

a Comp. Is. xliv. 23.

"To be in heaven is to love for ever God — and thou must love here. Here thou wilt find all that thou canst and oughtst to love; for souls, remade of God, and molded over again into His sunlike emblems, multiply His might and love; the saved are suns, not earths; and with original glory shine of God."—Bailey.

mountains to hide ourselves, as we used to do when a sacrifice was wanted for Oro, and durst not come back to our homes till we heard that a victim had been slain and carried to the marae." — Whitecross.

11—13. (11) heavens rejoice, inanimate creation is summoned to take part in the joyful strain.[a] sea roar, as if in a loud psalm. (12) field, etc., by reason of the prosperities of the righteous reign. trees . . rejoice, a bold, poetic figure. (13) cometh, better, He is come: "the coming seems as if it were actually taking place under the eyes of the Psalmist." people, R. V., "peoples." with his truth, Polychr., "in His faithfulness."

The temple of creation. —

Your voiceless lips, O flowers, are living preachers,
Each cup a pulpit, every leaf a book,
Supplying to my fancy numerous teachers
From loneliest nook.

'Neath cloister'd boughs each floral bell that swingeth,
And tolls its perfume on the passing air,
Makes Sabbath in the fields, and ever ringeth
A call to prayer,—

Not to the domes where crumbling arch and column
Attest the feebleness of mortal hand,
But to that fane most catholic and solemn Which God hath planned,—

To that cathedral, boundless as our wonder,
Whose quenchless lamps the sun and moon supply,
Its choir the winds and waves, its organ thunder,
Its dome the sky.

There, amid solitude and shade, I wander
Through the green aisles, and, stretch'd upon the sod, Amid the silence reverently ponder
The ways of God. — Longfellow.

PSALM THE NINETY-SEVENTH.

author,— unknown; time, later restoration

Subj., a call to worship in view of the majesty of Jehovah.

cf. Is. xlii. 10-12; Hab. iii.

b "All the verbs from 1-9, whether in the past or future, must be regarded as prophetic perfects; to the sanguine imagination of the Psalmist the kingdoms of this world are already become the kingdom of Jehovah." — Jennings and Lowe.

c Ge. x. 5; Ps. lxxii. 10; Is. xlii. 4; xlix. 1; li. 5; lx. 9; lxvi. 19; Zep ii. 11.

d Ex. xix. 9-16; xx 21.

e Comp. Ha. iii. 5.

f "The frequent allusions in this series of Ps. to the convulsions of the earth, and the melting of the hills, suggest the idea that some great earthquake, like that in the days of King Uzziah, was fresh in the memory of the people."—Spk. Com.

g Mi. iv. 13; Zec. iv. 14; vi. 5.

h Is. xl. 5; lxvi. 18.

1—4. (1) reigneth, or is now king.[b] isles, terms used for the islands and coasts of the Medit. Sea, or in a wider sense, of heathen countries.[c] (2) Clouds, etc., fig. taken from giving of law on Mt. Sinai.[d] "God's veiling Himself in darkness bears witness to His earnestness as Judge." — Delitzsch. habitation, R. V., "foundation," Ps. lxxxix. 14. (3) A fire, better, fire, the Divine symbol, Ps. l. 3.[e] burneth, etc., Polychr., "blazed about His steps." (4) enlightened, lit. "gave shine unto;" "illumined."

God's reign matter of joy to all (vss. 1, 2). — I. All things are under the control of the Lord Jehovah. II. Some parts of this Divine administration are mysterious and incomprehensible to man. III. Righteousness and judgment are the habitation of His throne. IV. Jehovah's reign is matter of joy to all. — Iota in 400 Sks.

Mystery. — I was one day riding with a friend; we were discussing a subject, and I expressed myself surprised that such a measure was not adopted. "If I were to tell you one thing," said he, "it would make all clear." I gave him credit that there did exist something which would entirely dispel my objections. Now, if this be the case, in many instances, between man and man, is it an unreasonable conclusion that all the unaccountable points which we may observe in the providence and government of God should be all perfection in the Divine Mind. — Cecil.

5—7. (5) hills, better, "mountains." wax, see Ps. lxviii. 2.[f] Lord . . earth, Jos. iii. 11, 13.[g] (6) heavens declare, bec. God is regarded as appearing in the heavens, and judging therefrom. people, peoples, or nations.[h] (7) Confounded, R. V., "Ashamed," Polychr., "were brought to disgrace" by the glorious manifestation of the true God. worship . . gods, better rendered, "all the gods prostrate themselves before Him," as in the instance of Dagon prostrate before the ark of God.

Adoration of God. — When a man gravely worships what has been engraved by a man's hand, and puts his trust in a mere nothing and nonentity, he is indeed brutish, and when he is converted from such absurdity, he may well be ashamed. A man who worships an image is but the image of a man, his senses must have left him. He who boasts of an idol makes an idle boast. Bow down yourselves, ye fancied gods. Let Jove do homage to Jehovah, let Thor lay down his hammer at the foot of the cross, and Juggernaut remove his blood-stained car out of the road of Immanuel. If the false gods are thus bidden to worship the coming Lord, how much more shall they adore Him who are godlike creatures in heaven, even the angelic spirits? Paul quotes this passage as the voice of God to angels when He sent His Son into the world. All powers are bound to recognize the chief power; since they derive their only rightful authority from the Lord, they should be careful to acknowledge His superiority at all times by the most reverent adoration. — Spurgeon.

The Lord of the whole earth. — In this title lies concealed the reason for the liquefaction of the hills, for the God who here manifests himself is he who created the earth, and is able therefore to reduce it to nothing. — Martin Geier.

8, 9. (8) Zion . . glad, that coming of Jehovah, which was a terror to the worshipers of idols, was a triumphant joy to His own people.[a] daughters of Judah, poetic fig. for the towns of wh. Jerus. was the mother city. because of thy judgments, O Lord. It does not show any vindictive feeling, if the saints, persecuted so long, "rejoice" when an end is put to their sufferings by the final judgment of the wicked. — Pul. Com. (9) art high, Ps. lxxxiii. 18.

The exalted God. — You see the shadow of the heavens in a lake. But the heavens that look out of that placid water do not seem very deep; the shadow of heaven is shallow because the heaven shadowed there is low. But when the low clouds have all passed away, look down then into the lake and tell what sight you see; the heaven shadowed in the water is deep, like eternity now. When your joy in Christ's love does not rise high, your grief over the sins that crucified Him does not sink very deep. Hate of evil is shallow because love to Him is shallow. But when I live more by looking at Jesus Christ and what He has done for me, I shall grieve more over the plague of my own evil heart. — W. Arnot.

10—12. (10) hate evil,[b] Polychr., "Jehovah loves those who hate wickedness." saints, this term does not in Scrip. mean absolutely holy ones; but is equal to our "servants of God" or "children of God." (11) Light is sown, i. e. scattered or diffused; strewn along the pathway of the righteous,[c] gladness, "the irrepressible joy which comes from a sense of His favor and protection." (12) Rejoice, etc., comp. Ps. xxxii. 11, xxx. 4. remembrance, etc., or "give thanks to His holy memorial:" R. V., "to His holy name" (for God's memorial is His name Jehovah, Ex. iii. 15).

The king's subjects. — I. The character of the king's subjects. 1. They are sincere and upright; 2. They are devout; 3. They "love the Lord." II. The privilege of the king's subjects. 1. Preservation from evil; 2. Deliverance from enemies; 3. Bestowal of gladness. III. The duty of the king's subjects. 1. To hate evil; 2. To thankfully "rejoice in the Lord." — Wm. Jones.

Hatred for sin. — I once walked into a garden with a lady to gather some flowers. There was one large bush whose branches were bending under the weight of the most beautiful roses. We both gazed upon it with admiration. There was one flower on it which seemed to shine above all the rest in beauty. This lady pressed forward into the thick bush and reached far over to pluck it. As she did this, a black snake which was hid in the bush, wrapped itself around her arm. She was alarmed beyond all description, and ran from the garden, screaming and almost in convulsions. During all that day she suffered very much from fear; her whole body trembled, and it was a long time before she could be quieted. That lady is still alive. Such is her hatred now of the whole serpent race, that she has never since been able to look at a snake, even though it were dead. No one could ever pursuade her to venture again into a cluster of bushes, even to pluck a beautiful rose. Now this is the way the sinner acts who truly repents of his sins. He thinks of sin as the serpent that once coiled itself round him. He hates it. He dreads it. He

"Her fruits are all balmy and sweet; she affords none of those blighted ones, so common in the life of man, and so like the fabled apples of the Dead Sea, fresh and beautiful to the sight, but when tasted, full of bitterness and ashes." — Sir Humphry Davy.

"Poetry here seems to assume the highest tone of triumph and exultation, and to revel, if I may so express myself, in all the extravagance of joy." — Robert Lowth.

a "In the same spirit, our Lord, when speaking of the signs of fear which shall be the precursors of His second coming, says, Lu. xxi. 28." — Perowne.

b Comp. Job i. 1; Am. v. 15; Ro. xi. 9.

c "But compare the foll use of the poetic figure: 'Now morn, her rosy steps in the Eastern clime advancing, sow'd the earth with orient pearl.'" — Milton.

"The verb used here generally denotes a sowing (literal or metaphorical) of seed in the ground, with a view, that is to harvest. And this signif. is appropriate here." — Jennings and Lowe.

"There are joys which long to be ours. God sends ten thousand truths, which come about us like birds seeking inlet; but we are shut up to them, and so they bring us nothing, but sit and sing awhile upon the roof, and then flee away." — Beecher.

"The stars are mansions built by Nature's hand, and haply, there the spirits of the blest dwell, clothed in radiance, their immortal rest." — Wordsworth.

flies from it. He fears the places where it inhabits. He does not willingly go into the haunts. He will no more play with sin than this lady would afterwards have fondled snakes. — Meade.

PSALM THE NINETY-EIGHTH.

author, — unknown; date, after the captivity

Subj., the whole creation invited to praise God. Comp. Ps. xcvi.

1. (1) But an echo of Psalm xcvi. new song, the new feature being the share of the Gentiles in the worship of Jehovah. gotten, etc.,[a] lit. R. V., "hath wrought salvation for him."

Marvelous things. — I. He hath created a marvelous universe. II. He has established a marvelous government. III. He hath bestowed a marvelous gift. IV. He hath provided a marvelous redemption. V. He hath inspired a marvelous book. VI. He hath opened a marvelous fulness. VII. He hath effected a marvelous transformation. — W. Jackson.

Worship to profit. — A minister in Ireland was preaching from this text, when there came into the church a little, ragged, pale-faced boy. He sat near the pulpit, and seemed to drink in God's truth. Next Sunday he came again, but after that the minister missed him. Two months passed, when, late one night, an Irishman knocked at his door, and said, "Oh, sir, come away to my little boy; he is very ill; but he heard ye preach, and he wants to see ye." The minister said, "I will come in the morning." "O, but plase your riverence, the morning will be too late; ye must come to-night, for he is dying." He followed the man two miles across the moors, till they came to a solitary hut. He entered, and in a corner, on some straw, lay his little hearer, sadly worse, and very near death. The boy recognized the minister, pressed his hand, and, while he raised the other thin little one to heaven, whispering, "His right hand, and His holy arm, hath gotten Him the victory," his happy spirit passed away to his Saviour's home.

2, 3. (2) righteousness, parallel with salvation, a term used in the later portion of Isaiah. heathen, R. V., "nations." (3) mercy and truth, loving kindness and faithfulness. "The two attributes expressive of God's covenant relationship to His people." "He has recalled His promise of showing peculiar peace to Israel."[b]

A Messianic pæan. — The swelling melody of Ps. xcviii. is set to the key of "Glory to God in the highest!" If the prophetic eye were not resting on the Messianic advent and the marvelous things of later times, such lyric raptures would be extravagant. This outburst is suited alike to the advent of Bethlehem and to the later advent in clouds. There is, too, a recurring occasion for this lofty hymn one's life long, in every fresh discovery of our Lord's righteousness, and onward till the end of time. The humblest, loneliest believer belongs equally to the choir.

4–6. (4) make . . praise,[c] rend. "Break forth into rejoicing, and play." — Delitzsch. (5) harp, Ge. iv. 21. voice of a psalm, Is. li. 3. (6) cornet, "Heb. chatsoteroth; they were the straight trumpets (such as are seen on the arch of Titus) used by the priests for giving signals."— Perowne.

Psalms.— With psalms Jehoshaphat and Hezekiah celebrated their victories. Psalms made glad the heart of the exiles who returned from Babylon. Psalms gave courage and strength to the Maccabees in their brave struggles to achieve their country's independence, and were the repeated expression of their thanksgivings. The Lord of Psalmists and the son of David, by the words of a psalm proved Himself to be higher than David; and sang psalms with His apostles on the night before He suffered, when He instituted the holy supper of His love. With psalms Paul and Silas praised God in the prison at midnight when their feet were made fast in the stocks, and sang so loud that the prisoners heard them. And after his own example the apostle exhorts the Christians at Ephesus and Colossæ to teach and admonish one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs. Jerome tells us that in his day the psalms were to be heard in the fields and vineyards of Palestine, and that they fell sweetly on the ear, mingling with the songs of birds, and the scent of flowers in spring. The ploughman as he guided his plough chanted the Hallelujah, and the reaper, the vine dresser, and the shepherd sang the songs of David. "These," he says, "are our love songs, these the instruments of our agriculture." Sidonius Apollinaris makes his boatmen, as a Comp. Is. lix. 16; lxiii. 5.

"God hath gotten victory over the power of Bab., wh. laid His temple in the dust, but wh. He had now chastised by the arms of Cyrus, whom He had made His instrument in restoring His people, and laying again the foundations of His temple." — Wordsworth.

"O ye who are new in Christ, though formerly old in the Old Adam, sing ye to the Lord."—Psalter of Peter Lombard.

b Is. xlix. 6; lii. 10; Lu. i. 54, 55, 68-70, 72; ii. 30, 31; Ac. xiii. 46, 47.

"Pentecost deserves a new song as well as the Passion and the Resurrection: let our hearts exult as we remember it."— Spurgeon.

c Is. lii. 9.

"The word used here prob. denotes sounds made with the mouth, as distinguished fr. instrumental music." —Spk. Com.

"The trumpet served the same purpose, in a religious and civil sense, as bells among Christians, and the voice among Mohammedans. Indeed, it is understood that Mohammed directed the voice to be employed, in order to mark a distinction between his own sect and the Jews with their trumpets and the Christians with they urge their heavily-laden barge up stream, sing psalms, till the river banks echo again with the hallelujah, and beautifully applies the custom, in a figure, to the voyage of the Christian life.— Perowne.

7—9. (7) sea, etc., Comp. Ps. xcvi. 11, 12. world, etc., Ps. xxiv. 1. (8) clap their hands, bold metaphor taken fr. Is. lv. 12. Clapping the hands was, and is still, an expression of satisfaction and joy. (9) Before, etc., "God by his righteous judgment will bring the whole earth from a state of sorrow into a state of salvation and joy."— Hengstenberg. Ps. xcvi. 13.

Nature at worship.— The congregation is — I. Vast. Sea, earth, rivers, hills. II. Varied. Diverse in character, word, aspect, each from the other, constant and alike in this alone, that all, always worship God. III. Gladsome. In this like the worshipers in heaven, and for the same reason — sin is absent. — E. G. Gange.

Nature's praise. — The setting forth the praise of Christ for the redemption of sinners, may not only furnish work to all reasonable creatures; but also if every drop of water in the sea, and in every river and flood, every fish in the sea, every fowl in the air, every living creature on the earth, and whatsoever else is in the world: if they all had reason and ability to express themselves: yea, and if all the hills were able by motion and gesticulation to communicate their joy one to another; there is work for them all to set out the praise of Christ.— David Dickson.— A psalm of praise.— The psalm calls for universal praise. The very reading of the psalm, so joyous, so jubilant, so animated, so exalting, is fitted to awaken the mind to praise; to arouse it to thankfulness; to fill it with joy. One cannot read the psalm without being a happier man; without being lifted above the world; without lofty views of God; without feeling that He is worthy of this universal praise; without recognizing that we are in a world where the mind should be joyful; that we are under the dominion of a God whose reign should fill the mind with gladness. — Barnes.

their bells."— Kitto's Pictorial Bible.

"As, when men behold any curious work of a skilful craftsman, straightway they will leave the work, and inquire after him that made it, they may praise his skill: so it is the duty of Christians, when they behold everywhere in all the creatures the admirable and unspeakable wisdom, goodness, and power of God, to make haste from the creature, and go forward to the Creator to praise and glorify Him." —Cawdray.

"To count their numbers were to count the sands that ride in whirlwinds the parched Lybian air." — Armstrong.

PSALM THE NINETY-NINTH.

author,— unknown; date, time of the restoration

Subj., praise of the Thrice Holy One.

1—4. (1) Lord reigneth, see Ps. xciii. 1; xcvii. 1. people, R. V., "peoples," i. e. all the nations upon earth. between, R. V., "upon," suggests the presence of God in His temple. cherubims, Ps. lxxx. 1.[a] let . . moved, or "the earth is moved." Polychr., "the earth quakes." (2) great in Zion, by reason of some recent exhibition of His power and grace. (3) Let them, the nations, or peoples, of vs. 2. it is holy, or "He is holy."[b] (4) king's strength, better rend. "And the strength of a king who loveth judgment Thou hast established;"[c] the same king who is mentioned vs. 1. Jehovah. His might is no arbitrary power, like that of earthly tyrants, but a judgment-loving might. His power only expresses itself in righteousness.—Perowne.

Justice is not merely established, but executed in God's kingdom; the laws are carried out, the executive is as righteous as the legislative. Herein let all the oppressed, yea, and all who love that which is right, find large occasion for praise. Other nations under their despots were the victims and the perpetrators of grievous wrong, but when the tribes were faithful to the Lord they enjoyed an upright government within their own borders, and acted with integrity towards their neighbors. That kingcraft which delights in cunning, favoritism, and brute force is as opposite to the Divine kingship as darkness to light. The palace of Jehovah is no robber's fortress nor despot's castle, built on dungeons, with stones carved by slaves, and cemented with the blood of toiling serfs. The annals of most human governments have been written in the tears of the downtrodden, and the curses of the oppressed; the chronicles of the Lord's kingdom are of another sort; truth shines in each line, goodness in every syllable, and justice in every letter. Glory be to the name of the King whose gentle glory beams from between the cherubic wings.— Spurgeon.

a Ex. xxv. 22.

b "God's name is God Himself in His revealed holiness." —Delitzsch.

c "And the might of a king who loveth the right hast Thou established in righteousness." — Delitzsch.

5—9. (5) footstool,[d] the lower part or step of the king's throne. Israel is called upon to worship God as he sits in His holy temple, enthroned above the cherubim, with His feet upon the mercy-seat.— Pul. Com. (6) Moses . . among his priests, though not called a priest in the Pentateuch, Moses performed many priestly acts. call . . name, i. e. who were men of worship and prayer.[e] "Instances of the justice of the divine rule."— Cheyne. (7)

d "Allusion may be to the great day of atonement, when the high priest, as the representative of the whole nation, carried the confessions and worship of the people, with the blood of the sacrifices, to the ark and its mercy seat."—Spk. Com. 1 Chr. xxviii. 2; Ps. cxxxii. 7.

e "The experience of these servants of God is cited for encouragement."— Fausset.

cloudy pillar, R. V., "pillar of cloud;" this specially refers to Moses and Aaron; but direct Divine communications were also given to Samuel. kept his testimonies, such obedience alone could make their worship acceptable. (8) forgavest them, pardoning their sins, but not removing the judgment that they should not enter the Promised Land. inventions, R. V., "doings," Eccl. vii. 29, contrivances dictated by self-will. (9) at . . hill, or towards, Da. vi. 10,

The revelation of the cloud, or what God foreshadowed to Israel in the cloudy pillar. 1. That God was willing to commune with man. 2. That sinful man could not see God and live. 3. That God should become incarnate, veiled in flesh as in the cloud. 4. That He should be their shelter, protector, guide. 5. That God manifest in the flesh should lead them to the Promised Land. —Heaven.— C. Davis.

"I do not say that we ought not to make plans, nor to try to carry them out. Every earnest man will do that; only there is wisdom in holding our plans loosely, and subject to God's modification."—Vincent.

"Alpine climbers say that the icy peaks which sometimes they attempt to climb are like 'the neck of a bottle,' and it is hard work to keep from sliding into the abyss. Life has paths similarly slippery, and unless a Divine guide uphold us, our steps will slide."

"Life is the soul's nursery."—Thackeray.

True worship.—

He asks no taper lights, on high surrounding
The priestly altar and the saintly grave;
No dolorous chant nor organ music sounding,
Nor incense clouding up the twilight nave.

For he whom Jesus loved hath truly spoken:
The holier worship which He deigns to bless Restores the lost, and binds the spirit-broken,
And feeds the widow and the fatherless!

Types of our human weakness and our sorrow!
Who lives unhaunted by his loved ones dead?
Who, with vain longing, seeketh not to borrow From stranger eyes the home-lights which have fled?

— Whittier.

PSALM THE ONE HUNDREDTH.

author, — unknown: date, after the captivity

Subj. call of all the world to the service of the true God.

a Ez. xxxiv. 30, 31.

b Ps. cxvi. 17–19; Is. xxxv. 10; 1 Pe. ii. 9.

1—5. (1) Make . . noise, raise a shout. Ps. xcviii. 4. all ye lands, Polychr., "thou whole earth." (2) Serve, comp. Ps. ii. 11. (3) Know ye, i. e. learn by personal experience. not we ourselves, R. V., "and we are his."[a] (4) be thankful,[b] i. e. express your thankfulness. (5) good, a term that blends righteousness and mercy. truth, R. V., "faithfulness" to covenant and promise. All men's hope is in God's "faithfulness," that He will keep His promises to them — pardon them, deliver them, cleanse them, and give them rest in His kingdom forever. — Pul. Com.

"Among the Pss. of triumph and thanksgiving this stands pre-eminent as rising to the highest point of joy and grandeur. No local restrictions, no national exclusiveness, can find place in the contemplation of God as the common Creator and Father of Man." — Psalms chron. arranged.

Joyfulness of the service of God (vs. 2). — I. The obligation, duty, and privilege of thanksgiving. Our highest calling and work is to praise and bless God with our lips, our hearts, and our lives. II. Consider the reasons why we should serve the Lord with gladness. 1. He is our maker, supporter, God; 2. He is the author of reconciliation and redemption, and His rule is the rule of righteousness and love; 3. Because of the largeness, freeness, universality, unchangeableness of His love; 4. Because the very principles of service are a well-spring of life and gladness; 5. Because it is a reasonable service; 6. Because we thus most truly represent and heartily commend His Gospel and service unto men. — Watson Smith.

"Can you bear to be waited upon by a servant who goes moping and dejected to his every task? You would rather have no servant at all than one who evidently finds your service cheerless and irksome." — George Bowen.

A great oratorio. — If we are right in regarding Psalms xciii.–xcix. as forming one continuous series, one great prophetic oratorio, whose title is "Jehovah is King," and through which there runs the same great idea, this psalm may be regarded as the doxology which closes the strain. We find lingering in it notes of the same great harmony. It breathes the same gladness; it is filled with the same hope, that all nations shall bow down before Jehovah, and confess that He is God. — Perowne. Luther would have immortalized his name had he done no more than written the majestic air and harmony to which we are accustomed to sing this psalm, and which, when the mind is in a truly worshiping frame, seems to bring heaven down to earth, and to raise earth to heaven, giving us anticipations of the pure and sublime delights of that noble and general assembly in which saints and angels shall forever celebrate the praises of God. — Ingram Cobbin.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FIRST.

author, — David: prob. date, 2 Sa. vi. 12–15.

Subj., a monarch's pious resolutions.

1—4. (1) mercy and judgment, these are properly only Divine attributes, but they can in measure be imitated by a king.[a] Luther styles this psalm, "David's mirror for rulers." sing, or play to the harp. (2) behave, etc., "take good heed to the way of integrity;" "conduct myself wisely and uprightly, in the path of innocence." come unto me, to aid me.[b] perfect heart, i. e. one thoroughly sincere. (3) I will set no, as an object of imitation or achievement. wicked thing, Heb. "thing of Belial." R. V. "base thing." work, etc., Polychr., "the dealing of madmen I hate." not cleave, it may come as temptation, but shall not be encouraged. (4) froward,[c] "a heart that deals faithlessly both towards God and man." De. xxxii. 20. not know, have acquaintance with favor. wicked person, R. V., "evil thing."

It shall not cleave to me. — A bird may light upon a man's house; but he may chose whether she shall nestle or breed there, or no: and the devil or his instruments may represent a wicked object to a man's sight; but he may choose whether he will entertain or embrace it or no. For a man to set wicked things before his eyes is nothing else but to sin of set purpose, to set himself to sin, or to sell himself to sin, as Ahab did, 1 Kings xxi. — George Hakewill. — The prince's psalm. — It is related of Ernest the Pious, Duke of Saxe-Gotha, that he sent an unfaithful official a copy of the 101st psalm, and that it became a proverb in the land when any magistrate had done wrong, "He will certainly receive the prince's psalm to read." — Ker.

a "He meditates on the mercy and righteousness of God, that he may learn the lesson of that mercy and righteousness himself." — Perowne.

b "When Thou shalt come unto me and assist me, I will walk wisely in a perfect way." — Tholuck.

c Adj. fr. froward, as opposed to toward.

5—8. (5) privily, secretly, treacherously. Ju. ix. 31; "men will be so far from gaining favor with him by means of unloving, traitorous tale-bearing and sycophancy, of the serpentine malignity of which David himself had had abundant experience in his relation to Saul, that it will rather call down his anger upon them." — Delitzsch. high look, lit. lofty-eyed, i. e. supercilious, arrogant. proud heart, lit. "wide of heart;" i. e. puffed up and blown out with pride. will . . suffer, Polychr., "I cannot abide." (6) mine . . land, to choose and to favor all such, giving them places of authority and influence. serve, R. V., "minister unto," i. e. find promotion to office easy. (7) worketh deceit, Ps. lii. 2. not tarry, R. V., "be established;" i. e. be allowed to remain undisturbed. (8) early,[d] R. V., "morning by morning."

Faithfulness. — As a clerk in a country store in Illinois, Abraham Lincoln quickly became known for his honesty. He was truthful in what he said about the goods, he gave good weight, and in particular, he lost no time and spared no pains in correcting mistakes. He was closing the store one evening when a woman called for a half pound of tea. In the morning he saw from the weight in the scale that he had given her only a quarter of a pound. Leaving everthing else, he weighed out the other quarter and carried it to her. Another customer paid him six and one-quarter cents more than was his due, and when the store was closed at night he hastened to correct the mistake, although she lived two miles away. — Youth's Companion.

d The Psalmist evidently means to say that fr. day to day, executing judgment in the morning according to the Eastern custom (Je. xxi. 12), he would by degrees eliminate fr. Israel all the wicked who should be found worthy of death." — Jennings and Lowe.

Comp. 2 Sa. xxiv. 11; Je. xxi. 12; Ps. lxxiii. 14; Lu. xxii. 66.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND SECOND.

author, — unknown; date, late in the captivity

Subj., the bitter cry of the exile.

1—5. (1) my cry, the prayer of a sufferer becomes a cry.[e] (2) Hide not, considered to be the worst of all evils; Ps. xxx. 7. speedily, the delays of God being most trying to the pious soul. (3) like smoke, or into smoke; "pass away into nothingness." burned, "smolder like," etc. as an hearth, R. V., "firebrand" when placed in the fire.[f] (4) smitten, as with the hot sun.[g] forget . . bread, in the absorption of his great grief. (5) to my skin, R. V., "flesh." La. iv. 8. An expression denoting extreme emaciation.[h]

Consumed like smoke. — There are certain minor troubles or annoyances, which form what may be called the smoke of our daily life; things which are not so much actually injurious (unless we make them so), but petty worries. They are not the clouds which overshadow our career, and assuredly not any part of the storms of life, but simply smoke. And as we have most of us observed, just in the way that a puff of dense smoke coming from a passing steam-engine will completely shut out from our gaze the sun's e "The Ps. opens with familiar expressions of prayer, such as rise in the heart and mouth of the praying one without his feeling that they are of foreign origin." — Delitzsch.

f "Transitory as the smoke of a fire is the poet's life, devoured as with the flame of fire is his person." — Jennings and Lowe.

g Ps. cxxi. 6; Ho. ix. 16; Jonah iv. 8.

h Comp. Job xix. 20.

orb; so the smoke of some vexation, of itself trival enough, will obscure for the time our view of the Sun of Righteousness, and occasion us either to err from the path of duty, or to pause in it. Many events occur in the Christian's history which are not of sufficient importance to be called "crosses," yet in their succession they produce a perceptible influence. In the poet's words they are—

"The cares which petty shadows cast, By which our lives are chiefly proved."

"Gold can no more fill the spirit of a man than grace his purse."

6—10. (6) pelican, a bird that lives in swamps. Le. xi. 17, 18. Both the figs. of the pelican and the owl express extreme loneliness.[a] desert, better, "ruined places." (7) watched, sleep being driven away by pain and sorrow. sparrow alone, Polychr., "I am sleepless, and I mourn, like a solitary bird," a striking object of pity.[b] (8) are sworn, R. V., "curse by me;" use my name as a curse.[c] (9) eaten ashes, comp. La. iii. 16. mingled . . weeping, "the mourner's paradox—ashes his bread, tears his drink."—Cheyne. Ps. xlii. 3. (10) thine indignation, the bitterest thing in our cup of grief is the feeling that it is punishment for sin, the anger of our gracious Father. lifted . . down, better with R. V., "taken me up and cast me away." God's wrath has seized and whirled him aloft, only to cast him, as worthless, away."—Perowne.

[a] The owl is called in the Arabic, "mother of the ruins."

[b] "When one of these has lost its mate he will sit upon the house-top alone, and lament by the hour his sad bereavement."—Thomson.

[c] "When they curse choose me as an example of misery, and imprecate upon themselves or others my misfortunes."—Perowne.

A pelican of the wilderness. — Here only [at Hulet] have I seen the pelican of the wilderness, as David calls it. I once had one of them shot just below this place, and, as it was merely wounded in the wing, I had a good opportunity to study its character. It was certainly the most somber, austere bird I ever saw. It gave one the blues merely to look at it. David could find no more expressive type of solitude and melancholy by which to illustrate his own sad state. It seemed as large as a half-grown donkey, and when fairly settled on its stout legs, it looked like one. The pelican is never seen but in these unfrequented solitudes.— W. M. Thomson.— I am as a sparrow alone.— It is evident that the "sparrow alone and melancholy upon the house-tops" cannot be the lively, gregarious sparrow which assembles in such numbers on these favorite feeding-places [the house-tops of the East]. We must therefore look for some other bird, and naturalists are now agreed that we may accept the Blue Thrush (Petrocossyphus cyaneus) as the particular tzippor, or small bird, which sits alone on the house-tops. The color of this bird is a dark blue, whence it derives its popular name. Its habits exactly correspond with the idea of solitude and melancholy. The blue thrushes never assemble in flocks, and it is very rare to see more than a pair together. It is fond of sitting on the tops of houses, uttering its notes, which, however agreeable to itself, is monotonous and melancholy to a human ear. — J. G. Wood.

"Whatever grieves us beside ourselves; a great sorrow makes us retire within ourselves."—Richter.

11—15. (11) shadow, evening shadow.[d] Comp. Ps. cix. 23. The fig. describes the near approach of death. declineth, i. e. "that lengthens, as shadows do when the day declines."—Pul. Com. withered, as vs. 4, (12) shalt endure, R. V., marg. "sittest as king forever." remembrance, R. V., "memorial," 1 Pe. i. 24, 25. (13) upon Zion, whose desolations seemed illustrated to the Psalmist by his own. the set time, the time when her warfare is accomplished. By this phrase "is probably meant the time fixed by Jeremiah for the termination of the captivity and the restoration of Jerusalem (Jer. xxv. 11, 12; xxix. 10), and alluded to by Daniel in Dan. ix. 2."—Pul. Com. (14) stones . . dust, suitable words when Jerus. was still a heap of ruins. The pleasure taken was but a melancholy pleasure. favour, R. V., "have pity upon." (15) So, i. e. when Divine deliverances for Zion are revealed.

[d] "When it is the time of evening the shadows lengthen, but when it is dark they are no longer discernible, but come to an end and go."—Rashi.

"The singer sees the indication that the hour fixed in God's eternal counsels is at hand, because he sees how God's servants, who have a claim on Him and are in sympathy with His purposes, yearn lovingly after the sad ruins and dust of the forlorn city. Some new access of such feelings must have been stirring among the devouter part of the Revival, and its symptoms (vss. 12, 13). — I. There is a favorable time to promote the revival of the church. 1. The source to be looked to; 2. The nature of the revival to be expected — deliverance, union, prosperity; 3. The time when it may be expected. II. That such revival is always preceded by certain infallible signs. 1. Humiliation before God; 2. Believing prayer; 3. Affection for the ordinances of God's house; 4. Self-denying efforts in God's cause. — J. Wileman.

Pleasure in Zion. — It was a good omen for Jerusalem when the captives began to feel a home-sickness, and began to sigh after her. We may expect the modern Jews to be restored to their own land when the love of their country begins to sway them, and casts out the love of gain. To the church of God no token can be more full of hope than to see the members thereof deeply interested in all that concerns her; no prosperity is likely to rest upon a church when carelessness about ordinances, enterprises, and services is manifest; but when even the least and lowest matter connected with the Lord's work is carefully attended to, we may be sure that the set time to favor Zion has come. The poorest church member, the most grievous backslider, the most ignorant convert, should be precious in our sight, because forming a part, although possibly a very feeble part, of the new Jerusalem. If we do not care about the prosperity of the church to which we belong, need we wonder if the blessing of the Lord is withheld?—Spurgeon.

exiles. . . . When good men begin to lay the church's or the world's miseries to heart, it is a sign that God is beginning to heal them."—Exp. Bib.

16—22. (16) build up Zion, R. V., "hath built . . . hath appeared, etc., restoring her from her ruins. his glory, as the faithful Promiser. (17) destitute, exiles who were without country or home. (18) written, i. e. the story of the returning of Divine favor to Zion. people . . created, an implied antithesis between the new creation of the nation of Israel and their present destruction. — Calvin. (19) looked down,[a] well acquainted with all the sufferings of His people, though for a time He held back His hand. (20) appointed to death, Heb. "sons of death." Ps. lxxix. 11. (22) to declare, R. V., "that men may declare." gathered together, fr. their scattering in the captivity.

Zion built. — God is Zion's purchaser, architect, builder, inhabitant, Lord. I. Zion built up. Conversions frequent; confessions numerous; union firm: edification solid; missions extended. II. God glorified. In its very foundation: by its ministry; by difficulties and enemies; by poor workers, and poor materials; and even by our failures. III. Hope excited. Because we may expect the Lord to glorify Himself. IV. Inquiry suggested. Am I concerned, as built, or building? not merely doctrinally, but experimentally? — Spurgeon.

a De. xxvi. 15.

"Jesus is not a subject of study; He is a revelation to the soul—that or nothing."—Ian Maclaren.

"God takes notice not only of the prayers of His afflicted people, which are the language of grace; but even of their groans, which are the language of nature."—Matthew Henry.

23—28. (23) weakened, etc., the Psalmist here returns to his personal afflictions. The fig. may be taken from De. viii. 2. in the way, i. e. "the journey of life." shortened my days, i. e. "made me grow old prematurely."(24) in the midst, the very time of my strength; comp. the prayer of Hezekiah. A righteous Jew felt that God was under obligations to grant him long life. (25) Of old, etc., He. i. 10. (26) perish, as merely created things. thou change them, the very changes and perishings being controlled by Him "whose years are throughout all generations." (27) the same, lit. "Thou art He," i. e. "thou art the one eternal and unchangeable existence — the one reality." He. xiii. 8.[b] (28) continue, the objects of Divine regard.

For the sick. I. Submission — The Lord sent the trial — "He weakeneth," etc. II. Service — exonerated from some work, He now requires of me patience, earnestness, etc. III. Preparation — for going home. IV. Prayer — for others to occupy my place. V. Expectation — I shall soon be in heaven, now that my days are shortened. — Spurgeon.

A new vesture. — Time impairs all things, the fashion becomes obselete and passes away. The visible creation, which is like the garment of the invisible God, is waxing old and wearing out, and our great King is not so poor that He must always wear the same robes; He will ere long fold up the worlds and put them aside as worn out vestures, and He will array Himself in new attire, making a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. How readily will all this be done. "Thou shalt change them and they shall be changed; as in the creation so in the restoration, omnipotence shall work its way without hindrance. — Spurgeon.

b Is. xli. 4; xliii. 10.

"Can you wonder that the true Proprietor should occasionally assert His right by sending the hail-storm or the lightning to smite the earth? Were the Divine Being never to assert His claim, man might indulge the thought that he was the terminating center of all things." — J. Parker.

"Old age, and waxing old as a garment, is written on the fairest face of creation."—Rutherford.

"The vision of God is the one thing needful for worship and for conduct."—George Adam Smith.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND THIRD.

author,— unknown; time after the return from exile

Subj. the goodness of Jehovah.

1, 2. (1) all . . me, Polychr., "all that is deepest within me;" all the parts of his soul are called upon with separate distinctness, "upon intellect, feeling, sentiment; upon his understanding, heart, and all their powers."—Spk. Com. (2) benefits, a word summing up all God's gracious ways with him.[c]

Psalm 103. — "When Gustavus Adolphus entered Augsburg, the city of the Protestant Confession, after his great victory at Leipsic which struck the decisive blow for religious freedom in Germany, he went straight to the Church of St. Ann, and caused this psalm to be sung in the German version."

c "This vs. touches the secret spring of so much ingratitude — forgetfulness, the want of recollection, or gathering together again of all the varied threads of mercy."—Perowne

"Never be satisfied with religious work done from a sense of duty; keep on till you do it for love of it."

— Ker. — "All that is within me."—In the camphor tree every part is impregnated with the precious perfume; from the highest twig to the lowest root the powerful gum will exude. Thus grace should permeate our whole nature, and be seen in every faculty, every word, every act, and even every desire. If it be "in us and abound," it will be so. An unsanctified part of our frame must surely be like a dead branch, deforming and injuring the tree. "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless His holy name." When praise is truly spiritual, it pervades the whole man.—Anec. Illus. of O. T. Texts.

a Is. xl. 31.

"Well may we wonder that the great God should stoop so low, to enter into such a covenant of grace and peace, founded upon such a Mediator as Christ, with such utter enemies, base creatures, sinful dust and ashes as we are. This is the wonder of angels, and will be matter of admiration and praising God to us for all eternity."—Sibbs.

"Bring a man to see the best covered table in the world, looking at it might gratify his eyes, but would never satisfy his mouth. We must taste before we can see that God is good."—Newton.

3—5. (3) all, the stress of the verse lies on this word; every one of them, so that not a trace of them is left. diseases, sicknesses in general. (4) destruction, or the pit, Ps. xvi. 10. crowneth thee, maketh thy life bright and joyous, or that of one who is crowned. Note that God's favor is the true crown of life. "God's benefits will not be before our eyes, unless our sins be also before our eyes."—Augustine, (5) mouth, poetic fig. for necessity and desire. God "gives Himself to us as the bread of life." youth, etc., better as Pr. Bk. Vers. "Making thee young and lusty as an eagle."[a] "The comparison is to be understood of the annual moulting of the eagle; its renewing of its feathers is an emblem of the renewing of one's youth through grace."—Delitzsch.

Tender mercies.—I do not know that I can do better than tell you a little incident that took place in my native town of Stirling. Workmen were blasting the castle rock, near where it abuts upon a walk that lies open to the street. The train was laid and lit, and an explosion was momentarily expected. Suddenly trotting round the great wall of the cliff, came a little child going straight to where the match burned. The men shouted—(it was mercy)—and by their very terror in shouting, alarmed and bewildered the poor little thing. By this time the mother also had come round: in a moment saw the danger; opened wide her arms, and cried from her very heart, "Come to me, my darling,"—(that was tender mercy)—and instantly, with eager pattering feet, and little arms opened to her arms, and tear-filled eyes answering to her eyes—the little thing ran back and away, and stopped not until she was clasped in her mother's bosom—wealth of sunny hair loosened on it, and lips coral red pressed to mother's pallid lip of fear—as the motherly heart gave way to tears, in the thought of so imperiled an escape: for it was barely by a second, as the roar of the shattered rock told.—Alexander B. Grosart.

b Ne. ix. 17, 31; Joel ii. 13.

"We wear mercies, we breathe mercies, we walk on mercies; our whole life is but a passage from one mercy to another."—Gurnall.

"The God to whom love turns undoubting and praise rises without one note of discord is the God who has spoken His own name by deeds which have entered into the history of the world."—Exp. Bib.

6—8. (6) for all, and not for me only. (7) his ways, of righteousness and judgment, Ex. xxxiv. 6, 7. Here the ways of Jehovah "are those kept by Himself in His progress in connection with the history of redemption." (8) merciful, etc., Ps. lxxxvi. 15, cxlv. 8.[b]

Plenteous in mercy (vs. 8).—I. Reason cannot assure us that God is plenteous in mercy. II. His dispensations do not prove that God is plenteous in mercy. III. The Scriptures declare that God is plenteous in mercy. IV. The gift of Christ demonstrates that God is plenteous in mercy. V. The experience of penitents confirms that God is plenteous in mercy.—G. Brooks.

Mercy.—Here is compassion for the weak and sorrowing, grace for the undeserving, long suffering for the provoking, mercy for the guilty, and truth for the tried. God's love assumes many forms, and is lovely in them all. Into whatsoever state we may be cast, there is a peculiar hue in the light of love which will harmonize with our condition; love is one and yet sevenfold, its white ray contains the chromatic scale. Are we sorrowful? We find the Lord full of compassion. Are we contending with temptation? His grace comes to our aid. Do we err? He is patient with us. Have we sinned? He is plenteous in mercy. Are we resting on His promise? He will fulfil it with abundant truth.—Spurgeon.

c Comp. Is. lvii. 16.

d Le. xix. 18.

e God's love cannot be measured by all the measures of the universe."—Perowne.

9—12. (9) always chide, or be contending.[c] keep, i. e. cherish any grudge. He will accept repentance and amendment. He is not implacable.[d] (10) not according, etc., on what principles then are God's dealings based? "He remembereth that we are dust" (vs. 14), so the Judge is merciful. Law knows no mercy, but the administrator of law may. (11) as the heaven, marg. "according to the height of heaven." No better conception of infinite distance could be given.[e] mercy, "For the love of God is broader than the measure of man's mind, and the heart of the eternal is most wonderfully kind." (12) east . . west, "the largest measures which the earth can afford."[a]

Past benefits (vs. 10). — I. Man stands in a continued relation to the past. II. Man is called upon to reason from the past to the future. III. This call to reason from the past to the future is an incidental illustration of the unchangeableness of God, — what He was, He will be. Apply: 1. The atheism of anticipation should be corrected by the reverent gratitude of retrospection; 2. He who reviews the past thankfully may advance to the future hopefully; 3. Nothing forgotten so soon as benefits. — Parker.

From the east to the west. — An astronomical fact may give, perhaps, new and more exalted views of the force of this passage. The distance from north to south is measurable. In every sphere there are north and south poles — both fixed points; and on the earth the distance between them is about twelve thousand miles. So that had the Psalmist said, "As far as the north is from the south," our conceptions would have been thus limited. It is otherwise with the east and the west. There are no eastern and western poles. From every point alike in the circuit of the world, the east extends in one direction, the west in the other. Thus, the traveler westward, for example, might be be said to be forever chasing the west without coming nearer to it. The Psalmist himself might not have known this astronomical fact; yet, regarding his words as dictated by the Spirit of God, we are surely permitted to read them in the light of modern science, and so to discern in them the most forcible illustration that can be imagined of the illimitable distance to which God has removed the iniquities of His people. — S. S. Teacher.

13, 14. (13) as a father,[b] comp. De. xxxii. 6; Job x. 8; Is. xxix. 16; lxiii. 16; lxiv. 8; Matt. vii. 7–11. the Lord pitieth, Polychr., "father loves. . . . Jehovah loves;" with a love that is father-like.[c] (14) our frame, our formation; or our fashioning (Ge. ii. 7).[d] Man's frailties are tenderly regarded. God estimates what we can do, as well as what we should. dust, Ge. iii. 19. Perhaps the Psalmist is thinking that God gave the bodily form according to His will, just as the potter gives what shape He pleases to the clay. The material in itself is worthless.

God's pity. — I. Whom God pities; "them that fear Him." II. How He pities; "as a father pitieth his children." III. Why He pities; "for He knoweth our frame." He hath reason to know our frame, for He framed us, and having Himself made man of the dust, "He remembers that we are dust." — Matthew Henry.

A father's treatment of his son. — A celebrated preacher, in illustrating the truth contained in that passage, "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him," was often wont to refer to the following fact which he had learned in Dublin; "A gray-headed and pious father had a very wicked son. The old man had often prayed and wrestled with God on his behalf. But he became worse and worse. Never did the father close his doors against him. One day, one of the father's neighbors addressed him with considerable severity, saying, 'Why harbor that reprobate son of yours? Why don't you turn him out of doors, and banish him from your house?' 'Ay, ay,' said the aged saint, his gray locks trembling with emotion, 'you can all turn him out of doors but his own father.'"

15–18. (15) As for man, i. e. as a mortal being he is very helpless. as grass, a frequent Scrip. comparison.[e] (16) wind, east wind, wh. quickly changes a flourishing garden into a waste.[f] place . . more, even the greatest of men are soon forgotten. See Job vii. 10. (17) mercy of the Lord, goodness, justice, faithfulness to promise, patience, all blend in the Divine mercy. from everlasting, not merely continuing ever, but rising over the God-fearing man, like the encompassing heavens. fear him, and therefore hope in His mercy.[g] (18) covenant, "the blessings of the covenant are no inalienable right. There is a limit to God's mercy. Children's children can only inherit its blessings by cleaving to it." — Perowne. De. vii. 9.[h]

Man and mercy (vss. 15–18). — These passages form a contrast between man's life and God's mercy. I. There is a contrast in their strength. II. A contrast in their beauty. III. A contrast in their duration. 1. Man cannot carry out his designs after death, but mercy executes her designs independent of His presence; 2. Mercy distributes her invaluable blessings among families throughout all generations. — Homilist.

a "Words which gained new force in the mouths of those who had been gathered fr. the far-off regions of the East to their own home." — Wordsworth.

Comp. Is. xxxviii. 17; Mi. vii. 19.

"When sin is pardoned it is never charged again; the guilt of it can no more return than east can become west, or west become east." — Stephen Charnock.

b God is compared with earthly fathers not bec. He is like them, but bec. His incomparable love towards us cannot be expressed otherwise." — Calvin.

c "The life and death of God manifest in the flesh are the best comment upon these signal words of prophecy." — Spk. Com.

Comp. Mal. iii. 17.

d Comp. Ge. vi 3. "It is a far happier thing to be pitied of God, than to be envied of men." — Sir R. Baker.

e Ps. xxxvii. 2, 10, 35; xc. 5, 6; Is. xl. 6–8; li. 12; 1 Pe. i 24.

f "Such wind is an emblem of every form of peril that threatens life; often enough it is really a breath of wind that snaps off a man's life.'" — Delitzsch.

g "For the third time God's mercy is said to be upon 'them that fear Him' (vs. 11, 13), as if to remind us that there is a love wh. they only know who have tasted that the Lord is gracious, who fear Him, and walk in His ways." — Perowne.

h He. viii. 10, 12.

His duty.—A Virginia circuit-preacher reports an illustration of the faith that would remove mountains, which he heard from the lips of a negro preacher who was talking to his congregation on the subject of obeying the Lord's commands, whatever they might be, and however difficult they might seem. "Bredren," said the old preacher, "whatever de good God tell me to do in dis blessed book"— holding up an old and evidently much-read Bible — "dat I'se gwine to do. If I see in it dat I mus' jump troo a stone wall, I'm gwine to jump at it. Goin' troo it 'longs to God to 'tend to; but jumpin' at it 'longs to me, my bredren!" The illustration was simple and homely enough, but it had an evident effect upon the old preacher's hearers, who might have failed to understand a more elegant explanation.— Youth's Com.

"From everlasting, by predestination; to everlasting, by glorification; the one without beginning, the other without end." — Bernard.

"Not only mightily executing the word when heard; but ever intently listening, ready to catch the intimation of his will."— William Kay.

19–22. (19) the heavens, in opposition to the earth, on wh. kings' thrones are set, is the "unchangeable realm above the rise and fall of things here below." all, absolutely all created existence. (20) angels, suggested by the reference to the "heavens" in vs. 19.[a] excel in strength,[b] or, "ye strong warriors." do his commandments, "their life endowed with heroic strength is spent entirely in an obedient execution of the word of God." hearkening, comp. angel attributes, Is. vi. 2. (21) hosts, "prob. includes not only the angels, but the forces of nature, and the stars, so closely related in the Hebrew mind to the angelic beings." — Cheyne. (22) works, upon the earth. Prob. meaning all living rational creatures.[c]

Praise. — See how finite man can awaken unbounded praise! Man is but little, yet, placing his hands upon the keys of the great organ of the universe, he wakes it to thunders of adoration! Redeemed man is the voice of nature, the priest in the temple of creation, the precentor in the worship of the universe. O that all the Lord's works on earth were delivered from the vanity to which they were made subject, and brought into the glorious liberty of the children of God: the time is hastening on and will most surely come; then will all the Lord's works bless him indeed. The immutable promise is ripening, the sure mercy is on its way. Hasten, ye winged hours! — Spurgeon.

"From the church on earth that it stands in living like-minded fellowship with the angels of God, and that it possesses a dignity wh. rises above all created things, even the angels which are appointed to serve it."— Delitzsch.

[a] Ps. lxxviii. 25; marg., lxxxix. 6; Joel iii. 11.

[b] Ps. cxlv. 10.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FOURTH.

author, — unknown; date, after the exile

An anthem of natural theology, or a Divine ode of creation.

1–5. (1) very great, such simple words indicate feeling that transcends all language. clothed, etc., as Ps. xciii. 1. (2) light, referring to the work of God on the first day.[d] garment, or robe, as for a great king.[e] stretchest out, etc., a brief description of the work of the second day: comp. Gen. i. 6–8. curtain, i. e. tent, curtain. "Heaven is to the Jews a tent of safety, of rest, of a fatherly hospitality in which God lives with His creatures." (3) chambers, lit. "upper chambers," i. e. Paradise. God's creation is poetically conceived of as a splendid palace where God, the great King, dwells. waters, those above the firmament are like the palace roof. Polychr., "Thou framest out of water Thine upper stories." chariot, in wh. He rides forth. When He walks it is on the wind. (4) maketh, etc., lit. "Who makes His messengers winds; His servants a fire flaming," meaning that winds and lightning fires are His messengers.[f] "He clothes His messengers with the might, the swiftness, the all pervading subtility of wind and fire." — Perowne. (5) foundations, wh. are like His palace floor; the first part of the third day's work; Gen. i. 5–8.

Cosmos. — It might almost be said that this one psalm represents the image of the whole Cosmos. We are astonished to find in a lyrical poem of such a limited compass, the whole universe — the heavens and the earth — sketched with a few bold touches. The calm and toilsome labor of man, from the rising of the sun to the setting of the same, when his daily work is done, is here contrasted with the moving life of the elements of nature. This contrast and generalization in the conception of the mutual action of natural phenomena, and this retrospection of an omnipresent invisible power, which can renew the earth or crumble it to dust, constitute a solemn and exalted rather than a glowing and gentle form of poetic creation. — A. Van Humboldt. — Extract from the Zendavesta. — The following beautiful invocation to the Creator, taken from the Parsee Zendavesta, bears a remarkable parallelism to various passages in the Old Testament, a parallelism which affords indubitable evidence that the relics of a patriarchal revelation are yet to be traced amidst the obscurities and corruptions of the older theologies of Asia:

[d] Ge. i. 3.

"Light is put first, as being to man the most glorious and splendid of God's works, and the very vehicle of the splendor of them all"— Jennings and Lowe.

[e] "In comparing the light to a robe, he signifies that though God is invisible, yet His glory is manifest." —Calvin.

"Is there in the universe a created thing more worthy to be the robe of Jehovah, whose very being is such that He dwelleth in darkness." — Herder.

[f] He. i. 7.

"1. I invite and announce to me the Creator, Ahura-Mazda, the brilliant, the majestic, greatest, best, most beautiful; 2. The strongest, most intellectual, of the best body, the highest through holiness; 3. Who is very wise, who rejoices afar; 4. Who created us, who formed us, who keeps us, the holiest among the heavenly."—Yacna, I.

6—9. (6) vss. 6–8 are a poetical explanation of Ge. i. 9. coveredst it, for the early condition of the earth as surrounded with water or vapor, comp. Ge. i. 2.[a] (7) rebuke, or command.[b] thunder, wh. best represents to the poet what the voice of God must have been. hasted away, Polychr. "shrank together." (8) go up, better rend. "The mountains rose, the valleys sank;" due to the subsiding waters.[c] (9) set a bound, separating the sea from the land. God broke this once on account of sin, but renewed the covenant forever with Noah; Gen. ix. 9–16.

God seen in His works.—I. See God in the heavens. In sun, moon, stars, cloud, wind, lightning, rain, and dew. II. See God in the earth. In its order; its relations of sea and land; its mountains, sea margin, valleys, streams, trees, flowers, etc. III. See God in the creatures of earth. All animals, their habits and needs. All graciously provided for.

The ocean.—

Now stretch your eye off shore, o'er waters made
To cleanse the air, and bear the world's great trade,
To rise and wet the mountains near the sun,
Then back into themselves in rivers run,
Fulfilling mighty uses, far and wide,
Through earth, in air, or here, as ocean-tide.
Ho! how the giant heaves himself, and strains
And flings to break his strong and viewless chains;
Foams in his wrath; and at his prison doors,
Hark! hear him! how he beats, and tugs, and roars,
As if he would break forth again, and sweep Each living thing within his lowest deep. —Richard H. Dana.

"If the one end of mercy were not the beginning of another, we were undone."—P. Henry.

a Job xxxviii. 4, 6; 2 Pe. iii. 5.

b "This vast, swelling, tumultuous sea hears the 'rebuke' of God, and sinks to its appointed place; the earth appears, emerges fr. her watery covering, and shows her surface diversified with mountain and valley."—Perowne.

c "The expressions may describe the tumultuous rush of the waters over the mountains and into valleys in quest of the spots where God has determined they are to abide."—Jennings and Lowe.

? Job xxxviii. 8–11.

"Nature is the chart of God, mapping out all His attributes."—Tupper.

10—13. (10) valleys, or torrent-bed. run . . hills, rend. that they should make their way between the mountains. (11) wild asses,[d] peculiarly wild creatures, untended by man, but cared for by God. God's mercy includes all His works; He careth for the animals. (12) By them, or above them. shall the fowls, omit "shall," Ge. i. 30; ii. 19. sing, lit. gave out their voice. (13) chambers, see vs. 3. The clouds are up in the roof of God's palace. satisfied, refreshed and nourished.[e] fruits . . works, i. e. the rain.

Springs.—Men cut places for rivers to run in, but none but God can cut a channel to bring spiritual streams into the soul. The Psalmist speaks of the sending forth of springs as one great act of the providence of God. Philosophy cannot show the reason of it. The Psalmist doth it well: God sends them into the valleys, His providence and power keeps them continually running: he that would have his soul watered must go to God in prayer.—Ralph Robinson.

d The swift, unapproachable onager. Job xxxix. 5–8.

e Ps. lxv. 9, 10; Je. x. 13.

"Nature creates and produces, at one and the same time, the rudiments and principles of the whole body, and of every component part."—Bacon.

14, 15. (14) grass . . herb, Ge. i. 11, 29, 30. The term "herb" includes corn, etc. service of man, perhaps should be, "for the labor of man," that he, by his labor, should bring food out of the earth. (15) wine, etc., man's luxuries as well as man's necessities are supplied by God's gracious provision.[f]

The growing grass.—Grass grows as well as herbs, for cattle must be fed as well as men. God appoints to the lowliest creature its portion and takes care that it has it. Divine power is as truly and as worthily put forth in the feeding of beasts as in the nurturing of man; watch but a blade of grass with a devout eye and you may see God at work within it. The herb is for man, and he must till the soil, or it will not be produced, yet it is God that causeth it to grow in the garden, even the same God who made the grass to grow in the unenclosed pastures of the wilderness. Man forgets this and talks of his produce, but in very truth without God he would plough and sow in vain. The Lord causeth each green blade to spring and each ear to ripen; do but watch with opened eye and you shall see the Lord walking through the cornfields. —Spurgeon.

f Corn, wine and oil were the glory of the Promised Land. De xi. 14; xviii. 4.

"Nature is mighty; art is mighty; artifice is weak. For Nature is the work of a mightier power than man. Art is the work of man, under the guidance and inspiration of a mightier power. Artifice is the work of mere man, in the imbecility of his mimic understanding."—Hare.

16—18. (16) trees of the Lord, those in the second clause called "the cedars of Lebanon." Mighty trees, yet God abundantly satisfies them.[a] Called trees of God because not planted by any human hands; trees of the forest and mountain, in contrast with the vine and olive. full of sap, R. V., "are satisfied," "i. e. drink in sufficiently God's rain so that they grow up and flourish amazingly." (17) the stork, Le. xi. 19.[b] (18) wild goats, mentioned as beyond human care. conies, Polychr., "marmots." Le. xi. 5.

The cedars of Lebanon (vs. 16).—We have here—I. The absence of all human culture. 1. The Lord's trees owe their planting entirely to Him; 2. They are not dependent on man for their watering; 3. No mortal might protects them; 4. They preserve a sublime indifference to human gaze; 5. Their exaltation is all for God, not for man; 6. They are independent of man in their expectations. II. The cedars of Lebanon are a glorious display of the Divine care. 1. In the abundance of their supply; 2. They are always green; 3. Note their grandeur, size, and fragrance; 4. Attentively think upon the perpetuity of them; 5. They are very venerable. III. The fulness of the living principle. 1. Full of sap—this is vitally necessary; 2. Essentially mysterious; 3. Radically secret; 4. Permanently active; 5. Externally operative; 6. Abundantly to be desired.—Spurgeon.

The stork.—In many cases the stork breeds among old ruins, and under such circumstances it is fond of building its nest on the tops of pillars or towers, the summits of arches, and similar localities. When it takes up its abode among mankind, it generally selects the breeding-places which have been built for it by those who know its taste, but it frequently chooses the top of a chimney, or some such locality. When it is obliged to build in spots where it can find neither rocks nor buildings, it builds on trees, and, like the heron, is sociable in its nesting, a whole community residing in a clump of trees. It is not very particular about the kind of tree, provided that it be tolerably tall, and strong enough to bear the weight of its enormous nest; and the reader will at once see that the fir-trees are peculiarly fitted to be the houses for the stork.—J. G. Wood.

19—23. (19) Moon, mentioned first bec. to the Heb. night naturally preceded the day. for seasons, to mark them. Work of the fourth day: Ge. i. 14. This is to be taken with the next clause. sun, etc., observes the laws appointed for him, Polychr., "knows his journey home." (20) makest darkness (Ge. i. 16–18), by withdrawing the light, and throwing portions of the earth into shade. the beasts, night being their feeding time. creep forth, or move about. (21) young lions, not cubs, but fierce lions, just in their prime vigor; even they must wait on God.[c] (22) gather, etc., R. V., "get them away." (23) until the evening, God having given him the day, as He has given the beasts the night.

Darkness and the beasts that creep forth therein. 1. Ignorance of God and unrestrained lusts. 2. Sins discovered. Beasts there before, but not noticed, now terrify man. 3. Spiritual despondency, dismay, despair, etc. 4. Church lethargy. All sorts of heresies, etc., begin to creep forth.—A. G. Brown.

Night.—Then is the lion's day, his time to hunt his food. Why should not the wild beast have his hour as well as man? He has a service to perform, should he not also have his food? Darkness is fitter for beasts than man; and those men are most brutish who love darkness rather than light. When the darkness of ignorance broods over a nation, then all sorts of superstitions, cruelties, and vices abound: the gospel, like the sunrising, soon clears the world of the open ravages of these monsters, and they seek more congenial abodes. We see here the value of true light, for we may depend upon it, where there is night there will also be wild beasts to kill and to devour.—Spurgeon.

Night and death.—

Mysterious night! when our first parent knew Thee from report Divine, and heard thy name,
Did he not tremble for this lovely frame,
This glorious canopy of light and blue?
Yet 'neath a curtain of translucent dew,
Bathed in the rays of the great setting flame, Hesperus, with the host of heaven, came,
And lo! creation widened in man's view,

[a] "He satisfies with His abundant rain the world of plants and trees, the cedars of Lebanon."—Spk. Com.

[b] Ciconia alba, or nigra, or both common in Palestine, and build their nests in trees and marshy forest places.

"Blest silent groves! O may ye be forever mirth's best nursery! May pure contents forever pitch their tents upon these downs, those meads, these rocks, these mountains, and peace still slumber by these purling fountains."—Raleigh.

"At this season of the year there is a revolution in nature which certainly claims our attention. It is the time the birds lay, and hatch their young. This annual miracle passes in a manner before our eyes. What little we know of the generation of birds is sufficient to prove the wisdom of the Creator."—Sturm.

[c] "It is the chief object of the writer as far as this part of the Ps. is concerned, to depict God's care for all His creatures, and their dependence on Him for all their necessities."—Jennings and Lowe.

"All true work is sacred; in all true work, were it but true hand-labor, there is something of divineness. Labor, wide as the earth, has its summit in heaven."—Carlyle.

Creation — so far at least as concerns this world — has been compared to a pyramid. Beginning with the mineral, passing upwards into the vegetable, and rising into the animal kingdom, we find man standing upon its apex, the crowning work of God.

Who could have thought such darkness lay concealed Within thy beams, O sun! or who could find,
Whilst fly and leaf and insect stood revealed,
That to such countless orbs thou mad'st us blind?
Why do we, then, shun death with anxious strife?
If light can thus deceive, wherefore not life?
— J. Blanco White.

"Improvable reason is the distinction between man and the animal."— Binney.

24—27. (24) manifold, many-sided and various. wisdom, the special wisdom of adaptation to circumstances and necessities. thy riches, R. V., marg. "creatures."[a] (25) So is, R. V., "yonder is." sea,[b] the Mediterranean is chiefly in the thought of the Jewish poets. creeping, Polychr., "wherein is a countless swarm." (26) ships, "carrying the thoughts and the passions, the skill and the enterprise of human hearts." leviathan, not the "crocodile" of Job xli. 1, but "sea-monsters" in general. (27) wait . . thee, the Creator who art also the Provider.

The spiritual significance of the universe (vss. 24–30). — This psalm suggests — I. That the Divine existence should constitute the central fact in all contemplations of the universe. 1. To disprove the speculations of pantheism; 2. To annihilate the materialistic theory; 3. To invest the universe with a mystic sanctity. II. That the principle of dependence is everywhere developed in the universe. Hence we infer — 1. That there exists an absolutely self-existent power; 2. That each part of the universe has its own mission; 3. That profound humility becomes every intelligent agent. III. That an intelligent contemplation of the universe is calculated to increase man's hatred of sin. 1. Because sin mars the harmony of law; 2. Because God, in having made so wondrous a universe, has proved Himself too good a Being to be disobeyed. — Parker.

Nature aiding science. — When Smeaton had reflected long, in search of that form which would be best fitted to resist the combined action of wind and waves, he found it in the trunk of the oak. When Watt was employed to conduct the supply of water across the Clyde to the city of Glasgow, he borrowed his admirable contrivance of a flexible water-main from considering the flexibility of the lobster's tail; and so, when M. Brunel was engaged in superintending the construction of the tunnel under the Thames, it was from observing the head of an apparently insignificant insect that he derived his first conception of the ingenious shield which he introduced in advance of the workmen to protect them from being crushed by the falling in of the earth. — S. S. Teacher.

a Ne. ix. 6.

b Ps. cvii. 23-31.

"Now, nature has made nothing in vain. Wherever she has prepared a habitation she immediately peoples it. She is never straitened for want of room. She has placed animals, furnished with fins, in a single drop of water, and in such multitudes that Leeuwenhoek, the natural philosopher, reckoned up to thousands of them." — Bernardin de St. Pierre.

"Who taught the natives of the field and wood to shun their poison and to choose their food? Prescient the tides and tempests to withstand, build on the wave, or arch beneath the sand?" — Pope.

28—32. (28) gather, as their provender: pick up from the earth or sea.[c] filled, R. V., "satisfied." (29) takest . . breath, so not their food only, but their health and life depend on God.[d] (30) spirit, or breath. Gen. i. 2; "the great vivifying agent of all creation." renewest, as after the deluge. (31) glory, of the living Provider and Ruler. "The Psalmist prays that there may be no further interruption of the glorious course of nature besides the deluge, which has come into his thoughts in connection with the destruction of animal life." — Pul. Com. rejoice, as in creation He saw everything to be good. (32) looketh, etc., poetical figures of God's majesty, power, and awe-inspiring presence.

The commissariat of creation. — The problem is the feeding of "the creeping things innumerable, both small and great beasts," which swarm the sea: the armies of birds which fill the air, and the vast hordes of animals which people the dry land; and in this sentence we have the problem solved, "That thou givest them they gather." The work is stupendous, but it is done with ease because the Worker is infinite: if He were not at the head of it the task would never be accomplished. Blessed be God for the great THOU of the text. It is every way our sweetest consolation that the personal God is still at work in the world: leviathan in the ocean, and the sparrow on the bough, may be alike glad of this; and we, the children of the great Father, much more. — Spurgeon.

c Hengstenberg thinks there is a distant reference to the gathering of the manna.

d "The breath of life which God breathed into man's nostrils is, according to the poetical conception, recalled to God when man dies." — Jennings and Lowe.

"In every aspect of nature there is joy; whether it be in the purity of virgin morning, or the somber gray of a day of clouds, or the solemn pomp and majesty of night; whether it be the chaste lines of the crystal, or the waving outline of distant hills, tremulously visible through dim vapors; the minute petals of the 33—35. (33) long as I live, a proper response to such a conviction of God's power and goodness. (34) meditation, Polychr., correctly, "May my meditation please Him!" (35) sinners, who fail to recognize and love this God of mercy.

fringed daisy, or the overhanging form of mysterious forests." — F. W. Robertson.

"The study of nature requires two qualifications of the mind, which at first sight appear to be opposed to each other — the comprehensive view of a bold genius that embraces the whole, and the minute and careful inspection of an unwearied industry that lives upon the smallest objects." — Buffon.

Destruction of the wicked. — It fell to my lot some years ago to undertake a walk of some miles, on a summer morning, along a seashore of surpassing beauty. It was the Lord's day, and the language of the hundred and fourth psalm rose spontaneously in my mind as one scene after another unfolded itself before the eye. About half way to my destination the road lay through a dirty hamlet, and my meditations were rudely interrupted by the brawling of some people, who looked as if they had been spending the night in a drunken debauch. Well, I thought, the Psalmist must have had some such unpleasant experience. He must have fallen in with people, located in some scene of natural beauty, who, instead of being a holy priesthood to give voice to nature in praise of her Creator, instead of being, in the pure and holy tenor of their lives, the heavenliest note of the general song, — filled it with a harsh discord. His prayer is the vehement expression of a desire that the earth may no longer be marred by the presence of wicked men, — that they may be utterly consumed, and may give place to men animated with the fear of God, just and holy men, men that shall be a crown of beauty on the head of this fair creation. — William Binnie.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FIFTH.

author, — unknown; date, after the return from captivity

Recounting the dealings of Jehovah with His people,

1—4. (1) give thanks, Is. xii. 4.[a] Thanks are especially due bec. God's ways with His people have proved merciful ways. call . . name,[b] the covenant-name, Jehovah. people, "peoples;" the nations around. (2) talk ye of, Polychr., "devoutly praise," so as to make Jehovah's ways generally known.[c] (3) Glory, or boast ye; laud and magnify it. (4) his strength, or the "ark of His strength" (2 Chr. vi. 41; Ps. cxxxii. 8), a poetic figure for the temple, where God's strength, or glory, is manifested.[d]

Sing psalms. — Psalmody is the calm of the soul, the repose of the spirit, the arbiter of peace. It silences the wave, and conciliates the whirlwind of our passions, soothing the impetuous, tempering the unchaste. It is an engenderer of friendship, a healer of dissension, a reconciler of enemies. For who can longer count him his enemy, with whom to the throne of God he hath raised the strain? Psalmody repels the demons, and lures the ministry of angels. It is a weapon of defense in nightly terrors and a respite from daily toil. To the infant it is a presiding genius; to manhood a crown of glory; a balm of comfort to the aged; a congenial ornament to women. — Basil.

5—8. (5) wonders, or tokens; with special reference to the miracles in Egypt. judgments, his sentences upon the Egyptians (vss. 28–36[e]). (6) his servant, this is a descrip. of Israel, not of Abraham. his chosen, R. V., "his chosen ones," plural agreeing with the word "children," not with Jacob.[f] (7) the Lord, better read, "Jehovah, our God." "He is in covenant relation with us, and at the same time Judge of all the earth." (8) for ever, or always. commanded, or confirmed; established.

Our God. — What a joy it is that our God is never absent from us, He is never non-resident, never an absentee ruler. His judgments are in all the places in which we dwell. If the second clause of this verse refers to the whole world, it is very beautiful to see the specialty of Israel's election united with the universality of Jehovah's reign. Not alone to the one nation did the Lord reveal Himself, but His glory flashed around the globe. It is wonderful that the Jewish people should have become so exclusive, and have so utterly lost the missionary spirit, for their sacred literature is full of the broad and generous sympathies which are so consistent with the worship of "the God of the whole earth." Nor is it less painful to observe that among a certain class of believers in God's election of grace there lingers a hard, exclusive spirit, fatal to compassion and zeal. It would be well for these also to remember that their Redeemer is "the Saviour of all men, specially of them that believe." — Spurgeon.

9, 12. (9) made, or entered into at first.[g] (10) for a law, statute; fixed, inviolable promise. "To have the permanence of perpetual law." Israel, i. e. Jacob after he received the name, Israel. (11) lot, marg. cord,[h] or measured portion. Polychr., "As your heritage and possession." (12) few . . in number, the small family and tribe of Abraham is thus referred to: lit. "men of number."[i] strangers, R. V., "sojourners," Ge. xv. 7.

a Four Ps. begin in the same way, cv., cvii., cxviii., cxxxvi.

b Comp. Ge. iv. 26; Ex. xxxiii. 19; xxxiv. 5.

c The idea of speaking is conveyed by the original, rather than merely meditating.

d "Seek Him where His mighty strength abides; i. e. in His temple in wh. He dwells, and in wh. His face is seen of His worshipers." — Spk. Com.

e Ex. vi. 6; vii. 4; xii. 12; Ps. cxix. 13.

f "It is on this ground bec. they are Abraham's seed, bec. they are God's chosen, bec they are Jacob's children, heritors of the covenant and the promises, that they are bound beyond all others to remember what God has done for them."— Perowne.

g Ge. xvii. 2; xxii 16; xxvi. 3; xxviii. 13; xxxv. 11; Lu. i. 73; He. vi. 17.

h "Line of measurement, and thence the portion assigned by measurement." — Jennings and Lowe.

i Ge. xxxiv. 30.

Comfort to the few. — The typical and spiritual Israel few at first. A few in the ark peopled the world. Small companies have done wonders. Christ's presence is promised to two or three. God saveth not by many or by few. etc. — Spurgeon.

Small beginnings. — The blessings promised to the seed of Abraham were not dependent upon the number of his descendants, or their position in this world. The covenant was made with one man, and consequently the number could never be less, and that one man was not the owner of a foot of soil in all the land, save only a cave in which to bury his dead, and therefore his seed could not have less inheritance than he. The smallness of a church and the poverty of its members are no barriers to the divine blessing, if it be sought earnestly by pleading the promise. Were not the apostles few, and the disciples feeble, when the good work began? Neither because we are strangers and foreigners here below, as our fathers were, are we in any the more danger: we are like sheep in the midst of wolves, but the wolves cannot hurt us, for our shepherd is near. — Spurgeon.

13—16. (13) When . . another, descriptive of the wandering life of the patriarchs.[a] (14) reproved, etc., Pharaoh, Ge. xii. 17; Abimelech, xv. 3, 7, 18. (5) Touch not, Ge. xxiv. 11. anointed, i. e. my chosen, consecrated ones.[b] (16) land, of Canaan: during the residence in it of the patriarchs. Ge. xii. 10; xxvi. 1. staff, i. e. "bread that strengtheneth man's heart." Le. xxvi. 26.

Heavenly guidance. — There was once a picture of a little child, in the dress of a pilgrim, walking slowly along a narrow path which was bounded on each side by a terrific precipice, the edges of which were hidden from his view by a luxuriant thicket of fruits and flowers. Behind the child was an angel with a countenance of mixed tenderness and anxiety, his hands placed lightly on the shoulders of the little pilgrim, as if to keep him in the centre of the path, while the child, having closed his eyes, that he might not perceive the tempting snares on either side, is walking calmly forward, content not to see where he plants each footstep, so long as he feels the gentle and guiding touch of the angel upon him. His whole aspect is that of peace, confidence and conscious safety, so long as he follows the guidance of his heavenly monitor, and presses onward in his way.

17—22. (17) before them, by gracious providences God prepared for the residence in Egypt. Yet the events all happened naturally and simply. who was sold, Polychr., "Joseph was sold." (18) laid in iron,[c] R. V., "in chains of iron." No account is given in Genesis of severity of treatment suffered by Joseph in the prison-house, but the curtailment of his liberty was in itself bitter bondage. (19) word, or word of promise. This prob. refers to Joseph's interpretation of the dreams of the chief butler and chief baker. Came,[d] R. V., "Came to pass;" "i. e. when the chief butler found favor and the chief baker was hanged." (20) sent and loosed, Ge. xli. 14. (21) substance, or possession. (22) bind, Joseph's position as head of the state gave him command over all the other officials. teach, etc., Polychr., "to chastise the elders."

Wisdom-taught senators (vs. 22).— We have here — I. God's instruction to senators. 1. By the life-work of the great and good; 2. By the events in a nation's history; 3. By insight into a nation's deeds. II. God's purpose in the instruction of senators 1. The entire well-being of a country; 2. Advancement in scientific achievements; 3. Perfection of his creation. Inquire — (1) How far we have wisdom-taught senators; (2) How far our nation is a wise and understanding people. — W. N. Percival.

God's way. — Joseph's journey into Egypt was not so costly as Jonah's voyage when he paid his own fare; his free passage was provided by the Midianites, who also secured his introduction to a great officer of state by handing him over as a slave. His way to a position in which he could feed his family lay through the pit, the slaver's caravan, the slave market and the prison, and who shall deny but what it was the right way, the surest way, the wisest way, and perhaps the shortest way. Yet assuredly it seemed not so. God's way is the way. Our Lord's path to His mediatorial throne ran by the cross of Calvary; our road to glory runs by the rivers of grief. — Spurgeon.

23—27. (23) Israel, the man Israel, called Jacob in the next sentence. But the name is used to include the tribe. (24) he increased, i. e. God.

"If God were to forget His engagements He would cease to be God 'If God were to forget for one moment,' says Macdonald, 'the universe would grow black—vanish—rush out again from the realm of law and order into chaos and night.'"

"They are all under the ægis of His protection, and for their sakes kings of many a dynasty and age have been rebuked."—Exp. Bib.

a Ge. xii. 1, 9; xiii. 18; xx. 1; He. xi. 9.

b "Consecration to office by anointing is the custom of a later age than that of the patriarchs." — Spk. Com.

"Sith in the Almightie's everlasting seat, she first was bred and born of heavenly race, from thence pour'd down on man by influence of grace."—Spenser.

c For the fig. comp. Ps. cvii. 10.

d Fire will burn off a thin plating of silver from a copper coin and reveal the base metal beneath, but it will only brighten into a glow the one which is all silver." —Exp. Bib.

Joseph's feet were hurt in irons, to fit him to tread more delicately in the king's palace at Zoan; and when the Lord's time was come, by the same stairs which winded him into the dungeon he climbs up into the next chariot to Pharoah's." — Samuel Lee.

"Would we worship aright, our hearts must look up and cry, 'Teach me, Holy Spirit, to worship,' and He will do it."—R. A. Torrey.

(25) their heart, i. e. the heart of their enemies.[a] deal subtilly, to conspire against. (26) sent Moses, Ex. iii. 10. (27) shewed, R. V., "set among them."

The magic skin.—In the fable of the magic skin, it gave the wearer power to get anything he wanted; but every time he gratified his wishes, the skin shrank and compressed him into smaller dimensions, until, by and by, with the last wish, life itself was crushed out. The magic skin is selfishness. It is a great thing to learn to say No to one's self instead of indulging every whim and wish, even though there be nothing sinful in it. Moses renounced the pleasures and treasures of Egypt for the sake of a higher recompense of reward. There was no necessary wrong in his inheriting the royal treasures and enjoying the pleasures of Egypt, so far as they were not in themselves sinful; but Moses had a high vocation, and these would have been hindrances; so he renounced them.—A. T. Pierson.

28—32. (28) darkness, Ex. x. 22. they rebelled not, if the "not" is to stand in this passage, it must be referred to Moses and Aaron. Professor Cheyne, however, following the Septuagint and Peshito versions, cancels the "not."—Pul. Com. (29) waters, the river Nile was worshiped by the Egyptians; hence this plague showed the impotency of the national deities. blood, Ex. vii. 20. (30) frogs, Ex. viii. 6. (31) divers sorts of, R. V., "swarms of." flies, lice, prob. dog-fly or some sort of beetle is meant: gnats rather than lice. Ex. viii. 17, 24. coasts, R. V., "borders." (32) hail, Ex. ix. 23.

Hail.—I had ridden out to the excavations [at Gizeh], when seeing a large black cloud approaching, I sent a servant to the tents to take care of them, but as it began to rain slightly I soon rode after him myself. Shortly after my arrival a storm of wind began; I therefore ordered the cords of the tents to be secured, but soon a violent shower of rain came in addition, which alarmed all our Arabs, and drove them into the rock-tomb, in which is our kitchen. . . . Suddenly the storm became a regular hurricane, such as I had never witnessed in Europe, and a hailstorm came down on us, which almost turned the day into night. . . . It was not long before first our common tent fell down, and when I had hastened from that into my own, in order to hold it from the inside, this also broke down above me.—Carl Richard Lepsius.

33—36. (33) smote, etc., by great hailstones. Ex. ix. 13–35. (34) locusts, Ex. x. 1–20. (35) the fruit, both herbs and leaves of trees. (36) firstborn, Ex. xii. 29. chief, better, "the firstlings."

Locusts.—The locusts had devoured every green herb and every blade of grass; and had it not been for the reeds, on which our cattle entirely subsisted while we skirted the banks of the river, our journey must have been discontinued, at least in the line that we had proposed. The larvæ, as generally is the case in this class of nature, are much more voracious than the perfect insect; nothing that is green seems to come amiss to them. The traces of their route over the country are very obvious for many weeks after they have passed it, the surface appearing as if swept by a broom, or as if a harrow had been drawn over it.—John Barrow.

37—40. (37) silver and gold, Ex. xii. 35. feeble person, Polychr., "that stumbled," i. e. was unable to travel, Is. v. 27. (38) glad, Ex. xii. 33. (39) cloud, "over their heads as a protection against the burning sun." Ex. xiii. 21. (40) quails, Ex. xvi. 12. bread of heaven, manna, which fell as if out of heaven.

God's provision.—I. God often gives in love what is not asked. So the bread of heaven, which was beyond all they could ask or think. II. He sometimes gives in anger what is asked. They asked for flesh to eat—"and He brought quails."—G. Rogers.

Beacons.—In the army of Alexander the Great, the march was begun by a great beacon being set upon a pole as a signal from headquarters, so that "the fire was seen at night, the smoke in the day-time;" and the plan is still found in use amongst the caravans of Arabia. It is probable enough, in that unchanging land, that such may have been the custom at the time of the Exodus, and that God taught the people by parable in this wise, as well as by fact, that He was their true leader, and heaven the general pavilion, whence the order of march was enjoined.—Neale and Littledale.

[a] "It must be recollected that the origin of malice was in the Egyptians themselves, lest blame be imputed to God."—Calvin.

"God's plans like lilies pure and white, unfold; we must not tear the close-shut leaves apart; time will reveal the calyxes of gold."—Mary R. Smith.

"What is the human mind, however enriched with acquisition or strengthened by exercise, unaccompanied by an ardent and sensitive heart? Its light may illumine, but it cannot inspire. It may shed a cold and moonlight radiance upon the path of life, but it warms no flower into bloom; it sets free no icebound fountain."—Tuckermann.

"A good heart is the sun and moon, or, rather, the sun, and not the moon, for it shines bright and never changes, but keeps its course truly."—Shakespeare.

"Nemesis is one of God's handmaids."—W. R. Alger.

Feeble, vs. 37, lit. "stumbling," used fig. for "poor." They should be all wealthy in the full sense of wealthiness, in person and purse. In Isa. xvi. 14, "small and feeble" of the remnant of Moab—i. e. scant in numbers, not mighty.

"This feeble wood may him little avail."—Blind Harry's Wallace.

"There is no future pang can deal that justice on the self-condemned he deals on his own soul."—Byron.

"Whatever is good and comes from on high is universal and without reserve; but in the heart's recesses darkness dwells."—Schiller.

41—45. (41) opened the rock, at Rephidim, Ex. xvii. 1, 2. At Kadesh, Nu. xx. 11.[a] (42) remembered, etc., Ex. ii. 24. holy, i. e. either divine or inviolable. promise, R. V., "word." (43) gladness, poss. alluding to the song sung after crossing the Red Sea.[b] (44) labour, put for the fruits of labor, their cities, vineyards, treasures, etc. (45) they, etc., i. e. the people of Israel.[c]

Design of Israel. — The chosen nation was to be the conservator of truth, the exemplar of morality, the pattern of devotion; everything was so ordered as to place them in advantageous circumstances for fulfilling this trust. Theirs was a high calling and a glorious election. It involved great responsibilities, but it was in itself a distinguished blessing, and one for which the nation was bound to give thanks. Most justly then did the music close with the jubilant but solemn shout of Hallelujah, "Praise ye the Lord." If this history did not make Israel praise God, what would? — Spurgeon.

a Ps. lxxviii. 15, 16, 20; 1 Co. x. 4.

b Is. xxxv. 10.

c "This was God's purpose, that Israel should be a holy nation in the midst of other nations, a priesthood representing the world, and claiming it for God as His world."—Perowne.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND SIXTH.

author, — unknown; date, after the return from captivity

1—5. (1) This vs. is a "doxological formula" copied by many of the later Psalms. Praise, Heb. hallelujah. From this beginning the Ps. is classed as the first of the Hallelujah Psalms.[d] good, in His gracious dealing with men. mercy, or graciousness, loving-kindness. for ever, in generation after generation. (2) utter, i. e. sufficiently and worthily. his praise, the glory wh. God has manifested calling for praise. (3) keep judgment, better, "keep the right." (4) Remember me, a personal plea to be permitted to share in God's blessing to His people. favor . . people, lit, "in the favor of Thy people," or "in the time of Thy showing favor to Thy people." (5) chosen, plural, "chosen ones."

God's favor to His people (vs. 4). — I. What this prayer implies. 1. That God is the hearer and the answerer of prayer; 2. That He has a peculiar people; 3. That He regards His people with a special love. II. What this prayer expresses. 1. A real participation of God's love to His own people; 2. A full participation of God's love to His own people; 3. A personal participation of God's love to His own people. — G. Brooks.

His mercy. — Oh this mercy of God! I am told that it is an ocean. Then I place on it four swift-sailing crafts, with compass, and charts, and choice rigging, and skillful navigators, and I tell them to launch away, and discover for me the extent of this ocean. That craft puts out in one direction, and sails to the north; this to the south; this to the east; this to the west. They crowd on all their canvas and sail ten thousand years, and one day come up the harbor of heaven; and I shout to them from the beach, "Have you found the shore?" and they answer, "No shore to God's mercy." Swift angels, despatched from the throne, attempt to go across it. For a million years they fly and fly; but then come back and fold their wings at the foot of the throne, and cry, "No shore! no shore to God's mercy!" — Talmage.

d Ps. cxi.-cxiii., cxvii., cxxxv., cxlvi.-cl.

"If any distinction is to be made between keeping judgment and doing righteousness, the first may describe inward rectitude, the second its outward exhibition in act."—Spk. Com.

"Nothing so melts a heart in penitence as the remembrance of God's love, and nothing so heightens the evil of sin as the consideration of the patient goodness which it has long flouted."—Maclaren.

6—9. (6) We have sinned, this is the key-note of the ps. which is one of confession.[e] with our fathers,[f] so the Psalmist "regards the nation as a whole, one in guilt and one in punishment." committed iniquity, Polychr., "turned back." (7) wonders, miracles of judgment and deliverance. provoked him, R. V., "were rebellious." Ex. xiv. 11, 12. (8) name's sake, not bec. the Hebrews were worthy, but to prove the righteousness of the Divine character. Ex. xiv. 18. (9) rebuked, comp. Ps. civ. 7; Is. l. 2. depths, left exposed by the retreating sea. God's way through the ocean depths was as safe for them as through the wilderness.[g] wilderness, Polychr., "pasture-land." Midbar, the word translated "wilderness," is properly a smooth stretch of down, very level, and suited for sheep-walks.

Why are men saved? (vs. 8). — I. Here is a glorious Saviour. II. The favored persons. These people were — 1. Stupid; 2. Ungrateful; 3. Provoking. III. The reason of salvation. 1. To manifest His nature; 2. To vindicate His name. IV. The obstacles overcome in saving them. 1. The claims of law; 2. The demands of conscience; 3. The great accuser. — C. H. Spurgeon.

Our father's sins. — Antiquity is no infallible argument of goodness; though Tertullian says the first things were the best things; and the less they distanced from the beginning, the poorer they were; but he must be understood e Comp, 1 Kl. viii. 47; Da. ix. 5.

f "Israel was bearing at this time the punishment of its sins, by which it had made itself like its forefathers."—Delitzsch.

g Is. li. 10; lxiii. 13; Na. i. 4.

"The sun is the eye of the world, and he is indifferent to the negro or the cold Russian, to them that dwell under the line, and them that stand near the tropics, the scalded Indian, or the poor boy that shakes at the foot of the Riphian hills; so is the mercy of God."—Jeremy Taylor.

only of holy customs. For iniquity can plead antiquity; he that commits a new act of murder finds it old in the example of Cain; drunkenness may be fetched from Noah; contempt of parents from Ham; women's lightness from the daughters of Lot. There is no sin but hath white hairs upon it, and is exceeding old. But let us look further back yet, even to Adam; there is the age of sin. This is that St. Paul calls the old man; it is almost as old as the root, but older than all the branches. Therefore our restitution by Christ to grace is called the new man. — Thomas Adams.

10—15. (10) him that hated, the Egyptian Pharaoh. (11) waters covered, Ex. xiv. 28. (12) sang his praise, allusion to the song of Moses, Ex. xv. (13) soon forgat, Ex. xv. 24; xvi. 2. Heb. "they made haste, they forgat." waited not, etc., "they did not wait for the development of God's plans respecting them, preferring (vs. 43) their own counsel."— Kay. (14) lusted exceedingly, lit. "lusted for themselves a lust," Nu. xi. 4. tempted, "tried to restrain God with their importunate, eager desire."[a] — Spk Com. (15) leanness,[b] Polychr., "And sent them a wasting disease," LXX. trans. satiety. The Heb. term is used to describe the effects of the plague, or withering sickness. soul, i. e. the physical organism in general.

Prayer for wrong things (vs. 15).— Chactas, the blind old sachem in Chateaubriand's Wertherion romance, is made to bring the story to an end by relating a parable to his woe-fraught young listener. It tells how the Meschacebé, soon after leaving its source among the hills, began to feel weary of being a simple brook, and so asked for snows from the mountains, water from the torrents, rain from the tempests, until, its petitions granted, it burst its bounds and ravished its hitherto delightsome banks. At first the proud stream exulted in its force, but seeing ere long that it carried desolation in its flow, that its progress was now doomed to solitude, and that its waters were forever turbid, it came to regret the humble bed hollowed out for it by nature, the birds, the flowers, the trees, and the brooks, hitherto the modest companions of its tranquil course.— F. Jacox.

16—18. (16) envied Moses, the second great sin in the wilderness, rebellion against the leaders appointed by Jehovah; Nu. xvi., xvii. saint, the Heb. term denotes official sanctity — that derived from a Divine consecration. (17) opened, Nu. xvi. 30, 32; xxvi. 10. covered, Polychr., "closed over the crew," etc.; Nu. xvi. 35. (18) fire, against the princes of the congregation who presumed to offer incense before the Lord; Korah and his company; Nu. xvi. 2, 35. wicked, Nu. xvi. 26.

Ministerial envy (vs. 16).— Will any workman malign another because he helpeth him to do his Master's work? Yet, alas, how common is this heinous crime amidst men of parts and eminency in the church! They can secretly blot the reputation of such as stand cross to their own; and what they cannot for shame do in plain and open terms, lest they be proved palpable liars and slanderers, they will do in general and malicious intentions, raising suspicions where they cannot fasten accusations. And so far are some gone in this satanical vice that it is their common practice, and a considerable part of their business, to keep down the estimation of those they dislike, and defame others in the slyest and most plausible way; and some go so far that they are unwilling that any that are abler than themselves should come into their pulpits, lest they should be applauded above themselves. Yea, so far does this cursed vice prevail, that in great congregations, that have need of the help of many teachers, we can scarcely get two in equality to live together in love and quietness, and unanimously to carry on the work of God! But unless one of them be quite below the other in parts, and content to be so esteemed, or unless one be a curate to the other and ruled by him, they are contending for precedency, and envying each other's interest, and walking with strangeness and jealousy towards each other, to the shame of the profession, and the great wrong of the congregation.— Baxter.

19—23. (19) made a calf, the third great sin in the wilderness, false worship through the likeness of a calf: — idolatry; Ex. xxxii. 4, (20) their glory,[c] Him who was their glory; Jehovah, their glorious God. Polychr., "They bartered their honor for the image of a bull," etc. into the similitude, R. V., "For the likeness of." (21) forgat God, against this they had been duly warned, see De. iv. 16–18. (22) land of Ham, Ps. lxxviii. 51; cv. 23. 27. (23) destroyed them, Ex. xxxii. 10.[d] "God was ready to have a "Six distinct cases of rebellion are enumerated as occurring between the time of the passage of the Red Sea and that of the entry into Canaan."—Jennings and Lowe.

b "This may refer to the loathing of food, followed by great mortality, the soul being here used only in a physical sense of the life. But the fig. sense is equally true, and equally pertinent. The very heart and spirit of a man, when bent only or supremely on the satisfaction of its earthly desires and appetites, is always dried up and withered."— Perowne.

"Envy is the daughter of pride, the author of murder and revenge, the beginner of secret sedition, and the perpetual tormentor of virtue. Envy is the filthy slime of the soul; a venom, a poison, or quicksilver which consumeth the flesh, and drieth up the marrow of the bones"—Socrates.

"Dionysius the tyrant," says Plutarch, "out of envy, punished Philoxenius, the musician, because he could sing, and Plato, the philosopher, because he could dispute, better than himself."—J. Whitecross.

c Comp. Je. ii. 11. "Glory, like light, is used in Scrip. to denote Divine perfections."—Perowne.

d "Had not Moses His chosen stood destroyed all Israel, and to have raised up a new Israel out of the descendants of Moses, had not Moses pleaded with extreme earnestness on the people's behalf." — Pul. Com.

The molten calf.— The modern Jews are of opinion that all the afflictions which ever since have, do, or shall befall their nation, are still the just punishments on them for this their first act of idolatry. And the rabbins have a saying that God never inflicts any judgment upon them, but there is an ounce of His anger on them for their ancestors' making the golden calf. A reverend friend of mine, conversing at Amsterdam with a Jewish youth (very capable and ingenious for one of that nation), endeavored to make him sensible of God's anger upon them for rejecting and crucifying of Christ, for which foul act he showed how the Jews have lived many hundred years in miserable banishment. But the youth would in no wise acknowledge in their sufferings any effect or punishment of their murdering of Christ, but taking his Bible turned to God's threatening immediately after their making of the calf (Exod. xxxiii. 34): "Nevertheless in the day when I visit, I will visit their sin upon them," so interpreting and applying all the numerous calamities which since have befallen them to relate to no other cause than that their first idolatry. Whereas, indeed, the arrears of their idolatry long ago were satisfied, and this is a new debt of later date contracted on themselves by their infidelity.— Thomas Fuller.

24–27. (24) despised, etc.[a] The fourth sin in the wilderness, the murmuring at Kadesh-barnea. Nu. xiii., xiv. The occasion referred to is the visit and report of the spies. his word, of assurance and promise that they should possess it. (25) murmured, Nu. xiv. 2. (26) lifted . . hand, the attitude of one taking an oath, Nu. xiv. 30.[b] to overthrow, R. V., "that He would overthrow;" this was His oath. (27) overthrow, make to fall.[c]

Human perversity.— I. Despising the choicest inheritance, II. Disbelieving the best authenticated word. 1. Unbelief dishonoring God. 2. Unbelief excluding man from his inheritance. III. Murmuring against the arrangements of the wisest and kindest of beings. IV. Disobeying the commands of the most sovereign authority. V. Receiving deserved punishment. VI. Entailing misery upon their posterity.— Hom. Com.

Murmuring!— It must have been a malady characteristic of the Hebrew people, or a disease peculiar to that desert. As we proceed with this narrative we are constantly meeting it, creaking along in discord harsh and chronic, or amazing earth and heaven by its shrill, ear-piercing paroxysms. They lift up their eyes, and as the Egyptians pursue, the people murmur. They come to a fountain, the water is bitter, and once more they murmur. Then no bread; murmurings redoubled. Moses is no longer in the Mount; murmurs. He takes too much upon him; more murmurs. When shall we reach that Promised Land?— murmurs extraordinary, loud murmurs. We are close to the land, but its inhabitants are giants, and their towns walled up to heaven. Oh, what a take-in! and the last breath of the last survivors of that querulous race goes forth in a hurricane of reproach and remonstrance— a perfect storm of murmurs.— James Hamilton.

28–31. (28) Baal-peor, Nu. xxv. 3. "The Moabite idol[d] worshiped on the summit of Peor." This was the fifth flagrant transgression against Jehovah in the wilderness. of the dead, offered to the dead, or lifeless objects of heathen worship.[e] Usage, however, is rather in favor of some allusion to necromantic rites, as in Deut. xviii. 11, "one who seeketh to the dead;" Isa. viii. 19, "should a people seek to the dead (by the aid of necromancers, consulting them as Saul consulted the Witch of Endor), on behalf of the living?" — Perowne. (29) inventions, R. V., "doings," Ps. xcix. 8. plague, i. e. the slaughter sanctioned by Jehovah. break in, or made a breach. The image is that of a river wh. has burst its barriers.[f] (30) Phinehas, Nu. xxv. 7, 8. (31) counted, etc.,[g] comp. the similar expression, Ge. xv. 6.

Passages from the history of a rebellious people. — I. An incorrigibly rebellious people. 1. Here is idolatry. 2. Here is adultery. 3. Here is rebellious murmuring. II. A brave man acting as minister of justice in a critical time. 1. Here is a brave act of justice. 2. A brave act of justice staying the Divine vengeance. 3. A brave act of justice recognized and rewarded by God. III. A holy man sinning and suffering by reason of the sin of others. 1. Their provocation of Moses aggravated the guilt of the rebellious people. 2. Their before Him in the gap, as a valiant soldier guarding His city when a breach is made in the wall, and stayed Him by prayers and entreaties, lest He should destroy them?"—Spk. Com.

"It is to be hoped, we shall never live to see a time, when the miracles of our redemption shall be forgotten; when the people shall solicit their teachers to fabricate a new philosophical deity for them to worship, instead of the God of their ancestors." —George Horne.

a Je. lii. 19; Zec. vii. 14.

b Ge. xiv. 22; Ex. vi. 8; De. xxxii. 40.

c Le. xxvi. 38; De. xxviii. 64.

"There are many people the brilliancy of whose minds only depend upon the heart. When they open that it is hardly possible for it not to throw out some fire."—Desmahis.

"When pilgrims to the Celestial city begin to doubt the Lord of the way, they soon come to think little of the rest at the journey's end, and this is the surest way to make them bad travelers."— Spurgeon.

d "Called Kamosh." — Hengstenberg.

e 1 Co. viii. 4.

f Ex. xix. 24.

g "The act of Phinehas was counted a righteous act, forever memorable, and rewarded by God with a perpetual priesthood."—Spk. Com.

"It appears that the high priesthood was confined to the line of Phinehas from his own time to the fall of Jerusalem, if we except the high priesthood of Eli, the descendant of Ishamar, uncle of Phinehas." —Jennings and Lowe.

"God has His champions left in the worst times, and they will stand up when the time comes for them to come forth to battle." — Spurgeon.

provocation does not exonerate Moses from guilt. Provocation is not compulsion. 3. God punishes sin even in the best of men in whom it is a great exception. IV. The great God contending against human sin. 1. By the plague, because of the idolatry and licentiousness of the people. 2. By the exclusion of Moses from the promised land.—Wm. Jones.

Righteous Zeal.—Believer, can you read this and feel no shame? Do your bold efforts testify your zeal? Sinners blaspheme God's name. Do you rebuke? His Sabbaths are profaned. Do you protest? False principles are current? Do you expose the counterfeits? Vice stalks in virture's garb. Do you tear down the mask? Satan enthralls the world. Do you resist? Nay, rather are you not dozing unconcerned? Whether Christ's cause succeeds, or be cast down, you little care. If righteous zeal girded your loins and braced your nerves, and moved the rudder of your heart, and swelled your sails of action, would God be so unknown, and blasphemy so daring?—Henry Law.

32—35. (32) waters of strife, R. V., "of Meribah." The sixth sin in the wilderness committed in the 40th year of the wandering; Nu. xx. 13. went ill, De. i. 37; iii. 26; xxxii. 50, 51. (33) provoked, R. V., "were rebellious against"; whose spirit is not mentioned; prob. God's Spirit is intended. spake unadvisedly, Nu. xx. 10—12. "One man's sin often leads to another's, but does not necessitate it. The people 'provoked Moses' spirit' by their murmurs and reproaches. He was vexed, impatient, carried away by a gust of passion, and made the unfitting speech."—Pul. Com. (34) not destroy, etc., see Ex. xxiii. 31—33; xxxiv. 12, 13; Jos. xxiii. 12, 13; Ju. i., ii. 1—3. concerning whom, R. V., "as." (35) mingled, mixed themselves with them by intermarriage."[a] works, bad works; their immoralities.

"He Spake Unadvisedly."—A gracious person may be surprised and fall suddenly among thieves that lurk behind the bushes. Nay, very holy men, unless wonderfully wary, may be quickly tript up by sudden questions and unexpected emergencies. Who knows the subtlety of sin, and the deceitfulness of his own heart? Take heed of answering quickly, and send up sudden ejaculations to heaven before you reply to a weighty and doubtful motion.—Samuel Lee.

36—39. (36) a snare, Ex. xxiii. 33; Ju. ii. 2, 3, 11. (37) devils,[b] i. e. false gods. R. V., "demons." (38) polluted, the strongest word. Nu. xxxv. 33. "The land, the very soil itself, was polluted and accursed, as well as the inhabitants." (39) own works, acts of wilfulness, not of obedience to God. The idolatrous rites were men's inventions, not God's appointments. went a whoring, Polychr., "practiced idolatry;" Ex. xxxiv. 14, 15.

Patronizing Idolatry in India.—It is lamentable to think how long after our [English] power was firmly established in Bengal, we, grossly neglecting the first and plainest duty of the civil magistrate, suffered the practices of infanticide and suttee to continue unchecked. We decorated the temples of the false gods; we provided the dancing girls; we gilded and painted the images to which our ignorant subjects bowed down; we repaired and embellished the car under the wheels of which crazy devotees flung themselves at every festival to be crushed to death; we sent guards of honor to escort pilgrims to the places of worship; we actually made oblations at the shrines of idols. All this was considered, and is still considered, by some prejudiced Anglo-Indians of the old school, as profound policy. I believe that there never was so shallow, so senseless a policy. We gained nothing by it. We lowered ourselves in the eyes of those whom we meant to flatter. We led them to believe that we attached no importance to the difference between Christianity and heathenism. Yet how vast that difference is! I altogether abstain from alluding to topics which belong to divines; I speak merely as a politician, anxious for the morality and the temporal well-being of society; and so speaking, I say that to countenance the Brahminical idolatry, and to discountenance that religion which has done so much to promote justice, and mercy, and freedom, and arts, and sciences, and good government, and domestic happiness, which has struck off the chains of the slave, which has mitigated the horrors of war, which has [a] Ju. iii. 6.

"According to Solomon, life and death are in the power of the tongue; and as Euripides truly affirmeth, every unbridled tongue in the end shall find itself unfortunate; for in all that ever I observed in the course of worldly things, I ever found that men's fortunes are oftener made by their tongues than by their virtues, and more men's fortunes overthrown thereby, also, than by their vices." — Sir W. Raleigh.

[b] 1 Co. viii. 5.

LXX. trans. daimoniois, and Jerome daemonibus, whence our Eng. Ver. has devils.

"We cannot describe the natural history of the soul, but we know that it is Divine. All things are known to the soul. It is not to be surprised by any communication. Nothing can be greater than it, let those fear and those fawn who will. The soul is in her native realm; and it is wider than space, older than time, wide as hope, rich as love. Pusillanimity and fear she refuses with a beautiful scorn; they are not for her who putteth raised women from servants and playthings into companions and friends, is to commit high treason against humanity and civilization.—Macaulay.

40—43. (40) he abhorred, the feelings characteristic of man can only by accommodation be applied to God. (41) gave .. heathen, as recorded in the Book of Judges.[a] (42) subjection, they were bowed down.[b] (43) provoked him with, R. V., "were rebellious in." their counsel, wh. was not His counsel, though that they should have sought. brought low, Polychr.; "wasted away in;" Le. xxvi. 39.

44—48. (45) remembered, etc., Le. xxvi. 41, 42. repented, De. xxxii. 36; Ps. xc. 13. The expression is anthropomorphic, and must be understood so as not to clash with the declaration, "God is not a man, that he should repent" (1 Sam. xv. 29).—Pul. Com. (46) pitied, etc., comp. 1 Kings viii. 50.[c] (47) Save us, this prayer is appropriate to those still in exile, and helps to fix the date of the Psalm. (48) Blessed, etc., a doxology, prob. added by some later hand, wh. marks the close of the fourth book.

Praise to God for His Mercies (vs. 48).—Behold—I. The ebullition of heart here manifested. 1. What is it that the Psalmist has been contemplating? 2. And was not all this a ground for praise and thanksgiving? From hence we may clearly see—II. The corresponding feeling which it should generate in us. 1. We have experienced an infinitely greater redemption than they; 2. And yet we have been as rebellious as ever they were; 3. Yet is God more merciful to us than ever He was to them; 4. What then should be our sense of gratitude towards Him? Address—(1) Those who are not yet liberated from their bondage; (2) Those who have been brought into the liberty of the children of God.—Simeon.

on her coronation robes, and goes out through universal power." — Emerson.

[a] Ju. ii. 14, iii. 12, 13, x. 7—9; Ps. lxxviii. 59—61.

[b] Comp. Ju. iii. 30, iv. 23, viii. 28, xi. 33.

"The more sympathies we gain or waken for what is beautiful, by so much deeper will our sympathy be for that which is most beautiful—the human soul." —Lowell.

[c] 2 Ki. xxv. 27; Ne. i. 11; Je. xlii. 12; Da. i, 9.

"There is a kind of gratitude in thanks, though it be barren, and bring forth but words" —Southern.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND SEVENTH.

Author. — unknown: date much after return fr. exile.

Subj., Jehovah's goodness to those who call upon Him.

1—3. (1) good, Ps. cvi. 1.[a] (2) redeemed, those just delivered out of exile and captivity by Jehovah; comp. Is. lxii. 12. Enemy, i. e. Babylon. (3) all lands, all parts of Babylon, and all other countries where temporary refuge had been found. the south, lit. "the sea," i. e. the Red Sea, lying south of Palestine.[b]

God's Providence.—Whatever may have been the circumstances under which the Psalm was written, or the particular occasion for which it was intended, there can be no doubt as to the great lesson which it inculcates. It teaches us not only that God's Providence watches over men, but that His ear is open to their prayer. It teaches us that prayer may be put up for temporal deliverance, and that such prayer is answered. It teaches us that it is right to acknowledge with thanksgiving such answers to our petitions. This was the simple faith of the Hebrew Poet.—Hom. Com.—The Cost of Redemption.—There are sometimes rare and beautiful wares brought into the market that are invoiced at almost fabulous rates. Ignorant people wonder why they are priced so high. The simple reason is that they cost so much to procure. That luxurious article labelled £200 was procured by the adventurous hunter, who, at the hazard of his neck, brought down the wild mountain goat, out of whose glossy hair the fabric was wrought. Yonder pearl that flashes on the brow of the bride is precious because it was rescued from the great deep at the risk of the pearl-fisher's life, as he was lifted into the boat half-dead, with the blood gushing from his nostrils. Yonder ermine, flung so carelessly over the proud beauty's shoulder, cost terrible battles with polar ice and hurricane. All choicest things are reckoned the dearest. So is it, too, in heaven's inventories. The universe of God has never witnessed aught to be reckoned in comparison with the redemption of a guilty world. That mighty ransom no such contemptible things as silver and gold could procure. Only by one price could the Church of God be redeemed from hell, and that the precious blood of the Lamb—the Lamb without blemish or spot—the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.—T. Cuyler.

[a] Je. xxxiii. 11.

"Our faults are like a grain of sand beside the great mountain of the mercies of God."—Vianney.

[b] "The poet prefers to indicate a chief physical feature of the country lying below Palestine instead of its actual direction.....The sea here cannot mean the Dead Sea, for the region fr. wh. those redeemed are gathered must surely be beyond the borders of Palestine."—Jennings and Lowe.

Nothing affords a surer test of the reality of worship than the worshiper's joy in it. — Alexander McLaren.

4—7. (4) They, i. e. ancient Israel or any caravan in general. solitary way, lit. "waste of a way;" i. e. in a desert track.[a] (5) Hungry, etc., suitable description of the desert experiences. fainted, lit. covered itself, "was well nigh being extinguished." (6) Then they cried, when pressed by the utmost need.[b] (7) led them, "caused them to journey." right way, R. V., "straight way." city of habitation, or "where men dwell;" and where they might settle.

The Right Way.—I. The right way is not always a pleasant way. 1. Long; 2. Difficult; 3. Lonely; 4. Hazardous. II. The right way is always the best way. 1. God is our leader; 2. Heaven is the goal.—W. W. Whythe.

The Right Way.—The true philosophy of life is summed up here, in simply following God. Over the Apennines there is a wonderful railroad, on which, in a space of less than seventy miles, one passes through forty-three tunnels, some of them of very great length. The road is full of magnificent outlooks, but every few moments you go plunging into a tunnel. And certainly the traveler over this road would show his good sense by sitting still and being carried along the line of the rail; and not by getting out at the first station, and striking into the mountains to find another path, because he did not like the tunnels. He would be almost sure to be lost and to starve to death. The road has been built to carry him to his destination by the shortest way, and he will get there more quickly and safely through the tunnels than in any other way. O, if we could only believe the same thing of God's way! We want to build our own road, all out in the light; and the consequence is, it is much less direct than God's, and much more dangerous, and we cannot bring it out where we wish. God's way lies through the tunnels, long ones often, but it is the best road, the safest road: we shall reach the end most surely and quickly by it. And remember, it is not all tunnels either: in the region of the high rocks, where the tunnels are needed, are the most glorious prospects. If God's way is partly in darkness, the light places are full of beauty, commanding such outlooks of mercy and love as ought to reconcile us to the intervals of darkness.—M. B. Vincent.

8—11. (8) Oh that, etc.,[c] the refrain of the Ps. (9) longing soul, comp. Is. xxix. 8. (10) sit, R. V., "sat;" the figs. of this vs. are applied to Joseph's imprisonment (Ps. cv. 18); comp. Is. ix. 2; Job xxxvi. 8. (11) rebelled, against the messages of the prophets; by resistance against the commands and by blasphemy against God.

Praising God (vs. 8).—I. Let us daily praise God for common mercies; common as we frequently call them, and yet so priceless, that when deprived of them we are ready to perish. II. The sweetest and loudest note in our songs of praise should be of redeeming love.—Spurgeon.

12—14. (12) with labour, or trouble, misery. fell down, lit. stumbled. none to help, in their affliction it appeared as if God was inflicting merited punishment. (13) Then, etc., as vs. 6. (14) darkness, etc., as vs. 10.

In Their Trouble.—Observe the words, "Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble." Not before, nor after, but in it. When they were in the midst of it; when trouble was wrapped round their head, as the weeds were wrapped round the head of Jonah; when they were surrounded by it, and could see no way out of it; when, like a person in a mist, they saw no way of escape before or behind; when nothing but a dark cloud of trouble surrounded their souls, and they did not know that ever that cloud would be dispersed;—then it was that they cried.—J. C. Philpot.

15—20. (15) Oh that, as vs. 8. (16) broken .. sunder, comp. Is. xl. 2. (17) Fools, etc.,[a] a general statement suggested by the special instances just recalled to mind. For term fool, see Ps. xiv. 1: wilful transgressors. are afflicted, or bring on themselves affliction. (18) soul, i. e. their physical organism; Job xxxiii. 20, 22. (19) Then, etc., vs. 13. (20) word, "we detect in such passages the first glimmering of St. John's doctrine of the agency of the personal Word. The Word by which the heavens were made (xxxiii. 6) is seen to be not merely the expression of God's will, but his messenger mediating between Himself and His creatures."—Perowne. destructions, grave-pits, Job xxxiii. 18; La. iv. 20.

[a] "Travel in distant, unexplored regions may be meant, enforced of necessity or by foreign compulsion.....All such miserable wanderers are admonished that chance does not direct their steps, but God's mercy redeems."—Calvin.

[b] "The original words, by their order and grammatical form, seem to express that the cry for help was followed immediately by help."—Spk. Com.

"The bird flies away to the thicket, and the fox hastens to its hole, every creature uses its refuge in the hour of danger, and even so in all peril let us flee unto Jehovah, the Eternal Protector."—Spurgeon.

[c] "Let them praise to Jahve His goodness, and His wonders to the children of men."—Delitzsch.

Dr. Johnson once reproved the Rev. Dr. Maxwell for saying grace in his presence without mentioning the name of the Lord Jesus Christ; and hoped he would be more mindful in future of the apostolical injunction.

"From David we learn to give thanks in everything. Every furrow in the Book of Psalms is sown with seeds of thanksgiving."—Jeremy Taylor.

[a] "By folly is meant want of wisdom, i.e. ignorance of God and pravity of life which issues in ruin."—Spk. Com.

Confidence in God.—Sea-going ships do not trust to themselves in the windings of a river. Where they are hemmed in between rock and quicksand, grazing now the one and now the other, they take care to have a steam tug, both to bear them forward and guide them aright. They make no attempt at independent action. But I have also observed, that as soon as they get clear of the narrows,—as soon as they have attained a good offing and an open sea, they heave off, and hoist their own sails. They never want a steamer till they come to narrow water again. Such is the trust in God which the unreconciled experience. In distress they are fain to lean on the Almighty. While they are in the narrows, death seeming near on every side, conscious that they have no power and no skill, they would hang on the help of a Deliverer. Most devout they are and most earnest. But when they begin to creep out of these shoals of life,—when the path opens wide and clear and safe again, they heave off, and throw themselves on their own resources. Forthwith and henceforth they live without God in the world, until they are driven into straits again. Then they remember God and pray, as a distressed ship makes signals for help when she is entering a tortuous channel. This is not to have confidence in God. This is to provoke Him to anger.—Arnot.

21—24. (21) Oh that, vs. 8. (22) rejoicing, or singing, Polychr. "Rehearse His deeds with shouts of joy." (23) go down,[b] or traverse the sea. business, that of fishermen, traders, passengers, as well as sailors. (24) wonders, those of storm and calm, as indicated in vs. 25.[c]

Spiritual Navigation (vss. 23, 24).—I. Its weather is fouler to some than to others. II. An exposure to terrible disasters. III. There need be no shipwrecks. 1. He has an infallible chart; 2. He might have a safe anchorage; 3. He might have an all-sufficient captain.—Thomas.

The Sea.—We, made familiar with the sea by our reading, our travels, our scientific research, our sports—to many of whom a sea voyage is a luxury—we can but faintly realize the dread which the ocean inspired in a Hebrew. It was a significant threat which Moses threw out in his address to the Israelites, that, if they should refuse obedience to God, they should be carried back to Egypt in ships. They would have dreaded the conveyance as much as the return to bondage. —M. R. Vincent.

25—27. (25) waves thereof, of the sea. (26) They, i. e. the sailors. melted, there seems a reference to the physical suffering endured on a voyage. (27) stagger, with the movement of the vessel. wit's end, lit. "all their wisdom swallows itself up:" i. e. comes to nought.[a]

God in the Wind (vs. 25).—The celebrated St. Chad (a name known in early Church history) peculiarly recognized the finger of God in the "stormy wind" and tempest. It is recorded of him that if whilst reading he heard the sound of the wind, he would stop and utter a short prayer that God would be merciful to His people. If it increased, he would close the book, and, falling on his knees, remain fixed in prayer. But if it grew into a violent storm, then he would go to his church, and pass hours in earnest supplications and psalms. "Have you not read," he would say, "'The Lord thundered in the heavens, and the Highest gave forth His voice. Yea, He sent out His arrows and scattered them, and He shot out lightnings and discomfited them?' For the Lord moves the air, raises the wind, darts lightnings, and thunders from heaven, to excite the inhabitants of the earth to fear Him, to put them in mind of the future judgment, to dispel their pride, and vanquish their boldness, by bringing into their thoughts the dreadful time when, the heavens and the earth being in a flame, He will come in the clouds with great power and majesty, to judge the quick and the dead."

28—30. (28) Then, etc., vs. 13. (29) a calm, Polychr., "He hushed the storm to a gentle whisper." (30) haven, Heb. a place surrounded or enclosed, a creek, cove, or fiord.

31—34. (31) Oh that, vs. 8. (32) assembly, or sitting place. "Reference of the vs. is to the temple and the judgment-seat, the two chief places of public resort." "The psalmist holds it to be not enough for men who have received deliverance to thank God secretly in their chambers. He requires them to make public profession of their thank-

"God, who is Guide and Emancipator, is also Healer and Lifegiver, and He is all these in the Word, which has become flesh, and dwelt and dwells among men."—Exp. B.

The best thoughts are ever swiftest winged, the duller lag behind.

"There is nothing more foolish than an act of wickedness; there is no wisdom equal to that of obeying God." — Albert Barnes.

[b] Is. xlii. 10; Jno. i. 3.

[c] "The description of the sea in this Ps., its terrors and occupations, could not have been written before the reign of Solomon." — Dean Stanley.

"Mariners are said in Hebrew to 'go down' to the sea, bec. of the fact that the surface of the sea is below the level of the land." — Jennings and Lowe.

[a] "The waves rise up in mountains, then sink into deep valleys; the pilot skills not what to seek or shun, and his art is folly."—Ovid.

This "is the most highly finished, the most thoroughly poetical, of each of the four pictures of human peril and deliverance. It is painted as a landsman would paint it — the waves running mountains high, on which the tiny craft seemed a plaything, the helplessness of human skill, the gladness of the calm, the safe refuge in the haven." — Perowne.

"Surely oak and threefold brass surrounded his heart who first trusted a frail vessel to the merciless ocean." —Horace.

fulness."—Pul. Com. (33) turneth rivers, etc., either by physical catastrophe, or by moral and political changes such as have rendered Babylonia a desert. Comp. Is. l. 2. (34) barrenness, marg. saltness.[a] wickedness, etc., the productiveness or barrenness of the soil is vitally related to the moral char. of a nation.

All Should Praise God (vs. 31).—I. Consider the goodness of God. 1. It is eternal; 2. Universal; 3. The source of all goodness. II. Consider His wonderful works. 1. In the mechanism of our frames; 2. In the adaptations of nature; 3. In His providential government; 4. In the plan of redemption. III. How ought we to praise Him? 1. In every heart; 2. By every means; 3. In every place; 4. At all times.—W. W. Whythe.

Hereof Judæa is at this day a notable instance (besides many parts of Asia, and Africa, once very fruitful, now, since they became Mahometan, dry and desert). Judæa, saith one, hath now only some few parcels of rich ground found in it; that men may guess the goodness of the cloth by the fineness of the shreds.—John Trapp.

35—38. (35) standing water, Polychr., "pools of water."[b] (36) prepare, etc., see the injunction of Jeremiah to the captives (Jer. xxix. 5). (37) which may yield, etc., Polychr., "and gather the fruits of the harvest." (38) cattle to decrease, this modest under-statement suggests a very great increase, comp. Job. xlii. 12. The riches of the people largely consisted in cattle.

The Beauty of Nature.—The fact is that there is hardly a roadside pond or pool which has not as much landscape in it as above it. It is not the brown, muddy, dull thing we suppose it to be; it has a heart like ourselves, and in the bottom of that there are the boughs of the tall trees, and the blades of the shaking grass, and all manner of hues of variable pleasant light out of the sky. Nay, the ugly gutter that stagnates over the drain-bars in the heart of the foul city is not altogether base; down in that, if you will look deep enough, you may see the dark, serious blue of the far-off sky, and the passing of June clouds. It is at your own will that you see in that despised stream either the refuse of the street or the image of the sky. So it is with almost all other things that we unkindly despise.—Ruskin.

39—43. (39) minished, weakened, lessened in number. (40) upon princes,[a] who have acted thus oppressively towards His people. wander, etc., "wandering in a wilderness without a way denotes helpless embarrassment." (41) like a flock, Polychr., "increases his kindred like a flock of sheep;" suggestive of large increase, Job xxi. 11. (42) righteous, etc., Job v. 16, xxii. 19. (43) Whoso is wise, or if there be any truly wise.[b] understand, R. V., "consider."

Providence.—How great a volume might be written de observandis Providentiæ, concerning the observable things of Divine Providence. I have seen a picture (one of those you call kitchen-pieces) concerning which it hath been proposed to me, that for so many hours I should view it as curiously as I could; yet the proposer would for any wager undertake to show me something in it which I did not observe. Truly Providence is such a thing, I can never look upon it, I can never take the motions of it into my thoughts, but some new observation tendereth itself into my thoughts, I must turn my eyes from this wonderful work, for I see they will not be satisfied with seeing, my mind will never be filled with observation.—John Collinges.

[a] Job xxxix. 6.

"When I meet with a querulous husbandman, he tells me of a churlish soil, of a wet seed-time, of a green winter, of an unkindly spring, of a luke warm summer, of a blustering autumn; but I tell him of a displeased God, who will be sure to contrive and fetch all seasons and elements, to his own most wise drifts and purposes."— Joseph Hall.

[b] Is. xli. 18, 19.

"Yes! place me 'mid far stretching woodless wilds! where no sweet song is heard; the heath bell there, would soothe my weary sight, and tell of Thee."—Cowper.

"The glorious light of all the sky was underneath this globe, and birds grew silent." —Washington Irving.

[a] Job xii. 21.

[b] Comp. Hos. xiv. 9.

author prob. David in part; time, vss. 6-10, early monarchy; the rest Maccabaean.
Contents, Ps. lvii. 7-11, and Ps. lx. 5-12.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND EIGHTH.

1—4. (1) heart is fixed, "steadfast," Ps. lvii. 7, 8. my glory, i. e. "my soul," all the powers and faculties wh. belong to mankind created in the image of God. (2) early, as the sign of earnestly.[c] (3) nations, peoples living round about God's people. (4) above the heavens, "high as the heavens;" Ps. lvii. 10. truth, "faithfulness. clouds, or skies.[d]

The Immensity of Mercy (vs. 4).—I. The moral character and number of its objects. II. The grand purpose of its operations. III.

[c] Better, "I will awake the dawn."

[d] Je. li. 9.

"As thou wouldst have God prosper thy labor in the day and sweeten thy

The extraordinary means it employs. IV. The countless multitudes it has saved. V. The exhaustless provisions which remain.—Thomas.

The Great Mercy of God.—God will fill the hungry soul, because He Himself hath excited and stirred up this hunger; He plants holy desires in us, and will not He satisfy those desires which He Himself hath wrought in us? As in the case of prayer, when God prepares the heart to pray, He prepares His ear to hear. God will satisfy the hungry, because the hungry soul is most thankful for mercy. The Lord loves to bestow His mercy where He may have most praise; we delight to give to them that are thankful. Musicians love to play where there is the best sound. God loves to bestow His mercies where He may hear of them again. God keeps open house for hungry sinners; He invites His guests, and bids them come "without money." Wait awhile, and thou shalt be filled. Spiritual mercies are not only worth desiring, but waiting for.—F. Watson.

5, 6. (5) Be thou exalted, or, Oh show Thyself exalted. Polychr., "Arise above," etc. (6) thy beloved, plural, referring in the original passage (Ps. lx. 5) to the followers of David. me, R. V., "us."

Praise to God.—Let thy praise be according to the greatness of thy mercy. Ah, if we were to measure our devotion thus, with what ardor should we sing! The whole earth with its overhanging dome would seem too scant an orchestra, and all the faculties of all mankind too little for the hallelujah. Angels would be called in to aid us, and surely they would come. They will come in that day when the whole earth shall be filled with the praises of Jehovah. We long for the time when God shall be universally worshiped, and His glory in the gospel shall be everywhere made known. This is a truly missionary prayer. David had none of the exclusiveness of the modern Jew, or the narrow-heartedness of some nominal Christians. For God's sake, that His glory might be everywhere revealed, he longed to see heaven and earth full of the Divine praise. Amen, so let it be.—Spurgeon.

7—13. (7) spoken, respecting the establishment of David's dynasty.[a] (8—13) Gilead, etc., see notes on Ps. lx. 7—12. (10) the strong city, i. e. Petra, the Rock-city of Edom.

Moab is My Washpot.—The office of washing the feet was in the East commonly performed by slaves, and the meanest of the family, as appears from what Abigail said to David when he took her to wife, "Behold, let thine handmaid be a servant to wash the feet of the servants of my lord," 1 Sam. xxv. 41; and from the fact of our Saviour washing His disciples' feet, to give them an example of humility, John xiii. 5. As this office was servile, so the vessels employed for this purpose were a mean part of household stuff. When, therefore, it is said, "Moab is my washpot," the complete and servile subjection of Moab to David is strongly marked. This is expressed, not by comparing Moab to a slave who performs the lowest offices, as presenting to his master the basin for washing his feet, but by comparing him to the mean utensil itself.—James Anderson. Petra.—His hand shall lead him even to Petra, which seems unapproachable by human strength. That marvelous rock-city of the Edomites is surrounded by rocks some of which are three hundred feet high, and a single path twelve in width leads to it. The city itself is partly hewn out of the cloven rocks, and its ruins, which, however, belong to a later period, fill travelers with amazement.—A. F. Tholuck.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND NINTH.

1—5. (1) Hold, etc., or "be not silent." "If God makes no sign when men are grievously persecuted, he seems to be indifferent to their sufferings. Surely He will not thus treat one who praises Him continually." Ps. xxviii. 1, xxxv. 22. "God speaks when He interferes to judge and to save."—Delitzsch. God .. praise, De. x. 21; Je. xvii. 14. (2) mouth, etc., wicked men had spoken lies and slander against him. (3) without a cause, any ground, or occasion, given them by me (John xv. 25). (4) my love, i. e. in return for my love to them. prayer, lit.

rest in the night, clasp them both together with thy morning and evening devotions." — Wm. Gurnall.

"The law of the pleasure of having done anything for another is, that the one almost immediately forgets having given, and the other remembers eternally having received."—Seneca.

"He that has nature in him must be grateful; it is the Creator's primary law, that links the chain of beings to each other." — Madden.

"Whatsoever I do, I would think what will become of it when it is done. If good, I will go on to finish it. If bad I will either leave off where I am, or not undertake it at all." — Feltham.

[a] 2 Sa. vii.

"It is not conclusive evidence that we are not called to undertake a given work or perform a certain duty, because it is very difficult, or even impossible for us to succeed without special help from God." —W. S. Plumer.

"Thoughts are but dreams, till their effects be tried." — Shakespeare.

author, unknown, date, early in the Babylonian captivity.

A Psalm of imprecation.

"Slander is a poison which extinguishes charity, both in the slanderer and in the person who listens to it; so that a single calumny may prove fatal to an infinite number of souls, since it kills not only those who circulate it, but also those who do not reject it." — St. Bernard.

"A Christian prays at rising, at lying down, and as he walks: like a prime favorite at court, who has the key to the privy stairs, and can wake his prince by night." —A. M. Toplady.

"Constant thought will overflow in words unconsciously." — Byron.

a "His prayer not addressed to the human judge for mitigation of the sentence, but here, as always, prayer to God." — Perowne.

"If He prayed who was without sin, how much more it becometh a sinner to pray." — St. Cyprian.

"'Mysterious' was the one word written opposite this psalm in the pocket Bible of a late devout and popular writer. It represents the utter perplexity with which it is very generally regarded."—Joseph Hammond.

"Nurture your mind with great thoughts. To believe in the heroic makes heroes." — D'Israeli.

"These terrible verses are prophecy, but they are prayers too; and prayers which can only be accounted for by remembering the spirit of the old dispensation."—Exp. B.

a Ex. xx. 5.

b "This vs had its most signal fulfilment when the people arose and constrained Pilate to crucify the Man of sorrows."—Stier.

"but I, prayer:" i. e. prob. "I take refuge in prayer." (5) rewarded me, requited, comp. Ps. xxxv. 12, xxxviii. 20.

Prayer.—Persecuted saints are men of prayer, yea, they are as it were made up all of prayer. David prayed before; but, oh, when his enemies fell a persecuting of him, then he gave himself up wholly to prayer. Oh, then he was more earnest, more fervent, more frequent, more diligent, more constant, and more abundant in the work of prayer! When Numa, king of the Romans, was told that his enemies were in arms against him, he did but laugh at it, and answered, "And I do sacrifice;" so when persecutors arm themselves against the people of God, they do but divinely smile and laugh at it, and give themselves the more up to prayer. When men arm against them, then they arm themselves with all their might to the work of prayer; and woe, woe to them that have armies of prayer marching against them.—Thomas Brooks. Evil for Good.—At the battle of Alma, in September, 1854, a wounded Russian was calling piteously for water. Captain Eddington, whose heart was kind and charitable, ran to him, and, stooping, gave him the much-desired beverage. The wounded man revived. The captain ran forward to join his regiment, when the wretch, who had just been restored by his kindness, fired, and shot him who had been his friend in the time of need.—Hom. Com.

Calumny.—

"No might nor greatness in mortality
Can censure 'scape; back-wounding calumny
The whitest virtue strikes: what king so strong,
Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue?"
—Shakespeare.

6—9. (6) Set, as a judge, or ruler. Let him experience the bitterness of the lot wh. he tries to make for me. Satan, "adversary," a malicious accuser. right hand, to plead against him. (7) condemned, go out guilty. prayer . . sin, or a failure, i. e. let not his pleas for mitigation of punishment be attended to. Some think, however, that prayer to God is meant.[a] (8) take his office, Polychr., "seize his possessions," Ac. i. 20. (9) children, by Mosaic law the family shared in the curse of the wicked man.

Imprecations.—The other morning at family worship, I happened to be reading one of the imprecatory psalms, and my little boy, a lad of ten years, asked with some earnestness: "Father, do you think it right for a good man to pray for the destruction of his enemies like that?" I said, "My son, if an assassin should enter the house by night, and murder your mother, and then escape, and the sheriff and citizens were all out in pursuit, trying to catch him, would you not pray to God that they might succeed and arrest him, and that he might be brought to justice?" "Oh, yes!" said he, "but I never saw it so before. I did not know that that was the meaning of these Psalms." "Yes," said I, "my son, the men against whom David prays were bloody men, enemies to the peace of society, seeking his own life, and unless they were arrested and their wicked devices defeated, many innocent persons must suffer."—F. G. Hibbard.

10—13. (10) vagabonds, as Cain, Ge. iv. 12. desolate places, Cheyne, "let them be driven from their desolate houses." (11) extortioner, or usurer. strangers, barbarians and foreigners. (12) extend mercy, when his punishments and sorrows are upon him. (13) posterity be cut off, Polychr., "let extirpation befall his posterity." Comp. Is. liii. 8. generation following, i. e. his grandchildren. Let them be the last of his race.

The Imprecatory Psalms.—They illustrate an imperfect moral development under the partial influence of the Spirit of God. So viewed, there is no reason to apologize for them, or to condemn them, much less to imitate them. We may accept them as part of the Bible and not be troubled by them.—W. E. Barton.

14—17. (14) of his fathers, these, if not forgiven, may be visited on him.[a] (15) them, the sins mentioned in vs. 14. memory of them, of the sinners of vss. 2—13. (16) broken in heart, the feeble-hearted one, whom he should have pitied and helped.[b] (17) cursing, he loved doing it to others, not receiving it on himself. let it be far, etc., Polychr., "let none light on him."

God Does Not Despise the Poor (vs. 16).—Moses was the son of a poor Levite; Gideon was a thresher; David was a shepherd-boy; Amos was a herdsman; the Apostles were "ignorant and unlearned:" Zwingle emerged from a shepherd's hut amongst the Alps; Melancthon was a workman in an armorer's shop; Martin Luther was a child of a poor miner; Carey, who originated the plan of translating the Bible into the language of the millions of Hindostan, was a shoemaker in Northampton; Dr. Morrison, who translated the Bible into the Chinese language, was a last-maker in Newcastle; Dr. Milner was a herd-boy in Aberdeenshire; Dr. Adam Clark was the child of Irish cotters; John Foster was a weaver; Andrew Fuller was a farm-servant; William Jay of Bath was a herdsman.—Bowes.

18—20. (18) into .. water, as the water into his inward parts.[c] Polychr., "let him clothe. . . . Let his curses soak into," etc. (19) garment, "let it cling to him both outwardly and inwardly—inwardly, as the penetrating oil; outwardly, as the everyday dress."—Pul. Com. (20) reward, wages, or Divine recognition and visitation.

Clothed with Cursing.—I remember hearing of a rich man who had a large plantation. He was the most terribly profane man that had ever been known in the neighborhood. He could hardly speak a word on any subject without mingling it with oaths. It was perfectly shocking to hear him speak. At length he was seized with a stroke of something like paralysis. This left him in good health, only he had lost the use of his limbs. And the remarkable thing about it was, that the power of speech was taken away from him, except that he could still swear. Profane words were all that he could utter. A dreadful garment it must have been to wear.—Bib. Ill.

21—25. (21) do thou for me, R. V., "deal thou with me." O God the Lord, O Jehovah Adonai.[d] "The twofold name of God, and the pronoun 'Thou' (Heb.), show the intensity of the appeal." (23) gone, or "I pass away." tossed .. locust,[e] as shaken out of the deep folds of as Eastern robe. (24) fasting, the sign of sorrow and humiliation. faileth of fatness, is wasted so as to contain no more fatness. (25) shaked their heads, doubtfully, counting him one given up for lost by reason of God's punishments. Comp. Ps. xxii. 7, xliv. 14; Matt. xxvii. 39.

For Thy Name's Sake.—My enemies would soon become my friends and my protectors, if I would but renounce my allegiance to thee; my refusal to disobey thee constitutes all my crime in their eyes. My cause, therefore, becomes thine, it will be to thy glory to declare thyself on my side, lest the impious should take occasion from my sufferings to blaspheme thy holy name, as if thou hadst not the power to deliver, or wert utterly indifferent to those who, renouncing all human help, have put their confidence in thee.—Jean Baptiste Massillon.

26—28. (26) Help me, the tone here changes from lamentation to confident hope of deliverance. (27) done it, brought the Psalmist out of the distressing circumstances of wh. his enemies took such unfair advantage. (28) thy servant, Ps. lxix. 17.

Prayer.—I. The Prayer. II. The Believing Title: "O Lord my God." III. The attribute relied upon. IV. The motive for the petition —Spurgeon.

Thy Mercy.—As thy mercy is, so let thy salvation be. The measure is a great one, for the mercy of God is without bound. When man has no mercy it is comforting to fall back upon God's mercy. Justice to the wicked is often mercy to the righteous, and because God is merciful He will save His people by overthrowing their adversaries.—Spurgeon. Curses.—Fear not thou, who art a saint, their imprecations; this is but like false fire in the pan of an uncharged gun, it gives a crack, but hurts not; God's blessings will cover thee from their curse.—William Gurnall.

29—31. (29) Let mine, etc., R. V. marg., "Mine adversaries shall be:" the language of confident expectation that his prayer is heard and answered. (30) among the multitude, i. e. in the congregation; Ps. xxii. 25. (31) stand .. poor, i. e. Jehovah is ready to repel any false accuser. condemn, lit. "from the judges of his soul."[a]

"This is a fearful arithmetic: if the wicked add sins, God will add plagues. If they subtract from others their rights, God shall subtract from them his mercies." — Thomas Adams.

[c] "He has clothed himself in cursing, he has drunk it in like water (Job xv. 16, xxxiv. 7), it has penetrated even to the marrow of his bones, like the oily preparations which are rubbed in and penetrate to the bones." — Delitzsch.

"The world is a mirror which, on the whole, gives back the smile or the frown which we present to it. The psalmist does not doubt that, in general, the curser is cursed back again and the blesser blessed." —Maclaren.

[d] Ps. lxviii. 20 cxl. 7, cxli. 8.

[e] Job xxxix. 20.

"When we have only a little we should be satisfied; for this reason, that those best enjoy abundance who are contented with the least; and so that the pains of poverty are removed, simple fare can give a relish equal to the most expensive luxuries."—Epicurus.

"Troubles are usually the brooms and shovels that smooth the road to a good man's fortune, of which he little dreams."—Basil.

[a] "The contrast bet. the closing thought and vs. 6 is remarkable. At the right hand of the tormentor stands Satan as an accuser, at the right hand of the tormented one stands God as his vindicator; he who delivered him over to human judges is condemned, and he who was delivered up is 'taken away out of distress and fr. judgment' by the Judge of the judges." — Delitzsch.

"It was wont to be said of Archbishop Cranmer, if you would be sure to have Cranmer do you a good turn, you must do him some ill one; for, though he loved to do good to all, yet especially he would watch for opportunity to do good to such as had wronged him." — Spencer.

The last words which Miss Willard uttered as she was about to pass on to the other world were: "How beautiful to be with God!" Died Feb. 17, 1898.

author,— David

A Psalm of Messiah, as Priest-King.

Principal N. T. references are Matt. xxii. 44; Mk. xii. 36; Lu. xx. 42; Ac. ii. 34; He. i. 3, 13.

a "A formula used in prophetic or other solemn or express declarations."—Fausset.

b "Equivalent to saying, 'Be thou associated with Me in My kingly dignity, in My power and universal dominion."—Perowne.

c "An expression derived from the custom of placing the foot upon the necks of the vanquished."—Spk. Com.

d "He gives us no other mark as to the spot in which Christ is Adrian and the Bishop (vs. 31).—Terantius, captain to the Emperor Adrian, presented a petition that the Christians might have a temple by themselves, in which to worship God apart from the Arians. The emperor tore his petition, and threw it away, bidding him ask something for himself, and it should be granted. Terantius modestly gathered up the fragments of his petition, and said, with true nobility of mind, "If I cannot be heard in God's cause, I will never ask anything for myself."—Cheever. The Power of Prayer to Change our Moods.—There is clearly a different tone in the closing portion of this psalm. It may not be so evident as we should like it to have been, but it is there. The storm of angry feeling dies down, and we only hear mutterings after the loud thunder-peals. There is gradually more earnest prayer for himself, less concern about his enemy, and a fuller confidence that God will answer his prayer, and, in His own wise way, bless the good and shame the evil. It is his praying on that has wrought this change of mood. He has prayed himself into a better mind, by the very saying out so freely all the bitter things he had thought and felt. Prayer Changes our Moods by Exhausting the Bad Moods.—Here is a most singular thing. Saying out all our bad feelings to a fellow-man would only intensify the badness. We should excite ourselves even to plan revengeful things. But if we say out all our bad feelings to God, we find they get exhausted. Somehow, in His presence, we cannot keep them up. Another mood must come, as tears come when passion has expended itself. So prayer helps by finding us the opportunity for safely saying out all that is in our hearts. Prayer Helps Us by Encouraging New and Better Moods.—Gradually, as we pray on, the sense of God's presence makes us feel kinder. We cease to want our enemy punished, we want ourselves vindicated; and then presently we feel as if we could just leave our enemy in the hands of God. The Judge of all the earth will surely do the right. So mood after mood changing for the better, we come at last to the Christian mood, and do as the Lord Jesus did, and as St. Stephen did—pray for our enemies.—Pul. Com. At the Right Hand of the Poor.—One of the oldest Rabbinical commentaries has a very beautiful gloss on this passage. "Whenever a poor man stands at thy door, the Holy One, blessed be His Name, stands at his right hand. If thou givest him alms, know that thou shalt receive a reward from Him who standeth at his right hand."—Alfred Edersheim.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND TENTH.

1—3. (1) The Lord, "Jehovah." said,[a] lit. an oracle, or utterance of Jehovah. "In our opinion the Divine oracle in vs. 1 is not a declaration made by the community, which is absolutely impossible, nor even an utterance of an unknown prophet regarding David, but an oracle which has just now been made to David (Matt. xxii. 43), an utterance of David's regarding the promised coming Christ."—Delitzsch. my Lord, i. e. David's Lord, or Messiah. my right hand, or on My throne.[b] footstool, the emblem of complete submission.[c] (2) rod .. strength, or strong sceptre: emblem of a king's power. rule thou, or assume dominion.[d] (3) shall be willing, R. V., "offer themselves willingly." beauties of holiness, or clad in holy, festive garments. from .. youth, some understand this of the Messiah Himself and explain, "As the dew of the morning, abundant, refreshing, spreading far and wide, miraculous, so is the might of thy perpetual youth" (Spk. Com.); others, and the larger number, interpret it of Messiah's army, "As dew out of the early morning dawn, descending by a silent, mysterious birth from the starlit heaven, so comes to Messiah his mighty host of followers" (comp. Isa. xxvi. 19).—Pul. Com.

Christ's Kingdom.—I. The internal evidence of Christ's kingdom is in His people's willingness: "Thy people shall be willingness—thy people shall be a people all willing"—all volunteers, not pressed men. II. The external evidence of it lies in His people's holiness; "the beauties of holiness;" or as it may be rendered—"in the magnificence of His sanctuary," for the ornaments of the sanctuary and the dress of the priests were very splendid. When you once give yourselves to God, you become temples of God; and sanctity must adorn that heart which is a living temple of the Holy Ghost.—J. Bennett.

Conquests of Christ.—What successes did the Jews anticipate from their Messiah? The wildest dreams of their rabbis have been far exceeded. Has not Jesus conquered Europe, and changed its name into Christendom? All countries that refuse the cross wither. . . . And the time will come when the vast communities and countless myriads of America and Australia, looking upon Europe as Europe now looks upon Greece, and wondering how so small a space could have achieved such mighty deeds, will still find music in the songs of Zion, and still seek solace in the parables of Galilee.—B. Disraeli.

4—7. (4) sworn, comp. Heb. vi. 13, 17, 18. not repent, the oath and decree are absolutely immutable. a priest, "this is the first intimation of the union of the kingly and priestly functions in the person of Messiah." forever, this priesthood wh. is the prototype of Christ's priestly relation to humanity, rests on an unchangeable foundation. order of, or manner of, i. e. such a priesthood as was suitable for humanity at large. Melchizedek was a Gentile priest. Melchizedek, Ge. xiv. 18—24. (5) The Lord, i. e. Jehovah. strike through, or dashes in pieces.[a] (6) judge, in sense of bringing overwhelming punishments on them. heathen, R. V., "the nations." dead bodies, a fig. taken fr. the scenes of a great battle.[b] But Messiah's triumphs are spiritual. wound, R. V., "shall strike through." heads, i. e. the rulers or princes. (7) drink . . way, "of the brook shall he drink in the way." lift . . head, refreshed by his drinking, he derives new vigor for the pursuit of his enemies.

Melchizedek Type of Christ (vs. 4).—I. In His name and title. 1. His name—King of Righteousness; 2. His title—King of Peace. II. In the mystery of His origin. 1. Without genealogy—Divine Sonship; 2. Without parentage—Incarnation. III. In the perpetuity of His priesthood. IV. In His benediction. 1. The person; 2. The manner; 3. The substance.—McEwen.

The Order of Melchizedek.—I. Christ is a priest after the order of Melchizedek. 1. That order was unique; (1) In its loneliness; (2) In that it was underived and untransmitted; (3) In its efficacy; 2. That order was righteous; 3. That order was peaceful; 4. That order was royal; 5. That order was superior; (1) In its antiquity; (2) In its perpetuity; (3) In its universality. II. Christ's appointment to this priesthood is held under Divine authority.—Wm. Jones.

Christ's Empire.—"Alexander," remarked the great Napoleon, "Cæsar, and myself have founded empires. But upon what do we rest the creations of our genius? Upon force. Jesus Christ alone founded His empire upon love; and at this moment millions of men would die for Him. I die before my time, and my body will be given back to the earth to become food for worms. Such is the fate of him who has been called the great Napoleon. What an abyss between my deep misery and the eternal kingdom of Christ, which is proclaimed, loved, and adored, and which is extended over the whole earth?"—Hom. Com.

to reign but this —in the midst of Thine enemies." — Luther.

"Heaven is not imposed upon by coronets and thrones. All mankind have crown rights, and woe to those who injure them. Those who do so must and will be removed. The tyrant must be hurled from his throne before the subject can breathe the free air of liberty. Pharaoh must be engulfed, that Israel may pursue her path of progress."
—Wm. Jones.

[a] Re. vi. 17, xi. 18.

[b] Is. lxvi. 16; Joel iii. 2; Re. xiv. 19, 20.

Jesus Christ is the true centre of gravity; and it is only as the forces of humanity are pivoted on him that they are in balance. —G. D. Boardman.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND ELEVENTH.

author unknown date,— after the restoration.

An alphabetical Psalm recounting God's mercies.

1—5. (1) Praise ye, Heb. Hallelujah! whole heart, involving ideas of sincerity and earnestness. assembly . . congregation, Cheyne, "in the council and assembly of the upright," but one congregation is designated. (2) works, here those especially wh. concerned His people. sought out, Polychr., "worthy of examination," made the objects of devout meditation and study.[a] "Studied as the monuments of God's gracious purposes." (3) work, or working. righteousness, i. e. His beneficence to man.[b] (4) made . . remembered, His wonderful deeds are a perpetual memorial of Him.[c] (5) meat, the word is generally used of the "prey" of wild beasts. Chosen here in allusion to feeding in the wilderness.

The psalmist furnishes us with matter for praise from the works of God. 1. The greatness of His works and the glory of them. 2. The

[a] "Searched into (are they) for all their delights." — Jennings and Lowe.

[b] Ps. xix. 9, cxii. 3.

[c] Nu. xvi. 40; Jos. iv. 6, 7; Ps. lxxviii. 3, 4

"The man who has nothing else above him has self, that ugrighteousness of them. 3. The goodness of them. 4. The power of them. 5. The conformity of them to His word of promise. 6. The perpetuity of them.—Matthew Henry.

6—10. (6) that .. give, better, "by giving." The Div. power was shown in securing the heritage for God's people. (7) verity, absolute truthfulness.[d] sure, fixed, established, firm on the foundations of truth. (8) stand fast, R. V., "are established," by their own inherent worth; they need no upholding. (9) redemption, fr. Egyp. bondage. covenant, in Sinai. reverend, such as should fill us with awe and holy fear. (10) beginning, first and principal part:[e] so "chief part in." good understanding, marg. "good success:"[f] "a true prudence." his commandments, R. V., "thereafter," i. e. according to the "fear of the Lord."

Religion the Highest Wisdom, Sin the Greatest Folly (vs. 10).—I. Instances of the folly and madness of such as do not make the fear of the Lord the beginning of their wisdom. 1. Men will not take the safest side in religion, which reason and self-love carry them to in other respects; 2. It is a folly to believe the great truths of religion, and yet act contrary to such a belief; 3. To pretend to love God, when their character shows the contrary; 4. To hope for heaven, when they have no good title; 5. To be more concerned about time than eternity.—Pres. Davis.

The Great Redeemer (vs. 9).—"I have taken much pains," says the learned Selden, "to know everything that was esteemed worth knowing among men; but, with all my disquisitions and reading, nothing now remains with me to comfort me, at the close of life, but the passage of St. Paul: 'It is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.' To this I cleave, and herein I find rest."

liest, most obscene of deities: Belial, and Mammon, and Beelzebub in one. Self is the deity of millions, and its worship is as vile, as brutalising, as ever were the rites of Chemosh, or Milcom, or Ashtoreth. In general, even fallen man has something besides himself above him; even where self presides in the worship, it is rather as priest than idol."—Vaughan.

d Ps. xix. 7; Re. xv. 3.

e Job xxviii. 28; Pr. i. 7, ix. 10.

f Pr. xiii. 15; also De. iv. 6; Ec. xii. 13.

"His seed shall be a warrior in the earth."—Hengstenberg.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND TWELFTH.

author unknown, date—after the restoration an acrostic, or alphabetical Ps. Subj., the excellence of piety, and its reward.

1—3. (1) Blessed, etc., Ps. i. 1. delighteth, "true fear produces obedience, and this happiness." (2) mighty, a word generally used of warlike strength, but sometimes in the more general sense of wealth, substance, etc.[a] generation, family, or descendants. (3) Wealth, Bishop Butler has well shown how, in God's moral government of the world, virtue tends to accumulate to itself the good things of this life, and vice to disperse and dissipate them.[b] righteousness, with chief reference to beneficence, or a liberal regard for the wants of others, vs. 9.[c] for ever, or permanently; unaffected by changes of prosperity or adversity: "His righteous deeds will stand forever as a monument of his character."—Cheyne.

Praise Ye the Lord.—I. Who should be praised? Not man, self, wealth, etc., but God only. II. Who should praise Him? All men, but specially His people, the blessed ones described in this psalm. III. Why should they do it? For all the reasons mentioned in succeeding verses. IV. How should they do it? Chiefly by leading such a life as is here described.—Spurgeon.

God's Blessings.—And there is this peculiarity about God's blessings, that, while they satisfy the present need they create new needs, and stimulate to fresh search and asking. The Arabian story tells of the young prince who, having squandered his patrimony in dissipation, was directed in a vision to dig up the floor of his chamber; and on doing so discovered a subterranean apartment. On exploring this, he found an urn; and on opening the urn discovered a key. This set him looking for the lock to which the key belonged, and having at last discovered a secret door in the wall he opened another chamber containing eleven statues of pure gold, and a pedestal for a twelfth, with an inscription bidding him search for the remaining statue. Even so each blessing of God reveals another on beyond, by revealing the need of another. When you shall receive a gift which leaves you no wish but to sit down and enjoy it, you may seriously question whether that gift is a blessing from God; since God's blessings always point to the goodness that is laid up.—Marvin R. Vincent.

a Ru. ii. 1; 1 Sa. ix. 1; 2 Ki. xv. 20; Is. v. 22.

b Pr. iii. 16, viii. 18.

c "What is meant may be that when the God-fearing man thus receives the reward of temporal riches, he is not led astray by them, but continues unswerving in his merciful regard for the wants of others. Or else that he had the long-lived reputation of a beneficent man." — Jennings and Lowe.

"He is the blessed man who is most observant of God's will, and careful to follow it." — David Dickson.

4—6. (4) light in the darkness, a fig. for "relief in calamity."[a] Polychr., "To the upright in darkness as a light arises The Merciful, the Compassionate, and the Just." gracious, etc., further descriptions of the upright man.[b] (5) a good man, R. V., "Well is it with the man that dealeth graciously," etc. lendeth, Ps. xli. 1; Pr. xiv. 21. with discretion, or judgment; R. V., "He shall maintain his cause in judgment," i. e. in the court of judgment. (6) everlasting remembrance, as long as men can remember anything.[c]

The Sowing for the Righteous.—I. Who is the upright man? He is one who—1. Looks upward; 2. Walks upward; 3. Points upward. What is the blessedness promised him? Light in the darkness of—1. Ignorance; 2. Doubt; 3. Perplexity; 4. Affliction; 5. Death.—W. W. Whythe.

Remembrance.—The world has no interest in keeping up the memory of bad men, and, as soon as it can be done, hastens to forget them. Wicked men are remembered only when their deeds are enormous, and then their memory is cherished only to admonish and to warn. The world has no interest in keeping up the memory of Benedict Arnold, or Alexander VI., or Cæsar Borgia, except to warn future generations of the guilt and baseness of treason and profligacy. It has an interest in never suffering the names of Howard, Wilberforce, Henry Martyn to die, for these names excite to noble feelings and to noble efforts wherever they are known.—Barnes. Discretion.—There is a story concerning divers ancient Fathers, that they came to St. Anthony, enquiring of him, what virtue did by a direct line lead to perfection, that so a man might shun the snares of Satan. He bade every one of them speak his opinion; one said, watching and sobriety; another said, fasting and discipline; a third said, humble prayer; a fourth said, poverty and obedience; and another, piety and works of mercy; but when every one had spoken his mind, his answer was, That all these were excellent graces indeed, but discretion was the chief of them all.—John Spencer.

7—10. (7) evil tidings, of calamities to himself, or his nation. An assured confidence in God lifts him above all fear.[a] fixed, "settled on a sure basis, the one basis that is solid and unmovable."—Pul. Com. Ps. lvii. 7. (8) until he see, Polychr., "In the end he beholds the downfall of," etc. (9) dispersed,[b] not hoarded for himself, comp. note on vs. 3. "An abundant scattering of good is intimated." horn, Ps. lxxv. 4, 5. (10) grieved, filled with irritation. gnash, etc., Ps. xxxv. 16. melt away, the fig. for despair.[c]

The Government of the Heart (vs. 8).—I. Show the need of this government. II. Give some rules for it. 1. Let there be a proper reverence of self; 2. Prayer; 3. Recollect the connection between thought and action; 4. Trace pain and pleasure to their proper source; 5. Wisely employ time; 6. Cherish the love of candor; 7. Encourage a sense of the constant presence of God.—Sydney Smith.

Fearlessness, Fixedness, and Faith.—I. Fearlessness consists in—1. Not being afraid of evil tidings before they come; 2. Not being afraid of evil tidings when they come; 3. Not being afraid of evil tidings after they come. II. Fixedness is—1. A steady preparation to meet all possible fears; 2. A strong determination to resist the shock of evil when it comes. III. No fixedness without faith.—William Jones.

Confidence in God (vs. 7).—When Alexander the Great was suffering from a violent fever, he received a letter denouncing his physician Philip as a traitor who had been bribed to take him off by poison. At that very moment the physician stood by his bedside with a medicinal draught. The king gave the letter to Philip to read, and then unhesitatingly drank off the medicine. Thus should the believer confide in God, without wavering or doubting.

Faith Triumphant.—

Triumphant faith!
Who from the distant earth, looks up to heaven,
Seeing invisibility, suspending Eternity upon the breath of God.
She can pluck mountains from their rooted thrones,
And hurl them into ocean; and from pain,

[a] Ps. xcvii. 11.

[b] "Some take the three attributes as in apposition with the noun 'light,' God Himself being the Light. They read, 'Here hath arisen a Light, viz. He who is gracious.' The ref. to the upright man is, however, to be preferred."—Perowne.

[c] Pr. x. 7; 2 Pe. i. 5—7, 10.

"But let us ask, Do we also shine
With glory from Christ our Sun?
Will aught we do in the world for Him
Be missed when life is done?"—Charlotte Murray.

"Be useful when thou livest, that they may Both want, and wish thy pleasing presence still." —George Herbert.

"He that lacks time to mourn, lacks time to mend; eternity mourns that."—Sir H. Taylor.

[a] "The epithets 'established.' 'trusting,' 'upheld,' are all strikingly descriptive of the true attitude of faith, as that wh. leans on, and is supported by, God." —Perowne.

[b] 2 Cor. ix. 9.

[c] 2 Sa. xvii. 10.

"Sin is essentially a departure from God." —Luther.

"It is not the quantity of thy faith that shall save thee. A drop of water is as true water as the whole ocean. So a little faith is as true faith as the greatest. A child eight days old is as really a man as one of sixty years; a spark of fire is as true fire as a great flame; a sickly man is as true living as a well man. So it is not the measure of thy faith that saves thee—it is the blood that it grips to, that saves thee."—Welsh.

As fences, facing each other on opposite sides of the right path, keep the flock from straying, the terrors and the promises of the Lord are everywhere found not far asunder.

And prisons, and contempt, extort the palm
Of everlasting triumph. She doth tread
Upon the neck of pride, like the free wind
On angry ocean. Lo! with step erect
She walks o'er whirlpool waves and martyr fires,
And depths of darkness and chaotic voids;
Dissolving worlds, rent heavens, and dying suns;
Yea, and o'er paradises of earth's bliss,
And oceans of earth's gold, and pyramids
And temples of earth's glory: all these pave
Her conquering path to heaven—all these she spurns
With feet fire-shod, because her hand is placed Immovably in God's; her eye doth rest
Unchangeably on His; nor will she stop Till, having cross'd the stormy waves of pain
And fiery trial, she may lay her head
Upon her Father's breast and take the crown
From love's rejoicing hand.—Miss Tatham.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND THIRTEENTH.

author unknown; date, after the restoration.

Praise to Him who raiseth out of low estate.

"Pss. cxiii—cxviii. The Egyptian Hallel ...the O. T. Magnificat. It was sung at the three great Heb. feasts, at the new moon, and on the eight days of the Feast of Dedication, but it is especially associated with the Passover." — W. E. Barton.

1—4. (1) servants, etc.,[a] all faithful Israelites. (2) name of the Lord, regarded as summing up His perfections and gracious works.[b] (3) From .. same, fig. for from east to west, or throughout the world. to be praised, better, "let it be praised." (4) nations, Polychr., "heathendom." above, etc., Ps. cxlviii. 13.

God is to be praised. 1. All the day. 2. All the world over. 3. Publicly in the light. 4. Amidst daily duties. 5. Always—because it is always day somewhere.—Spurgeon.

Praise.—It is said, that, when the sun is going out of sight, the pious Swiss herdsman of the Alps takes his Alpine horn, and shouts loudly through it, "Praise ye the Lord!" Then a brother herdsman on some distant slope takes up the echo, "Praise ye the Lord!" Soon another answers, still higher up the mountains, till hill shouts to hill, and peak echoes to peak, the sublime anthem of praise to the Lord of all. —Foster's Cyc. of Illus.

5—9. (5) Who, etc., in omniscience and condescension enthroned there in heaven and suffering nothing here upon earth, not even that which is most lowly, to be unnoticed by Him.—Delitzsch. Comp. Ex. xv. 11. (6) humbleth, Polychr., "Who looks far down from heaven on the earth." (7) raiseth, etc., the earth is full of mercy of Jehovah, 1 Sa. ii. 8; Lu. i. 52, 53. (8) of his people, Jehovah's people, regarded as more honorable than the ordinary princes of nations. (9) barren, or houseless.[c] children, "a house in Heb. implies children; without wh. it is cheerless, and without wh. the wife has no secure place."—Spk. Com. The historical allusion is prob. to Hannah.

The Unparalleled Condescension of God.—1. None are so great, and therefore able to stoop so low. 2. None are so good, and therefore so willing to stoop. 3. None are so wise, and therefore so able to "behold" or know the needs of little things. 4. None are infinite, and therefore able to enter into minutiæ and sympathize with the smallest grief: Infinity is seen in the minute as truly as in the immense.—Spurgeon.

The Greatness of God.—"About the time of the invention of the telescope, another instrument was formed which laid open a scene no less wonderful. This was the microscope. The one led me to see a system in every star; the other leads me to see a world in every atom. The one taught me that this mighty globe, with the whole burden of its people, and of its countries, is but a grain of sand on the high field of immensity. The other teaches me that every grain of sand may harbor within it the tribes and the families of a busy population. The one told me of the insignificance of the world I tread on, the other redeems it from all its insignificance; for it tells me that in the leaves of every forest, and in the flowers of every garden, and in the waters of every rivulet, there are worlds teeming with life, and numberless as are the

[a] "A designation of the sacred nation common in the latter part of Isaiah." — Jennings and Lowe.

[b] Ex. xxxiii. 19.

[c] "The Rabbins actually speak of a man's wife as his house, and the same form of speech is current at the present day among the Arabs. The similarity of the Gothic words 'heiva, house,' and 'hiva, wife,' may perhaps be noticed in illustration of this usage." — Jennings and Lowe.

"If God gives a wife children He thereby makes her thoroughly at home, and rooted-in in her position." — Delitzsch.

glories of the firmament. . . . By the one there is the discovery that no magnitude, however vast, is beyond the grasp of the Divinity; but by the other we have also discovered that no minuteness, however shrunk from the notice of the human eye, is beneath the condescension of His regard."—Chalmers. An Unfathomable God.—A God all known and comprehended is no God. That which I fully know and understand, is below, not above me, for I have mastered it. I have not to worship it, it must bow down to me. That which towers immeasurably above me, which I cannot scale and cannot fathom, before which I am as nothing, that and that alone, I fall down to and adore—not ignorance, but knowledge is the mother of devotion. Nevertheless, the sense of ignorance in the created mind, of immeasurable ignorance and infirmity, is preliminary and essential to all true adoration.—J. Young.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FOURTEENTH.

1—4. "This is perhaps the most beautiful of all the Psalms which touch on the early history of Israel."—Perowne. (1) strange language, lit. a stammering (i. e. unintelligible) people; other than the sacred Hebrew language.[a] (2) Judah . . Israel, this distinction shows how the mind had been affected by the separation under Rehoboam. It does not appear whether the tribes or the parts of the country are chiefly in the writer's mind. sanctuary, place of his habitation.[b] dominion, the whole people came under God's special protection. (3) sea, Ex. xiv. 21. Jordan, these two miracles "marked respectively the beginning and the end of Israel's long journey."—Cheyne. Jos. iii. 13. (4) mountains, etc., poetical ref. to Div. manifestation on Sinai, see Ex. xix. 18.[c]

The Temple and the Kingdom.—I. The Temple. In the sanctuary—1. God dwells. 2. God manifests Himself. 3. God communicates His will. 4. God must be adored. II. The Kingdom. 1. God reigns in His dominion. 2. God reigns over His dominion. 3. God reigns for the good of His subjects. 4. God reigns that His dominion may be universally acknowledged.—Hom. Com. The removal of obstacles—I. Antagonisms are quelled. 1. Sin and Satan have receded. 2. Idolatry has receded. 3. Infidelity has receded. II. Boundaries are removed. 1. Christianity levels all class distinctions. 2. Christianity obliterates all physical barriers. 3. Christianity fills up all intellectual chasms. III. Difficulties are overcome. 1. All difficulties of nature. 2. All difficulties of human prejudice.—William Jones.

Jordan was Driven Back.—The waters know their Maker: that Jordan which flowed with full streams when Christ went into it to be baptized, now gives way when the same God must pass through it in state: then there was use of his water, now of his sand. I hear no more news of any rod to strike the waters; the presence of the ark of the Lord God, Lord of all the world, is sign enough to these waves, which now, as if a sinew were broken, run back to their issues, and dare not so much as wet the feet of the priests that bare it. How subservient are all the creatures to the God that made them! How glorious a God do we serve; whom all the powers of the heavens and elements are willingly subject unto, and gladly take that nature which he pleaseth to give them. —Abraham Wright.

5—8. (5) ailed thee, comp. Ps. lxviii. 16; Is. xxiii. 7. driven back, R. V. "turnest back." (6) skipped, vs. 4. (7) Tremble, as the mountains did at the Theophany. (8) rock, Ex. xvii. 6. standing, R. V. "a pool of." flint, better, "the steep cliff."[a] Miracles of mercy, showing at once God's almightiness and his care for Israel.

Tremble, Thou Earth.—The causing of water to gush forth out of the flinty rock is a practical proof of unlimited omnipotence and of the grace which converts death into life. Let the earth then tremble before the Lord, the God of Jacob. It has already trembled before him, and before him let it tremble. For that which he has been he still ever is; and as he came once he will come again.—Franz Delitzsch. Our Hallel. —Our deliverance from under the yoke of sin is strikingly typified in the going up of Israel from Egypt, and so also was the victory of our Lord

Is. liv. 1; Ga. iv. 27.

This feast is spread for you. "Eat, O friends; drink, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved." If you have faith as a grain of mustard-seed, come.—McCheyne.

Bodies are thoughts precipitated into space. The basis of the British and Foreign Bible Society was a thought in the mind of Rev. Mr. Charles, of Bala; that of the Anti-slavery Society of England a thought of Thomas Clarkson. A thought sent Moffat to Africa, Morrison to China, Williams to the South Sea Islands, and Judson to Burmah.

author,—
prob. same as the preceding.
date,
after the restoration.

"Nature's commotion before the God of the Exodus."

Pss. cxiii. and cxiv were sung before the Passover supper; Pss. cxv.—cxviii., after.

[a] "The strange language is particularised as the sign of a barbarous, unholy people, contrasted with the holy, separated people."

—Spk. Com.

[b] Ex. xix. 6; 2 Cor. vi. 16—18.

[c] Comp. Ps. xxix. 6; Ha. iii. 6.

[a] "The conclusion, that a look of the God of Jacob did these miracles, and turned the rock not into water, but a pool of water, and the flint into a springing fountain, makes up a picture of sublimity to wh. no parallel can be found." — Herder.

over the powers of death and hell. The Exodus should therefore be earnestly remembered by Christian hearts. Did not Moses on the mount of transfiguration speak to our Lord of "the exodus" which he should shortly accomplish at Jerusalem; and is it not written of the hosts above that they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and of the Lamb? Do we not ourselves expect another coming of the Lord, when before his face heaven and earth shall flee away and there shall be no more sea? We join then with the singers around the Passover table and make their Hallel ours, for we too have been led out of bondage and guided like a flock through a desert land, wherein the Lord supplies our wants with heavenly manna and water from the Rock of Ages. Praise ye the Lord.—Spurgeon.

Inquiry for God.—

What art Thou, mighty One? and where Thy seat?
Thou broodest on the calm that cheers the lands,
And Thou dost bear within Thy awful hands
The rolling thunders and the lightnings fleet;
Stern on Thy dark-wrought car of cloud and wind
Thou guid'st the northern storm at night's dread noon,
Or on the red wing of the fierce monsoon Disturb'st the sleeping giant of the Ind.
In the drear silence of the polar span,
Dost Thou repose? or in the solitude
Of sultry tracks, where the lone caravan Hears nightly howl the tiger's hungry brood?
Vain thought! the confines of His throne to trace,
Who glows through all the fields of boundless space.

—H. K. White.

"The God of metaphysics is but an idea. But the God of religion, the Maker of heaven and earth, the sovereign Judge of actions and thoughts, is a power." — Joubert.

"If I make the seven oceans ink, if I make the trees my pen, if I make the earth my paper, the glory of God cannot be written." —Kabir.

"What is it that engrosses the thoughts of the world? Pleasure, wealth, honor and esteem; in fine, the making ourselves kings, without reflecting what it is to be a king, or to be a man." — Pascal.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FIFTEENTH.

author, unknown: date, time of the second temple

"This [i.e. Pss. cxv. — cxviii.] is probably the 'hymn' which our Lord and his disciples sang before going out into the Garden of Gethsemane." — Barton.

Subj., the vanity of idols, and idol-worship. Matt. xxvi. 30.

1—3. (1) Not unto us, the expression of deep humility, and distrust of self. unto thy name, i. e. glorify thy covenant-name and promise. mercy, or loving-kindness.[a] (2) Wherefore, Ps. lxxix. 10. Where .. God? Ps. xlii. 3, 10.[b] (3) But, or seeing that: "all the while our God is in the heavens,[c] i. e. is invisible, but not impotent like the idols of the heathen, "he doeth whatsoever he desires."

[a] Is. xlviii. 11; Eze. xxxvi. 32.

[b] "The attributes of God would be assailed if the taunt of the heathen should be allowed to pass unsilenced. It is God's glory which is at stake." — Perowne.

[c] Is. xlvi. 10; Da. iv. 35; Eph. i. 11.

God's Mercy Acknowledged (vs. 1).—I. The duty of gratitude to God for the mercies received from Him in the time of trouble. II. The duty which this mercy in trouble should teach us.—E. Trees.

Non Nobis Domine (Not unto us, O Lord) was the battle-song of the heroic John Sobieski, king of Poland, Sept. 12, 1683, when he marched down from the heights of Kalenberg, and defeated the immense army of the Turks which was besieging Vienna, and had reduced it to the last extremity. It was a turning-point in history, the final great Eastern invasion which has thundered at that gate of Europe; and ever since, the Turkish power and Mahommedan faith have been on the wane. There was indescribable enthusiasm as the psalm was sung, "Wherefore should the heathen say, Where is now their God? But our God is in the heavens: he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased."—Ker. Where is Their God?—Here we have the devil's chain. Each several link is manifest of that awful fetter with which the devil binds his victims ere he casts them into hell. Many of our sceptics give atheism a very proud lineage; its ancestors are thought, logic, love, and righteousness; God's Word declares atheism to be the monstrous child of corruption. Yes; atheism springs not from a clear head, but a disordered heart; it is not the characteristic of a pure and simple age, but of a civilization debauched with luxuries, and mad with pride.—Hom. Com.

4—8. (4) Their idols, Ps. cxxxv. 15—18. work .. hands, this is the all-sufficient stamp of their worthlessness. A man-made god must be worthless.[a] What can such "nothingness" do against the Almighty? (7) speak .. throat, lit. mutter, not even utter articulate sounds. (8) like .. them, are becoming, like them, powerless, senseless. "As is a god so is [a] Ac. xvii. 29.

"The author might know, how little was the distinction made by the his worshiper." Ro. i. 21, 22. Polychr., "As dead as they may their carvers become."

Idols.—I. The character of idol gods. Whether our gods are natural objects or riches or worldly pleasures, they have no eye to pity, no ear to hear petitions, no tongue to counsel, no hand to help. II. The character of the true God. He is all eye, all ear, all tongue, all hand, all feet, all mind, all heart. III. The character of the idol worshipers. All become naturally assimilated to the objects of their worship.—Spurgeon.

Idols.—They are metal, stone, and wood. They are generally made in the form of man, but can neither see, hear, smell, feel, walk, nor speak. How brutish to trust in such! and next to them, in stupidity and inanity, must they be who form them, with the expectation of deriving any good from them. So obviously vain was the whole system of idolatry that the more serious heathens ridiculed it, and it was a butt for the jests of their freethinkers and buffoons. How keen are these words of Juvenal! "Dost thou hear, O Jupiter, these things? nor move thy lips when thou oughtest to speak out, whether thou art of marble or of bronze? Or, why do we put the sacred incense on thy altar from the opened paper, and the extracted liver of a calf, and the white caul of a hog? As far as I can discern, there is no difference between thy statue and that of Bathyllus." This irony will appear the keener, when it is known that Bathyllus was a fiddler and player, whose image, by the order of Polycrates, was erected in the temple of Juno at Samos.—Adam Clarke.

9—13. (9) Israel, the whole people. Trust in Jehovah placed in contrast beside the trust of the heathen in their idols. thou .. their, the change in the pronoun indicates that these sentences were repeated as responses in a liturgical service. (10) house of Aaron, the priesthood. (11) fear the Lord, the pious ones of the nation, or the proselytes of the gate.[a] (12) will bless, the confidence is felt bec. of past blessings. (13) small and great, i. e. all, without exception.

Thanksgiving for Harvest (vs. 12).—I. The Lord has been mindful of us in our temporal wants. II. He has been mindful of us in our eternal welfare. III. Let us see how these two great blessings have operated upon us.—R. Jones.

Trust.—Faith is the cable which binds our boat to the shore, and by pulling at it we draw ourselves to the land; faith unites us to God, and then draws us near to him. As long as the anchor of faith holds there is no fear in the worst tempest; if that should fail us there would be no hope left. We must see to it that our faith is sound and strong, for otherwise prayer cannot prevail with God. Woe to the warrior who throws away his shield; what defence can be found for him who finds no defence in his God?—Spurgeon.

14—18. (14) increase you, De. i. 11. Perhaps here the idea is, "add blessings to you and your children."—Calvin. (15) made .. earth, Ps. cxxi. 2, cxxiv. 8, cxxxiv. 3. (16) heaven, etc., better, "The heavens are a dwelling-place for the Lord." But the earth He has given to men. Hence men ought to sing praises continually. (17) dead, etc., "Praise is the function only of the living, who receive these blessings."[b]

The Earth for Man (vs. 16).—The earth is given to man for two purposes. I. As affording a strong rebuke to all social monopoly. II. As affording a strong rebuke to religious indifference. The earth should be a scene—1. For man's physical development; 2. A school for man's intellectual culture; 3. A temple for man's religious worship; 4. As a sphere for evangelistic labor.—Thomas.

Praise is the highest function that any creature can discharge. The Rabbis have a beautiful bit of teaching buried among their rubbish about angels. They say that there are two kinds of angels, the angels of service and the angels of praise, of which two orders the latter is the higher, and that no angel in it praises God twice; but having lifted up his voice in the psalm of heaven, then ceases to be. He has perfected his being, he has reached the height of his greatness, he has done what he was made for; let him fade away. The garb of legend is mean enough, but the thought it embodies is that ever true and solemn one, without which life is nought: "Man's chief end is to glorify God."—Maclaren. The Earth Given to Men.—The Astronomer has learned the heathen worship between the symbol and the thing symbolized. Accordingly, the worship of idols seems to him, to be the extreme of self-stupefaction, and of the destruction of human consciousness."

— Delitzsch.

"It is an observation of Chrysostom, that that very hand which the humble John Baptist thought not worthy to unloose the shoe on our blessed Saviour's feet, that hand our Lord thought worthy to baptize his sacred head."

"It takes a good many shovelfuls of earth to bury the truth."

—Swiss Proverb.

[a] "These are most naturally understood as proselytes, and, in the prominence given to them, we see the increasing consciousness in Israel of its Divine destination to be God's witness to the world."

—Exp. B.

[b] Ps. cxviii. 17; Is. xxxviii. 18, 19.

"A converted sailor, in the gladness of his first love, was heard to exclaim, 'To save such a sinner as I am! He shall never hear the end of it.'" — Foster.

"What change has made the pastures sweet,
And reached the daisies at my feet,
And cloud that wears a golden hem?
This lovely world, the hills, the sward—
They all look fresh, as if the Lord
But yesterday had finished them!" — Jean Ingelow.

"And see the country, far diffused around, one boundless blush, one white impurpled shower of mingled blossoms: where the raptured eye hurries from joy to joy." — Thompson.

thoughts that are written in that starry universe. The Geologist goes down and reads many thoughts in the rocky crust of the earth. The Botanist unveils the structures of flowers, and explains the actions and peculiarities of living plants; but all these things were written before he examined them. So with the Anatomist: he has discovered volumes of thought in this body which is fearfully and wonderfully made; but every thought was there before ever man looked within. This vast universe exhibits thoughts in every leaf and every grain of sand, in every drop of water, in the mountains and in the heavens. Whence came those thoughts?—Alex. Stewart.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND SIXTEENTH.

author unknown; date, after the restoration.

Thanksgiving.

1—4. (1) I love,[a] lit. "I love, because the Lord," etc., the first two words stand alone, as if the full heart needed not to express its object. Polychr., "I love to know that Jehovah hears the call of my supplications." (2) as .. live, lit. in my days.[b] (3) sorrows of death, "distresses no more to be escaped from than Hades." His case was hopeless. hell, Hades, the unseen world of spirits, not the place of punishment for the wicked. (4) called .. Lord, comp. prayer of Hezekiah. Is. xxxvii. 2, 3.[c]

Thanksgiving.—The whole psalm is the foundation of a remarkable hymn of thanksgiving by one Burkard Waldis. He was a monk who became a noted evangelist in Germany. After embracing the doctrines of the Reformation, he was seized by night, carried hundreds of miles from his home, and kept in severe imprisonment till rescued by his brothers, John and Bernhard, at cost of great danger and travail; and to them he dedicates this song, with others which he made in his captivity, as he says, To drive away the sad and weary thoughts and Satanic temptations with which he was assailed.—Ker.

5—8. (5) Gracious, etc.,[d] he extols God's mercy to him, and so leaves us to assume that he was healed and recovered. (6) simple, inoffensive, guileless, dependent. Comp. our Lord's requirement that His disciples should be as little children.[e] helped, R. V. "saved." (7) rest, that confidence in God. wh. the Psalmist habitually cherished, but wh. pain and peril had, for a time, disturbed. (8) death .. tears .. falling, gathering up all human calamities.[f]

The Soul's Rest (vs. 7).—I. In what sense is God the soul's rest? 1. Repose from doubt; 2. Refuge from fear; 3. Sufficiency in want; 4. The center of affection. II. When ought we to adopt this language? 1. When we feel inclined to depart from God; 2. When we have really backslidden from Him; 3. When we have received special benefits from Him.—M. W. Whythe.

Rest in God.—I say we need to get back to this old Hebrew directness of relation between God and man. But we never can do so through any conception of God which makes Him less than a personal Father in Heaven. If God is merely a law, a settled order, we may as well give up all thought of finding rest in that. The moment the personal God is taken away, and an abstract law substituted, we are robbed of prayer, of worship, of spiritual communion, of heavenly love, of faith, of thanksgiving,—of the whole range of moral affections and acts which must attach to the object of the soul's rest. A law has no wisdom, no foresight, no love. You cannot pray to a law; you cannot bow at the shrine of gravitation, nor sing praises to cohesion. Not until you get a person behind the law, can you look up to the heavens for justice or mercy, or send up petitions and thanksgivings from earth.—M. R. Vincent.

9—11. (9) I will walk, "unhurried and free from care." land of the living, to wh. the sick man felt himself restored.[a] (10) I believed, I have learned trust in God by painful experience. Polychr., "I was full of reliance," i. e. even while the affliction was going on he felt confident that God would come. therefore, etc., better, "For I must speak;" I must confess it; while afflicted I have been hasty, and despairing. (11) liars, hypocrites, "disappointing expectations."—Cheyne. In sense of failing those who trust in them; deceitful as a broken reed.[b]

Thanksgiving.

[a] Ps. xviii. 1.

[b] Is. xxxix. 8.

[c] A Jewish tradition refers this Ps. to Hezekiah. "This was a burial song of the early Church, looking through death to life, and in this way a companion to Psalm xvi." —Ker.

"The tongue was intended for a Divine organ, but the devil often plays upon it." — Jeremy Taylor.

[d] Ps. ciii. 8. cxi. 4, cxii. 4.

[e] Mat. v. 5, xi. 25. "In the Book of Prov. the term 'simple' is otherwise used, denoting the simplicity of one whose moral understanding is dwarfed."— Jennings and Lowe.

[f] Ps. lvi. 13. "As he that walketh in the sun careth not whether the moon shine or no, because he hath no need of her light; even so, when a man hath found the heavenly riches, he careth not for earthly riches."—Cawdray.

[a] Comp. Is. xxxviii. 18, 19; also Ps. xxvii. 13, lii. 5, lvi. 13.

[b] "He had looked to himself and there had seen nothing but weakness; he had looked to other men, and found them all

A Hasty Speech.—I. There was much truth in it. II. It erred on the right side, for it showed faith in God rather than in the creature. III. It did err in being too sweeping, too severe, too suspicious. IV. It was soon cured. The remedy for all such hasty speeches is—Get to work in the spirit of verse 12.—Spurgeon.

Hasty Thought.—Hasty thought is best kept as thought. It is not always clearly recognized that suggestions made to the mind are not sin. They may be made by circumstances, or made by our fellow-men, or made by the spirit of evil. So far as they only awaken thought in us, no sin has been committed; our will has not been concerned in the matter. There is no more than response to suggestion according to the ordinary working of mental laws. So far there is something which we cannot help. If left alone, it will soon pass away. Only that is kept in memory on which the attention is fixed. Passing thought passes into oblivion. And this is the best fate for such a hasty thought as this of the psalmist. Hasty thought does mischief when it gets into speech. So our Lord taught that the things which come out of a man defile him. It takes an act of will to give expression to a thought. That act of will makes the thought our own. If it is a bad thought, it must do a bad work by getting expression; for that expression starts bad thoughts in others. The psalmist's hasty word sowed the seed of mistrust, which spoils the relations of human society.—R. Tuck.

12—14. (12) render, as a fitting expression of gratitude and renewed trust. (13) cup of salvation, or deliverances, prob. only a poetical fig. for the portion allotted to man, whether prosperity or adversity. "I will accept the portion which God allots me." "Many see in the word an allusion to the cup passed round at the Paschal meal."[c] call upon, in praise and prayer. (14) I will, etc.,[d] perhaps this psalm was to be sung before a sacrifice."

A Return Demanded (vs. 2).—I. Consider God's benefits. 1. Creation; 2. Preservation; 3. Redemption. II. Consider the question. 1. His demands; 2. His justice; 3. Our sufficiency; 4. Our gracious ability.—W. W. Whythe.

Services Due to God.—We may use the words of Socrates to his scholar, who saw in the contemplation of nature only a proof of his own insignificance, and concluded "that the gods had no need of him," which drew this answer from the sage—"The greater the munificence they have shown in the care of thee, so much the more honor and service thou owest them."

Thankfulness and Murmuring.—

Some murmur when their sky is clear
And wholly brought to view,
If one small speck of dark appear
In their great heaven of blue;
And some with thankful love are filled
If but one streak of light,
One ray of God's good mercy, gild
The darkness of their night.

In palaces are hearts that ask,
In discontent and pride,
Why life is such a dreary task,
And all good things denied?
And hearts in poorest huts admire
How Love has in their aid (Love that never seems to tire)
Such rich provision made.—Abp. French.

15. Precious, weighty. "It is no light matter to Jehovah that His servants suffer and die."[a] death, to his saints, i. e. wh. is sent on His saints. He appoints to each one the day and circumstances of his death.

Anywhere the Place for a Christian to Die.—There is something that touches the imagination of people in the thought of a minister's dropping down dead in the pulpit; but I do not think I should be any nearer heaven if I died in my pulpit than if I died on my farm, or on a railroad car, or on a vessel at sea. Where the soldier is fighting his king's battle deceitful and treacherous as a broken reed."—Perowne.

Ro. iii. 4.

vs. 11. Commenting on this ver. a preacher once said, "Had David lived in this parish he might have said it at his leisure."

"Give not thy tongue too great a liberty, lest it take thee prisoner. A word unspoken is, like the sword in the scabbard, thine; if vented, thy sword is in another's hand. If thou desire to be held wise, be so wise as to hold thy tongue."—Quarles.

c Rashi's comment is, "I will bring the drink offerings for the thanksgivings which I vowed, according as it says, 'I will offer to Thee the sacrifice of thanksgiving.'" d Ps. lxvi. 13—15.

"Truth is the most powerful thing in the world, since fiction can only please by its resemblance to it."—Shaftesbury.

"That which we have we prize not to the worth
Whiles we enjoy it; but being lacked and lost,
Why then we rack the value, then we find
The virtue that possession would not give us While it was ours."—Shakespeare.

a "Babylas, Bishop of Antioch, in the Decian persecution, advanced cheerfully to death, singing these words."—Delitzsch.

"The apostolical constitutions recommend, among others, this verse to be sung at the funeral of the faithful."—Spk. Com.

Ps. lxxii. 14.

A tear dropped in the silence of a sick chamber often rings in heaven with a sound which belongs not to earthly trumpet or bells.

[b] 2 Ki. xx. 5; Is. xxxviii. 22.

"God! who is the Father of spirits, is the most tolerant. Man! who is the first of animals, is the most oppressive — yet he calls himself the shadow of the Almighty. Man becomes angry, and punishes for every little affront; God bears with all the insults and vices of man. Man pretends to admire the benign nature of the Deity; yet when he sees another imitate His clemency and good-nature, he calls him a fool. So much for man's consistency." — Jerdan.

"Men never make truths; they only recognize the value of this currency of God. They find truths as men sometimes find bills in the street, and only recognize the value of that which other parties have drawn."—Beecher.

—that is the place for him to die. Whatever his posture may be—whether he is standing with uplifted hand to smite the enemy, or is reclining for repose—that is the place. Put on the harness that God has given you, and walk up to your strength, and let the Master call you when He wants you. Work in the spirit of love, and hope, and faith, and trust. Know your immortality, and rejoice in it. Give your hand and your heart to the work which God's providence has appointed for you; and understand that that place is good enough to die in which is good enough to work in, and that that work is good enough to die on that is good enough to live on. I would not take away any sanctity from these higher states, but I would add sanctity to the lower elements of life.—H. W. Beecher.

16—19. (16) truly, i. e. "Even so, Lord, for," etc., entitled therefore to Divine favor. I am, i. e. I hereby devote myself, my restored life, afresh to Thee. son .. handmaid, as it were "a home-born slave." bonds, those of affliction. Free, the Psalmist felt longing desire to bind himself for ever to God. (17) sacrifice, etc., He. xiii. 15, 16. (18) pay, thank-offerings in payment of vows, as vs. 14. (19) In the courts, so making public acknowledgment of the Div. goodness; comp. action of Hezekiah.[b]

The Emphatic Profession (vs. 16).—I. The declaration of service. I am Thy servant—1. By election; 2. By choice; 3. By covenant; 4. By obligation. II. The recognition of the Divine claim. III. The celebration of Divine grace. Apply:—1. It is desirable to be a professed servant of God; 2. It is lamentable to be only a professed servant of God.—Stems and Twigs.

Glorious Riches of God.—Suppose your father had more oxen, and horses, and cattle than you could count over in a day, or in a week—would he not be able to take care of his child and give him everything he needs? Yes. But God has "cattle upon ten thousand hills," and "every beast of the forest" is his, and His are "all the fowls of the air." Can He not give you food from all these cattle, and clothe you, and give you beds from the feathers of all these fowls? Yes; He is able to do it all. Suppose your father was so rich that he had ten thousand men to work for him every day, all at work, and all paid to their mind, and all happy in working for him. Would you have any fears that he could not take care of you and do you good? But God has more servants than these. He has all the good people on earth in His employment, and all the angels in heaven. He pays them all. And if you need anything, He can send one or a million of these servants to you to help you.—J. Todd. Servants of God.—No one pretends that every man who is not an avowed servant of God is a defier of all moral obligation. No one denies that such often exhibit the loveliest moral traits; but the question is broader than this, and concerns the moral administration under which each man lives. An American citizen may go and live for years in Paris. He may speak the French language well, dress like those around him, and be, in no outward respect, distinguishable from a native Parisian; and yet he may acknowledge no allegiance to the French government. When a decisive issue arises which compels him to declare himself, you find him at the American minister's, under the protection of his own flag.—M. R. Vincent.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEENTH.

author unknown, date, after the restoration.

A Doxology.

1, 2. (1) nations, or Gentiles, see Ro. xv. 11.[a] praise him, R. V., "laud him." (2) merciful kindness, the more usual term is "loving-kindness." toward us, i. e. Israel.[b] truth, i. e. faithfulness to promises. endureth, Heb. more simply, "is for ever."

Praise.—There was a beautiful tradition among the Jews. It is to this effect. When God had created the world, He asked the angels what they thought of this work of His hands. One of them replied that it was so vast and so perfect that only one thing was wanting to it, namely, that there should be created a clear, mighty and harmonious voice, which should fill all the quarters of the world incessantly with the sweet sound, thus day and night to offer thanksgiving to its Maker for His

[a] Eph. iii. 5, 6.

[b] "An indication of those wider sympathies wh. appear to have manifested themselves after the exile."

—Perowne.

incomparable blessings. Thus our thanksgiving should not be an exercise of devotion practiced now and then. It should be incessant, the voice of a love which is ever living and fresh in our hearts.—F. W. Faber. Manifold Mercy.—As John Bunyan says, all the flowers in God's garden are double; there is no single mercy: nay, they are not only double flowers, but they are manifold flowers. There are many flowers upon one stalk, and many flowers in one flower. You shall think you have but one mercy; but you shall find it to be a whole flock of mercies. When you lay hold upon one golden link of the chain of grace, you pull, pull, pull; but lo! as long as your hand can draw there are fresh "linked sweetnesses" of love still to come. Manifold mercies! Like the drops of a lustre, which reflect a rainbow of colors when the sun is glittering upon them, and each one, when turned in different ways, from its prismatic form, shows all the varieties of color; so the mercy of God is one and yet many; the same, yet ever changing; a combination of all the beauties of love blended harmoniously together.—Spurgeon.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND EIGHTEENTH.

1—4. (1) Oh give thanks. the formula adopted on occasion of laying the foundation-stone of the second temple.[a] mercy, Heb. chesed, strictly, "gracious goodness." (2) Israel, the whole nation. If the Ps. was composed after the Exile, it is remarkable that the restored people should be called by the comprehensive term "Israel." (3) house of Aaron, the priestly class, regarded as religious leaders. (4) fear the Lord, the more pious among the people,. the proselytes at the gate.[b]

Psalm cxviii.—This is my psalm, my chosen psalm. I love them all; I love all holy Scripture, which is my consolation and my life. But this psalm is nearest my heart, and I have a peculiar right to call it mine. It has saved me from many a pressing danger, from which nor emperor, nor kings, nor sages, nor saints, could have saved me. It is my friend, dearer to me than all the honors and power of the earth. But it may be objected, that this psalm is common to all; no one has a right to call it his own. Yes; but Christ is also common to all, and yet Christ is mine. I am not jealous of my property; I would divide it with the whole world. And would to God that all men would claim the psalm as especially theirs! It would be the most touching quarrel, the most agreeable to God—a quarrel of union and perfect charity.—Luther.

5—9. (5) in distress, "from out of the straits into wh. I had come," prob. ref. to Babylonian captivity. and set me, or by setting me. This was Jehovah's answer. large place, open space in wh. I could breathe freely, contrasting with the "straits" he had been in. (6) on my side, Heb. "for me."[c] (7) help me, i. e. "as my helper:" as a helper Jehovah outweighs the greatest multitude of helpers.[d] (8) trust in, Polychr. "to flee to."[e] (9) princes, of other nations,[f] Ps. cxlvi. 3.

God for Us More than All against Us (vs. 6).—I. What is implied? 1. A sense of His care; 2. The enjoyment of His protection; 3. The feeling of His love. II. Why need we not fear? 1. He is wise; 2. He is mighty; 3. He is good; 4. He is faithful.—W. W. Whythe.

A Kingdom Shaken by a Miner's Son.—It is the 15th of April, 1521. On a day of spring the potentates of Europe are assembled in the great hall of a German town; bishops are there, and knights, and lords, and dukes, and ambassadors, and princes, in all their dignity and state, and there is the representative of the guilty splendor of the Papacy, and there above all is the still youthful emperor of all the world, the mighty autocrat of Germany, and Spain, and Italy, and of the Indies. Into the midst of them all is ushered a poor monk, son of a German miner. He has been reminded of the fate of John Huss, the great reformer of Bohemia. "Huss," he answers, "was burnt, but the truth was not burnt with him." He has been warned of his extreme peril. "The devil saw in my heart," he wrote, "that if there should be as many devils at Worms as tiles upon the house roofs, I should joyfully have plunged among them." In his poor mean garb of serge he enters the august

"The praise-times of religious life are precisely similar to those resting and refreshing times which we all value so much as relief from business strain."

Psalm 118.

author unknown.

date, later restoration.

A liturgical Psalm for a festival day.

[a] Ezr. iii. 11; comp. also 1 Chr. xvi. 34; 2 Chr. v. 13, vii. 3; Jer. xxxiii. 10, 11.

[b] Comp. Ps. cxv. 9—11.

"The Psalm falls into two divisions. The first half, vs. 1-19, is sung by the festive procession, which is led up by priests and Levites, and which goes up to the temple with sacrificial animals. With vs. 19 it stands at the entrance. The second half, vs. 20-27, is sung by the company of Levites, who receive the festive procession. Then vs. 28 is the answer of those who have arrived, and vs. 29 is the concluding song sung by them all."

—Delitzsch.

[c] Ps. lvi. 4—11.

[d] Ps. cxii. 8. Ps. liv. 4, 7.

[e] Ps. xxxiii. 16—19.

[f] The Jews had learnt by painful experience how little they could trust in princes, for the work which had been begun under Cyrus had been threatened under Cambyses, and had been suspended under the pseudo-Smerdis, and it was not till Darius came to the throne that they were allowed to resume it." —Perowne.

We lie to God in prayer if we do not rely upon him after prayer.—Swinnock.

"Great men's words, saith one, are like dead men's shoes; he may go barefoot that waiteth for them." — John Trapp.

"Faith is the true antidote against fear. Much fear, little faith: little faith, much fear."

and glittering assembly. A blunt old soldier, celebrated in the wars of that day, pats him on the back as he enters, and says, "Little monk, little monk, you need more courage for your battle to-day than any soldier of us all; but if you have God on your side, go on and fear not." That monk was Martin Luther, a name never to be mentioned without honor by all true sons of the Reformed Church. Pale and emaciated, he fronts them all; they may bend on him their sternest frowns; they may threaten him if they will with the dagger or the stake. "I may not and will not recant," he says, "because to act against conscience is unholy and unsafe; here I stand, I can do no other; God help me!" So, with a burst of tears, he ends. But what came of it? At that moment the Reformation was secured. "It is," says a modern writer, "the greatest moment in the modern history of man. Had Luther at that moment done other, it had all been otherwise." Yes, at that moment again goodness triumphed over evil, truth over falsehood, right over might.—Farrar.

10—13. (10) All nations, the surrounding tribes, wh. sadly harrassed the returned exiles.[a] compassed, "the repetition of this word four times marked their close and pertinacious hostility." destroy them, R. V., "cut them off." (11) yea, this repetition expresses deep and anxious feeling. (12) like bees, "in vast numbers and with intense energy, and furious desire to injure."—Pul. Com. De. i. 44. fire of thorns, wh. blazes furiously, but is easily and suddenly extinguished.[b] (13) Thou, "an apostrophe to the enemy here addressed as an individual."

Attacked by Bees.—Now, as the northeast wind was of course adverse to any northeast progress, it was necessary that the boat should be towed by the crew. As the rope was being drawn along through the grass on the banks it happened that it disturbed a swarm of bees. In a moment, like a great cloud, they burst upon the men who were dragging; everyone of them threw himself headlong into the water and hurried to regain the boat. The swarm followed at their heels, and in a few seconds filled every nook and cranny of the deck. What a scene of confusion ensued may readily be imagined. Without any foreboding of ill, I heard all around me a scampering which I took at first to be merely the frolics of my people. I called out to enquire the meaning of the noise, but only got excited gestures and reproachful looks in answer. The cry of "Bees! bees!" soon broke upon my ear, and I proceeded to light a pipe. My attempt was entirely in vain; in an instant bees in thousands are about me, and I am mercilessly stung all over my face and hands. To no purpose do I try to protect my face with a handkerchief, and the more violently I fling my hands about, so much the more violent becomes the impetuosity of the irritated insects. The maddening pain is now on my cheek, now in my eye, now in my hair. Losing well nigh all control over myself, I fling myself into the river; I dive down, but all in vain, for the stings rain down still upon my head. I am compelled to go back on board, and flight is not to be thought of. . . . I felt ready, in the evening, for an encounter with half a score of buffaloes or a brace of lions rather than have anything more to do with bees; and this was a sentiment in which all the ship's company heartily concurred.—George Schweinfurth.

14—17. (14) strength . . salvation, Ex. xv. 2. (15) tabernacles, R. V., "tents," or private dwellings.[a] valiantly, lit, "achieves strength." (16) right, etc., this repetition was prob. a response from the people. (17) I shall not die, the outbreak of personal feeling in a liturgical Psalm leads us to suppose there was a solo-leader and recurring chorus. Or prechance "the psalmist speaks not in his own person, but in the name of his nation."—Pul. Com.

Wicliffe and the Friars.—Wicliffe was now getting old, but the Reformer was worn out rather by harassing attacks of his foes, and his incessant and ever-growing labors, than with the weight of years, for he was not yet sixty. He fell sick. With unbounded joy the friars heard that their great enemy was dying. Of course he was overwhelmed with horror and remorse for the evil he had done them, and they would hasten to his bedside and receive the expression of his penitence and sorrow. In a trice a little crowd of shaven crowns assembled round the couch of the sick man—delegates from the four orders of the friars.

[a] "Comp. Ezr. iv. 10, where, after a long list of hostile tribes environing Jerusalem, the historian adds, 'the rest of the nations whom the great and noble Asnapper,' etc." —Wordsworth.

[b] "Thorn bushes, in the East, are destroyed in the cultivated fields by fire in the heat of summer. The fire quickly spreads everywhere, but soon dies out, and the bushes are reduced to ashes."

—Knapp.

"The great Spanish poet, Calderon, tells of one who wore a heavy suit of armor for a whole year, and laid it by for one hour, and in that hour the enemy came, and the man paid for his negligence with his life."—John Neale.

[a] "We can imagine with what special force the words would come to those who then were, or had but recently been, keeping their feast of tabernacles, and rejoicing in the great deliverance wh. God had given them." — Plumptre.

"Verse 15, used to be quoted by Philip Henry in

"They began fair," wishing him "health and restoration from his distemper;" but speedily changing their tone, they exhorted him, as one on the brink of the grave, to make full confession, and express his unfeigned grief for the injuries he had inflicted on their order. Wicliffe lay silent till they should have made an end, then, making his servant raise him a little on his pillow, and fixing his keen eyes upon them, he said, with a loud voice, "I shall not die, but live, and declare the evil deeds of the friars." The monks rushed in astonishment and confusion from the chamber.—J. A. Wylie.

18—21. (18) chastened, for correction.[a] By the sufferings of the Exile. (19) Open .. gates, Ps. xxiv. 7. The gates of the temple are referred to, which the delivered and restored desire to enter, that they might praise the Lord. (20) This gate,[b] Polychr. "This is the gate .. wherethrough," etc., before wh. the procession was standing, waiting for its opening. (21) thee, bec. fully recognizing the Div. hand in deliverance.

Unchanging Gratitude.—When the Caliph Haroun al Raschid had put to death his Vizier, Jaffier Bermekee, he ordered that none should speak in praise of the latter under pain of death. One old Arab continued to declare the merits of the late minister. He was summoned into the monarch's presence, and asked how he dared to transgress. "I should have been a monster of ingratitude had I not," said the Arab, and then proceeded to relate how Jaffier had taken notice of him, and at length raised him from poverty and obscurity to position and affluence, "I owe it all to him," he continued, "and was it possible for me to be deterred by death itself from doing justice to his memory?" Struck with the courage and fidelity of the man the Caliph sought to gain his admiration by more splendid generosity than that of the Vizier, and presented him with his golden sceptre, studded with precious jewels. "I take it," cried the grateful but undaunted Arab, "but this also, Commander of the Faithful, is from Bermekee!"—Foster Cyc. of Illus.

22, 23. (22) stone, etc.,[c] "an emblem of the might and dignity, to which Israel, now gathered again round the temple as its national centre, has attained out of its deep humiliation among the peoples of the world." Delitzsch. (23) This, viz., the exaltation of the Jewish nation.

The Corner-Stone.—I. Christ rejected. II. Christ exalted. III. His exaltation is due to God alone. IV. His exaltation commences a new era. V. His exaltation suggests a new prayer.—Spurgeon.

The Corner-Stone.—The idea of the corner-stone, repeatedly alluded to in the Scriptures, is not to be taken from the science of modern or of classical architecture, but from the practice of building in remote and ruder ages. Imagine a massive stone, like those at Stonehenge or Abury, cut to a right angle, and laid in the building so that its two sides should lie along the two walls, which meet at a corner, and thus binding them together in such a way that neither force nor weather could dissever them. The term does not necessarily signify that it would be put at the top of the building; it only necessitates the idea of a very important position, which it would have if it lay a few courses above the lowest, so as to act by its weight on those below, and to serve as a renewed basis to those above. "The stone which the builders have thrown away is made to be the corner-stone."—Smith. The Stone Which the Builders Refused.—The primary and literal meaning seems to be—"Israel, which the great of the world, those who think to arrange the world according to their own ideas, have rejected and would fain have cast aside, has, nevertheless, despite their rejection, attained to eminence, and been advanced, by the course of events, into such a position, that it may be regarded as the head corner-stone—the most important of all the nations of the world." Any Messianic reference is secondary and subordinate.—Pul. Com.

24, 25. (24) made, or brought about. "Referring to the happier times which Israel, through God's grace was permitted to enjoy. There is no direct allusion to the weekly Sabbath."—Alexander. (25) Save, Heb. Hosanna, i. e. "Save, I pray." prosperity, Israel feels its constant dependence upon God, and that if the Divine care were remitted for a day all would be lost. As Prof. Cheyne observes—Tears continually mingle with Israel's laughter.

commendation of family worship, with the remark that 'it is a way to hold forth godliness, like Rahab's scarlet thread, to such as pass by our windows."
—Ker.
Is. xxxviii. 19; Ro. xiv. 8.

[a] He. xii. 5—8.

[b] "The gate of the Israelites was upon the east side of the outer vestibule."—Spk. Com. "With an immovable fidelity to conscience, Donald Cargill had a tender nature, and gave himself to comfort his fellow-sufferers. In a letter to one before execution, he says, 'Farewell, dearest friend, never to see one another any more till at the right hand of Christ. Fear not, and the God of mercies grant a full gale, and a fair entry into his kingdom, which may carry sweetly and swiftly over the bar, that you find not the rub of death.' "
—Ker.

[c] "The fig. is borrowed from the lately completed work of building. The head corner-stone is important, as that wh. unites two walls and supports the roof. It may poss. have been the custom to render this stone conspicuous with carving and decorations."—Jennings and Lowe. "Christ Jesus is a stone: no firmness, but in him. A fundamental stone: no building, but on him. A corner stone; no piecing nor reconciliation, but in him."—James Ford.
Mat. xxi. 42; Mk. xii. 10; Lu. xx. 17; Ac. iv. 11; Eph. ii. 20; 1 Pe. ii. 4, 7.

"If Sunday had not been observed as a day of rest during the last three centuries, I have not the smallest doubt that we should have been at this moment a poorer and less civilized people than we are."—Lord Macaulay.

"The Lord's-day. Stations on the line of your journey are not your journey's end, but each one brings you nearer. Such are our Lord's-days." — Pulsford.

Joy in the Sabbath.—There, for instance, is the question of Sabbath observance. You find persons who challenge its claim to be a day of religious worship and instruction. "It is a day of rest," they say. "Why should we mew ourselves up in church? Why should our thoughts be forced into religious channels? Why should we not spend the day in amusement?" A Sabbath thus observed under protest could scarcely be profitable; but that matter apart, the question is settled for a prepared heart by never being raised. When you have a holiday, you generally spend it in doing the thing most congenial to you. You hunt, or fish, or read, as you please. And similarly if God is a man's best friend, if his heart is charged with love to God, the day which relieves him from the distracting cares of business, will find him not only ready but eager to meet the Lord in the sanctuary. The opportunity of dwelling on the congenial truths of revelation will be eagerly embraced. It will not be a question of duty at all, but a leaping of the heart for very joy as it moves into the green pastures of the word. Such an one will rest, but he will rest in the Lord. A friend once said to me, "When I was a boy in my father's house, and we were singing at family worship or at other times, the chords of the piano, though no one struck the keys, would often vibrate so strongly as to startle us all. Only, if we happened to sing a little off the key—a little too high or too low—the instrument would be mute." And the ordinances of God's house—worship, praise, preaching, sacraments—are a good deal like that piano. If the heart is prepared, if the life is set in the key of love and faith, these things will respond most harmoniously and mightily.—M. R. Vincent.

26—29. (26) cometh .. Lord, "Blessed is he who enters into his sanctuary under the guardianship of Jehovah."[a] Thus the priests and Levites upon the temple-hill greet the advancing procession of worshipers. we have blessed, poss. the priestly response. (27) shewed us light, of grace, freedom and joy; Ps. iv. 6. bind, etc., Polychr., "Bind the festival with ropes;" the sacrifices appear on the occasion to have been so many that they were tied up all over the priests' court, right up to the horns of the altar.—Delitzsch. (28) my God, made the object of personal trust. Comp. Ex. xv. 2. (29) give thanks, as vs. 1.

[a] See the Hosanna to Jesus, Mat. xxi. 9.

"The altar in Herod's temple had, according to the Mishna, a number of brazen rings on the north side, to wh. the animals were secured." —Jennings and Lowe.

"Decorate the festival with leafy boughs, even up to the horns of the altar." — So trans. Luther, Tholuck, etc.

"Unto the hornes, i.e. all the court over until you come even to the hornes of the altar, intending hereby many sacrifices or boughs." —Ainsworth.

The Song and the Sacrifice of Gratitude (vs. 27).—I. The blessings acknowledged. 1. Saving knowledge is light; 2. Joy, comfort, happiness, are light; 3. Providential mercies are light; 4. Prospects of future glory are light. II. The consecration required. 1. There is a call to personal dedication; 2. An appeal for self-denying offerings to the cause of God.

Extolling the Lord.—This "extolling the Lord" will accomplish one of the great ends of praise, viz., his exaltation. It is true that God both can and will exalt himself, but it is at once the duty and the privilege of his people to exalt him. His name should be upborne and magnified by them; the glory of that name is now, as it were, committed to them; what use are we making of the opportunity and the privilege?—Philip Bennet Power.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND NINETEENTH.

author,— unknown: date, prob. late after the restoration.

Praise of the law of God.

An alphabetical Psalm.

1—4. (1) undefiled, perfect, in the sense of sincere.[a] way, of the revealed will of God. walk, order their conduct and conversation. law, Heb. thorah, the whole code of God's revealed will. (2) testimonies, Ps. lxxviii. 5. "God's commands, considered as witnesses of his character and as attesting his will." whole heart, "an expression characteristic of this Ps., vss. 10, 34, 58, 69, 145." (3) no iniquity, they do not wilfully wander aside from His ways. (4) precepts,[b] "instructions given to men to direct their conduct;" Ne. ix. 14. diligently, with strict attention and constancy.

[a] Re. iii. 4.

[b] Fr. Lat. prace i pere, to take beforehand, to instruct. Applied esp. to a command respecting moral conduct.

The Best Pursuit (vs. 2).—I. The pursuit specified. 1. The object proposed; 2. The conduct described. II. The obedience required. 1. It must be regulated by His Word; 2. It must be conformable to His will. III. The happiness enjoyed. 1. They have enjoyments; 2. They have blessed anticipations.—Eta in 400 Sks.

A Precious Psalm.—It is strange that of all the pieces of the Bible which my mother taught me, that which cost me most to learn, and which was to my child's mind most repulsive, the 119th Psalm, has now become, of all, the most precious to me in its overflowing and glorious passion of love for the law of God.—Ruskin.

The Blessed.—

In this dim world of clouding cares
We rarely know, till 'wildered eyes
See white wings lessening up the skies,
The angels with us unawares.—Gerald Massey.

5—8. (5) O that, the fervent expression of the heart's desire. "The goal towards which the poet is directing his steps." directed, or firmly fixed, R. V. "established."[c] statutes, properly applied to public law. (6) ashamed, by being disappointed of Thy promises to the upright and obedient.[d] (7) learned, by sanctified experiences. judgments,[e] "judicial decisions by act or word against particular lines of conduct." (8) utterly, "lest losing Divine strength I fall."

Laziness in Bible Reading.—The following confession and prayer, by Rev. Dr. Thomas Fuller, it is to be feared covers the case of many others besides himself: "Lord, I discover an arrant laziness in my soul. For when I am to read a chapter in the Bible, before I begin it, I look where it endeth; and if it endeth not on the same side, I cannot keep my hand from turning over the leaf, to measure the length thereof on the other side; if it swell to many verses I begin to grudge. Surely my heart is not rightly affected. Were I truly hungry after heavenly food, I would not complain of meat. Scourge, Lord, this laziness of soul. Make the reading of Thy Word not a penance but a pleasure upon me. Teach me, that as among heaps of gold, all equally pure, that is best which is the biggest, so I may esteem that chapter in Thy Word the best which is the longest."

9—12. (9) young man, who is specially exposed to temptation, and in whom principle is scarcely established. "Youthful purity can only be preserved by those who from early years take God's word for their guide." taking heed, or keeping watch on himself.[a] (10) wander, stray, step aside, either in ignorance, or in wilfulness. Man's watchfulness is insufficient, it must be embraced in a Div. watchfulness of him, and for Him. (11) word, Polychr. "bidding." God's actual spoken or written utterances. hid, so as to make a personal and jealously guarded treasure, "no merely outward rule of conduct, but a power and a life within." —Perowne. (12) Blessed, etc., the glowing desire to obey filling the soul of the Psalmist with holy joy in God.[b] statutes, "enactments of God as legislator, but not confined to the written Law."

Cleansing.—In the word of God, when applied to the heart by the Spirit of God, there is, I. A sufficiency of light to discover to men the need of cleansing their way. II. Sufficiency of energy for the cleansing their way. III. A sufficiency of pleasure to encourage them to choose to cleanse their way. IV. A sufficiency of support to sustain them in their cleansed way.—Theophilus Jones.

The Way.—A way has a direction, and leads some whither. A way is continuous, and if we are in it we are advancing in it. A way differs in its direction from other ways, and diverges more and more from them the farther one travels upon it. There are in our lives no isolated acts, but only ways. Every present has its closely affiliated future. We are moving on in character as in years. The wrong of which you say, "Only this once," provokes its own repetition and starts you in its own direction. The violation of truth, etc., involves you in a labyrinth of mole paths. You meant an act, you have found it a way; a precipitous way, too, in which you gain momentum at every step.—Peabody. Dr. Franklin.—At the time when the celebrated Dr. Franklin lay upon his death-bed, he was visited by a young man who had a great respect for his judgment in all things; and having entertained doubts as to the truth of the Scriptures, he thought that this awful period afforded a suitable opportunity of consulting the doctor on this important subject. Accordingly, he introduced it in a solemn and weighty manner, inquiring of Franklin what were his sentiments as to the truth of the Scriptures. On the question being put, although he was in a very weak state, and near his decease, he

"They are blessed who are in the way, not a way, any chance or uncertain road, but 'the King's Highway;' that path which the Lord himself has declared to us, saying, 'I am the way.' "—Hilary and Theodoret.

c Ro. vii. 19—23.

d "Put to shame, my hope being frustrated. This is the shame meant, not shame of conscience in comparing a man's life with the requirements of the law." — Perowne.

e Utterances, beyond the written law, made by a judge or lawgiver. See Ex. xxi. 1, xxiv. 3; Le. xviii. 4, 5. "A page digested is better than a volume hurriedly read." — Macaulay.

a "By keeping his eye fixed on Thy Word, and by framing his life according to it; as a careful pilot, 'his eye to heaven, his hand on the helm.' " —Wordsworth.

b Comp. Ps. xxv. 8.

"A poor prisoner, being confined in a dark dungeon, had no light, except for a few moments when his food was brought him; he used to take his Bible and read a chapter, saying he could find his mouth in the dark, when he could not read."

"Galen, the celebrated physician of Rome, when studying anatomy, was so struck with the perfection and exquisite mechanism of the human hand and arm, that he composed a hymn to the Deity, expressing his admiration of so excellent a work, and his adoration of the God who made it."

c De. vi. 7.

d Pr. ii. 4, iii. 13, 15, viii. 10, 11, 19, xvi. 16, xxii. 1.

"For solitude sometimes is best society."—Milton.

"Reflection is a flower of the mind, giving out wholesome fragrance; but reverie is the same flower when rank and running to seed."—Tupper.

a Re. iii. 18.

b "Things hidden, it may be, under the letter, and concealed, except from those whose eyes are opened of God."
—Spk. Com.

c "Bp. Taylor speaks somewhere of 'the violence of the desire bursting itself with its fulness into dissolution."
—Perowne.

"The man who has studied the Bible for fifty years, the wise men and the scholars, the great theologians, have never got down to the depths of it yet. There are truths that the Church of God has been searching out for the last 1800 years, but has not yet fathomed the depths of that ever-living stream."
—D. L. Moody.

a Da. vi. 4, 11. "As year by year the tree adds another ring to its circumference, so every age has added to the testimony of the truth of the Bible."
—Guthrie.

replied, "Young man, my advice to you is, that you cultivate an acquaintance with, and a firm belief in, the Holy Scriptures: this is your certain interest."

13—16. (13) my lips, Polychr. "With my lips I recount all the injunctions of," etc., medium for commending God's law to others.[c] (14) all riches, all manner of riches.[d] (15) meditate, Ps. civ. 34. ways, "the paths of life marked out by Thy law." (16) delight myself, actually find my chief pleasure in.

Religious Meditation (vs. 15).—I. We ought to meditate on the things of God, because we thus get the real nutriment out of them. II. We are not supported physically by merely taking food into our mouth, but by processes of digestion. III. The reason many make so little progress in Divine things is because they neglect this.—Spurgeon.

The Uses of Meditation (vs. 15).—Meditation: it is in this way one of the greatest of English engineers, a man uncouth and unaccustomed to regular discipline of mind, is said to have accomplished his most marvellous triumphs. He threw bridges over almost impracticable torrents, and pierced the eternal mountains for his viaduct. Sometimes a difficulty brought all the work to a pause; then he would shut himself up in his room, eat nothing, speak to no one, abandon himself intensely to the contemplation of that on which his heart was set; and at the end of two or three days would come forth serene and calm, walk to the spot, and quietly give orders which seemed the result of superhuman intuition. This was meditation.—F. W. Robertson.

17—20. (17) may live, "give me the blessing of a long life, that so my keeping of thy Word may be long." and keep, or, so will I keep; if I live, I will. (18) Open, etc.,[a] the Psalmist evidently realizes that the best things in the Div. Word are only "spiritually discerned."[b] (19) stranger, R. V. "sojourner," having no experience, or knowledge of the world, so needing the constant guidance of Div. law. (20) breaketh, with vehement desire, lit. "is broken small, is crushed."[c]

Wondrous Things.—There are promises in God's word that no man has ever tried to find. There are treasures of gold and silver in it that no man has taken the pains to dig for. There are medicines in it for the want of a knowledge of which hundreds have died. It seems to me like some old baronial estate that has descended to a man who lives in a modern house, and thinks it scarcely worth while to go and look into the venerable mansion. Year after year passes away and he pays no attention to it, since he has no suspicion of the valuable treasures it contains, till, at last, some man says to him, "Have you been up in the country to look at that estate?" He makes up his mind that he will take a look at it. As he goes through the porch he is surprised to see the skill that has been displayed in its construction: he is more and more surprised as he goes through the halls. He enters a large room, and is astonished as he beholds the wealth of pictures on the walls, among which are portraits of many of his revered ancestors. He stands in amazement before them. There is a Titian, there a Raphael, there is a Correggio, and there is a Giorgione. He says, "I never had any idea of these before." "Ah," says the steward, "there is many another thing that you know nothing about in the castle," and he takes him from room to room and shows carved plate, and wonderful statues, and the man exclaims, "Here I have been for a score of years the owner of this estate, and have never before known what things were in it." But no architect ever conceived of such an estate as God's word, and no artist, or carver, or sculptor, ever conceived of such pictures, and carved dishes, and statues as adorn its apartments. It contains treasures that silver, and gold, and precious stones are not to be mentioned with.—H. W. Beecher.

21—24. (21) rebuked, by judgments, Polychr. "Thou threatenest .. arrogant." Rend. the second clause, "They that do err from Thy commandments are accursed." the proud, opponents of the strict worship of Jehovah are meant—those who calumniate (vss. 69, 78) and (vs. 122) oppress the speaker, and both transgress and mock at God's law (vss. 21, 51, 85). Some of the expressions used point especially to apostate Jews. —Cheyne. (22) reproach, etc., these came to the man steadfast in obeying God's law, then as now. Shame is treated as a cloak or mantle covering the person; or a burden to be rolled away. (23) sit and speak,[a] taking counsel together against him. (24) my counsellors, Heb. "men of my counsel;" hence there is no perplexity, be the way ever so trying or dangerous.

Hints as to the Author of the 119th Psalm.—The vss. that seem to afford autobiographical material are 51, 61, 69, 85, 110, 150, 157, 158, which show that he was an adherent of the strict party in Jerusalem; 53 and 139 which show his violent hostility to those who forsook God's law. That he was not young is seen from vss. 9, 84—87, and the temper of the psalm; that he was tried and apparently imprisoned, and even forsaken by those whom he had thought faithful appears from 23, 24, 46, [78], 161, [169], and 176.—W. E. Barton.

25—28. (25) cleaveth, Ps. xlv. 25. The grovelling posture was taken in extreme affliction. Job sat in ashes. In grief dust was thrown on the head. quicken, i. e. restore to vigorous life and health. (26) declared,[b] I have opened my griefs to thee and thou didst listen to me. (27) understand,[c] comp. vs. 18. talk, R. V. "meditate." (28) melteth,[d] Heb. droppeth; so to speak, "weeps itself away." according, etc., i. e. thy promise to help thy faithful ones.

Cleaveth.—Our soul is a polypus: as a polypus readily adheres to the rocks, so does the soul cleave to the earth; and hardly can it be torn from the place to which it has once strongly attached itself. Though thy soul be now more perfect, and escaping from the waters of sin has become a bird of heaven, be not careless; earthly things are birdlime and glue; if thou rubbest the wings against these thou wilt be held, and joined to the earth.—Thomas Le Blanc.

29—32. (29) way of lying, of every kind of error and deception, or strictly of "unfaithfulness" to God's law and covenant. God's way is "the way of truth." thy law, i. e. "graciously impart thy law unto me," by a divine illumination. (30) chosen, indicating the set purpose of the heart. truth, R. V. "faithfulness." (31) stuck, in orig. same word as in vs. 25 trans. "cleaveth," ref. not to perfectness, but to sincerity of intention. (32) run,[a] indicating more earnestness than the "walk" of vs. 1. enlarge my heart, expand it with a sense of freedom and holy joy. Polychr. "For Thou givest me a heart that is willing."

33—36. (33) the end, of my life, or "to the uttermost." Polychr. "steadfastly." (34) and I shall, better, "that I may," i. e. failure to keep the law is in his case fr. lack of wisdom, not of will. observe it,[b] another word for keep it, or obey it. (35) Make me to go, for with the inward purpose, we still need also inward strength, and renewed gracious Div. impulses. (36) covetousness, or robbery: possibly some special temptation had assailed the Psalmist. Perhaps used in the more general sense of "sensuality," often accompanying idolatry. Polychr. "lucre."

Teach Me, O Lord.—"He who is his own pupil," remarks S. Bernard, "has a fool for his master." A soldier who enters on a march does not settle for himself the order of his going, nor begin the journey at his own will, nor yet choose pleasant short-cuts, lest he should fall out of rank, away from the standards, but gets the route from his general, and keeps to it; advances in a prescribed order, walks armed, and goes straight on to the end of his march, to find there the supplies provided by the commissariat. If he goes by any other road, he gets no rations, and finds no quarters ready, because the general's orders are that all things of this kind shall be prepared for those who follow him, and turn not aside to the right hand or the left. And thus he who follows his general does not break down, and that for good reasons; for the general consults not for his own convenience, but for the capability of his whole army. And this, too, is Christ's order of march, as he leads his great host out of the spiritual Egypt to the eternal Land of Paradise.—Ambrose.

37—40. (37) Turn away, or aid me to turn aside from.[a] vanity, the usual term for idols, and idolatry. (38) Stablish, fulfill thy promise. who, R. V. "Which belongeth unto the fear of thee."[b] (39) reproach, of having sinned against Thee, and fallen fr. Thy commandments. for thy judgments are good, right in themselves, and conducive to man's happiness. (40) in thy righteousness, better, according to Thy righteousness, wh. surely leads to the answering of prayer.

"Proud men never have friends not in prosperity, because they know nobody; not in adversity, because then nobody knows them."
—Whitecross.

[b] Ps. xxxiii. 3, 5.

[c] Ps. lxxi. 17, 18, cxlv. 5, 6.

[d] Ps. xxii. 14.

"The more faithfully I apply myself to the duties of the Lord's-day, the more happy and successful is my business during the week."—Sir Matthew Hale.

[a] 1 Cor. ix. 24.

Let us see that eating Him, and drinking Him, coming to Him, and believing on Him, are all the same thing."
—Allestry.

"Narrow is the way unto life, but no man can run in it save with widened heart." — Prosper, of Aquitaine.

It was the remark of Cowper that "the color of our whole life is generally such as the three or four first years in which we are our own masters make it." A very important thought for those just starting in the race of life.

[b] De. v. 32.

[c] "Why there is mention of this sin one cannot tell; poss. the afflicted writer had been tempted by bribes to act contrary to his principles."
—Jennings and Lowe.

[a] Job xxxi. 26, 27; Is. xxxiii. 15.

[b] "Stablish Thy word in Thy servant, that I may fear Thee."—Pr. Bk. Vers.

"Stablish Thy word, . . . which tends to the fearing of Thee."—So apparently LXX.

"Vice is a monster of so frightful mien, as to be hated, needs but to be seen; yet seen too oft, familiar with her face, we first endure, then pity, then embrace."—Pope. But Dryden says, "For truth has such a face and such a mien, as to be loved needs only to be seen."

"We never, in the whole course of our recollections, met with a Christian friend who bore upon his character every other evidence of the Spirit's influence who did not remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy."—Chalmers.

"It is related of Beza, one of the Reformers, that when he was old, and could not recollect the names of persons and things he had heard but a few minutes before, he could remember and repeat the Epistles of St. Paul, which he had committed to memory when he was young."

[a] "Where there is nothing to check or hinder freedom of action."
—Perowne.

[b] Ps. xxviii. 2, lxiii. 4, cxxxiv. 2, cxli. 2.

"Literature is the immortality of speech."
—Shlegel.

"An apt quotation is as good as an original remark."
—Proverb.

"I will speak of thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed,'

Spiritual Quickening.—I was questioning my spiritual life, I who have so long been a preacher to others. I entered a little rustic assembly. An unlettered man preached the gospel, he preached it heartily; my tears began to flow; my soul leaped at the very sound of the Word of the Lord. What a comfort it was to me! How frequently have I thought of it since! The Word did revive me; my heart was not dead to its influence; I was one of those happy people who know the joyful sound. Assurance was bright in my soul,—the Word had quickened me. —Spurgeon. Relapsing Into Sin (vs. 37).—St. Augustine tells of a young man who had been for some time under his own instruction. The youth had been extravagantly addicted to attendance on the Circensian games. An allusion to the impropriety of these amusements occurring one day in Augustine's expositions, he was convinced of his sinful propensity, and abandoned these pleasures. After some time he proceeded to Rome, and having been invited by his friends to come and see the shows of the gladiators, he declined. His friends rallied him, but still he would not come. Then they took him by force to the amphitheatre; but the young man, still resolute and determined, would not suffer himself thus to be brought into bondage. They might compel his body, but could not compel his spirit; so he sat with closed eyes, that he should not be tempted by the scenes before him. Suddenly the whole house rang again with plaudits loud and long. Thereupon, as it were by an instinct, or being overcome by curiosity, he opened his eyes. The whole scene filled his mind with admiration. There he beheld the relative position of the gladiators: one bleeding on the dust of the arena, the other waving his uplifted hand in the joyful enthusiasm of a conqueror, and receiving the applause of every voice and hand. The young man became interested in the scene; he looked, and gazed, and shouted; he grew warm in his enthusiasm, became inflamed; his pulse beat high with feverish excitement, and he went away enamored of the sport, and worse than his seducers; and afterwards inclined the feet of others to like sinful pleasures.

41—44. (41) salvation, needed as deliverance from the daily power of sin, and the forgiveness of daily failures. word, lit. "promise." (42) have wherewith, even the assurance of Thy mercies to me. (43) word of truth, i. e. "of testimony for the truth." Give me the ability loyally to testify for thy truth. utterly, or far off; vs. 8. hoped, etc., trusted God to vindicate his character. (44) ever and ever, limited only by life.

Heaven Begun Below.—I. The present life of the believer—keeping God's law. II. The continual care of the believer—to keep God's law. III. The eternal prospect of the believer—keeping God's law for ever and ever.—C. A. Davis.

The Bible.—When Naimbana, a black prince, arrived in England from the neighborhood of Sierra Leone, the gentleman to whose care he was entrusted, took great pains to convince him that the Bible was the Word of God, and he received it as such with great reverence and simplicity. When asked what it was that satisfied him on this subject, he replied: "When I found all good men minding the Bible, and calling it the Word of God, and all bad men disregarding it, I then was sure that the Bible must be what good men call it, the Word of God."—Moister.

45—48. (45) at liberty, Heb. "in a broad place;" free from constraint and intimidation.[a] God's service is perfect freedom. (46) before kings, words suitable to Ezra or Nehemiah. "The viceroys of the Persian kings may be alluded to." (47) delight myself, as vs. 16. (48) hands . . lift up, in the attitude of fervent supplication.[b]

Commandments.—I. God's commandments loved. We love the law when we love the Lawgiver. We love his will only when our hearts are reconciled and renewed. Hence the need of spiritual renewal. II. God's commandments the subject of prayer: "My hands also will I lift up." Perowne says, "The expression denotes the act of prayer." We may pray for a fuller knowledge, a deeper experience, a readier and more perfect obedience. III. A theme for meditation. Amidst the hurry of outward activities we must not forget the need of quiet meditation.—H. Wilkins.

True Religion.—There is no true religion without that longing for unbroken conformity with the manifest will of God. Whoever makes that his deepest desire, and seeks after God's precepts, will "walk at liberty," or at large, for restraints that are loved are not bonds, and freedom consists not in doing as I would, but in willing to do as I ought. Strong in such emancipation from the hindrances of one's own passions, and triumphant over external circumstances which may mould, but not dominate, a God-obeying life, the psalmist would fain open his mouth unabashed before rulers.—Exp. B.

49—52. (49) the word, some special promise seems to be referred to. This promise had roused him to new courage and hope. upon .. caused, R. V. "Because thou hast made." (50) comfort,[c] Heb. nechamah, whence the name Nehemiah is derived. (51) proud, or those who scoff at me.[d] Comp. for connection of pride and irreligious scoffing, Pr. xxi. 24. Polychr. "The arrogant one flouting me sore; yet do I not swerve from Thy Law. (52) judgments, vs. 7.[e] God's revealed law, wh. is ever true, and ever in force.

Fidelity in the Face of Contempt. I. The proud deride the believer's subjection to God's law. II. They ridicule the believer's delight in God's service. III. They are met by the believer's resolution to cleave to God. 2 Sam. vi. 20, 22.—C. A. Davis.

The Quickening of the Word.—What energy a text will breathe into a man! There is more in one divine sentence than in huge folios of human composition. There are tinctures of which one drop is more powerful than large doses of the common dilutions. The Bible is the essence of truth; it is the mind of God, the wisdom of the Eternal. By every word of God men are made to live, and are kept in life. "Speak to me now in Scripture language alone," said a dying Christian. "I can trust the words of God; but when they are the words of man, it costs me an effort to think whether I may trust to them."—Spurgeon.

53—56. (53) Horror, LXX. renders, depression.[a] Better, "burning indignation." (54) my songs,[b] giving such satisfaction and peace that they inspired songs; were the theme of songs. pilgrimage, or sojourning, as vs. 9. "In the house of his pilgrimage God's statutes refresh him spiritually, sweeten the toils of his wandering life, and measure and quicken his steps."—Delitzsch. (55) in the night, both the actual night, and the night-time of doubting and fear. (56) this, "this has been (vouchsafed) to me, this has been my reward, that I have kept thy precepts," i. e. such has been the gift of thy grace.—Perowne.

Songs on the March (vs.54).—I. This world is to the Christian the house of his pilgrimage. 1. It is not his home; 2. While in it liable to change; 3. Will soon quit it. II. In the house of his pilgrimage the Christian has songs. They may be—1. Festive; 2. Social; 3. Patriotic; 4. Martial; 5. Plaintive. III. The Christian's songs in the house of his pilgrimage are drawn from the Bible. 1. Their matter; 2. Their music; melody in the heart. Apply:—(1) Be pilgrims; (2) Be cheerful pilgrims: (3) Prize the Bible; (4) We shall presently sing the new song.—G. Brooks.

Songs.—When the Eastern traveler takes shelter from the scorching heat or halts for the night at some caravansary which is for the time the house of his pilgrimage, he soothes his rest with a song—a song it may be of war, romance, or love. But the poet of Israel finds his theme in the statutes of Jehovah. These have been my pastime, with these I have refreshed myself onward through the wearisome journey, and across the scorching deserts of life. Not songs of old tradition, etc., have supported me, but these have been the solace of my weary hours and the comfort of my rest.—Bushnell.

57—60. (57) Thou, etc., Heb. is Jehovah (is) my portion; or inheritance.[c] I have said, Cheyne, "I have resolved." (58) favour,[d] Heb. face. Ps. xlv. 12. be merciful, Polychr. "quicken." (59) thought on, seriously pondered. (60) made haste, the signs of hearty earnestness. Men are apt to procrastinate about their salvation.

The Soul's Sunshine. I. God's favor the one thing needful. II. Whole-heartedness the one mode of entreating it. III. Covenant mercy the one plea for obtaining it.—C. A. Davis.

61—64. (61) bands, better, "the snares of wicked men entangled is the motto prefixed to the Augsburg Confession — the charter of the German Lutheran Church."

—Ker.

[c] Job vi. 10.

[d] Comp. Neh. iv. 4.

[e] "God's laws, righteous and true, rewarding the good, punishing the evil, the recollection of these fills the mind of the Psalmist with consolation."
—Spk. Com.

"There are no songs comparable to the songs of Zion, no orations equal to those of the prophets, and no politics like those which the Scriptures teach."
—Milton.

[a] Terror.—Calvin. Sadness. — Arab, and Syr. Allusion may be to the burning wind or simoom.

[b] "Delightful advertisements to me."
—Spk. Com.

"We are told that the late authoress Juliana Horatia Ewing had hung over her hearth the motto: 'Ut migraturus habita' (As one about to migrate), to temper her joys in the comforts of home, and to remind her that 'here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come.' "— Anec. Ill. of O. T. Texts.

[c] Ps. xvi. 5.

[d] "Challoth panim, lit. 'to stroke the face,' is an expression of caressing flattering entreaty."
—Jennings and Lowe.

Thus we ought to believe, and watch with expectation for answers to our prayer. Do not say, "Lord, turn me."[a] (62) At midnight, said to show his constant thought of God. (63) a companion, i. e. I choose such, and only such, for companions. (64) earth .. is full,[b] so the man whose eyes and heart are opened can find occasion to praise God wherever he may look. teach me, i. e. "he beseeches for himself inward enlightenment as to His word."

The Mercy of God in nature and his mercy as revealed in the word. I. The one excellent; the other super-excellent. II. The one easily given; the other coming through a great sacrifice. III. The one may be enjoyed, and even increase condemnation; the other, if enjoyed, is sure salvation. IV. The one should lead to repentance; the other is specially adapted for the penitent's restoration to holiness.—J. Field.

God is Love.—

Why bursts such melody from tree and bush,
The overflowing of each songster's heart,
So filling mine that it can scarcely hush Awhile to listen, but would take its part?
'Tis but one song I hear where'er I rove, Though countless be the notes, that God is Love.
—Thomas Davis.

65—68. (65) dealt well, in the past times. (66) good judgment,[c] wise and right discernment, a fine sense of God's words. believed, etc., God's commandments being the only sources of wisdom and Divine instruction. (67) Before .. afflicted, "Sweet are the uses of adversity." The psalmist feels and confesses that the afflictions, which he has suffered have been good for him. (68) good, in sense of "kind."

The Value of Affliction.—At first sight we are startled by the apparent contradiction, good to be afflicted. Good to be afflicted because driven to the painstaking study of a book whose revelations humble us and imposes further hardships? Good because driven from having our own way to walking in God's? Even so a storm drives a vessel into harbor when she should be nearing her destination, and the sailors deem that storm a calamity. Not so; they find while in the harbor a leak that would have given them a watery grave, and there they repair the leak, and then proceed on their way. It was good for them to be afflicted. So God tosses us in a sea of trouble to drive us to the harbor of His Word, where our defects may be ascertained and remedied. A traveler bent upon a given destination, through forgetfulness, or self-conceit, or indolence, neglects to consult either wayfarers or charts. He resumes his way, but still blindly pushes on. He meets with an accident, and can go no further for the time. Was that a calamity? No. It brought him to his senses. Now he examines his chart, makes inquiries, and finds that he is on the wrong road, and can never that way reach his journey's end. It was good for him to be afflicted. So a man errs from the way of happiness, the way of truth, the way of his true destiny, the way of God. The Bible is too dry for him, how can he with his sublime genius condescend to examine its tedious details? Ah! that book is the only itinerary to heaven. He goes madly on till he comes to disaster and to ruin. Then he is glad to consult that book, and then he finds how far he has gone wrong and how he may get right. Truly may such use these words, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted. Before that I went astray: but now have I kept Thy word."—Hom. Com.

69—72. (69) proud, vss. 51, 61. forged, or patched up.[a] (70) fat as grease, dull and brutal.[b] "A figure of obduracy and insensibility." (71) good, etc., as vs. 67. (72) law .. mouth,[c] i. e. which Thou speakest. "The psalmist values the Law more than any amount of earthly riches."

The Purpose of God's Afflictive Providences:—I once went with my brother to extract a crystal from the rock. With a mighty sledge-hammer he vigorously dealt blow after blow upon the rock, and chipped off piece after piece. At last the top of the crystal appeared. Then one might see what he was after, for it had not shown upon the outer surface of the rock. When the crystal appeared, then the whole strife became how so to break the rock away from it, and how so to strike the rock as to extract the crystal. The rock was good for nothing; the crystal was everything. The soul is man's crystal, and the body is but the incasing rock that holds it. God's providences are smiting upon the my darkness into light," and then go out with your candle as though you expected to find it dark. After asking the Lord to appear for you, expect Him to do so, for according to your faith so be it unto you.

a Illus. in Ne. vi. 2—14.

b Ps. xxxiii. 5.

"God gives us always strength enough and sense enough for what he wants us to do; if we either tire ourselves or puzzle ourselves, it is our own own fault. And we may always be sure, whatever we are doing, that we cannot be pleasing him if we are not happy ourselves." — Ruskin.

c Comp. Paul's prayer for the Philippians. Ph. i. 9.

"That fine taste and delicate feeling wh. are like a new sense."
—Perowne.

"Why should I start at the plough of my Lord, that maketh deep furrows on my soul? I know He is no idle husbandman, He purposeth a crop."— S. Rutherford.

"There is truth in the teaching that purification comes through sorrow, and self-sacrifice, and fiery trial."
—White.

a "Have sewn together a lie; as they did against Nehemiah. Ne. vi. 6-13." — Wordsworth.

b See the fig. illus. in Ps. xvii. 10, lxxiii. 7; Is. vi. 10.

c Ps. xix. 10; Pr. viii. 11.

"Afflictions are blessings to us when we can rock, and breaking and cutting it away, and extracting the precious crystal, which is worth incomparably more than its setting in the rock.—Bib. Ill.—The Necessity of Tribulation:—In some of the most delicate manufactures of the country, the web in a rude and unsightly state enters a vessel filled with a certain liquid, passes slowly through, and emerges continuously at the opposite side. As it enters the cloth seems all of one color, and that dim; as it emerges it glitters in a variety of brilliant hues arranged in cunning figures. The liquid is composed of biting acids; and the reason why the fabric is strained through it is that all the deforming and defiling things which have adhered to it in preceding processes may be discharged, and the figures already secretly imprinted may shine out in their beauty. If it were allowed to remain one minute too long in the bath the fabric would be destroyed; but the manufacturer has so tempered the ingredients and timed the passage that while the impurities are thoroughly discharged the fabric comes out uninjured. In wisdom and love the Lord has mingled the ingredients of our tribulation, and determined its duration, so that none of his should be lost, and so that every grace of the Spirit should be brought out in all its beauty.—W. Arnot.

73, 74. (73) made . . fashioned me,[a] better, "Thy hands have cunningly made me." give, etc., i. e. if God fashioned the body will He not also give mankind wisdom? (74) see me, as a recovered man, sanctified by affliction.[b] hoped in, Polychr.' "tarry for."

The Right Attitude of Man in Relation to God (vs. 73).—Here we have man in a threefold attitude. I. Recognizing God as the author of his existence. II. Looking to God as the educator of his spirit. III. Imploring God as the perfecter of his being.—Thomas.

Give Me Understanding.—The book of God is like the apothecary's shop, there is no wound but therein is a remedy; but if a stranger come unto the apothecary's shop, though all these things be there, yet he cannot tell where they are, but the apothecary himself knoweth; so in the Scriptures, there are cures for any infirmities; there is comfort against any sorrows, and by conferring chapter with chapter, we shall understand them. The Scriptures are not wanting to us, but we to ourselves; let us be conversant in them, and we shall understand them, when great clerks who are negligent remain in darkness.—Richard Stock.

75—77. (75) faithfulness, that will not let failings pass into sins, but will wisely and mercifully chastise and correct. (76) merciful kindness, as a comfort in the midst of affliction; Ps. cxvii. 2. (77) live, prolong that restored health so graciously given.

The Surgeon's Reply.—M. Boudon, an eminent surgeon, was one day sent for by the Cardinal Du Bois, Prime Minister of France, to perform a very serious operation upon him. The cardinal, on seeing him enter the room, said to him, "You must not expect to treat me in the same rough manner as you treat your poor miserable wretches at your hospital of the Hotel Dieu." "My lord," replied M. Boudon with great dignity, "every one of those miserable wretches, as your eminence is pleased to call them, is a prime minister in my eyes."—Cheever.

78—80. (78) dealt perversely,[c] R. V., "have overthrown me wrongfully." (79) turn unto me, for companionship, and that I may establish them in their confidence in God. and . . known, R. V., "And they shall know," i. e. let their knowl. be enriched out of my experience; or by their own. (80) sound, R. V., "perfect," comp. vs. 2; sincerity, wholeness, is a great Old Test. idea.

A Sound Heart.—I. David's prayer for sincerity—that his heart might be brought to God's statutes, and that it might be sound in them, not rotten or deceitful. II. His dread of the consequences of hypocrisy: "that I be not ashamed." Shame is the portion of hypocrites, here or hereafter.—M. Henry.

Sound-hearted.—

True-hearted, whole-hearted, faithful and loyal,
King of our lives, by thy grace will we be!
Under thy standard, exalted and royal,
Strong in thy strength, we will battle for thee!

bless God for afflictions. Suffering has kept many from sinning. God had one Son without sin, but He never had any without sorrow. Fiery trials make golden Christians; sanctified afflictions are spiritual promotion."
—Dyer.

"They trim up lies with shadows of truth and neat language; they have mints to frame their lies curiously in, and presses to print their lies withal." — William Greenhill.

[a] Ps. c. 3, cxxxviii. 8.

[b] Ps. xxxiv. 2, lxvi. 16.

"Men's works have an age, like themselves; and though they outlive their authors, yet have they a stint and period to their duration. This only (the Bible) is a work too hard for the teeth of time, and cannot perish." — Sir Thomas Browne.

"Truth is so great a perfection as to have led Pythagoras to say, that if God were to render Himself visible to men, He would choose light for His body, and truth for His soul."
—Palmer.

[c] "Shame and discomfiture seem the fitting recompense of the proud, who see, by the providence of God, their plans fail, and prosperity, instead of calamity, result to him whom they persecute."
—Spk. Com.

"The Bible should be to you not a book only, but a speaking-trumpet, through which God speaks from afar to you, so that you may catch the very tones of his voice."

—Spurgeon.

"It is certain that in the main, the vessels which the Spirit used were sanctified vessels. 'Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost,' But as they were all corrupt at first, so there were diversities in the operation whereby they were called and qualified for their work." — Arnot.

True-hearted, whole-hearted! Fullest allegiance Yielding henceforth to our glorious King;
Valiant endeavor and loving obedience Freely and joyously now would we bring.

True-hearted, Saviour, thou knowest our story;
Weak are the hearts that we lay at thy feet,
Sinful and treacherous! yet for thy glory,
Heal them, and cleanse them from sin and deceit.

Whole-hearted! Saviour, beloved and glorious,
Take thy great power, and reign thou alone,
Over our wills and affections victorious,
Freely surrendered, and wholly thine own.

Peal out the watchword, and silence it never,
Song of our spirits, rejoicing and free!
"True-hearted, whole-hearted, now and for ever, King of our lives, by thy grace we will be!"

Frances R. Havergal.

81—84. (81) fainteth, with long and eager watching, Ps. lxxxiv. 2. (82) word, i. e. the fulfillment of thy promise. (83) bottle in the smoke, a wine-skin shrivelled and blackened by the smoke in wh. it hangs.[a] The effect of smoke on the exterior of a wine-skin resembles the withering, darkening influences of grief. Or according to Galen the fig. would denote the "mellowing and ripening of the character by affliction." (84) many . . days, the days of suffering and waiting. "How few of my days are left!"—Cheyne.

[a] "As wine-skin in the smoke, my heart is sere and dried."
—Keble.

"Wine in Asia is stored in upper chambers, underneath wh. large fires are commonly burning. The warmth communicates to it, quickly, properties and excellences, which a long time only could otherwise impart." — Galen, thro' Spk. Com.

85—88. (85) digged pits, such as were dug to ensnare animals.[b] not . . law, i. e. they act in defiance of Thy law. (86) faithful, Heb. faithfulness. (87) almost consumed, their plottings were nearly successful. (88) Quicken me, as vs. 25; he stands constantly in need of new grace lest he ultimately succumb.

[b] Ex. xxi. 33; 2 Sa. xxiii. 20; Je. xviii. 20, 22.

"God has given us four books: the book of grace, the book of nature, the book of the world, and the book of providence. Every occurrence is a leaf in one of these books; it does not become us to be negligent in the use of any of them." — Cecil.

89—92. (89) in heaven, indicating its everlasting, unchanging character.[c] Polychr., "stands as firm as the heavens." Heaven is the image of unchangeableness. (90) all generations, lit. to generation and generation. abideth, "the constancy of God in his works is an argument for the faithfulness of God in his Word."—Chalmers. (91) all, or all things, the whole universe. (92) have perished, by giving way to despair, and so forsaking God.[d]

[c] Ps. lxxxix. 2.

[d] "'If my delight had not been in Thy law, so excellent and eternal, I should have perished long ago in my misery.' A verse of price inestimable."
—Spk. Com.

The Word of God a Pillow.—A missionary in New Zealand, while visiting the sick, went to the hut of a poor cripple. He found him with a New Testament lying by his side, and asked if he could read. He replied that he could. He was asked, "How did you learn to read?" as he had never attended a school. He said, "I used to creep about, and after raking the rubbish thrown out of my neighbors' houses, pick up all the bits of printed paper I could find. Sometimes I got half a leaf of a New Testament, and sometimes a bit of a leaf of the Prayer Book. These pieces, which I got from time to time, I used to sew together. Then, to learn to read, I pointed to a word, and asked my brother to tell me its meaning. This I often did, till at last I could manage to read a whole verse, and then a chapter. Now I can read any chapter." The missionary then asked, "Do you esteem the Word of God?" He replied, in his expressive language, "It is my pillow."—Youth's Dayspring.

93—96. (93) I will never, a firm and earnest resolve, but made in full dependence on Divine quickening. (94) thine, by full and hearty devotement of myself to Thee. Full trust in God is a plea on which we may urge the bestowment of His saving grace on us. (95) waited, watching for the opportunity of a slip, of wh. they might take advantage. (96) end . . perfection, some rend. "I have seen an end to the whole range of things,"[a] Polychr., "that all perfection has an end." broad, "has no limits whilst all other things are bounded by a narrow compass." Job. xi. 7—9.

[a] "To every finite thing there is an end or limit, but Thy commandments have no end or

Divine Relationship (vs. 94).—I. The Christian's relationship to God. He is God's—1. By purchase; 2. By conquest; 3. By adoption; 4. By dedication; 5. By likeness. II. His prayer. 1. Save me from sin; 2. From carelessness; 3. From my enemies; 4. From despondency. III. The reasons he assigns. I have sought to—1. Read them; 2. Understand them; 3. To be governed by them.—W. W. Whythe.

Independence of the Bible.—In relation to other books the Bible occupies a peculiar and solitary position. It is independent of all others; it imitates no other book; it copies none; it hardly alludes to any other, whether in praise or blame; and this is nearly as true of its latter portions, when books were common, as of its earlier, when books were scarce. It proves, thus, its originality and power. John never speaks of Plato, nor Paul of Demosthenes, nor Jesus of any writer, save Moses and the Prophets. In those great heights you feel blowing round your temples, and stirring your hair, the free, original, ancient breath of the upper world, unconventional, unmixed, and irresistible as the mountain tempest. It is a book unlike all others—the points of difference being these among many others:—There is a certain grand unconsciousness, as in Niagara, speaking now in the same tone to the tourists of a world, as when she spoke to the empty wilderness and the silent sun; as in the Himalayan Hills, which cast the same look of still sovereignty over an India unpeopled after the deluge, as over an India the hive of sweltering nations.—C. Gilfillan.

97—100. (97) all the day,[a] a strong fig. for "constantly." (98) Thou .. made, R. V., "Thy commandments make." wiser, bec. he has the "practical wisdom wh. consists in the fear of the Lord, and leads him to eschew all evil."[b] they, Heb. it. The commandments of God being regarded as one whole. (99) thy testimonies, they are the teachings of One greater than all human teachers, so in his teachings the Psalmist feels that he surpasses all earthly masters. (100) ancients,[c] R. V., "aged," who are wise by the fruitage of long experience.

Love to God's Law (vs. 97).—I. God's people have a great love for the Word of God. 1. The Word of God deserves this love; 2. The saints readily yield this love to the Word. II. They that love the Word will be meditating therein continually. 1. Love causeth this; 2. Meditation cherisheth love.—Manton.

Love for the Bible.—I happened to be standing in a grocer's shop one day in a large manufacturing town in the west of Scotland, when a poor, old, frail widow came in to make a few purchases. There never was, perhaps, in that town a more severe time of distress. Nearly every loom was stopped. Decent and respectable tradesmen, who had seen better days, were obliged to subsist on public charity. So much money per day (but a trifle at most) was allowed to the really poor and deserving. The poor widow had received her daily pittance, and she had now come into the shop of the grocer to lay it out to the best advantage. She had but a few coppers in her withered hands. Carefully did she expend her little stock—a pennyworth of this and the other necessary of life nearly exhausted all she had. She came to the last penny, and with a singular expression of heroic contentment and cheerful resignation on her wrinkled face, she said, "Now I must buy oil with this, that I may see to read my Bible during these long dark nights, for it is my only comfort now when every other comfort has gone away."—Alexander Wallace.

101—104. (101) refrained .. way, man's watchfulness of himself, and of his conduct, ought always to match the bestowments of God's grace and help to him.[a] (102) thou hast taught, emphasis is laid on Thou: "even Thou, the all-wise God."[b] This is the source of his wisdom. (103) sweet, comp. Ps. xix. 10. taste, Heb. palate, as the seat of the sense of taste.[c] honey, first mentioned in Ge. xliii. 11. (104) understanding, in sense of discrimination bet. good and evil. false way, "All the heterodox tendencies that suited the spirit of the age."—Delitzsch. vs. 29.

Reading the Bible.—I have for years made it a practice to read through the Bible once a year. My custom is to read four or five chapters every morning immediately after rising from my bed. It employs about an hour of my time, and seems to me the most suitable manner of beginning the day. In what light soever we regard the Bible, whether with reference to revelation, to history, or to morality, it is an invaluable and inexhaustible mine of knowledge and virtue.—J. Q. Adams.

limit to their perfection."
—Rashi.

"Of everything that is striven after and wrought out I have seen an end." — Jewish Targum.

"Notwithstanding many things do show the way of life to be narrow, yet unto the godly man it is a way of great breadth; though not for sin, yet for duty and delight. He makes haste and progress in it."
—Robert Trail.

[a] Ps. i. 2, 3; 1 Ti iv. 15.

[b] Comp. Ps. cxix. 99, 100.

[c] Job xxxii. 8, 9.

"The Bible itself is like an old Cremona; it has been played upon by the devotion of thousands of years, until every word and particle is public and tunable."
—Emerson.

"We account the Scriptures of God to be the most sublime philosophy."—Sir Isaac Newton.

The celebrated Witsius was able to recite almost any passage of Scripture, in its proper language, together with its context, and the criticisms of the best commentators."

[a] Is. i. 16, 17; He. xii. 3, 4.

"Avoidance of sinful courses is both the effect and means of increasing in Divine knowledge." — Fausset.

[b] "Thou, and not man whose teaching is vain; Thou, whose teaching, as Thyself, is indescribably excellent." — Spk. Com.

[c] Comp. Job xxiii 12.

From the time that, at my mother's feet, or on my father's knee, I first learned to lisp verses from the sacred writings, they have been my daily study and vigilant contemplation. If there be anything in my style or thoughts to be commended, the credit is due to my kind parents in instilling into my mind an early love of the Scriptures.—Daniel Webster. I must confess to you that the majesty of the Scriptures astonishes me; the holiness of the evangelists speaks to my heart, and has such strong and striking characters of truth, and is, moreover, so perfectly inimitable, that, if it had been the invention of men, the inventions would be greater than the greatest heroes.—Rousseau.

105. lamp,[a] marg. candle. With reference to the perils of traveling in the darkness and the night. The lamp, or lantern, was held low, so as to throw its light on the steps to be taken. light .. path, or a sun by day.

The Bible the Lamp of God (vs. 105).—I. In the path of duty: precipices; pitfalls; perils. Give examples. II. In the night of sorrow: sickness, adversity, spiritual darkness. III. To the throne of grace: pillar of fire; golden candlestick; perpetual lamp; communion with God. IV. Through the valley of the shadow of death. V. To heaven. Not reason or conscience, but the Word of God as applied by the Holy Spirit. This lamp—1. A test of faith; 2. A test of practice.—G. Brooks.

Our Lamp.—Going two miles into a neighborhood where very few could read, to spend an evening in reading to a company who were assembled to listen, and about to return by a narrow path through the woods, where paths diverged, I was provided with a torch of light wood, or "pitch pine." I objected, it was too small, weighing not over half a pound. "It will light you home," answered my host. I said, "The wind may blow it out." He said, "It will light you home." "But if it should rain?" I again objected. "It will light you home," he insisted. Contrary to my fears, it gave abundant light to my path all the way home, furnishing an apt illustration, I often think, of the way in which doubting hearts would be led safely along the "narrow way." If they would take the Bible as their guide, it would be a lamp to their feet, leading to the heavenly home. One man had five objections to the Bible. If he would take it as a lamp to his feet, it would "light him home." Another told me he had two faults to find with the Bible. I answered him in the words of my good friend who furnished the torch, "It will light you home."—American Messenger.—Follow the Light.—On one occasion a Sabbath school teacher neglected to follow the light, held by one of the scholars, but, crossing the road, sank in a pile of filth. "Ah!" said the old superintendent, "that is the consequence of not following the light. What is the use of a light if your footsteps are not directed by it?" The scholar said, later in life, "I have never forgotten this remark; and it has been worth more than gold to me. Whenever I behold the light of God's truth, while I am thankful for the light, I do not forget that it will be of no value to me unless I follow it."

106—108. (106) sworn, made solemn resolve, and publicly announced it. I .. it, R. V., "have confirmed it." (107) very much,[b] the recurring reference to his present condition of affliction explains his earnest wrestling to keep hold of his faith in God. (108) freewill offerings,[a] presented as sacrifice of gratitude, beyond any requirements of the ceremonial law.

Afflicted.—I. The "very much" afflicted. 1. The world has such—widows, orphans, etc., etc. 2. Most take their turn. II. But there is "very much" grace. 1. God's word promises the needed quickening. 2. Himself very much greater than all our needs. 3. Christ tried "in all points" has all help. III. Therefore bring "very much" faith, as the Psalmist here. 1. Keen-eyed for promises. 2. Fervent in pleading them. 3. Strong in expectation.—W. B. Haynes.

Psalm cxix.—In the German Psalters it is styled, probably on account of its alphabetical character, Der Christen Goldenes A, B, C,—the Golden Alphabet of Christians; but it is also an advanced lesson for mature believers. We have here a sacred acrostic. One reason for such a method probably was to aid the memory. In conformity with that design, Philip Henry used to give this advice to his children: "Take a verse of Psalm one hundred and nineteen every morning to meditate upon, and so go over the Psalm twice a year, and that will bring you to be in "The Bible resembles an extensive and highly cultivated flower garden, where there is a vast variety and profusion of fruits and flowers; some of which are more essential or more splendid than others; but there is not a blade suffered to grow in it which has not its use and beauty in the system. — Cecil.

[a] "Reference prob. is to the lamps and torches carried at night before an Eastern caravan." — Fausset.

"As, when you examine that intensely brilliant light which now and then illumines sections of our streets, you find behind it nothing but a lump of common lime, played upon by a flame of different gases, — so the Bible is the record of our crude humanity passing under the various forces of God's discipline and punishment; and for that very reason is 'a lamp to our feet and a light unto our path.' " —M. R. Vincent.

[b] Ps. lxxi. 20; Ro. v. 3—5.

[a] "His impulsive confessions and supplications." — Jennings and Lowe.

"This vs. is a fit petition with wh. to commence any service of prayer and praise to God." — Canon Hawkins.

" Theodoricus, Archbishop of Cologne, when the Emperor Sigismund demanded of him the directest and most com-love with all the rest of the Scriptures." Agreeably to that recommendation, we find his godly daughter, Mrs. Savage, writing thus in her diary (1687-8, March 9), "Friday morning: I have been of late taking some pains to learn by heart Psalm one hundred and nineteen, and have made some progress therein."

109—112. (109) in my hand, a Heb. fig. for extreme peril.[b] (110) laid a snare, a peril to wh. the Psalmist refers more than once in the course of the Ps. See vss. 23, 51, 61, 69, 85, 95, etc. (111) for ever, or my most valuable, as well as permanent heritage. (112) inclined my heart, urged it with all holy resolves and persuasions.

God's Word the Heritage of His People.—I. God's Word is a heritage. II. God's Word is a valuable heritage. 1. It is an undeserved heritage. 2. It is a full heritage. 3. It is a sure heritage. 4. It is an abiding heritage. III. It is a responsible heritage. 1. It is offered to our choice. It is not forced upon us. We may reject it. 2. That choice is the result of a preparation. 3. That choice involves the agent in grand and eternal responsibilities.—Hom. Com.

Our Heritage.—This heritage of the word grows richer with time. The preacher who thinks he has exhausted a text will find another sermon in it when he goes to it again. The man who goes through his Bible for the fiftieth time, finds it richest in fresh treasures.—M. R. Vincent.

113—115. (113) vain thoughts,[c] R. V., "them that are of a double mind;" i. e. "the undecided in religion." (114) hiding place, Ps. cxliii. 9. shield, Ge. xv. 1. (115) Depart, etc., comp. Matt. vii. 23. The Psalmist here means, "Go away, it is quite useless to tempt me." keep, etc. Association with the wicked hinders men from keeping God's Law. Not only is there the danger of corruption (1 Cor. xv. 33); but, at the best, attention is distracted, and energies weakened.—Pul. Com.

Thou Art My Hiding Place.—I. In thy grace, from condemnation. II. In thy compassion, from sorrow. III. In thy succor, from temptation. IV. In thy power, from opposition. V. In thy fullness, from want.—W. Jackson.

Vain Thoughts.—A godly man may have roving thoughts in duty. Sad experience proves this; the thoughts will be dancing up and down in prayer. The saints are called stars; but many times in duty they are wandering stars. The heart is like quicksilver which will not fix. It is hard to tie two good thoughts together; we cannot lock our hearts so close, but that distracting thoughts, like wind, will get in. Hierom complains of himself; "Sometimes," said he, "when I am about God's service, I am walking in the galleries, or casting up accounts." But these wandering thoughts are not allowed: "I hate vain thoughts," they come as unwelcome guests, which are no sooner spied, but turned out of doors.—Thomas Watson.

116—120. (116) according .. word, Polychr., "as Thou hast promised." may live, comp. vs. 77. (117) Hold thou, his firm resolves were quite consistent with an entire leaning on God for the necessary strength. (118) trodden down, the figure of "conquered and humbled."[a] R. V., "set at nought." falsehood, self-deception.[b] Their vain reliance upon their deceitful artifices leads to certain confusion. (119) puttest, etc., out of sight. like dross,[c] by the fire of Thy judgment.[d] (120) trembleth, or shuddereth.[e]

Up, up above the littlenesses in which I have lived too long,—above the snares which have so often caught me,—above the stumbling-blocks upon which I have so often fallen,—above the world,—above myself,—higher than I have ever reached yet,—above the level of my own mortality: worthy of thee,—worthy of the blood, with which I have been bought,—nearer to heaven,—nearer to thee,—"hold thou me up."—J. Vaughan.

121—124. (121) justice, better, "righteousness." "As I have not oppressed any, so wilt thou not suffer me to be crushed by oppression."—Pul. Com. (122) Be surety, i. e. "grant me a guarantee of eventual deliverance and prosperity."[a] (123) eyes fail, Polychr., "Are pining." Comp. vs. 82. (124) thy mercy,[b] wh. gives tone to God's judgments. teach me, this is the fundamental thought of the poet, he craves for an ever deepening knowl. of the law and character of God.

pendious way how to attain true happiness, made answer in brief, thus: 'Perform when thou art well what thou promisedst when thou wast sick.' "

b Comp. Ju. xii. 3; 1 Sa. xix. 5, xxviii. 21; Job xiii. 14.

"It is not the laying the bait hurts the fish, if the fish do not bite." — Thomas Watson.

c Heb. seeph, one who is wavering or inconstant, one whose heart is not wholly with God.

Comp. 1 Ki. xviii. 21; Ja. i. 6.

"A malicious thought and a malicious deed are from the same spring, and have the same nature; only the deed is the riper serpent and can sting another; while the thought is as the younger serpent, that hath only the venomous nature in itself.

—Baxter.

a Is. lxiii. 3.

b Is. xliv. 20.

c Eze. xxii. 18, 20.

d Je. vi. 28—30; Mal. iii. 2, 3.

e "Strictly used of the hair as standing erect in terror (see Job iv. 15)." — Jennings and Lowe.

"Familiarity with men breeds contempt; familiarity with God, not so: none reverence the Lord more than they who know Him best and are most familiar with Him." — William Cowper.

a Job xvii. 3; Is. xxxviii. 14.

b Ps. ciii. 10.

"The poetry of the Bible has been the forming power of the greatest modern poems; for Tasso, Milton, and Cowper present in high relief the features of its moving hand. And its high and aspiring spirit, its heavenward tendencies, its ethereal sanctities, its judicial grandeur, have given birth to those sublime creations in architecture and painting which are seen in the works of Michael Angelo and may be designated the school of Christian art."—Beard.

"The Bible contains, independently of a Divine origin, more true sublimity, more exquisite beauty, more pure morality, more important history, and finer strains both of poetry and of eloquence, than could be collected within the same compass from all other books that were ever composed in any age or in any idiom." — Sir W. Jones.

The Bible the Theme of Psalm cxix.—This is the longest portion of Holy Writ devoted so exclusively to one theme. Only two of the verses (122, 132) do not expressly mention the great topic running through the whole. At least ten different words are employed to designate the holy volume as it existed in the time of the Psalmist,—word, way, law, statute, commandment, precept, testimony, faithfulness, truth, and righteousness; which, for the sake of variety, appear to be used promiscuously and with interchangeable signification. The Psalm consists of twenty-two equal divisons, arranged in accordance with the number and succession of letters in the Hebrew alphabet. Each division contains eight verses, and in the original each verse of the several divisions begins with the same Hebrew letter as stands for its heading in our English Bible. Thus the first eight verses begin each with a word whose initial letter is Aleph; the second division with words whose first letter is Beth; and so through the Psalm and through the alphabet. In accordance too, with that subdivision, the name Jehovah occurs in the Hebrew twenty-two times.—God's Promise.—A promise of God seems a very simple thing at first view. So does an acorn. No one who did not know the facts of vegetable life would dream that there is an oak tree enfolded in it. In a single promise are folded an infinite variety of provisions and adaptations, laid up, and not manifesting themselves until they are wanted. It is very much like the tent about which we used to read in the fairy story, which could be shut up in the hand, and yet could be spread out on occasion so as to cover a whole army. When a man takes a promise into his life, he finds it continually developing unsuspected resources. It comes in to help and to comfort him at points where he never dreamed it could be of any service to him . It is something as when an inexperienced traveler goes out for an excursion among the Alps, and is bidden to take a rope with him. He does not exactly see what he is going to want with it, but when he gets upon a snow slope, the guide ties him to himself with the rope; and when he slips into a crevasse, he finds that the rope is all there is between him and death. They come to a steep ledge, and the rope is in demand again. They set up their mountain tent for the night, the ropes come into play. That traveler finds out how many uses are laid up in a rope before he gets back to his lodging. He never will think of going into the mountains again without one.—M. R. Vincent.

125—128. (125) am thy servant, and so have claim upon Thy help. (126) time .. work, i. e. to interpose with His Divine judgments.[a] Delitzsch trans. "It is time to work for Jehovah." made void thy law, comp. Ezr. x. 18; Ne. xiii. 4—7. (127) above gold, he prizes his attachment to God's commandments higher than the gold wh. he might gain if he renounced God's service; Ps. xix. 10; Pr. viii. 11. (128) all thy precepts, "I do not pick and choose among thy commandments which I will neglect and which I will obey, but esteem them all as perfect, and obey them all." false way, "all psendo-Judaism"; vss. 29, 104.

Love of Gold.—An emigrant ship was once wrecked on a desert island. The people were saved, but they had few provisions, and it was necessary to make haste to clear and till the ground and sow seed. Before this could be done they discovered gold on the island, and every one gave himself up to the search for wealth. Meantime, the season slipped by, the fields were left untilled, and the people found themselves starving in the midst of useless treasure. There are people now who starve their soul and conscience that they may acquire a little more gold and silver.—H. J. W. Buxton.—"M. Foscue, the French millionaire miser, in order to make sure of his treasures, dug a cave in his wine-cellar, so large and deep that he could go down with a ladder. At the entrance was a door with a spring lock, which, on shutting, would fasten of itself. After a time, he was missing. Search was made for him, but to no purpose. At last, his house was sold. The purchaser, beginning to rebuild it, discovered a door in this cellar, and, going down, found him lying dead on the ground, with a candlestick near him; and, on searching farther, discovered the vast wealth which he had amassed. He went into the cave; and the door, by some accident, shutting after him, he perished for want of food.—Dictionary of Illus.

[a] "The verse seems appropriate in a time of some great falling away from Jehovah." — Spk. Com.

Je. xviii. 23; Eze. xxxv. 11.

"If Satan get a grip of thee by any one sin, is it not enough to carry thee to damnation? Though thou be not a slave to all sin; if thou be a slave to one, the grip Satan hath of thee, by that one sinful affection, is sufficient to captive thee."—William Cowper.

"All human discoveries seem to be made only for the purpose of confirming, more and more strongly, the truths contained in the sacred Scriptures." — Sir John Herschel.

Supremacy of the Bible.—Ah, Philosophy! thou hast never yet, as this book, taught a man how to die! Reason! with thy flickering torch thou hast never yet guided to such sublime mysteries, such comforting truths as these. Science! thou hast penetrated the arcana of nature, sunk thy shafts into earth's recesses, unburied its stores, counted its strata, measured the height of its massive pillars down to the very pedestals of primeval granite. Thou hast tracked the lightning, traced the path of the tornado, uncurtained the distant planet, foretold the coming of the comet, and the return of the eclipse. But thou hast never been able to gauge the depth of man's soul, or to answer the question, "What must I do to be saved?" No, no! this antiquated volume is still the "Book of books," the oracle of oracles, the beacon of beacons, the poor man's treasury, the child's companion, the sick man's health, the dying man's life, shallows for the infant to walk in, depths for giant intellect to explore and adore! Philosophy, if she would own it, is indebted here for the noblest of her maxims: Poetry, for the loftiest of her themes. Painting has gathered here her noblest inspiration. Music has ransacked these golden stores for the grandest of her strains. And if there be life in the Church of Christ—if her ministers and missionaries are carrying the torch of salvation through the world—where is that torch lighted but at these same undying altar-fires? When a philosophy, "falsely so called," shall become dominant, and seek with its proud dogmas to supersede this Divine philosophy; when the old Bible of David, and Timothy, and Paul, is clasped and closed, the only morality and philosophy worth speaking of will have perished from the earth. Dagon will have taken the place of God's ark—the world's funeral pile may be kindled!—J. A. Macduff.

129—132. (129) wonderful, "prodigies of moral excellence," vss. 18, 27.[a] (130) entrance, R. V., "opening," or revelation of;[b] or declaration. (131) panted, fig. for earnest eager desire; comp. Ps. xlii. 1.[c] (132) Look, etc., Polychr., "Turn thyself to me." usest to do, according to Thy wonted custom: or "as is just to them." Polychr., "As is befitting the friends," etc.

Charms of the Bible.—A little boy was born blind. An operation was performed; the light was let in slowly. When, one day, his mother led him out of doors and uncovered his eyes, and for the first time he saw the sky and earth, "Oh, mother!" he cried, "why didn't you tell me it was so beautiful?" She burst into tears and said, "I tried to tell you, dear, but you could not understand me." So it is when we try to tell what is in the Bible. Unless the spiritual sight is opened, we cannot understand.—Anon.—The Power of Truth (vs. 130).—The celebrated Gilbert West and Lord Lyttleton, both men of acknowledged talent, had received the principles of infidelity from a superficial view of the Scriptures. They agreed together to expose what they termed the imposture of the Bible; and Mr. West chose the resurrection of Christ, and Lord Lyttleton the conversion of St. Paul, as the subject of their criticism. Both sat down to their respective tasks full of prejudice and a contempt for Christianity. But what was the result? They were both converted by their endeavor to overthrow the truth of Scripture. They came together not, as they expected, to exult over an imposture exposed to ridicule, but to lament their former unbelief, and to congratulate each other that they had discovered the truth of revelation. They published their inquiries, which form two of the most valuable treatises now existing in favor of the truth of God's Word; one entitled, Observations on the Conversion of St. Paul, and the other, Observations on the Resurrection of Christ.

133—136. (133) Order my steps,[d] take the rule and management of them. in thy word, "by means of thy word." iniquity, wandering wilfulness, applied to steps. (134) Deliver, R. V., "redeem." oppression, Psalmist asks deliverance in his fear that by it he might yet be overborne. (135) face to shine,[e] with the smiles of gracious acceptance. (136) Rivers of waters, a strong poetical expression.[f] they, i. e. the apostates who seek to oppress him. Ex. of disinterested sympathy.

Sin's Sway in the Soul.—I. Fervently deprecated. 1. Realization of the horrors of its rule. 2. Recognition of the better power. 3. Thor-

"That there are difficulties in the Bible no one need deny; but these difficulties do not affect its Divine origin any more than the difficulties in nature affect the truth of its Divine origin. Because a man cannot comprehend all the difficulties which meet him in very many of the pages of the book of nature, would he be wise in saying that God was not the Creator of it? How, then, can he be wise who, for a similar reason, denounces the Bible as the book of God?"—John Bate.

[a] "Miraculous, far exceeding aught conceived by man, supplying ever new instructions." — Spk. Com.

[b] Lu. xxiv. 27, 32.

[c] "Like one oppressed with burning heat, and longing for some cool spring of water, or some fresh breeze to fan his brow." — Perowne.

"In the Bible there is more that finds me than I have experienced in all other books put together; the words of the Bible find me at greater depths of my being, and whatsoever finds me brings with it an irresistible evidence of having proceeded from the Holy Spirit." — Coleridge.

[d] Ps. xvii. 5, xix., 13, 14; He. xii. 13.

[e] Nu. vi. 25, 26.

[f] Most of the Easterns shed tears much more copiously than the people of Europe. I have myself seen Arabs shed tears like streams."—Gadsby.

"The psalmist did not merely wish for outward prosperity or inward cheer and comfort, but that these might contribute to fulfilling his deepest wish of learning better what God would have him to do." — Exp. B.

"The ancient Greeks had one sentence which they believed to have descended from Heaven; and to evince their gratitude and veneration for this gift, they caused it to be engraved in letters of gold on the front of their most sacred and magnificent temple. We, more favored, have not one sentence only, but a volume, which really descended from Heaven; and which, whether we consider its contents or its Author, ought to be indelibly impressed on the heart of every child of Adam." — Payson.

"Truth is truth, though from an enemy, and spoken in malice." —Lillo.

"I have seldom known any one who deserted truth in trifles that could be trusted in matters of importance." — Paley.

"Were temptations never so black, faith will not hearken to an ill word spoken against God, but will justify God always." — David Dickson.

[a] "Tried to the uttermost." — Pr. Bk. Vers.

[b] Ps. xii. 6.

"I use the Scriptures not as an arsenal to be resorted to only for arms and weapons . . . ough exclusion sought. II. Wisely combated. 1. Practicalness as well as prayerfulness. 2. Regard had to little "steps." 3. Steps to be governed by divine rule. 4. System not trusted apart from God.—W. B. Haynes.

A Japanese Convert.—Six Japanese girls were sent over to America to be educated. One of them took a situation as governess in a family, where she read the English Bible. She wrote under deep conviction to her father, urging him to procure a copy of the Bible and read it. He, thinking it was a whim of his child, dismissed the subject from his mind, and destroyed the letter. Some seven years later he went as Commissioner for Japan to the Austrian Exhibition. There he saw the Bible Stand, and was impressed with wonder that so much should be made of any single book, that it should be thought worth translating into so many languages. He purchased a copy in Chinese, and read it with curiosity. Curiosity deepened into interest, and by degrees he became convinced of the truth of all the Book taught. In his journey through Europe he made his own observations of the three prevailing forms of Christianity—the Romish, Greek, and Protestant faiths. He was satisfied that the last of these came nearest to the teaching and spirit of the Book itself. On his return to Yeddo he applied to the American missionaries for baptism. Hearing of the step he had taken, his daughter wrote to him from America to suggest that, as he had the means at his disposal, he should purchase a heathen temple for purposes of Christian worship. He did so, and in the temple thus purchased the Christian missionaries now meet for worship.—Anec. Illus. of O. T. Texts.—An Oracle.—It is written of Boleslaus, one of the kings of Poland, that he carried about him the picture of his father, and when he was to do any great work or set upon any design extraordinary, he would look on the picture and pray that he might do nothing unworthy of such a father's name. Thus it is that the Scriptures are the picture of God's will, therein drawn out to the very life. Before a man enter upon or engage himself in any business whatsoever, let him look there, and read there what is to be done; what to be undone; and what God commands, let that be done; what he forbids, let that be undone; let the balance of the sanctuary weigh all, the oracles of God decide all, the rule of God's word be the square of all, and his glory the ultimate of all intendments whatsoever.—Spencer.

137—139. (137) upright . . judgments, or all expressions of Thy will. (138) very faithful, or exceeding faithfulness, all designed in spite of their seeming harshness to promote man's highest welfare. (139) zeal, etc., i. e. in opposing those who despise God's laws, brings him very near the brink of destruction at their hands.—Delitzsch. Ps. lxix. 9.

Zeal.—I. Flourishing in an unpromising atmosphere. II. Attaining an astonishing growth. III. Accomplishing a blessed work—the consumption of self.—C. A. Davis.

God is Righteous.—The hundred and thirty-seventh verse, like the twenty-fifth, is associated with the sorrows of an Imperial penitent. When the deposed and captive Emperor Maurice was led out for execution by the usurper Phocas, his five sons were previously murdered one by one in his presence; and at each fatal blow he patiently exclaimed, "Righteous art thou, O Lord, and upright are thy judgments."—Neale and Littledale.

140—144. (140) very pure, i. e. tried; well refined;[a] fire-proved, as smelted metal.[b] (141) small, insignificant: held in little esteem. (142) everlasting righteousness, i. e. an absolute, perfect righteousness. truth, an embodiment of that immutable morality which rests upon a basis of absolute eternal truth. (143) taken hold, Heb. found. (144) righteousness, etc., Polychr., "Thy decrees are binding to eternity." Comp. vss. 137, 138.

Man's Greatness and Littleness.—I. The source of man's littleness is in himself. II. The source of his greatness is in the Divine word. Hence the greatest philosopher is a small man compared with the most uneducated whose delight is in the law of God, and who meditates, etc.—G. Rogers.

The Truth of God's Word.—A society of learned men caused a ship to be built, and resolved to make a voyage to discover the wonderful nature and properties of the magnetic needle. When the ship was ready to sail, they went on board, taking with them a great number of books, and all kinds of instruments, then they set a magnetic needle in the midst, and examined and observed it. Thus they sailed to and fro, looking at the needle, and each had his own opinion concerning the hidden power which moved the needle. So a violent contest arose among the learned men, and they sailed to and fro on the ocean, quarreling with each other. Suddenly they felt a rude shock, and a violent crash was heard. The ship had struck on a rock and split, and the waters were rushing impetuously in. Then the learned men were all seized with great terror and confusion; they left the needle, jumped overboard, and saved themselves on the rocks. The ship was buried in the waves. Now, as they sat on the barren rocks, wet through with salt water, they cried out to one another that there was no dependence to be placed in the magnetic needle.—Krummacher.

Permanence of the Bible.—There are men that are all the time afraid that something will happen to the Bible. I should be, if I had no more faith than they have in it. There is a mountain not far from my dwelling in the country, and I never got up in the night to see if it had not been stolen by somebody. Near by rolls the old Hudson, and I never said to myself on going to bed, "How do I know that before morning somebody will not run down with a quart pot and carry off that river!" Now, to me, the Bible stands as firm as mountains stand, and it is in as little danger of being overthrown as mighty rivers are of being carried off in a quart pot. I am never afraid that the Bible will be laid aside. I am never afraid of its being superseded. I feel a certainty that it belongs to God, that it is indispensable to man, and that, however much it may be neglected or run against, it will take care of itself, and maintain its rightful place.—Beecher.

145—148. (145) cried, with the prayer of the anxious heart. hear, R. V., "answer." (146) and I shall, better, that I may. (147) prevented the dawning, notice the older use of the word prevent.[a] "I anticipated the dawning." He could not wait for morning light before he began his prayers. (148) Mine . . watches,[b] i. e. none of these night-watches, at their commencement, find him asleep. Polych., "I am awake before the cry of the watchman."

Childlike Prayer.—I. In its ring: "I cried." II. In its directness: "to thee." III. In its outburst: "whole heart." IV. In its outcries: "hear me"; "save me." V. In its promise of better behavior: "I will keep thy statutes."—W. B. Haynes.

The Bible.—Here is a servant of God, who, from his youth upward, has been diligent in the study of the Bible. Year after year he has devoted to that study, and yet the Bible is but a single volume, and that not a large volume. "Well, then," you might be inclined to say, "the study must surely by this time have exhausted the book! There can be nothing new for him to bring out; nothing which he has not investigated and fathomed." Ah, how you mistake the Bible! What a much larger book it must be than it seems! In place of having exhausted it, the royal student speaks as though there were more work before him than he knew how to compass. "Mine eyes prevent the night watches, that I might meditate in thy word."—Henry Melvill.—Tryst With God.—"The morning is the time fixed for my meeting with God. What meaning there is in time as well as place! In the morning—then God means me to be at my best in strength and hope. In the night I have buried yesterday's fatigue, and in the morning I take a new lease of energy. Give God all thy strength. In the morning—then He may mean to keep me long that He may make me rich."—J. Parker.

Stories of the Bible.—I might show you the first load of Bibles taken to Wales, the people going out to meet the cart that carried them, as if it had been Israel's ark, drawing it in triumph into the town, bearing away the blessed volume with overflowing heart, young people sitting up all night to read it, and laborers taking it with them to the fields and loving it as I cannot describe. I might show you the Tahitians, when France took possession of their island not many years ago, hurrying to the mountains and leaving their Bibles with the missionaries till they should come back, to save them carrying them so far; and ere long they but as a matchless temple, where I delight to contemplate the beauty, the symmetry, and the magnificence of the structure; and to increase my awe and excite my devotion to the Deity there preached and adored." — Robert Boyle.

"Sin is Satan's ladder. It has its top on earth, its foot in hell. God's ladder has its foot on earth and its top in Heaven. Such a ladder is the Bible. And it is impossible for any human being with understanding, heart and soul, to place foot upon it and traverse it step by step, either to reach hell or even to remain a wicked or worldly-minded man. It must, of inevitable necessity, land him in Heaven." — R. B. Nichol.

[a] To anticipate; to go to meet.

[b] "The night in early times was divided into 3 watches, the first La. ii. 19; the second, Ju. vii. 19; the third, Ex. xiv. 24; 1 Sa. xi. 11." — Spk. Com.

"It has been subjected, along with many other books, to the fire of the keenest investigation — a fire which has contemptuously burned up the husbandry of the Georgics, the historical truth of Livy, the artistic merit of many a popular poem, the authority of many a book of philosophy and science. And yet there this artless, loosely-piled book lies unhurt, untouched, with not one page signed and not even the smell of fire has passed upon it." — G. Gilfillan.

"In the fabulous records of pagan antiquity we read of a mirror endowed with properties so rare that by looking into it its possessor could discover any object which he wished to see, however remote; and discover with equal ease persons and things above, below, behind, and before him. Such a mirror, but infinitely more valuable than this fictitious glass, do we possess in the Bible; by employing it in a proper manner we may discern objects and events, past, present, and to come. Here we may contemplate the all-enfolding circle of the eternal mind, and behold a perfect portrait of Him whom no mortal eye hath seen, drawn by His own unerring hand." —Payson.

"There is but one object greater than the soul, and that one is its Creator." —Augustine.

were back in the face of all danger, to say they could not live without their Bibles, and must have them whatever should befall. There is an Irish peasant copying with his own hand the entire Scriptures. There is a Hindoo dying, and under his head lies his treasure. What is it? Some dirty scraps of paper, worn and tattered, which he had got years ago—texts of the Bible translated and written by a missionary, before Bibles in the language were to be had. There is a soldier hiding in his bosom as he goes to the wars, and a sailor tying it round his waist as the most precious thing on board, ere the vessel goes down. There is one calling it his best earthly friend; and another, his book of bank-notes; and another, sweeter than honey, better than gold.—J. H. Wilson.

149—152. (149) judgment, or righteous decree. (150) draw nigh, as with hostile intent. Mischief, R. V., "wickedness." (151) near, nearer than my foes." (152) known of old, R. V., "Of old have I known from thy testimonies," or, for a long time, therefore it is a thoroughly established conviction.

The Nearness of God (vs. 151).—I. God is near us in the hour of human desertion. II. God is near us in the hour of temptation. III. The nearness of God is seen in the various experiences of our life and growth.—W. H. H. Murray.

Influence of God's Word.—A writer in the Sunday at Home says, "When I was at Calcutta in 1844, it happened that a Christian gentleman of high rank, and a great Oriental scholar, had engaged the rabbi of the synagogue to translate the New Testament into Hindee. Much intercourse necessarily followed. Months rolled on in this way, until the seed of the Word had taken root in a heart prepared to receive it. Silently did the Holy Spirit bring home saving truth to the mind of this Jewish priest, as from day to day he continued to search the Scriptures. Gradually light broke in upon an awakened soul, which was now fully prepared to appreciate the perfection and beauty of Gospel lore, until the Sun of Righteousness arose in full splendor, chasing away mists and darkness, constraining him to declare to several of his brethren that he had found the Messiah. Thou Art Near, O Lord.—How sweetly and how often has this thought been brought home to some forsaken and forgotten one! "When my father and my mother forsake me, the Lord will take me up," was the comfort of one in that deep affliction. And in the first outbreaking of the heart, how sweetly has the conviction come, like some whisper of peace, "I am with thee!" And I have no doubt that many and many a time in those hours of solitary prayer, when before the dawning of the morning, and before the night watches, or the Psalmist arose at midnight to commune with God, when no voice broke on the stillness, and every sound was hushed save the beating of his own heart, then had David heard the whisper of God's holy spirit, "I am near." Fear not, I am with thee."—Barton Bouchier.—Natural Law Without God.—There is something awful, cruel, in the inexorableness of natural law, if one cannot discern a Father back of it. Niagara leaves on the mind an impression of terror which sometimes well nigh swallows up the sense of its beauty, because of this suggestion of pitiless, remorseless power. To stand and see that current moving straight towards the precipice, with its tremendous volume, its resistless sweep, and then to think of it as mere brute force, obeying a fixed law, no pity in that boiling flood, compelled by the very law of its being to destroy you if you fall into its grasp—that is a picture of the order of the world without God. —M. R. Vincent.

[a] Eph. ii. 4—6.

"Before I knew the Word of God in spirit and in truth, for its great antiquity, its interesting narratives, its impartial biography, its pure morality, its sublime poetry, in a word, for its beautiful and wonderful vari-

153—156. (153) Consider, etc., the "affliction" intended is that which the psalmist suffers at the hands of his enemies, see vs. 107. (154) Plead, etc., Ps. xxxv. 1. deliver me, Polychr., "Avenge me." (155) far from, they are not at all in the way of receiving it. Only penitent souls ever even care for God's salvation. (156) Great,[a] marg. many.

The Spirit of the Bible (vs. 156).—This quickening according to the judgments, or Word of God, I consider the same thing as having the spirit of the Bible within us. I. Inquire what is that spirit? It is its moral peculiarity—the temper and spirit it breathes, and with which it imbues the mind that receives it. It is a spirit of truth, love, purity, humility, confidence, obedience. II. How may it be transferred? By frequent reading, true-hearted prayer, walking by its rules, depending on the Holy Spirit. III. The importance of being imbued with this spirit: it constitutes true nobility of soul, correct moral decisions, tranquility of mind, prepares for religious service, influences for good in the world, preparation for death, assurance of final acceptance.—R. Robbins.

Prayer for Help.—We must pray that God will help and deliver us, not after the device of our own brains, but after such wise as seemeth best unto his tender wisdom, or else that he will mitigate our pain, that our weakness may not utterly faint. Like as a sick person, although he doubt nothing of the faithfulness and tenderness of his physician, yet, for all that, desireth him to handle his wound as tenderly as possible, even so may we call upon God, that, if it be not against his honor and glory, he will vouchsafe to give some mitigation of the pain.—Otto Wermuellerus. Value of Sympathy.—We know that in afflictions it is some comfort to us to have our crosses known to those of whom we are assured that they love us: it mitigates our dolor when they mourn with us, albeit they be not able to help us. But the Christian hath a more solid comfort; to-wit. that in all his troubles the Lord beholds him; like a king, rejoicing to see his own servant wrestle with the enemy. He looks on with a merciful eye, pitying the infirmity of his own, when he sees it; and with a powerful hand ready to help them. But because many a time the cloud of our corruption cometh between the Lord and us, and lets us not see his helping hand, nor his loving face looking upon us, we have need to pray at such times with David, "Behold mine affliction."—William Cooper.

157—160. (157) Many, etc., Ps. iii. 1, 2, 3. (158) transgressors, R. V., "treacherous dealers." grieved, lit. felt loathing.[a] (159) Consider, etc., see vs. 153.[b] (160) Thy word, i. e. the "sum total" of Thy Word; "the aggregate of all the individual precepts of God's Word."

The Saint's Love.—I. Avowed. "Thou knowest all things," etc. II. Submitted. In humble insistance on its sincerity. In sense of its insufficiency. In prayer to God not to overlook it. III. Lost sight of in the sudden glory of God's loving-kindness. Where is my love now? IV. Recovered and humbly brought for quickening. Lord, I'll say no more about it: "Quicken me."—W. B. Haynes.

Study the Word.—Brethren, get acquainted with God's word and promise as soon as you can, and maintain that acquaintance everlastingly; and your knowledge of it shall not either go before, or go beyond its truth. Know it as soon and as long as you will or can, and you shall never find it tripping or failing; but you may after long experience of God say of it, "I have known of old that thou hast founded it for ever."—Anthony Tuckney.—Patrick Henry.—This distinguished man was a native of Virginia, of which state he became governor. He was eminent through life as a statesman and an orator. A little before his death, he remarked to a friend, who found him reading his Bible, "Here is a book worth more than all the other books which ever were printed; yet it is my misfortune never to have, till lately, found time to read it with proper attention and feeling."

161—164. (161) princes, prob. native rather than foreign princes are meant, vs. 23. standeth in awe, "dreads any violation of Thy law far above the force of prince or potentate."—Spk. Com. (162) thy word, i. e. the Scriptures as a whole; not limited to "thy promise." findeth . . spoil, Ju. v. 30; Is. ix. 3. (163) lying, wh. represents all kinds of falseness and deception.[c] (164) Seven times, a fig. of speech for "constantly, throughout the day."

Constant Praise.—I. Constant praise is demanded, because of the constancy of the divine judgment. II. Constant praise is due to God for the beneficence of His judgments. III. Constant praise is due to God for the clearness of His divine judgments. IV. Constant praise is due to God for the help He vouchsafes to keep His righteous judgments. V. Constant praise is due to God for the forgiveness He offers when we have broken His righteous judgments.—J. W. Burn.

The Bible.—

The Bible! hast thou ever heard
Of such a book? the author, God Himself;
The subject, God and man, salvation, life

[a] P. cxxxix. 21. "The recreants I survey, and loathing turn away." — Keble.

[b] Job i. 1. 8. "Celerinus in Cyprian's Epistles, acquaints a friend with his great grief for the apostacy of a woman through fear of persecution; which afflicted him so much, that at the feast of Easter he wept night and day, and resolved never to know a moment's delight, till through the mercy of God she should be recovered. — Charles Bridges.

[c] "What is specially meant is 'false faiths,' deviations fr. that religion wh. the Psalmist so constantly declares to be 'truth.' "—Jennings and Lowe.

"The most learned, acute, and diligent student cannot, in the longest life, obtain an entire knowledge of this one volume. The more deeply he works the mine, the richer and more abunetry, I preferred it to all other books; but since I have entered into its spirit, like the Psalmist, I love it above all things for its purity; and desire whatever else I read, it may tend to increase my knowledge of the Bible, and strengthen my affection for its Divine and Holy truths." — Sir W. Jones.

"His thoughts vibrate between his needs and God's compassions, between his own cleaving to the Law and its grand comprehensiveness and perpetuity." —Exp. B.

dant he finds the ore; and he will at least leave the world confessing that the more he studied the Scriptures, the fuller conviction he had of his own ignorance, and of their inestimable value." — Sir Walter Scott.

a "When God's law is loved, instead of being struggled against, the conscience is at peace, and the inward eye is clear; a man sees his duty and does it, free from those stumbling-blocks wh. are ever occasion of falling to others." —Perowne.

b Ge. xlix. 18.

"Most wondrous book! bright candle of the Lord! Star of Eternity! The only star by which the bark of man can navigate the sea of life, and gain the coast of bliss securely." — Pollok.

"You have stood at the fountain head of a stream of water, and admired while it bubbled up, and ran down in a clear little rivulet, till at length it swelled the mighty river. Such is the allusion here. The heart taught of God, cannot contain itself, but breaks out in praise and singing." — John Stephen.

And death—eternal life—eternal death—
Dread words! whose meaning has no end, no bounds!
Most wondrous book; bright candle of the Lord!—
This book—this holy book, on every line
Mark'd with the seal of high Divinity,
On every leaf bedew'd with drops of love
Divine; and with the eternal heraldry
And signature of God Almighty stamp'd
From first to last; this ray of sacred light,
This lamp, from off the everlasting throne,
Mercy took down, and in the night of Time
Stood, casting on the dark her gracious bow,
And evermore beseeching men, with tears
And earnest sighs, to read, believe, and live.—R. Pollok.

165—168. (165) nothing, R. V., "they have none occasion of stumbling."[a] (166) hoped, waiting anxiously.[b] (167) hath kept, in will and intention I have been faithful unto thee. (168) before thee, i. e. fully known to Thee.

Perfect Peace.—I. The law of God should be regarded with love. II. Love to the law is productive of great peace. Peace with God through the blood of reconciliation: peace with self by good conscience and suppression of evil desires: peace with men by charity. III. The peace which springs from love to the law is a security against stumbling: "nothing shall offend them"; neither the daily cross (Mark x. 21, 22); nor the fiery trial (Mark iv. 7); nor the humbling doctrine (John vi. 60, 66, etc.).—C. A. Davis.

Peace With God.—I reverence hundreds and hundreds of men who don't hold my opinion; but when I lie dying I don't want their speculations to rest upon. I want that Book for a pillow, for that Book rests on the nature of things. That is the only honest Book in the world. That tells me what I am; that tells me how to get into the mood of peace with God; that is what I wanted on a cold winter's night as I rolled forty feet down a precipice, expecting instant death; and if that is what I wanted then, it's what I want any time, isn't it? What is true in our highest moments is true in all moments. And what we see only by flashes is true the whole day long, the whole year long, life through, eternity through. If there is any certainty, it is certainty for all time and places. Now it is certain that when I lie dying I want that Book for a pillow, and, among other things in a pillow, I want a certainty that I have attained similarity of feeling with God, and love what He loves, and hate what He hates. That will be enough to give me peace. What! What! I am depending on my own righteousness when I make this my pillow! I beg your pardon, that is not what I say. If my life is to be my pillow, I must put my whole life into the pillow. There would be more than one thorn in the pillow if I were to put my whole life in it. Is there anybody here who can put his whole life in his pillow and rest in peace? You are going to depend on your own righteousness? Put your whole life into the pillow, and then put your head on it, and it will not be the softest kind of a support for a dying hour. You may do as you please, but I, for one, feel very sure I am going hence, that I want to go hence in peace, that I cannot go in peace unless I love what God loves, and hate what God hates.—Joseph Cook.

169—172. (169) cry, a mournful, supplicatory cry, as vs. 170. (170) word, of assurance and promise. (171) praise, of thankfulness and renewed trust. hast taught, better, "dost teach." (172) tongue, i. e. return praise for the fulfillment of God's promises.

An Interview.—If you wish for an interview with a man of very high rank, first you come near his house, then you ask for information and instruction as to his intentions, then you ask permission to enter, lest you should be driven away and refused admittance. Knock therefore at the door of the heavenly palace: knock, not with your bodily hand, but with the right hand of prayer. For the voice can knock as well as the hand. And when you have knocked, see how you go in, lest after entering you should not get the sight of the King. For there are many who make their way into palaces, and do not at once get an audience of an earthly sovereign, but have to watch constantly to obtain an interview at last. Nor have they the choice of the opportunity, they come when they are sent for, and then present their petition, if they wish to be favorably received.—Ambrose.

173—176. (173) help me, R. V., "be ready to help," out of present distress. (174) have longed, and do still long. (175) judgments, let the course of thy providence be such as to help me to praise thee. (176) gone astray, it would not be consistent with the rest of the Ps. to interpret this of wilful wanderings.[a] Alexander, "I wander like a lost sheep."

[a] "The fig. seems in this place to denote the helpless condition of the Psalmist, without protectors, exposed to enemies, in the midst of whom he wanders, not knowing where to find rest and shelter." —Perowne.

"Liveliness of soul is the Spirit's gift, and it will show itself in abounding praises." —Henry Law.

Thy Hand.—I. Thy reconciling hand: "stretched out." II. Thy comforting hand; like that which touched Daniel and John. III. Thy supplying hand. "Thou openest thy hand," etc. IV. Thy protecting hand: "all his saints are in thy hand": Deut. xxxiii. 3. "Great Shepherd of the sheep." V. Thy supporting hand: "I will uphold thee." VI. Thy governing hand: "all my times are in thy hand." VII. Thy chastening hand: "Thy hand was heavy upon me." VIII. Thy prospering hand: "the hand of the Lord was with," etc.—W. Jackson.

Seek Thy Servant.—I do not think that there could possibly be a more appropriate conclusion of such a Psalm as this, so full of the varied experience and the ever-changing frames and feelings even of a child of God, in the sunshine and the cloud, in the calm and in the storm, than this ever-clinging sense of his propensity to wander, and the expression of his utter inability to find his way back without the Lord's guiding hand to restore him; and at the same time with it all, his fixed and abiding determination never to forget the Lord's commandments. What an insight into our poor wayward hearts does this verse give us—not merely liable to wander, but ever wandering, ever losing our way, ever stumbling on the dark mountains, even while cleaving to God's commandments! But at the same time what a prayer does it put into our mouths, "Seek thy servant,"—"I am thine, save me." Yes, blessed be God! there is One mighty to save. "Kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation."—Barton Bouchier.

"Our sense of having wandered should ever be accompanied with the tender thought that the lost sheep is a sheep, beloved and sought for by the great Shepherd, in whose search, not in our own docile following of His footsteps, lies our firmest hope." — Exp. B.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND TWENTIETH.

author unknown date. — Late exile.

1—4. "prob. intended to be sung by the caravans of pilgrims 'going up' to keep the yearly feasts at Jerusalem."—Perowne. (1) I cried, i.e. I have cried in the past, and do now cry still. The past and the present experiences are combined. (2) lying lips,[a] this may refer to some personal enemy; or "the Psalmist may here personify his nation, and deal with the malicious slanders of surrounding nationalities." (3) given, or added; "What calamities shall be heaped upon thee?" What punishment will God inflict upon thee for thy false speaking? (4) Sharp arrows, such as a warrior uses. These figures borrowed from nomad life answer the question of vs. 3. God's wrath is to be poured out upon these treacherous neighbors. coals of juniper, the broom, or retem. Still used by the Arabs as charcoal, and said to retain their heat an unusual time.[b]

The first of the "Songs of Ascents."

A cry of distress because of oppressive neighbors.

[a] Ne. vi. 1—19.

[b] 1 Ki. xix. 4; Job xxx. 4.

Slander.—In the drop of venom which distils from the sting of the smallest insect, or the spike of the nettle-leaf, there is concentrated the quintessence of a poison so subtle that the microscope cannot distinguish it, and yet so virulent that it can inflame the blood, irritate the whole constitution, and convert day and night into restless misery; so it is sometimes with the words of the slanderer.—F. W. Robertson.—Slander.—The special point to be drawn out in the mention of "coals of juniper," is the unextinguishableness of such fuel. There is a marvelous story in the Midrash which illustrates this very well. Two men in the desert sat down under a juniper tree, and gathered sticks of it wherewith they cooked their food. After a year they passed over the same spot where was the dust of what they had burned; and, remarking that it was now twelve months since they had the fire, they walked fearlessly upon the dust, and their feet were burned by the "coals" beneath it, which were still unextinguished.—H. T. Armfield.

The punishment of the slanderous tongue is appropriate; for itself is a sharp sword." — Spk. Com.

"A lie," says Carlyle, "should be trampled on and extinguished wherever found. I am for fumigating the atmosphere when I suspect that falsehood, like pestilence, breathes around me."

5—7. (5) Mesech,[c] the country bet. the Black Sea and the Caspian.

[c] Ge. x. 2; Eze. xxvii. 13.

Kedar, one of the predatory hordes roaming the Arabian desert.[d] Mesech and Kedar as notoriously barbarous people are prob. used to represent the hostile tribes that surrounded Israel, the Samaritans, Ammonites, etc. (6) My soul, or life. hath long, etc., i. e. "too long." The psalmist is tired of the effort required to live peacably among such rude barbarians. (7) for peace, lit. I am peace: his peaceful counsels are overruled.

The Christian in the World (vs. 5).—I. It is of little use to cry "Woe is me," better meet the difficulty and glorify God in the midst of it. II. Be holy, and so rebut the charge of inconsistency. III. Seek to be useful as well as consistent.—Spurgeon.

Peace.—What holy and gentle delight is associated with the very name of peace! Peace resting upon our bosom, and soothing all its cares: peace resting upon our households, and folding all the members in one loving embrace: peace resting upon our country, and pouring abundance from her golden horn: peace resting upon all nations, and binding them together with the threefold cord of a common humanity, a common interest, and a common religion! The man who hates peace is a dishonor to the race, an enemy to his brother, and a traitor to his God. He hates Christ, who is the Prince of peace. He hates Christians, who are men of peace.—N. McMichael.

d "The two names denote the rude and brutal neighbors, fr. whose molestations the Psalmist was suffering.'' — Jennings and Lowe.

Cicero speaks of war, "contention by violence, as belonging to the brutes." "All our noble studies, all our reputation at the bar, all our professional assiduities are stricken from our hands as soon as the alarm of war is sounded. Wisdom itself, the mistress of affairs, is driven from the field."

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIRST.

author,— unknown, date,— after the restoration.

Subject, the consolation of Divine protection.

1—4. (1) hills, better, "mountains"; the district round about Jerusalem, of which Mounts Zion and Moriah were sacred peaks. So it figures the protection of Jehovah, who dwelt there. from whence, better treated as a question, whence, etc.? (2) made . . earth,[a] i. e. which is omnipotent, so contrasts with local gods, and man-made idols. (3) He will not, a description of "the joyous prospects wrapped up in the poet's hope in Jehovah."—Delitzsch. (4) neither slumber nor sleep, the language of firm and unquestioning confidence. God's delayings are never His slumberings.[b]

Our Keeper.—I. The Lord's care is personal in its objects. The keeper of Israel is the keeper of the individual. God deals with us individually. 1. This is implied in his care of the church, which is composed of individuals. 2. It is involved in the nature of our religion, which is a personal thing. 3. It is affirmed in Scripture. Examples; promises; experiences. "He loved me," etc., etc. 4. It is confirmed by experience. II. The Lord's care is unwearied in its exercise: "Will not slumber." 1. He is never unacquainted with our condition. 2. He is never indifferent to it. 3. He is never weary of helping us. We sometimes think he sleeps, but this is our folly.—Frederick J. Benskin.

Trust in Our Keeper.—A poor woman, as the Eastern story has it, came to the Sultan one day, and asked compensation for the loss of some property. "How did you lose it?" said the monarch. "I fell asleep," was the reply, "and a robber entered my dwelling." "Why did you fall asleep?" "I fell asleep because I believed that you were awake." The Sultan was so much delighted with the answer of the woman, that he ordered her loss to be made up. But what is true, only by a legal fiction, of human governments, that they never sleep, is true in the most absolute sense with reference to the divine government. We can sleep in safety because our God is ever awake. We are safe because he never slumbers. Jacob had a beautiful picture of the ceaseless care of Divine Providence on the night when he fled from his father's house. The lonely traveler slept on the ground, with the stones for his pillow, and the sky for his canopy. He had a wondrous vision of a ladder stretching from earth to Heaven, and on which angels were seen ascending and descending. And he heard Jehovah saying to him, "Behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest."—N. McMichael.

a Ps. cxv. 15, cxxiv. 8, cxxxiv. 3, cxlvi. 6.

b "Possibly allusion is made to the nightly encampment, and the sentries of the caravan."—Perowne.

"The natives of India used to say that when Sir Henry Laurence looked twice to heaven and then to earth he knew what to do."

"Sleep without or fear or fright Our Father wakes! Good-night! good-night!"
—Korner.

5—8. (5) shade,[c] a very forcible figure in that burning climate. right hand, the position taken by the friend, or advocate. Protection was especially needed on the right hand, as the side which no shield guarded. (6) not smite, as with fatal sunstroke.[d] moon by night, this may be a c Ps. xci. 1; Is. xxv. 4, xxxii. 2.

d 2 Ki. iv. 18—20; Jonah iv.

poetical extension of the fig., but poss. reference may be intended to the baneful influence of sleeping in the moon's rays.[e] (7) all evil, evil of all kinds. (8) going .. in, "all thy business and intercourse with men." "God protects all that the man is and that he does." See De. xxiii. 6.

God's Protection.—A celebrated traveler—after an absence of three years, during which he had walked across the continent of Africa from east to west, through vast regions never before trodden by the foot of the white man—recently received an enthusiastic welcome home. As he approached the quiet Kentish village where he had spent his boyish days, his first act, before entering his much-loved home, was to pass through the portals of the church where his aged father ministered, and, humbly kneeling, offer his devout thanksgiving to that God who had watched over and preserved him in all his wanderings. Among other appropriate Scriptures, this Psalm was read. It was a touching scene! Many hearts heaved with emotion, and many tears were shed, as the reader, in trembling accents, uttered the words, "The Lord is thy keeper. The Lord is thy shade upon thy right hand. The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night. The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore." It was a graceful and fitting acknowledgment of that Divine Goodness which had safely conducted the weary, sun-burnt traveler through all the perils of his great and adventurous journey.—Geo. Barlow.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SECOND.

author unknown
date,—
soon after the restoration.

The song of a pilgrim just returned from Babylon to Jerusalem.

1—5. (1) house of the Lord, the term is suited to the temple rather than the tabernacle. (2) shall stand, lit. have stood, and are still standing; mentions where the persons were standing who exhorted the psalmist in vs. 1 to accompany them to the temple. They had all "come up" to Jerusalem, and were now standing within one of the roomy city-gates, when from one to another the word was passed, "Let us go at once to the temple."—Cheyne. (3) builded, etc., perhaps with reference to its being rebuilt after the exile. compact, with allusion to the conformation of the ground.[a] Jerusalem had risen again out of its ruined and dismembered condition, the breaches and gaps are done away with (Isa. lviii. 12), it stands there as a city closely mortised together, a city in which house joins on to house. Thus the poet has seen it, and the recollection fills him with delight.—Delitzsch. (4) go up, to festival. unto the testimony, or as a testimony, i. e. a custom or law. (5) thrones of judgment, in this fig. the fact is indicated that Jerusalem was the center of government, and of worship, for the whole land.[b] house of David, the Davidic dynasty.

Joy in Worship.—I. Joy in prospect of religious worship. 1. Because of the instruction we receive. 2. Because of the exercises in which we engage. 3. Because of the society in which we mingle. 4. Because of the sacred interests we promote. II. Joy in the invitation to religious worship. 1. Because it shows others are interested in the service of God. 2. Because it shows their interest in us. 3. Because it furthers the interest of Zion.—F. J. Benskin.

View of Jerusalem.—Dr. Clarke, in his travels, speaking of the companies that were traveling from the East to Jerusalem, represents the procession as being very long, and, after climbing over the extended and heavy ranges of hills that bounded the way, some of the foremost at length reached the top of the last hill, and, stretching up their hands in gestures of joy, cried out, "The Holy City! The Holy City!"—and fell down and worshiped; while those who were behind pressed forward to see. So the dying Christian, when he gets on the last summit of life, and stretches his vision to catch a glimpse of the heavenly city, may cry out of its glories, and incite those who are behind to press forward to the sight.—Edward Payson.

Jerusalem.—
Lo, towered Jerusalem salutes the eyes!
A thousand pointing fingers tell the tale;

[e] "Even the moon's rays may become insupportable, may affect the eyes injuriously, and produce inflammation of the brain."
—Delitzsch.
"God has not led me so tenderly thus far to forsake me at the very gate of heaven."—Adoniram Judson.
"The name given to persons of disordered intellect, lunatics, arose fr. the widespread belief in the effects of the moon on those who were exposed to its influence." — Perowne.

[a] "Those deep ravines wh. separate Jerus. fr. the rocky plateau of wh. it forms a part, acted as its natural defence, but must also have determined its natural boundaries. The expression of compactness was still more appropriate to the original city if, as seems probable, the valley of Tyropean formed in earlier times a fosse within a fosse, shutting in Zion and Moriah into one compact mass, not more than half a mile in breadth."—Dean Stanley.

[b] De. xvii. 8, 9. "Jerusalem was compactly built; every rood of ground, every foot of frontage, was valuable; house was joined to house; those who had gardens had them beyond the city walls, among the 'paradises,' of the valley of Jehoshaphat."

—Samuel Cox.

a "The alliteration and play upon the words peace, Jerusalem, prosperity, cannot be preserved."
—Spk. Com.

"To wish and struggle for the growth of an external organization called a Church, disregarding the Presence which gives it all its sanctity, is no uncommon fault in some who think that they are actuated by 'zeal for the Lord,' when it is a much more earthly flame that burns in them."
—Maclaren.

"Jerusalem!" a thousand voices cry,
"All hail, Jerusalem!" hill, down, and dale Catch the glad sounds, and shout "Jerusalem, all hail."
—Torquato Tasso.

6—9. (6) peace, the sign of prosperity; or, "Give hearty salutation to Jerusalem." There may be a designed reference to Jerusalem, as containing in its name the word Salem, or peace.[a] Jerusalem is the heart of all Israel as surely as Jehovah who has placed His name there is the God of all Israel. they shall, better rendered as a prayer—May they prosper. (7) walls, thy vallum; thy wall and trench round it—thy bulwarks. palaces, comp. Ps. xlviii. 13. (8) brethren and companions, the people at large. (9) house, or temple.

The Church a Palace.—1. Intended for the great King. 2. Inhabited by the royal family. 3. Adorned with regal splendor. 4. Guarded by special power. 5. Known as the court of the blessed and only potentate.—Spurgeon.

The Song of Ascents.—The fifteen Psalms (cxx.—cxxxiv.) have a common heading, which is translated "Songs of Degrees," "Songs of Ascents," or "Songs of Steps." They constitute together "a Little Psalter," which contains indications of a formal arrangement. Of the title itself different explanations are given. Some regard the degrees (ma'alôth) as "steps," and accept a rabbinical explanation, that the Psalms were written for chanting upon fifteen steps, which led from the Court of the Women in the temple to the Court of the Men. But there is no sufficient evidence of the existence of these steps. Others, translating ma'alôth by "ascents," suggest that they are Psalms composed for the Jews to chant on their ascent from Babylon to Jerusalem at the return from the Captivity. But the plural form is thus unaccounted for. Under these circumstances, recent critics mostly acquiesce in the view that the Psalms were written for the pilgrims, who annually went up to Jerusalem at the three great feasts, to chant upon their journeys.—Pul. Com.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-THIRD.

author,—unknown: date, poss. that indicated in Nehemiah ii. 19, iv. 1—4.

Prayer for Divine aid in distress.

1—4. (1) lift .. eyes, as Ps. cxxi. 1.[a] in the heavens, and so art unmoved by the excitements and troubles of men. Thou art above all and dost control. (2) unto the hand, the Orientals prefer silence, and often indicate their wishes merely by movements of the hand. (3) exceedingly filled, or "have long been filled."[b] (4) proud, or arrogant ones, "irresponsible tyrants." Self-complacent ones, who disregard God's law.

a "This is a deep sigh of a pained heart, wh. looks round on all sides, and seeks friends, protectors, and comforters, but can find none. Therefore it says, I come to Thee, O my God."—Luther.

b Ne. ii. 19, iv. 4.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FOURTH.

author,—unknown: date, prob. post-exilic.

Praise to the Deliverer from peril.

1—5. (1) the Lord, or Jehovah. on our side, so ready to help us in a time of exceeding need. (2) rose up, in active efforts to destroy us. (3) swallowed, see Ps. lv. 15; Pr. i. 12.[a] quick, R. V., "alive." (4) waters, comp. fig. in Ps. cxliv. 7. stream, swollen mountain stream. over our soul, Polychr. "gone over our head." (5) proud waters, i. e. "proudly swelling;" the added epithet denotes the insolence of the enemies.[b]

Durie's Psalm.—In the year 1582, this Psalm was sung on a remarkable occasion in Edinburgh. An imprisoned minister, John Durie, had been set free, and was met and welcomed on entering the town by two hundred of his friends. The number increased till he found himself in the midst of a company of two thousand, who began to sing as they moved up the long High Street, "Now Israel may say," etc. They sang in four parts with deep solemnity, all joining in the well-known tune and Psalm. They were much moved themselves, and so were all who heard; and one of the chief persecutors is said to have been more alarmed at this sight and song than at anything he had seen in Scotland.—Andrew A. Bonar.

a Comp. Nu. xvi. 32, 33.

"Here, however, the poet rather compares the enemy to a furious beast whose jaws are opened wide to swallow his prey." — Jennings and Lowe.

b Ps. xciii. 3.

6—8. (6) prey, recurring to the fig. of the wild beast, as vs. 3.[c] (7) as a bird, Ps. lxxxiv. 3; Pr. i. 17, vi. 5. we are escaped,[d] the original expresses the deep joy felt at the escape. (8) name of, the power and majesty due to the character of Jehovah.[e] made .. earth, Ps. cxxi. 2, cxxxiv. 3.

Help in God.—The Romans in a great distress were put so hard to it, that they were fain to take the weapons out of the temples of their gods to fight with them; and so they overcame. And this ought to be the course of every good Christian, in times of public distress, to fly to the weapons of the church, prayers and tears. The Spartans' walls were their spears, the Christian's walls are his prayers. His help standeth in the name of the Lord who hath made both heaven and earth.—Edmund Calamy. The Spanish Armada.—When the Spaniards, on the defeat of their Invincible Armada, stung with disappointment and wishing to detract from the honor which our brave defenders had acquired, exclaimed that the English had little resaon to boast—for if the elements had not fought against them, they would certainly have conquered us—the enlarged and vivid mind of Queen Elizabeth improved by the hint. She commanded a medal to be struck, representing the armada scattered and sinking in the background, and in the front the British fleet riding triumphant, with the following passage as a motto round the medal: "Thou didst blow thy wind and the sea covered them." It becomes us to say in reference to this, as well as many other national deliverances, "Blessed be the Lord, who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth."—Cheever.

c Illus. by Nehemiah's experiences. Ne. iv. 1—23, vi. 1—19.

d "Complete escape is indicated by the breaking of the net."—Fausset.

e With this verse the French Protestant Church always begins its public worship — words which well become the children of the Huguenots.—Ker.

"By desiring what is perfectly good, even when we don't quite know what it is and cannot do what we would, we are part of the Divine power against evil — widening the skirts of light, and making the struggle with darkness narrow-." — Middlemarch.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIFTH.

author,— unknown: date, as prev. Ps.

Jehovah the defence of His people.

1—5. (1) mount Zion, the emblem of permanency. The mountain itself stands firm, bec. Jehovah sits enthroned there; and it is girdled by a wall of mountains. removed, R. V., "moved." abideth, standeth fast: lit. sitteth.[a] (2) round about, not strictly true that Jerus. is encircled by higher hills, but poetically true that mountains form a bulwark about her.[b] Jerusalem is actually shut in by mountains only on the eastern side. (3) rod, etc., Polychr., "He lets not the sceptre of outrage;" reference may be to "the Persian rule under favor of wh. the Samaritans and others annoyed the Jews."[c] rest, i. e. remain. lot, etc., the possession of the nation. "Godless domination over the land of Israel shall not be permitted to last." lest .. iniquity, be tempted to apostasy. (4) Do good, i. e. do it quickly. (5) turn aside, lit. bend their crooked paths. Not those who go away into heathenism, but those who fall away into apostasy; Neh. vi. 10—14; xiii. 28—31. peace .. Israel, rend. as expression of a wish and prayer.

Safety of Believers in Seeming Perils.—A British subject may be safe although surrounded by enemies in a distant land—not that he has strength to contend alone against armed thousands, but because he is a subject of our Queen. A despot on his throne, a horde of savages in their desert, have permitted a helpless traveler to pass unharmed, like a lamb among lions—although, like lions looking on a lamb, they thirsted for his blood—because they knew his sovereign's watchfulness, and feared his sovereign's power. The feeble stranger has a charmed life in the midst of his enemies, because a royal arm unseen encompasses him as with a shield. The power thus wielded by an earthly throne may suggest and symbolize the perfect protection of Omnipotence. A British subject's confidence in his Queen may rebuke the feeble faith of a Christian.—W. Arnot. This Psalm was frequently sung in the hours of danger during the Scottish Reformation period. It was in frequent use also with the French Protestants, when hiding from the dragonnades of Louis XIV., and fleeing to the frontiers for escape. Every verse and word seemed made for such emergencies.—Ker.

a Ps. xciii. 1, civ. 5.

b Dean Stanley thinks the reference may be to the more distant hills of Nebi Samwil, El Ram, and Tel el Fulil.

c "The Sam. contrived to gain over a considerable part, and that the most influential part, of the Jews to their side. The fear was, as the next clause shows, lest in this state of things the defection should spread still more widely."
—Perowne.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SIXTH.

author,— unknown: date, as prev. Ps.

Thanksgiving for return fr. captivity.

1—3. (1) turned, etc., i. e. changed the captivity of Zion to freedom. dream, could not at once receive such joyful news as true.[d] "New-born joy cannot realize its own existence." (2) singing, Heb. rinnâh, a joyful cry. they .. heathen, i. e. some of the heathen. done great things, as prophesied, Joel ii. 21. them, lit. "these." (3) whereof, etc., better omit "whereof," and read "We are joyful."

A Comparison and a Contrast.—I. The saved like them that dream. 1. In the strangeness of their experience. 2. In the ecstasy of their joy. II. The saved unlike them that dream. 1. In the reality of their experience. Dreams are unsubstantial things, but "the Lord turned"—an actual fact. 2. In their freedom from disappointment. No awakening to find it "but a dream:" see Isaiah xxix. 8. 3. In the endurance of their joy. The joy of dreams is soon forgotten, but this is "everlasting joy." —W. H. J. Page.

Deliverance.—The deliverance was so unlooked for, and came upon them with such a surprise that it seemed more an illusion than a reality. But when the full meaning of the event dawned upon them, their joy knew no bounds. A similar incident is recorded by Livy, when the Romans, having conquered Philip of Macedon, restored liberty to all the Grecian cities. The proclamation was made by the herald in the midst of the circus when a vast multitude of the Greeks were assembled to witness the Isthmian games. The people were so stunned with the news that they could scarcely believe their own ears. They were "like them that dream." But when, at their request, the proclamation was repeated, and the glad tidings thus confirmed, they shouted and clapped their hands with such vigor as showed how heartily they appreciated the blessing of liberty. The Lord often surprises and gladdens His people with His marvelous deliverances.—George Barlow.

4—6. (4) Turn .. captivity, restore those of us who are still captives. "The poet prays for those who have not yet returned to their country." as the streams, wh. are restored and filled with the heavy rains. Polychr., "like channels in the dry land." south, i. e. the Negeb, or southern part of the country.[a] (5) sow in tears, "the work of establishing the new Israel may be full of pain and grief, but future generations will enjoy the blessed results."—Cheyne. in joy, or with shoutings of a joyous harvest home.[b] (6) weepeth, at every step, because he must cast in all the store. precious seed, better, "a handful of seed."[c] "The quantity of the seed a sower draws, or trails along,[d] at one time."

Sowing and Reaping.—All human life as related to the larger life of eternity is a sowing-time; and largely a sowing-time of tears. Life is a season of preparatory discipline for immortality; and the experience through which this discipline is perfected is often severe. And we may lay it down as a general law that the sowing-time, whether it be in agriculture, or in learning, or in morals, or in experience, is a hard, painful, uncomfortable time; often a time of risk and danger. The thought of the Psalm is rich in suggestions to us. In our own life, in the condition of society, in the aspects of the times, both civil and religious, there is much that savors of the tearful sowing-time. There is but one thing for us to do; and that is to take up our seed, and in God's strength and with God's good cheer in our hearts, go forth to the sowing, be the ground good or stony, be the prospect of harvest never so remote. The way to the harvest lies straight through the thickest of these trials and discouragements. We shall reap, only as we shall resolutely take up our lot, make the most and best of our position, squarely face our responsibilities, let the full pressure of our burdens come down on our shoulders, and work on for Christ's sake, whether men will hear or forbear. Not in spite of these, but by means of these the harvest is to come; and if we shun the weeping we shall miss the reaping.—Marvin R. Vincent.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SEVENTH.

author,— unknown:
date,— time of the rebuilt temple.
God's blessing alone brings prosperity.

1—5. (1) build the house, or found the family,[a] and state. waketh, i. e. keepeth awake to watch.[b] Without the blessing of God the sleepless anxiety of statesmen is in vain. (2) sit up late, R. V., "and so late take rest," so artificially lengthening the natural day, in order to do more work. bread of sorrows, R. V., "toil," i. e. of wearisome and exhausting labors, due to feverish anxiety and undue straining. so, just as cerd "When the edict of Cyrus went forth allowing the captives to return, it was so unexpected, so miraculous, that we deemed the accomplishment of ancient prophecy (Jer. xxv. 12, xxix. 10) a dream."

—Spk. Com.
"It is more prob. that the poet means to say that the incredible joy of release made the restored captives feel as if they were in blissful dream." — Jennings and Lowe.

a "The streams of the returning population of Israel, wh. had been frozen up in the north, and were thawed by the genial ray of God's mercy, and flowed back in vernal joy, to replenish the dry channels of their ancient homes, and to refresh the whole region with prosperity." — Wordsworth.

b For contrast of sowing and reaping, see Hag. ii. 3—9, 17—19.

c "The rhythm of the original in vs. 6 is noticeable. The slow, sad motion of the sower going forth to his work of sorrowful anticipation, is contrasted with his quick glad return, bearing his sheaves."
—Spk. Com.

d Am. ix. 13.

a De. xxv. 9; 1 Sa. ii. 35.

b Ps. cxxi. 3, 4.

tainly; nay, more surely. "Thus giveth He to His beloved, even in sleep."—Delitzsch. God's "beloved" are not exempted from the great law of labor which lies upon all, but the sting is taken from it when they can leave all results in a Father's hand, witih absolute trust in His wisdom and goodness.—Perowne. (3) heritage, etc.; His special gift, a possession.[c] (4) children of the youth, i. e. born in his early manhood.[d] (5) quiver full, the symbol of abundant resources for the battle-field of life. speak .. gate, nobly defending their father when he has a controversy. "Girt with a phalanx of lusty sons, a father can defy all dangers abroad and at home."—Cheyne.

Labor and Rest (vss. 1, 2).—Two subjects for meditation. I. Labor without God. 1. The possibility of working without God; 2. The fruitlessness of working without God. II. Repose from God. 1. Repose is a generally recognized blessing; 2. The repose of the true worker is a special blessing.—Thomas.

Psalm 127.—It is a Psalm that needs to be read very often in our feverish, over-organized age, when we are all president or secretary of something or other, and forget sometimes how important is the home, and how many are God's gifts to His beloved "while they sleep."—W. E. Barton. God Acknowledged.—It is the custom, in the valleys of the canton of Berne, whenever the father of a family builds a house, and the walls are raised to their full height, to request the minister of the parish to pray to God inside. The workmen and such as are to assist in finishing the house, meet together and unite in thanking the Lord for His care hitherto, and entreat a continuance of it through the more dangerous part that remains. "This prayer," observes M. Paulet, the pastor of Coutelary, "when made in faith, redoubles one's strength, and removes all fear of danger." "If God be for us, who can be against us?" observed an old carpenter to this same minister, when he advised him not to expose himself too incautiously. A blessing terminates this pious ceremony; the pastor retires, the workmen return to their labors, and the noise of hammers begins to be heard again.

c "It must be remembered that by Orientals abundant offspring, and esp. male offspring, is regarded as the chief of blessings." — Jennings and Lowe.

d "Such would naturally grow up a comfort and protection to their father in his old age." —Perowne.

"Along with Psalms vi. and cxlii, this was chosen for herself by Catherine de Medici. She could scarcely have selected any more unsuitable."

"No cheating nor bargaining will ever get a single thing out of nature's 'establishment' at half-price." —Ruskin.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-EIGHTH.

author,— unknown: date, as prev. Ps.

1—3. (1) Blessed is, as Ps. i. 1. feareth .. walketh, "abstains fr. breaches of the prohibitory commandments of the Decalogue, and performs the positive ones."[e] (2) labour, i. e. the fruit of thy labor.[f] happy, etc., better, "happy thou, and well is it with thee." (3) by the sides, R. V., "in the innermost parts." Women's apartments in the Eastern house are separate and secluded. The vine is the usual emblem of fruitfulness, and suggests also the idea of dependence, support. olive plants, the emblem of vigorous, healthy, joyous life.[g]

The domestic blessings of the true worshiper of God.

By the Sides of the House.—She keeps to the house: she is a home bird. Some imagine that she is like a vine which is nailed up to the house-wall; but they have no such custom in Palestine, neither is it pleasant to think of a wife as growing up by a wall, and as bound to the very bricks and mortar of her husband's dwelling. No, she is a fruitful vine, and a faithful housekeeper; if you wish to find her, she is within the house: she is to be found both inside and outside the home, but her chief usefulness is in the inner side of the dwelling, which she adorns. Eastern houses usually have an open square in the center, and the various rooms are ranged around the sides,—there shall the wife be found, busy in one room or another, as the hour of the day demands. She keeps at home, and so keeps the home. It is her husband's house, and she is her husband's; as the text puts it—"thy wife," and "thy house;" but by her loving care her husband is made so happy that he is glad to own her as an equal proprietor with himself, for he is hers, and the house is hers too.—Spurgeon.

e So the Rabbis, Ab. Ezra and Kimchi explain the passage.

f Le. xxvi. 16; De. xxviii. 33; see also Hag. i. 11, ii. 17.

g "The similitude in the text is taken fr. a multitude of young olive shoots clustering round the parent tree." — Spk. Com., Thomson.

4—6. (4) thus, i. e. thus variously and abundantly, in labor and in home. (5) out of Zion, regarded as the earthly dwelling-place and throne of God.[a] thou shalt see, better rend. as a wish, "Mayest thou look upon." "The welfare of the family and the welfare of the State are indissolubly connected." (6) children's children, sometimes even to a Ps. iii. 4, xiv. 7, xx. 2, cxxxiv. 3.

"Long life crowns all other temporal favors." — Fausset.

"This is the pride, the glory of a man,
To train obedient children in his house,
Prompt on his enemies t' avenge his wrongs,
And with the father's zeal in honor high
To hold his friends.
—Sophocles.

author,—unknown:
date, early restoration.

The cry of the persecuted nation.

[c] Is. xlvii. 12—15; Je. ii. 2, iii. 25; Ho. ii. 15, xi. 1.

[d] "The enemies having tried all ways, still never accomplished their purposes, bec. God disappointed their hopes, and baffled their attempts."
—Calvin.

[e] "The lashes inflicted upon the back of the writhing slave by a cruel master are compared to the long furrows."

"As the man of pleasure is often more miserable than most men are; so the sceptic, in a vain attempt to be wise beyond what is permitted to man, plunges into a darkness more deplorable than the common herd whom he would fain instruct."
—Colton.

author,—unknown:
date,—late in the exile.

A cry to God for the forgiveness of sin.

[a] Ps. lxix. 2, 14.

[b] Job x. 14, xiv. 16, 17; Ps. xc. 8.

[c] "The image seems, in the first instance, drawn from a flight in battle before a too-powerful foe."—Spk. Com.

the fourth generation. peace, etc., as close of Ps. cxxv. As the legitimate result of such domestic life the whole nation would be prosperous.

Two Priceless Mercies.—I. The house of God a blessing to our house. It is connected with our own salvation, edification, consolation, etc. It is our hope for the conversion of our children and servants, etc. It is the place of their education, and for the formation of helpful friendships, etc. II. Our house a blessing to God's house. Personal interest in the church, hospitality, generosity, service, etc. Children aiding holy work. Wife useful, etc.—Spurgeon.

The Warrior Playing with His Children.—The warlike Agesilaus was, within the walls of his own house, one of the most tender and playful of men. He used to join with his children in all their innocent gambols, and was once discovered by a friend showing them how to ride upon a hobby-horse. When his friend expressed some surprise at beholding the great Agesilaus so employed, "Wait," said the hero, "till you are yourself a father, and if you then blame me, I will give you liberty to proclaim this act of mine to all the world."—Cheever.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-NINTH.

1—4. (1) Many a time, marg. much, or grievously. afflicted me, or have been adversaries to me. youth, the period spent in Egyptian bondage was so regarded.[c] (2) not prevailed, Polychr., "not proved my master;" this is the point of the Ps.,[d] comp. 2 Cor. iv. 8—10. (3) plowers, etc., ploughing is made a fig. of scourging.[e] See another use of the fig. in Mi. iii. 12; Je. xxvi. 18. long their furrows, i. e. lengthened out their tortures. (4) cords, by wh. the wearied steer was yoked to the plough. Cord is general image of slavery.

Israel's Song of Triumph.—I. The Lord is righteous in permitting these afflictions to come upon His people. II. He is righteous in keeping His promise of deliverance to His people. III. He is righteous in visiting the enemies of His people with judgment.—W. H. J. Page.

Long Furrows.—Well did Latimer say that there was no busier ploughman in all the world than the devil: whoever makes short furrows, he does not. Whoever baulks and shirks, he is thorough in all that he does. Whoever stops work at sundown, he never does. He and his children plough like practiced ploughmen; but they prefer to carry on their pernicious work upon the saints behind their backs, for they are as cowardly as they are cruel.—Spurgeon.

5—8. (5) Let them, or prophetically, they will be. Zion, the seat of Jehovah. (6) grass .. housetops, "on ill-compacted flat Eastern roofs grass is often found springing into a short-lived existence." Such grass withers prematurely for lack of root. (7) mower, etc., R. V., "reaper;" no harvest of such growths is too be gathered. (8) go by say, using the customary salute to the reapers—"The Lord be with you:" as Ru. ii. 4; to wh. the reapers reply, "We bless you in the name of Jehovah."

The Wicked Flourishing and Perishing.—I. Eminent in position. II. Envied in prosperity. III. Evanescent in duration. IV. Empty as to solidity. V. Excepted from blessing.—Spurgeon.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND THIRTIETH.

1—4. (1) depths, of the misery and sorrow,[a] wh. has come upon me through my sins; deep waters of overwhelming affliction. (2) Lord, Heb. Adonai or Sovereign Lord. (3) mark,[b] strictly watch, and keep in memory in order to punish. shall stand, i. e. to endure Thy presence.[c] (4) But, etc., before this vs. we require such a sentence as, "But thou dost not mark them, for." forgiveness, lit. the forgiveness, or just that wh. man needs. feared, with thankful, loving fear. Milton makes his Satan say, "Then farewell hope, and, with hope, farewell fear!" And certainly the true fear of God—a reverential, loving fear—could not exist, unless we had a confident hope in God's mercy and willingness to for give us our trespasses, if we turn to Him.—Pul. Com.

Not Justice, but Pardon.—In the days when the first Napoleon was Consul of France, a well-dressed girl of fourteen years of age presented herself, alone, at the gate of the palace. By tears and entreaties she moved the kind-hearted porter to allow her to enter. Passing from one room to another, she found her way to the hall through which Napoleon and his officers were to pass. When he appeared, she cast herself at his feet, and in the most earnest and moving manner cried, "Pardon, sire! pardon for my father!" "And who is your father?" asked Napoleon. "And who are you?" "My name is Lajolia," she said; and with flowing tears added, "but, sire, my father is doomed to die." "Ah! young lady," replied Napoleon, "I can do nothing for you. It is the second time your father has been found guilty of treason against the State." "Alas!" exclaimed the poor girl, "I know it, sire; but I do not ask for justice, I implore pardon. I beseech you, forgive, oh, forgive my father!" Napoleon's lips trembled, and his eyes filled with tears. After a momentary struggle of feeling, he gently took the hand of the young maiden, and said, "Well, my child, for your sake I will pardon your father. That is enough. Now leave me."—Wayside Books.

5—8. (5) in .. hope, better, "for His word do I tarry;" i. e. for the fulfillment of it. his word, of gracious promise.[a] (6) watch .. morning, as do sentinels and sleepless sufferers. (7) mercy, lit. the mercy, that wh. is so characteristic of God. plenteous redemption, i. e. an abundance of ways and means of salvation. (8) he, on this word emphasis lies. his iniquities, which are the cause of his sufferings.

More Than They.—I. For the darker sorrow his absence causes. II. For the richer splendor His coming must bring. III. For the greater might of our indwelling love.—W. B. Haynes.

Watching.—

"As those that watch for the day,
Through the restless night of pain,
When the first faint streaks of gray
Bring rest and ease again—
As they turn their sleepless eyes
The Eastern sky to see,
Long hours before sunrise—
So waiteth my soul for Thee!"

"To how many hearts this psalm has brought comfort and hope God only can tell, but seldom do four such names as Luther, Owen, Wesley, and Edwards surround one portion of the word of God. It reminds us of the ancient fourfold encampment of the tribes of Israel round the tabernacle, or the city that lieth foursquare, with a herald at each central gate."—Ker.

a "There are some who, instead of waiting for God, take upon themselves to decide for Him, how, when, and in what degree, He shall aid. This is not to wait for Him; it is to make God wait upon them, and aid them as they define the way." — Luther.

author,— unknown: date,—late exile.

A Ps. of childlike resignation to God.

b Ps. xviii. 27, ci. 5.

c "The poet sets before them the example of a pattern Israelite, and appeals to them generally to attain conformity to that pattern by grasping supermundane hopes." —Jennings and Lowe.

"When a man fully realizes life as service to God, he rests assured that his Divine Master appoints his sphere and provides his work; and his Master will be absolutely sure to provide sphere and work for every servant who jealously keeps the attitude of obedience. —Pul. Com.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FIRST.

1—3. (1) not haughty, humility is properly regarded as the crown of the virtues. lofty, lifted up.[b] Pride, being in the heart, finds expression in the uplifted attitude. in great matters, i. e. has not sought for positions involving duties and responsibilities too heavy for him. things too high, R. V., "wonderful," involving powers beyond any I possessed. (2) behaved, etc., R. V., "stilled .. soul." child .. weaned, one that has ceased fretting after its mother's milk, and lies beside her peaceful and satisfied. He has at least achieved one hard thing—he has quieted the restless longings of a strong human nature. He compares his acquired gentleness to that of a weaned child.—Cheyne. (3) Let Israel, better, "O Israel, hope thou."[c]

Hope in the Lord.—Remember that he is Jehovah. 1. Wise to plan. 2. Good to purpose. 3. Strong to execute, and that He will withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly. 4. Trust "from henceforth." If you have not begun before, begin now. 5. And do not be weary; trust "for ever." Your case can never be out of the reach of God's power and mercy.—Adam Clarke.

A Religious Repose.—Shaking off such ambitions and loftiness of spirit, he has found repose, as all do who clear our hearts of that perilous stuff. But it is to be noted that the calm which he enjoys is the fruit of his own self-control, by which his dominant self has smoothed and stilled the sensitive nature with its desires and passions. It is not the tranquility of a calm nature which speaks here, but that into which the speaker has entered, by vigorous mastery of disturbing elements. How hard the struggle had been, how much bitter crying and petulant author,—unknown: date, time of the rebuilt temple.

Prayer for the house of God and house of David.

[a] 1 Chr. xxii. 14.

[b] Only found in three other passages. Is. 1. 24, xlix. 26, lx. 16.

[c] "A good instance of the way in wh. the associations of the old patriarchal tent-life fixed themselves in the language of the people." —Perowne.

[d] Comp. Ge. xlix. 4.

[e] "Neither the temples of my head to take any rest." —Pr. Bk. Vers.

[f] Ge. xxxv. 19; Ru. iv. 11; Mi. v. 2.

"We heard where the ark was; we went to fetch it, saying one to another as we brought it to its new abode, 'Let us come into his dwelling,' etc. And now, by the memory of David, by the memory of thy covenant with him reject not the prayer of our king, who is David's son."—Perowne.

[g] Ps. xcix. 5.

[h] Nu. x. 35, 36; Ps. lxviii. 1.

[a] Ps. xlviii. 1, 2.

"The promises which God hath made are a full storehouse of all kinds of blessings — they include in them both the upper and nether springs, the mercies of this life and of that which is to come; there is no good that can present itself as an object to our desires or thoughts, of resistance there had been before the calm was won, is told by the lovely image of the weaned child. While being weaned it sobs and struggles, and all its little life is perturbed. So no man comes to have a quiet heart without much resolute self-suppression.—Exp. B.

Psalm 131.—There is one sweetest, tenderest song that gives up the whole question of the exile as a theological inquiry and trusts God.—Barton.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SECOND.

1—5. (1) remember, with a view to fulfilling Thy promise to him. afflictions, here especially his solicitude concerning building of God's house.[a] (2) sware, this prob, refers to something not recorded in the historical books: but see 2 Sa. vii. 1—3. mighty .. Jacob, comp. Ge. xlix. 24.[b] (3) tabernacle .. house, lit. my tent-dwelling:[c] used figuratively for his house, wh. was of cedar. my bed, more precisely, "into the bed, (wh. is) my couch."[d] (4) sleep, etc., Ps. vi. 4.[e] (5) habitation, R. V., "a tabernacle," settled resting-place.

State Beds in the East.—From the expression of the Psalmist it would seem that a lofty bed was not only a necessary luxury, but a sign of superior rank. This idea was very prevalent in the period of the revival of the arts on the Continent, where the state bed, often six feet high, always stood on a dias in an alcove, richly curtained off from the saloon. In the East the same custom still continues, and a verse in the Koran declares it to be one of the delights of the faithful in paradise that "they shall repose themselves on lofty beds." Frequently these state beds were composed of the most costly and magnificent materials. The prophet Amos speaks of ivory beds (Amos vi. 4).

6—10. (6) at Ephratah,[f] the Israelites, says the Psalmist, first of all enquired for the ark in Ephratah, and at last found it in the country of Jaar. Ephratah was, in post-Exile times, the name of the district in which Kirjath-jearim, as well as of that in which Bethlehem was situated. —Cheyne. fields of the woods, this trans. the name of the town Kirjath-jearim. (7) tabernacles, on Mt. Zion. footstool,[g] as Jehovah dwells above, the cover of the ark is regarded as His footstool. (8) arise, etc., the usual cry on moving the ark,[h] rest, R. V., "resting place." ark, "the only mention of the ark in the Psalter." (9) righteousness, white clothing as the symbol of righteousness. saints, chosen people, Thy beloved. (10) turn .. face, the sign of rejecting a petition.

Psalm 132.—This present "Song of Ascents" is well suited to be a "pilgrim-song"—sung by those who went up to Jerusalem to visit the temple, and revivify their faith in the God who had chosen Zion for His dwelling place. It is concerned almost entirely with the temple, which it sets before the faithful from the first conception of it in the mind of David to its final glory when visited by the Redeemer. Vss. 1—5 are concerned with the birth of the idea in David's mind; vss 6—10, with its realization under Solomon; while vss 11—18 point to the time when David's true Son would be set upon David's throne, and the Lord Himself would suddenly come to His temple, and make the glory of the second house greater than that of the first had ever been.—Pul. Com.

11—14. (11) sworn, etc., 2 Sa. vii. 12—16. fruit .. throne, an important promise to Dav. seeing that Saul, his predecessor, left no family to reign. (12) If, etc., all the Lord's promises are conditional on the faithfulness of His people. for evermore, obs. how this expression in the Heb. equals "for a long time." (13) chosen Zion,[a] the term Zion is evidently used as including the district of Jerusalem. "The religious and political centers are regarded as one and the same." (14) rest resting-place for my symbol, the ark.

Our Confidence.—"He will not turn from it." He is not a changing God. He foreknew everything. He is able to carry out his purpose. His honor is bound up in it. His oath can never be broken.—Spurgeon.

Love of Children.—No man can tell but he that loves his children, how many delicious accents make a man's heart dance in the pretty conversation of those dear pledges; their childishness, their stammering, their little angers, their innocence, their imperfections, their necessities, are so many little emanations of joy and comfort to him that delights in their persons and society; but he that loves not his wife and children, feeds a lioness at home, and broods a nest of sorrows; and blessing itself cannot make him happy; so that all the commandments of God enjoining a man to love his wife, are nothing but so many necessities and capacities of joy. She that is loved is safe, and he that loves is joyful.—J. Taylor.

15—18. (15) abundantly, or surely.[b] poor with bread, a sign of national prosperity. (16) salvation, comp. "righteousness," vs. 9. (17) horn[c] of David, the horn was the symbol of dominion. to bud, or branch forth, with reference to Dav.'s offspring. lamp,[d] "another figure for prosperity, 2 Sam. xxii. 17; 1 Ki. xl. 36. The meaning of the whole vs. is that the promises of old made to David and to Zion should yet be fulfilled, however dark present appearances."

Satisfied.—I. Blessed provision. II. Satisfied people—"satisfy her poor." III. Glorified God—"I will." IV. Happy place—Zion.—Spurgeon.

Loud Praise.—It would astonish and amuse a European stranger to hear these natives sing. They have not the least idea either of harmony or melody; noise is what they best understand, and he that sings the loudest is considered to sing the best. I have occasionally remonstrated with them on the subject; but the reply I once received silenced me for ever after. "Sing softly, brother," I said to one of the principal members. "Sing softly!" he replied, "is it you, our father, who tells us to sing softly? Did you ever hear us sing the praises of our Hindoo gods? how we threw our heads backward, and with all our might shouted out the praises of those who are no gods! And now do you tell us to whisper the praises of Jesus? No, sir, we cannot—we must express in loud tones our gratitude to him who loved us, and died for us!" And so they continued to sing with all their might, and without further remonstrance.—G. Gogerly.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-THIRD.

author,— unknown: date,— post-exilic.

A Psalm on brotherly love.

1—3. (1) brethren .. unity, Heb. "For them who are brethren also to dwell together."[a] (2) precious ointment, see Ex. xxix. 7; Le. viii. 12, xxi. 10. The point of the comparison does not lie in the preciousness of the oil, or in its all-pervading fragrance; but in this—that being poured on the head, it did not rest there; but flowed to the beard, and descended even to the garments, and thus, as it were, consecrated the whole body in all its parts. All the members participate in the same blessing.—Perowne. skirts, etc., evidently the lower hem of the garments. (3) dew of Hermon, R. V. "Like the dew of Hermon, that cometh down upon," etc., dew that falls alike on both mountains, the lofty Hermon and the humble Zion. there, "in Zion the blessed fruits of this brotherly concord may chiefly be looked for, for Jehovah himself has made it the great centre of all blessing and life."—Perowne.

The Dew of Hermon.—We had sensible proof at Rasheiya of the copiousness of the "dew of Hermon." Unlike most other mountains, which gradually rise from lofty table-lands, and often at a distance from the sea, Hermon starts at once to the height of nearly ten thousand feet, from a platform scarcely above the sea-level. This platform, too—the upper Jordan valley, and marshes of Merom—is for the most part an impenetrable swamp of unknown depth, whence the seething vapor, under the rays of an almost tropical sun, is constantly ascending into the upper atmosphere during the day. The vapor, coming in contact with the snowy sides of the mountain, is rapidly congealed, and is precipitated in the evening in the form of a dew, the most copious we ever experienced. It penetrated everywhere, and saturated everything. The floor of our tent was soaked, our bedding was covered with it, our guns were dripping, and dewdrops hung about everywhere. No wonder that the foot of Hermon is clad with orchards and gardens of such marvellous fertility in this land of droughts.—Tristram.

which the promises are not a ground for faith to believe and hope to expect the enjoyment of."—Spurstowe.

[b] "Literally, this was fulfilled in the days of the restoration of Israel, by the zeal of Nehemiah, who exerted himself for the adequate provision of offerings for the temple and for the maintenance of the priesthood. See Ne. x. 32—39." — Wordsworth.

[c] 1 Sa. ii. 1.

[d] "The lamp in the household is a common symbol of prosperity and glory. 2 Sa. xxi. 17; 1 Ki. xi. 36, xv. 4; Ps. xviii. 28. One of the daily Jewish prayers is, 'Soon may the Branch, the Root of Dav., spring up, and His horn be excellent.'

[a] Augustine says that this vs. gave birth to monasteries; it was like a trumpet-call to those who wished to dwell together as brethren (fratres, friars). "Touchingly must the blessings of one common dwelling-place have presented themselves to those who had been so long 'dispersed' among heathen nations." —Jennings and Lowe. "A little boy seeing two nestling birds pecking at each other, inquired of his elder brother what they were doing. 'They are quarrelling,' was the answer. 'No,' replied the child, 'that cannot be, they are brothers.'" —Whitecross.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FOURTH.

author,— unknown: date, time of the second temple.

1—3. (1) servants, i. e. the priests and Levites. by night stand, as night-watchers.[a] (2) Lift . . hands, in the attitude of prayer. Watching unto prayer. in the sanctuary, or, "in holiness," R. V. "to the sanctuary;" turning your face towards the sanctuary. (3) thee, or you. The exact form of the high priest's blessing seems to be taken.[b]

Doxology and Benediction.—I. Doxology. 1. The offering to be presented. (1) The nature of this offering—Praise. (2) The importance of this offering. 2. The persons by whom it is to be offered. 3. The time at which it is to be offered. 4. The place towards which it is to be offered. II. Benediction. Notice—1. The power of God to bless. 2. The means by which God blesses man. 3. The authority of the servants of God to pronounce His blessing.—Hom. Com.

The Benediction—The benediction comes from the City of the Great King, from his appointed ministers, by virtue of his covenant, and so it is said to be "out of Zion. To this day the Lord blesses each one of his people through his church, his gospel, and the ordinances of his house. It is in communion with the saints that we receive untold benisons. May each one of us obtain yet more of the blessing which cometh from the Lord alone. Zion cannot bless us; the holiest ministers can only wish us a blessing; but Jehovah can and will bless each one of his waiting people. So may it be at this good hour. Do we desire it? Let us then bless the Lord ourselves. Let us do it a second time. Then we may confidently hope that the third time we think of blessing we shall find ourselves conscious receivers of it from the Ever-blessed One. Amen.—Spurgeon.

Greetings of night watchers.

[a] "Three things are clear with regard to this Ps. First that it consists of a greeting, vss. 1, 2, and reply, vs. 3. Next, that the greeting is addressed to those priests and Levites who had the night-watch in the temple. Lastly, that this Ps. is purposely placed at the end of the collection of Pilgrim Songs in order to take the place of a final blessing." —Delitzsch.

[b] Nu. vi. 24.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FIFTH.

author,— unknown: date,— later restoration.

1—5. (1) servants, so the general assemblage of worshipers is regarded. (2) courts, the open spaces before the sanctuary. (3) it is pleasant, perhaps better, He is pleasant or lovely.[c] (4) the Lord, etc., one reason for this call to sing praises; De. vii. 6. (5) know, the language of decided personal experience,[d] another ground for praise.

A Hallelujah Ps. for temple service.

Praise.—I. Praise him for the privilege of serving him. II. Praise him for the power to serve him. III. Praise him for the acceptance of your service. IV. Praise him as the chief part of your service. V. Praise him that others may be induced to engage in his service.—W. H. J. Page.

Praise.—When we bless God for mercies we prolong them, and when we bless him for miseries we usually end them. When we reach to praise we have compassed the design of a dispensation, and have reaped the harvest of it. Praise is a soul in flower, and a secret, hearty blessing of the Lord is the soul fruit-bearing. Praise is the honey of life, which a devout heart sucks from every bloom of providence and grace. As well be dead as be without praise; it is the crown of life.—Spurgeon.

6—9. (6) heaven, etc., terms used to compass every created thing,[a] proof of the greatness of Jehovah. (7) causeth, etc., comp. Je. x. 13, li. 16. vapours, Heb. things lifted up; i. e. clouds. ends of the earth, Polychr. "from the earth beneath." for the rain, to accompany rain, with its beneficent influence. out . . treasuries, as Job. xxxviii. 22, 23. (8) smote, etc., His redemption of Israel the third ground for praise; Ex. xii. 29. (9) tokens and wonders, miraculous judgments, wh. were not mere wonders, but tokens or signs of the Divine will.[b]

The Resistless Pleasure of Jehovah.—I. Behold it as here exemplified: 1. Ruling all nature. 2. Overturning a rebellious nation. 3. Making sport of kings and crowns. 4. Laying a fertile country at the feet of the chosen. II. Be wise in view thereof. 1. Submit to it: it sweeps the seas, and lays hands on earth and heaven. 2. Think not to hide from it: the "ends of the earth" and "all deep places" are open to it; it is swifter than its own lightnings. 3. Be awed by its majesty: God's Cheyne styles this Ps. a mosaic work, bec. it is entirely made up of selected pieces fr. other Ps., fr. the prophetical writings and fr. the law.

[c] Ps. liv. 6, cxlvii. 1.

[d] Ps. xcv. 3.

"Griefe for the calamity of another is pitty, and ariseth from the imagination that the like calamity may befall himselfe; and therefore it is called compassion.—Hobbes.

[a] "The specification of Jehovah's doings according to His pleasure, in heaven, earth, the sea, and all deep places, puts before us in a graphic manner His particular care always and everywhere." —Calvin.

[b] Ex. v. 21, vii. 10.

way is strewn with crowns and the bones of kings. 4. Seek its protection: its mightiest efforts are in defence of those it favors. 5. Let the Lord's people fear not with so great a God, and so exhaustless an armory. —W. B. Haynes.

10—14. (10) smote, etc., De. iv. 38, vii. 2, ix. 1, etc. great, R. V., "many." (11) Sihon, De. ii. 30; Nu. xxi. 21—23.[c] (12) gave their land, the fourth reason for praise; the conquest of the Promised Land; Jos. xii. 7. (13) Thy name, i. e. the sum of the elements of the divine character; comp. Ex. iii. 15. (14) judge, i. e. vindicate His people against all oppressors. repent, Polychr. "takes into favor his servants;" see Ex. xxxii. 12.

God the Judge.—Others would like to do it, but must not. The world has seven judgment-days in every week, but shall not be able to condemn the saints. He himself will judge. How will he judge them? 1. Their persons, as to whether they are in or out of Christ. 2. Their principles, as to whether they are genuine or spurious. 3. Their prayers, as to whether they are availing or useless. 4. Their profession, as to whether it is true or false. 5. Their procedure, as to whether it is good or bad.—W. Jackson.

Sihon and Og.—Sihon, although conqueror of Moab, and much more formidable than the Canaanites whom Israel had feared at Kadesh, fell easily because Israel fought in faith. There is no adversary that can really offer any effectual opposition to our onward march if assailed in the strength of Christ with a cheerful courage. Og, the king of Bashan, was much more formidable even than Sihon, but he seems to have fallen yet more easily, judging from the brief notice of the conquest. Even so, when once we have overcome a difficulty or conquered an evil habit in the strength of faith, other conquests open out before us readily and naturally which we should not have dared to contemplate before. It is most true in religion that "nothing succeeds like success."—R. Winterbotham.

15—18. (15) idols, etc., as Ps. cxv. 4. (16) mouths, etc., Ps. cxv. 5. (17) ears, etc., Ps. cxv. 6—8.

Like Unto Them.—A singular phenomenon, known as the Spectre of the Brocken, is seen on certain mountains in Germany and Switzerland. The traveler who at dawn stands on the topmost ridge beholds a colossal shadowy spectre. But in fact it is only his own shadow projected upon the morning mists by the rising sun; and it imitates, of course, every movement of its creator. So heathen nations have mistaken their own image for Deity. Their gods display human frailties and passions and scanty virtues, projected and magnified upon the heavens, just as the small figures on the slide of a magic-lantern are projected, magnified, and illuminated upon a white sheet.—New Cyc. of Ill.

19—21. (19, 20) Comp. Ps. cxv. 9—11, cxviii. 2—4. Obs. that here the house of Levi is added. (21) out of Zion, God blesses out of Zion, and so, in response, out of Zion His people bless Him.[a]

Fear of God.—In Scripture it is quite common to find this "fear" put for holiness itself, or the sum of our true religion. It is not, therefore, such a fear as seized the hearts of our first parents when, hearing the voice of the Lord God, they hid themselves amongst the trees of the garden; nor such as suddenly quenched the noise of royal revelry in the night of Babylon's overthrow; nor such as, on some day yet future, shall drive despairing sinners to the unavailing shelter of the mountains and rocks. It is not the fear of guilty distrust, or of hatred, or of bondage—that fear which hath torment, and which perfect love casteth out; but a fear compatible with the highest privileges, attainments, and hopes of the Christian life. It is the fear of deep humility and reverence, of filial subjection, and adoring gratitude; the fear which "blesseth the Lord," saying, "His mercy endureth for ever."—John Lillie.

"This seems to have been the morning hymn which the Levites were called upon to sing at the opening of the gates of the Temple; and, as some think, the one before was used at shutting them in the evening." — John Kitto.

[c] See also Am. ii. 9.

"If, in the ocean of life, there are rocks and shoals, it is no cruelty to chart them down; it is an eminent and prominent mercy."—H. W. Beecher.

"God is, and will be always the same to his church, a gracious, faithful, wonder-working God; and his church is, and will be the same to him, a thankful, praising people; and thus his name endures for ever.—Matthew Henry.

"How many are like idol-images, when they have eyes, ears, and mouths as though they had none: that is, when they do not use them when and how they should." — Christopher Starke.

[a] Ps. cxxviii. 5, cxxxiv. 3.

"The loss of worldly things is to many a great grief. If, however, we gain, with the loss of transitory treasures, and with the refusing father, mother, brother, sister, wife, and children, purchase God to be our Father, and Christ to be our Brother, what have we lost?" —T. Timme.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SIXTH.

1—3. (1) Identical with the first verse of Ps. cxviii., which is probably a very ancient formula, and one used at the erection both of the first (2 Chron. v. 13) and of the second temple (Ezra iii. 11). mercy, author,—unknown: date,—later restoration. Praise of God's gracious goouness.

Polychr. "goodness." (2) God of gods, altogether above and beyond all idol-gods.[b] (3) Lord of lords, having authority over all seeming authorities. Altogether the Supreme One.

The Lord is Good.—God is originally good—good of himself. He is infinitely good. He is perfectly good, because infinitely good. He is immutably good.—Charnock.

Repetitions Many, But Not Vain.—Over and over again the refrain comes, "His mercy endureth for ever." But it is never a vain repetition, unless the mind, by its heedlessness, makes it so. It is like the German piece of music which is called "The Fremensberg," which tells one of the old legends of the region—how "a great noble of the Middle Ages got lost in the mountains, and wandered about with his dogs in a violent storm, until at last the faint tones of a monastery-bell, calling the monks to a midnight service, caught his ear, and he followed the direction the sounds came from, and was saved. A beautiful air runs through the music without ceasing, sometimes loud and strong, sometimes so soft that it can hardly be distinguished, but it is always there. It swung grandly along the shrill whistling of the storm-wind, the rattling patter of the rain, and the boom and crash of the thunder; it wound soft and low through the lesser sounds, the distant ones, such as the throbbing of the convent-bell, the melodious winding of the hunter's horn, the distressed bayings of his dogs, and the solemn chanting of the monks; it rose again, with a jubilant ring, and mingled itself with the country songs and dances of the peasants assembled in the concert-hall to cheer up the rescued huntsman as he ate his supper, imitating all these sounds with marvellous exactness. The solemn chanting of the monks was not done by instruments, but by men's voices, and it rose and fell and rose again in that rich confusion of warring sounds and pulsing bells, and the stately swing of that ever-present enchanting air, and it seemed to me that nothing could be more divinely beautiful."—Mark Twain. So the sweet refrain of this psalm is heard amid all variety of circumstances, and is never absent, but investing with its own charm every one of the manifold statements which the psalm contains.

[b] De. x. 17.

"No worship is pure and inspiring that is not fresh-hearted. The songs of the sanctuary ought to burst forth like the breeze that breaks the sea into white caps and surges through the pine tops on the mountains. The prayers of God's children ought to rise like the birds, free of wing and singing joyously."—M. C. Julian.

"There are exceptions, no doubt; but the general rule is borne out by experience, that they who honestly and earnestly use the gifts of mind and body which God has given them, obtain the things which are needful in this life, if not to overflowing, yet in sufficiency; and where means fail we generally have to admit that our own industry or prudence was at fault." — Horton.

"The patient bearing of misery is an acceptable sacrifice to God; for when the goldsmith putteth a piece of gold into the fire to make better use of it, it seemeth to the unskilful that he utterly marreth it. So the children of God in all affliction seem, to the judgment of the natural man, undone and brought to nothing; but spiritual things are spiritually discerned."

—Greenham.

4—9. (4) alone, etc., Ps. lxxii. 18, lxxxvi. 10. (5) wisdom, R. V. "understanding," Pr. iii. 19. (6) stretched out, Is. xlii. 5, xliv. 24. The Heb. word is fr. the same root as that trans. firmament in Ge. i. 6—8. waters, of the oceans of the earth; above wh. the land is represented as lifted, keeping them within bounds. (7) great lights, Ge. i. 14—16. (8) to rule, Heb. for the rulings. (9) to rule, this form is plural, to indicate the several distinct dominations of the moon and the stars.

The Church's Antiphon.—There can be no doubt that this psalm was sung antiphonally in the Jewish temple, some of the priests reciting or chanting the first portion of each verse, and then the whole congregation responding, "For his mercy endureth for ever." But this oft-repeated declaration belongs not to the Jewish Church alone, but to the whole Church of God throughout all the ages and in all the world. "One February night, A. D. 358, the great church at Alexandria was bright with lights far into the night, and still the congregation did not disperse. The Bishop Athanasius was there, and the service was to be prolonged till morning; for next day the Holy Communion was to be celebrated, and it was the frequent custom among the early Christians to spend the preceding night in prayer and singing hymns. All knew that further troubles were hanging over their beloved bishop, and that the time of his presence with them would probably be very short. Suddenly a clashing noise broke the stillness. The church was surrounded by armed men. With calm presence of mind, Athanasius rose and gave out the hundred and thirty-sixth psalm, which has to every verse the response, 'For his mercy endureth for ever.' The whole congregation joined in thundering forth those grand words, when the door was burst open, and the imperial envoy, at the head of a body of soldiers, walked up the aisle. For a moment the soldiers drew back in awe at the solemn sound of the chanting, but again, they pressed on, and a shower of arrows flew through the church. Swords flashed, arms rattled, and rough shouts interrupted the music. Athanasius retained his seat till the congregation had dispersed, then he too disappeared in the darkness, and no one knew where he was gone. He found a refuge among his old friends the hermits of Egypt."—Perowne.

10—15. (10) in their firstborn, chastising the nation by the destruction of the firstborn of men and cattle.[a] (11) brought, etc., the favor of God to His covenant people is the point of the Psalm. (12) strong hand, De. iv. 34. (13) into parts, R. V., "in sunder," the Heb. word is only used besides in Ge. xv. 17, where it denotes the pieces into which Ab. divided the animals.[b] (15) overthrew, lit. shook out, the same word is used in Ex. xiv. 27. The Pharaoh's death in the Red Sea is not necessarily implied.—Pul. Com.

Ingratitude.—The Athenians were ready to forget their benefactors when they met with any slight reverses, and would sometimes load their best friends with the heaviest calumnies. One of them thus offended replied in sorrowful tones, "Are you weary of receiving benefits often from the same hand?" Our ingratitude towards God might elicit from Him the same rebuke. He daily loadeth us with benefits, and yet we smite the lips that kiss us, and wound the heart that bled for us. One of the strangest things about the character of a Christian is that he should become weary of such amazing love.

16—22. (16) which led, De. viii. 15. The Psalmist recalls the general protection and care of the forty years' wanderings. (18) famous kings, i. e. mighty; De. xxix. 7; Ps. cxxxv. 10, 11. (19) Sihon, Nu. xxi. 21. (20) Og, Nu. xxi. 33. (21) heritage, or possession, Jos. xii. 7. The term heritage may be intended to remind the people that they had the land in fulfillment of gracious Div. covenant and promise. It was like an estate willed to them: their only right to the land was the "free gift" of it to them by its real Owner, who made them His heirs. (22) his servant, De. xxxii. 36.[a]

"Who Remembered Us."—We should echo in our thankfulness the first intimation that God gives in his providence of an approaching mercy. If you do but hear when the king is on his road towards your town you raise your bells to ring him in, and stay not till he be entered the gates. The birds rise betimes in the morning, and are saluting the rising sun with their sweet notes in the air. Thus should we strike up our harps in praising God at the first appearance of a mercy.—William Gurnall.

Israel.—

When Israel, of the Lord beloved,
Out of the land of bondage came,
Her father's God before her moved,
An awful guide, in smoke and flame.
By day, along the astonished lands,
The cloudy pillar glided slow;
By night Arabia's crimsoned sands Returned the fiery column's glow.
—Sir Walter Scott.

23—26. (23) remembered .. estate, this is a general survey of God's gracious relation to the distresses of the nation, with a special glance at the recent deliverance from Babylon.[b] low estate, comp. Eccl. x. 6, where the same Heb. word shephel, is used. (24) redeemed, this general term includes all kinds of defendings and deliverings. (25) giveth food, perhaps ref. to some time of famine when God supplied Israel with food. —Delitzsch. all flesh, i. e. all living creatures, Ps. civ. 27, cxlv. 15, cxlvii. 9. (26) God of heaven, so distinguished from all local deities.[c]

Divine Housekeeping. I. The Royal Commissariat. II. Its spiritual counterpart: God's august provisioning for our immortal nature. III. The queenly grace that hath the keeping of the keys: "for his mercy," etc.—W. B. Haynes.

"Who Giveth Food to all Flesh."—Of Edward Taylor, better known as "Father Taylor," the Sailor Preacher of Boston, it is said that his prayers were more like utterances of an Oriental, abounding in imagery, than a son of these colder western climes. The Sunday before he was to sail for Europe, he was entreating the Lord to care well for his church during his absence. All at once he stopped and ejaculated, "What have I done? Distrust the providence of heaven! A God that gives a whale a

[a] "The Targum gives, 'To Him who smote the Egyptians (whom) He slew with plagues.' "—Jennings and Lowe.

[b] Comp. Ex. xiv. 16, 21; Ps. lxxviii. 12, 13.

God is independent of all His creatures; He was as happy in Himself, before a creature existed, as He has been since.

[a] "If the four verses 19—22 were omitted, the Psalm would consist of 22 verses, one for each letter of the alphabet, and the phraseology of the above-named verses in the original is such that they would seem not improbably taken from the preceding Psalm."
—Spk. Com.

"Note God's three ways of leading. He leads out, he leads through, and he leads into; out of sin, through the world, into heaven; out by faith, through by hope, into by love."—Michael Ayguan.

"True goodness is like the glow-worm in this, that it shines most when no eyes, except those of heaven, are upon it."—Hare.

[b] Ps. cvi. 42—45.

[c] The Pr. Bk. Ver., following the Vulg., adds, "O give thanks unto the Lord of lords, for His mercy endureth for ever," repeating vs. 3.

"In the end of the Psalm, God's fatherly providence is extended without exception, not only to all mankind, but also to all living things, so that it is no marvel though He is so provident and beneficent a father towards His elect. —Calvin.

—Author.

Perhaps a Levite of the first company of returned captives.

A touching reminiscence of the now terminated exile.

[a] The river-side may have been chosen for the performance of religious rites, as indicated in Ac. xvi. 13.

[b] Babylon was taken by Cyrus, B. C. 538; the Jews were allowed to return B. C. 536. Babylon was destroyed by Darius Hystaspes, B. C. 516; and about the same time the temple was rebuilt.

[c] Ne. ii. 2.3.

[d] "Forget herself," so trans. Ewald, Delitzsch. Syr. renders, "Let my right hand forget me."

[e] "If I set not Jerusalem as a diadem on to the head of my rejoicing, and crown all my happiness with it." — Wordsworth.

[a] "We see from Obad's prophecy how shamefully the Edomites, that brother-people related by descent to Israel, and yet pre-eminently hostile to it, behaved in connection with the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldaeans." — Delitzsch.

[b] Comp. Is. x. 32. xlvii. 1; Je. xlvi. 11.

[c] The destruction of Bab. had been foretold by the prophets, as Is. xiii. 14; Je. l. 2, 3.

"God forbid that any of us should pass through suffering and ton of herrings for a breakfast, will he not care for my children?" and then went on, closing his prayer in a more confiding strain.—Spurgeon.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SEVENTH.

1—3. (1) rivers, the Euphrates and Tigris, also the Chebar (Eze. i, 3), and the Ulai (Da. viii. 2).[a] Babylon,[b] prob. Babylonia, the name of the city being put for the country. sat down, for time of quiet meditation. Zion, or Jerusalem, the associations of their beloved land. (2) harps, specially used for joyous occasions. willows, Heb. arabim; what is known as the weeping willow may principally be meant (the Salix Babylonica). in the midst, of the country of Babylonia. (3) required .. song, whether this request was made in curiosity or derision does not appear. It was felt to be impossible for mourners and exiles to respond to it. "A banquet is in progress, and fresh amusements are required. Some one suggests that the Hebrew singers should be brought in."—Cheyne.

The Sorrowful Christian (vs. 2).—The sources of spiritual sorrow. I. Some of them arise from bodily disorder. II. Some from defective views of character. III. Some from defective views of religion. IV. Some from allowed sin. V. Some from inward struggles peculiar to self.—G. Brooks.

4—6. (4) strange land,[c] better, "in the land of the stranger," to wh. they had been exiled by Him whose songs they were asked to sing. It was for them a time of humiliation before the Lord, not one of singing triumph songs. (5) let .. cunning,[d] i. e. "her skill with the harp." (6) tongue cleave, so as never to be able to sing any more. above .. joy, lit. top of my joy.[e] "The singer's joy is headless, as it were, without Jerusalem."

The Singers and Their Song (vs. 4).—I. The Christian on earth is in a strange land—1. As to his feelings; 2. As to his supplies; 3. As to his dangers. II. The Christian on earth, although on earth, has songs —1. Of gratitude; 2. Of penitence; 3. Of resignation; 4. Of hope.—G. Brooks.

A Patriotic Psalm.—This Psalm has struck the key to many a song of the love of country. The Abbé Curci, a great Oriental scholar, and author of a translation of the Old Testament into Italian, one of the few clergymen who have taken the side of Italy and freedom against the Pope, lectured to an immense assembly in Rome (1883), and expressed his special love to the 137th Psalm. He said it was the first and grandest patriotic song which was ever written—linking God and country together. Cameons, the national poet of Portugal, has paraphrased the 137th Psalm in a sonnet as the Psalm of "pious, patriotic memory." It may be considered, in a higher point of view, as the spring of the Jerusalem songs, which, in all ages of the Church, looked away from a state of exile to the final home:—

"For thee, O dear, dear country,
Mine eyes their vigils keep;
For very love, beholding
Thy happy name, they weep:
E'en now, by faith, I see thee,
E'en now thy walls discern;
To thee my thoughts are kindled,
And strive, and pant, and yearn."
—Anec. Ill. of O. T. Texts.

7—9. (7) children of Edom, i. e. remember how Edom joined the enemies of Jerusalem in the day of her overthrow.[a] Polychr. "Reckon it against those sons of Edom .. that day of Jerusalem." rase it, Heb. make bare. Polychr., "clean down, down to the ground with it." (8) daughter of Bab., a fig. for Babylon with its population.[b] destroyed, Polychr., "thou she-devastator, thou!", who oughtest to be and shalt be destroyed.[c] rewardeth, etc., Is. xlvii. 1—9; Je. li. 56. (9) dasheth, etc., this allusion is to the horrors generally attending on the siege and sack of ancient cities.

Psalm 137.—

We sat us down and wept
Where Babel's waters slept,
And we thought of home and Zion as a long-gone happy dream;
We hung our harps in air
On the willow boughs which there Gloomy as round a sepulchre were drooping o'er the stream.

The foes whose chains we wore
Were with us on that shore,
Exulting in our tears that told of bitterness and woe;
"Sing us," they cried aloud,
"Ye once so high and proud,
The songs ye sang in Zion ere we laid her glory low!"

And shall the harp of heaven,
To Judah's monarch given,
Be touched by captive fingers, or grace a fettered hand?
No! sooner be my tongue
Mute, powerless, and unstrung,
Than its words of holy music make glad a stranger land!

May this right hand, whose skill
Can wake the harp at will,
And bid the listener's joys and griefs in light or darkness come,
Forget its godlike power
If for one brief, dark hour,
My heart forgets Jerusalem, fallen city of my home!

—Halleck.

come out of it, not only unchastened, but with no tenderer feeling for the whole suffering humanity. It should be the first question with one who in any way suffers, To what service of ministering pity am I called?"—T. T. Munger.

"Give up all that is miraculous in true religion and there is nothing left of power sufficient to move any heart to worship or adore; and without worship there is no piety. —W. S. Plumer.

author, — unknown: date, time of the rebuilt temple.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-EIGHTH.

1—3. (1) whole heart, involving entireness and sincerity. before the gods,[d] i. e. in the presence of, and in scorn of, the idols of the heathen, who cannot prevent. Polychr., "in a place that is holy." (2) worship, Polychr., "prostrate myself."[e] thy word, or Thy fidelity to Thy promises. thy name, or all other characteristics implied in Thy name or title, Jehovah.[a] (3) In the day,[b] or immediately. strengthenedst me, by granting personal experiences of answer to prayer.

Whole-heartedness.—Observe carefully the little points in a divine command: worship "towards the holy temple." Nothing is little when God's will is concerned. I knew a youth who had wished to be baptized, but his friends kept him back. When he fell ill, he fretted because he had not confessed his Lord according to the Scripture. "But Isaac," said his mother, "you know baptism will not save you." "No, mother," he replied, "of course it will not, for I am saved. But when I see Jesus in heaven I should not like Him to say, 'Isaac, it was a very little thing I asked of you; did you not love Me enough to do it?' "—Spurgeon.

4, 5. (4) All the kings, comp. Ps. lxviii. 29—32, lxxii. 10, 11.[c] when they hear, R. V., "for they have heard." words, etc., i. e. Thy promises to David and his people. (5) sing .. Lord, joyfully celebrate His mighty acts.[d]

Walking with God.—"I visited a poor old woman belonging to my congregation," said a minister. "She was entirely dependent on the church for her support. Her home was a very small cottage. The moment I entered it I saw how neat and clean everything was. She had just been gathering some sticks from the lane with which to cook her evening meal. Her face was one of the sweetest I ever saw. It was surrounded by the strings of her snow-white cap. On the table lay a well-worn copy of the Word of God. I looked around for a daughter or friend to be her companion and care-taker, but saw none. I said: 'Mother Ansel, you don't live here alone, do you?' 'Live alone! Live alone!' she exclaimed in surprise, and then, as a sweet smile lighted up her face, she added, 'No, sir, the blessed Lord lives with me, and that "The grateful confidence of a befriended suppliant."

d "In the presence of the angels."— Luther, Calvin.

"Before kings or judges." So Chald., Syr., etc.

e 1 Ki. viii. 48.

a "Magnified Thy promise above all Thy name." — Delitzsch.

b Is. lxv. 24; Da. ix. 23.

"The effect of whole - heartedness is very manifest. Even prejudiced persons put up with a great deal in a service when they see that those engaged in it are enthusiastic.—Spurgeon.

c "Hiram, king of Tyre (2 Sa. v. 11; 1 Chr. xiv. 1), and Toi, king of Hamath (2 Sa. viii. 10), congratulated David upon his accession, and are supposed to be here chiefly intended." — Spk. Com.

d Is. lxvi. 10, 12.

makes it pleasant living!'" Certainly she found walking with God a pleasant walk.—R. Newton.

6—8. (6) Though, etc., comp. 2 Sa. vi. 21, xxiii. 1; Ps. xviii. 28, 29, etc., as similar expressions used by David. knoweth afar off, i. e. "God only knows them at a distance, does not admit them into His fellowship." (7) walk .. trouble, Ps. xxiii. 4, lxxi. 20. stretch forth, etc., 1 Sa. xxiv. 6; Ps. x. 12; Job i. 12. (8) perfect,[e] completely work out all His purpose of grace concerning me. Polychr., "recompenses."

Perfecting.—I suppose that if the mediæval dream had ever come true, and an alchemist had ever turned a grain of lead into gold, he could have turned all the lead in the world, in time, and with crucibles and furnaces enough. The first step is all the difficulty, and if you and I have been changed from enemies into sons, and had one spark of love to God kindled in our hearts, that is a mightier change than any that yet remains to be effected in order to make us perfect. One grain has been changed, the whole mass will be in due time.—Alexander Maclaren.

[e] Phil. i. 6.

"The Lord will carry to an end all things that concern my welfare."—Jennings and Lowe.

"Give me the homely vessel of humility, which God shall preserve, and fill with the wine of His grace; rather than the varnished cup of pride, which He will dash in pieces, like a potter's vessel."—Wm. Secker.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-NINTH.

author, — unknown: date, near close of the exile.

Subj., the omniscience and omnipresence of God.

1—5. (1) searched me, more forcibly, "searched me out," "fathomed me."[f] known me, better, "and so Thou knowest me." (2) Thou, this word is emphatic. downsitting, etc., both my resting and my working times. afar off, out of heaven, or however great the distance bet. us. (3) compassest, lit. winnowest or siftest; R. V., "searchest out." acquainted, as by long and minute familiarity with them. (4) word .. tongue,[g] before it gets utterance; when it is only thought God knows it. (5) beset me, surrounded me, shut me in.[h] laid thine hand, the freedom accorded to man is only relative, man accomplishes God's counsel.

God's Perfect Knowledge of Man.—I. God knows all men. II. God knows all men thoroughly. 1. He knows all their words and actions; 2. He knows all their thoughts. III. God knows all men constantly. God's knowledge of us differs from our knowledge of each other, not only in its extent and completeness, but in other respects. 1. His knowledge is underived and independent; 2. His knowledge is clear and perfect. This knowledge ought to prove—1. An antidote to the pride of intellect; 2. An effectual restraint from sins both of heart and of action; 3. A solemn warning to the sinner; 4. The utter impossibility of any man justifying himself in the sight of God; 5. A comfort to the people of God when misjudged by man; 6. A guarantee of the well-being of the people of God; 7. A pledge of the triumph of the Divine government.—Hom. Com.

[f] "To Thee, O God, belongeth it to spy out whatever lieth hid in me, neither can anything escape Thee."—Calvin.

[g] Not in this sentence stands for not yet.

[h] Comp. Job iii. 23, xiii. 27, xiv. 5, 13, 16, xix. 8.

"These palpable images paint God as He is, always close to us, always directing, always restraining."—Spk. Com.

6—8. (6) knowledge, such "omniscience."[a] "Knowledge so all-penetrating, so all-comprehensive."—Delitzsch. attain, or "I have not grown up to it." "I have not mastered it." (7) Whither, etc., not the language of fear, but of awe and wonder.[b] spirit,[c] the omnipresence of God is spiritual. (8) bed in hell,[d] Sheol, the place of resting for the departed.

Wonderful Knowledge.—Take a little lad of ten years, and put him into an assembly of statesmen discussing the gravest questions of diplomacy and international law, to carry documents and messages from one desk to another. In that assembly the lad has a definite place and a definite duty which he can understand and do. But suppose he should refuse to carry a paper of which he did not understand the meaning and bearing. Suppose he should throw up his position as page, on the ground that he was not made acquainted with the whole course of complicated negotiation carried on in that chamber. Would any sane man regard the boy as an injured being? Would any one think of reproaching those statesmen with unkindness or injustice? Would not the lad be simply laughed at? Even supposing that every man in the chamber were disposed to grant his ridiculous demand and to explain the business to him—could they do it? Could the child's mind grasp the destinies of nations? And yet, if this is absurd, what shall be said of a finite being, with his scanty knowledge, with his limited capacity, with his little range of experience, refusing allegiance to a God whose purposes comprehend eternity, and move in orbits vaster than his utmost reach of thought can even begin to conceive; in whose plan the countless details

[a] Ro. xi. 33.

[b] Comp. Jon. i. 3.

[c] "The word spirit is not put here simply for the power of God, as commonly in the Scriptures, but for His mind and understanding."—Calvin.

[d] Pr. xv. 11; Job xxvi. 6—9.

"As birds, wheresoever they fly, always meet with the air, so we, wheresoever we go or wherever we are, always find God present."—Sales.

The celebrated Linnaeus testified in his conversation, writ-of all being in the eternity, past and future, are grouped and unified—what, I repeat, shall be said of the stupendous folly of a poor little man, the difference between whom and God is barely shadowed by the difference between a statesman and a babe, yet who refuses allegiance to God because he cannot, by searching, find out the Almighty to perfection?—M. R. Vincent.

9, 10. (9) wings, comp. Mal. iv. 2.[e] uttermost .. sea, i. e. the furthest west. (10) there, away beyond all presence of man, I shall find Thee. The terms used here imply friendship.

God is Behind All Space.—What a solemn mystery there is in this idea of space! Modern science has added to the benefits which it has conferred upon us also, that it has enlarged our conceptions of space. How much more worthily we are enabled to think of the universe and empire of God than those could have done who regarded the firmament as a solid shell of the earth, star-gemmed, fixed a few miles above it, and revolving around it for the purpose of alternating day and night. One of the most conspicuous respects in which astronomy has proved herself the handmaid of devotion, has been by revealing to us in part the scale on which the universe is built. How far must we travel before we reach a margin beyond which space does not extend? Is there such a margin? But though we had reached the last world that revolves around the great unknown center, we should not have come upon a tenantless void: we should still be in the presence of God, in the hollow of whose hand all worlds and suns and systems lie.—R. A. Bertram.

11—13. (11) even .. me, better rendered, "and let the light round about me be night." (12) hideth not, Heb. darkeneth not. "Even darkness cannot be too dark for Thee." darkness, etc., Heb. "as the darkness so the light" (to Thee).[a] (13) for, etc., since Thou knewest me before I was born, I cannot expect to escape Thee now that I have a separate being. possessed, created, formed. my reins, in distinction from "substance," vs. 15, this may mean, "the sensational and emotional part of the human being." covered me, or "Thou didst weave me together."[b]

Darkness and Light are Both Alike to God.—I. Naturally. "I form the light, and I create darkness." II. Providentially. Providential dispensations that are dark to us are light to Him. We change with respect to Him, not He to us. III. Spiritually. "Let him that walketh in darkness," etc. "Yea, though I walk," etc. He went before them in a pillar of cloud to guide them by day, and a pillar of fire to guide them by night. It was the same God in the day-cloud and the night-light.—G. Rogers.

God Ever Present.—"At one time," said Luther, "I was sorely vexed and tried by my own sinfulness, by the wickedness of the world, and by the dangers that beset the Church. One morning I saw my wife dressed in mourning. Surprised, I asked her who had died. 'Do you not know?' she replied. 'God in heaven is dead.' 'How can you talk such nonsense, Katie?' I said. 'How can God die? Why, He is immortal, and will live through all eternity.' 'Is that really true?' she asked. 'Of course,' I said, still not perceiving what she was aiming at; 'how can you doubt it? As surely as there is a God in heaven, so sure is it that He can never die.' 'And yet,' she said, 'though you do not doubt that, yet you are so hopeless and discouraged.' Then I observed what a wise woman my wife was, and mastered my sadness."

14 thee, emphatic, God alone is the Creator. fearfully, etc., "I give thanks unto Thee that I have wonderfully come into being under fearful circumstances,—circumstances exciting a shudder of astonishment."—Delitzsch; Polychr., "Thou art fearfully wonderful." that my soul knoweth, viz., that thy works are fearfully wonderful. The mysterious birth and early life of men especially engages the Psalmist's attention. Comparing man with the rest of creation, the Psalmist feels overshadowed by the presence of the invisible Artist, and trembles even while he admires.—Cheyne.

15, 16. (15) substance, R. V., "frame," bodily framework. in secret, out of all watching or care of men. curiously wrought, the Heb. word is used of variegated work woven, or perhaps embroidered. Possibly the allusion may be to the system of veins ramifying the body, or to the variegated coloring of its individual members, more particularly of the ings, and actions the greatest sense of God's presence. So strongly indeed was he impressed with the idea, that he wrote over the door of his library: "Innocue vivite, Numen adest—Live innocently— God is present."

[e] "If I should lift wings such as the dawn of the morning has, i. e. could I fly with the swiftness with which the dawn of the morning spreads itself over the eastern sky, towards the extreme west, and alight there."—Delitzsch.

[a] Job xxxiv. 22; Da. ii. 22; Is. xxix. 15.

[b] Comp. Job. x. 11.

If Christ seals on your heart His pardoning mercy, that mercy brings all others with it and in its train.

"From hence comes the reckless indulgence of the flesh, because we weigh not thoroughly how wonderfully the heavenly Workmaster hath fashioned us."—Calvin.

A life without God is, like a ship without a compass, a rudder, or a pilot, exposed to the caprice of the winds of heaven and to the buffeting of every storm, and shipwreck of heart and hope must be the inevitable issue.

"Was it not the most natural of all things for the heathen, who was taught the old Indian fable that the world stood on a tortoise, and the tortoise on a serpent, to go below tortoise and serpent, and ask what was under both? So, if you are forced back to matter for your origin, you are not at rest, for you ask,—What is behind matter." —M. R. Vincent.

a "As an embroidered garment, diversified with colors, my substance was curiously and artistically (yea, with art inimitable) wrought in the utter darkness of the womb." — Spk. Com.

b "My undeveloped form Thine eyes did see, and in Thy book were they all written. (viz.) the days (of my life), which were already conceived of, and for it one among them." (For it, referring to the embryonic period.) — Jennings and Lowe.

a "If I am lost in my meditations on this subject, and recover myself from this state of reverie, yet I am still ever with Thee without coming to an end." — Ewald.

Ps. xl. 5; Is. lv. 9.

b "According to vs. 21, it is not resentment for personal wrongs, but simple zeal for God's honor, which actuates the utterer of these fervid expressions." — Jennings and Lowe.

c 2 Pe. ii. 7, 8.

"Oh, pray for life! thou feels't that, with these faults of thine, thou art not ready yet with sons of God to shine."— Ruckert.

a Ps. v. 8; cxliii. 10; Jno. xiv. 6.

"Songs which, like the Psalms, have stood the test of three thousand years, may well be said to contain in inward part.[a] lowest .. earth, fig. for the womb, as chamber out of reach of the eye of man, or earthly light. (16) in continuance, R. V., "day by day."[b] Hupfeld suggests that the passage refers to the "ball of life, as consisting of a number of threads—i. e. days—wh. are first a compact mass, as it were, and which are then unwound as life runs on." "The best connection is perhaps this: 'In God's book (i. e. His Mind) a day was formed or preordained (cf. Isa. xxii. 11) for every event in human history, and one such was set apart for the final perfecting and birth of the once imperfect substance.'"—Cheyne.

Plans.—A skillful architect before he builds draws a model, or gives a draught of the building in his book, or upon a table; there he will show you every room and contrivance: in his book are all the parts of the building written, while as yet there are none of them, or before any of them are framed and set up. In allusion to architects and other artisans, the Psalmist speaks of God, "In thy book all my members were written;" that is, Thou hast made me as exactly as if thou hadst drawn my several members and my whole proportion with a pen or pencil in a book, before Thou wouldst adventure to form me up. The Lord uses no book, no pen to decipher His work. He had the perfect idea of all things in Himself from everlasting; but He may well be said to work as by pattern, whose work is the most perfect pattern.—Joseph Caryl.

17, 18. (17) precious, etc., the word used rather suggests, "hard to understand," lit. "how heavy, how weighty." (18) still with thee, full of the thought of Thee, and Thy wondrous plans and ways.[a]

God's Thoughts.—I. The preciousness of God's thoughts. 1. Because of their originality; 2. Because of their moral excellence; 3. Because of their practicableness and utility; 4. Because of their influence upon our thoughts; 5. Because of their generosity. II. The number of God's thoughts. III. The realization of God's presence. Conclusion—1. Endeavor to understand God's thoughts; 2. Rejoice in the preciousness of God's thoughts; 3. Seek to become embodiments of God's thoughts. Live them.—William Jones.

19—22. (19) slay the wicked, "the change of subject is singularly abrupt." The thought of God's almighty power suggests a prayer that this power might be put forth against those who commit wickedness.[b] depart, etc., he wanted no association with those who could not adore with him the omniscient and omnipresent God. bloody, R. V., "bloodthirsty;" Ps. v. 6, xxvi. 9. (20) wickedly, in bad terms, and in a bad spirit. "Use Thy name for the accomplishment of wicked ends."—Pul. Com. (21) that hate thee, very love makes us jealous of the honor of our Beloved. (22) perfect hatred, or the perfection of hatred.[c]

Lesson to Conquerors.—When Edward the Confessor had entered England from Normandy to recover the kingdom, and was ready to give the Danes battle, one of his captains assured him of victory, adding, "We will not leave one Dane alive." To which Edward replied, "God forbid that the kingdom should be so recovered for me, who am but one man, by the death of thousands. No, I will rather live a private life, unstained by the blood of my fellow-men, than be a king by such a sacrifice." Upon which he broke up his camp, and again retired to Normandy, until he was restored to his throne without blood. Anger at Crime.—It is said that Adam Smith disliked nothing more than that moral apathy—that obtuseness of moral perception—which prevents man from not only seeing clearly, but feeling strongly, the broad distinction between virtue and vice, and which, under the pretext of liberality, is all indulgent even to the blackest crimes. At a party at Dalkeith Palace, where Mr. ——, in his mawkish way, was finding palliations for some villainous transactions, the doctor waited in patient silence until he was gone, then exclaimed: "Now I can breathe more freely. I cannot bear that man; he has no indignation in him."

23, 24. (23) Search me, the prayer of one who sincerely desires to be pure and true. heart, which is so deceitful. thoughts, which are often so divided and distracted. (24) any wicked way, lit. "any way of grief;" way leading to pain, such pain and suffering as are the sure consequences of sin. way everlasting,[a] the one true abiding way of life; that wh. has permanent good results.

A Prayer of the Upright.—We have here—I. A request for Divine examination. This request implies—1. Consciousness of sincerity; 2. Distrust of self; 3. Confidence in God. II. A desire for entire freedom from evil. III. A request for Divine guidance in the way of righteousness. Here are two points—1. Man's need of guidance; 2. Man's infallible Guide.—Hom. Com.

Lead Us.—

Lead us, O Father, in the paths of right;
Blindly we stumble when we walk alone,
Involved in shadows of a darksome night,
Only with Thee we journey safely on.

Lead us, O Father, to Thy heavenly rest,
However rough and steep the path may be,
Through joy or sorrow, as Thou deemest best,
Until our lives are perfected in Thee.

—W. H. Burleigh.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FORTIETH.

author, — unknown: date, prob. Manasseh's persecution.

A prayer for aid against slanderous enemies.

Poss. historical connection, 1 Sa. xxii. 9, xxiii. 19. Or reference may be to Ahithophel.

1—3. (1) evil man, or evil men. violent man, Heb. "man of violences." (2) they gathered, the plural here shows that more than one person was referred to. for war, i. e. to excite it, or stir it up. (3) sharpened, etc., Ps. lii. 2—4. adders' poison, the meaning is that their tongues inflict wounds which are as painful as poisoned wounds.—Pul. Com. Ps. lviii. 4; Ro. iii. 13.

Æsop and Xanthus.—The heathen philosopher, expecting some friends to dine with him, ordered his servant Æsop to provide the best things the market could supply. Tongues were only provided, and these the cook was ordered to serve up with different sauces. Course after course was supplied, each consisting of tongue. "Did I not order you," said Xanthus in a violent passion, "to buy the best victuals the market afforded?" "And have I not obeyed your orders?" said Æsop. "Is there anything better than a tongue? Is not the tongue the bond of society, the organ of truth and reason, and the instrument of our praise and adoration of the gods?" Xanthus ordered him to go again to the market on the morrow, and buy the worst things he could find. Æsop went, and again he purchased tongues, which the cook was ordered to serve as before. "What! tongues again?" exclaimed Xanthus. "Most certainly," rejoined Æsop; "the tongue is surely the worst thing in the world. It is the instrument of all strife and contention."

4, 5. (4) purposed, are determined, and have plotted. overthrow, etc., R. V., "thrust aside my steps;" comp. Ps. xxxv. 6. (5) The proud, so called bec. of the ambition wh. infatuates them." Polychr., "the arrogant." snare, see Ps. ix. 16, xxxi. 4, cxlii. 3. gins, the word gin is a contraction of engine, so refers generally to mechanical instruments. Here it means a contrivance to ensnare, a trap.

The Dangers of Society.—I. The secrecy of the attacks of the ungodly: "hid a snare." II. The variety of their weapons: "and cords." III. The cunning choice of position: "by the wayside." IV. The object of their designs: "for me:" they desire to destroy the man himself.—Spurgeon.

Traps.—There was "a trap hidden for him with cords;" a trap being sunk into some frequented path, and always covered over with grass or brushwood, and having long cords attached to each side, by which the hunter, lurking at a distance, might close it whenever he saw the game stepping on the spot. But the net spread for him by his enemies extended to the very "side of the encampment," which indicates, that even among soldiers lying around him, there were some who had been bribed and persuaded to watch and betray him.—Benjamin Weiss. Salmasius, one of the most learned men of his time, the great antagonist of Milton, said on his death-bed: "I have lost a world of time; if I had one year more, I would spend it in reading David's Psalms and Paul's Epistles."—Ker.

6—8. (6) my God, therefore the Divine defence he might seek. hear, R. V., "Give ear unto." (7) covered my head, as a helmet in battle, or them the seed of eternity." — Tholuck.

"Thoughts, thoughts, thoughts!
Rolling wave-like on the mind's strange shore,
Rustling leaf-like through it evermore, O that they might follow God's good Hand!"
—William Alexander.

"I will not say it is not Christian to make beads of others faults, and tell them over every day; I say it is infernal. If you want to know how the devil feels, you do know, if you are such an one."—Beecher.

"A knavish speech sleeps in a foolish ear."—Shakespeare.

"I take it as a matter not to be disputed, that if all knew what each said of the other, there would not be four friends in the world. This seems proved by the quarrels and disputes caused by the disclosures which are occasionally made." — Pascal.

"My life with thee is like a song, and the sweet music thou, which doth accompany it."
—Bailey.

"It was the intention of Providence that men should come forth and act some useful and honorable part on that theater where we have been placed; might glorify Him that made us; and, by a steady perseverance in virtue, rise in the end to an immortal state." — Mathew.

"Cold prayers are as arrows without heads, as swords without edges, as birds without wings; they pierce not, they cut not, they fly not up to heaven. Cold prayers always freeze before they reach heaven." — Brooks.

a "Let the mischievous work of their own lips fall, as some heavy weight, upon them and destroy them; let the calumnies wh. they heap upon me fall upon and cover themselves." — Spk. Com.

Ps. vii. 16, xciv. 23; Pr. xii. 13, xviii. 7.

b "Misfortunes, ceaseless and unrelenting, shall continually dog his steps."—Jennings and Lowe.

"When there is drifting and uncertainty as to what is right, there can be no restful inward conviction that we are right." —Pul. Com.

a testudo at a siege. battle, lit. day of armor, i. e. the day wh. necessitates equipment as for a fray. (8) Grant not, do not carry out their schemes for them. The Psalmist well knew that "Man proposes, but God disposes." Leave out the word lest. The Psalmist simply draws attention to the fact that his enemies are full of confidence and self-security.

Protection.—Consider—1. The period spoken of. "The day of battle." Let us notice—1. What the battle implies. (1) Enemies; (2) Peril; (3) Effort. 2. How long the battle lasts. II. The protection acknowledged. 1. Protection of a vital part; 2. Protection by an all-sufficient Being: (1) Of independent existence; (2) Sovereign authority; (3) Saving power. III. The encouragement to be deduced. 1. To trust in Him for protection; 2. To pray to Him for protection.—Hom. Com.

Covering the Head.—A captain or prince had always beside him in battle an armor-bearer, whose duty it was "to cover his master's head," that is, to ward off with the shield the blows aimed at his head, and which, in the heat of the fight, had escaped his own notice.—Benjamin Weiss.

Trust in God.—

Then, fainting soul, arise and sing:
Mount, but be sober on the wing;
Mount up, for heaven is won by prayer;
Be sober, for thou art not there;
Till death the weary spirit free,
Thy God hath said, 'Tis good for thee
To walk by faith and not by sight:
Take it on trust a little while;
Soon shalt thou read the mystery right
In the full sunshine of His smile. —John Keble.

9—13. (9) head, either a figure for the chiefs of the party, or for the life of those who assailed him. Polychr., "Those who are hemming me in raise their head. May the mischief," etc. mischief, etc., "the very things they desire for me let them come upon themselves."[a] (10) fall, or be thrown. deep pits, poss. should be "floods of waters:" or "places for running water, water-pits."—Delitzsch. Cheyne trans. "with fire let Jehovah cause them to fall, with nets that they rise not again." (11) evil speaker, a man of calumnious tongue. evil shall hunt, i. e. calamity as following upon evil doings. For the sinner "sin lieth at the door." to overthrow him, lit. "with drivings along."[b] (12) I know, and the confidence gives rest even in the midst of anxiety. (13) Surely, the Psalmist's settled conviction after long meditation. in thy presence, lit. before Thy face.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIRST.

author, — unknown: date, Manasseh's persecution.

An evening prayer in a time of anxiety.

1—5. (1) I cry, R. V., "I have called." (2) as incense, Polychr., "my prayer is prepared as incense before Thee." lifting .. sacrifice, i. e. "Let my daily prayer be acceptable to Thee as are the daily sacrifices of Thine own appointment."—Perowne. (3) Set .. mouth, a petition for taciturnity, bec. pressure of calamity might lead him to speak doubting words of God, and bitter words concerning men. keep the door, Mic. vii. 5. (5) Incline not, comp. the Lord's prayer, "Lead us not into temptation." dainties,[a] the things connected with the easy, luxurious life of the wicked. (5) righteous, etc., comp. "Faithful are the wounds of a friend." excellent oil, R. V., "it shall be as oil upon the head; let not my head refuse it," i. e. friendly reproof would be valuable and refreshing like oil for the head. for .. calamities, R. V., "For even in their wickedness shall my prayer continue;" meaning, "I will only meet my enemies' attacks with prayer."

a Illus. may be found in the refusal of Jewish youths to eat the dainties in Babylon.

"Prayers are but the body of the bird; desires are its angel's wings."—J. Taylor.

Keeping the Door of the Lips (vs. 3).—I. Let me ask you to consider speech as constituting one of the most tremendous agents in the world. II. Some special times and circumstances when this prayer may be offered with special fitness, and with the hope that good will come of it. 1. When anger rises within; 2. When those we address are angry; 3. When speaking of those against whom we are prejudiced; 4. When in the presence of those who may wrongly report us; 5. When we have reason to fear that the innocent may be injured; 6. When we have reason to doubt our own motives. III. Suggest a few rules for keeping the door of the lips. Ask—1. What is the motive of speech? 2. Are the words likely to injure? 3. How will the words appear in the day of judgment?—J. F. Tuttle.

Keep the Door.—When Latimer was on trial for heresy, he heard the scratch of a pen behind the tapestry. In a moment he bethought himself that every word he spoke was taken down, and he says that he was very careful what words he uttered. Behind the veil that hides eternity is a record-book, in which our every syllable is taken down. Even the most trivial are not forgotten, for the Lord Jesus tells us that "every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment!" If our words have an eternity of existence, if good words have so potent an influence to save, if idle, or profane, or poisonous speech works such perennial mischief, how needful is the perpetual utterance of the prayer, "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips."—J. L. Cuyler.

6—10. (6) judges, better, "rulers." hear my words, Bickell thus trans. this very difficult vs.: "For while my prayer rose at their wicked deeds, down from the crag were hurled their rulers; and the pious heard (concerning) my words, that they had been pleasant in the ears of Jehovah." Allusion to some unknown event regarded as a Divine interposition in ans. to prayer. (7) R. V. trans., "As when one plougheth and cleaveth the earth, our bones .. mouth," i. e. the sufferings of the Israelites, many of whom have sealed their faith by martyrdom.—Cheyne. bones, etc., "the unburied bones of slaughtered saints lie scattered as unregarded as the lumps of soil behind the ploughman."—Expos. Bible. (8) leave .. destitute, or "pour not out my soul unto death."[b] (9) snares, lit. the hands of the snares. (10) fall, etc., comp. Ps. cxl. 10. whilst .. escape, i. e. pass over the nets of traps in safety.

Bones at the Grave's Mouth.—This seems to be strong eastern painting, and almost figurative language; but that it may be strictly true, the following extract demonstrates: "At five o'clock we left Garigana, our journey being still to the eastward of north; and, at a quarter past six in the evening, arrived at the village of that name, whose inhabitants had all perished with hunger the year before; their wretched bones being all unburied, and scattered upon the surface of the ground, where the village formerly stood. We encamped among the bones of the dead, as no space could be found free from them; and on the 23rd, at six in the morning, full of horror at this miserable spectacle, we set out for Teawa."—James Bruce.

"The rebuke of the righteous may be painful, but it promotes our well-being. The pain which it causes is, like that which is inflicted by the knife in the hand of the skilful surgeon, for the good of the sufferer. The true friend who, because of his regard for us, faithfully reproves us when we are in fault, is a great blessing. And the man who, like David, is wise and good will welcome his reproofs with joy, though they are painful. He will not only not refuse them, but will receive them as the oil which was poured on the head on festive occasions, "the oil of gladness."
—Hom. Com.

[b] Is. liii. 12.

A pious sergeant of a colored regiment at Point of Rocks, when invited to take part in a meeting, said, "'Pears like I could say more in five minutes dan I could live all my life long." Words are but wind; life is real: but, when both are in harmony, their influence is mighty.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SECOND.

author, — unknown: date, prob. Manasseh's persecution.

The prayer of one in deep affliction.

1—4. (1) I cried, R. V., "cry," comp. Ps. lxxvii. 1. (2) I poured out, or "I do pour out." (3) When, etc., the Psalmist wishes to say that he did not cry because he had the least fear that God was ignorant of his troubles; but it was this reflection wh. enabled him to stop brooding over his circumstances. His spirit was distressed, but he knew that God was faithful. overwhelmed, lit. darkness itself upon me; is faint. (4) I looked,[a] he looked about only to find himself utterly deserted. right hand, the position of one defending is the right side of him he defends. no .. soul, there is no one seeking (or inquiring for) my soul, i. e. with a view to my good.

[a] "Even the all-seeing God will not be able to discern a man who is friendly to David."—Jennings and Lowe.

The Burden of Souls.—I. What is meant by care for souls? 1. To have a firm conviction of their value; 2. To cherish tender solicitude for their welfare; 3. To feel alarming apprehensions of their danger; 4. To make zealous exertions for their salvation. II. Who ought specially to exercise this care? 1. Parents; 2. Teachers; 3. Ministers; 4. Members. III. The criminality of neglect. 1. It is ungrateful; 2. It is cruel; 3. It is fatal.—W. W. Wythe.

There are two little words in our language which I always admire —"Try" and "Trust." You know not what you can or cannot do until you try; and if God Cares for His People.—Sooner than one of God's saints should be forgotten He would forget the government of the world, and would suffer the nations to take their course rather than lose sight of one of His little ones. As long as a rose of His planting blooms on earth, this desert is to Him a delightful garden, and He leaves heaven to tend and nourish this plant. And happy are ye who are the weak of the flock, the poor and needy, above others! It would seem that you lie the nearest to His heart.—Krummacher.

5—7. (5) portion, Ps. xvi. 5. land of the living, in contrast with Sheol, the place of the dead. "The poet's hope then, is for this life, not for the life after death."—Polychr. (6) Attend, etc., Ps. xvii. 1. (7) prison, figuratively for some severe sorrow and distress. righteous .. about, "shall crown themselves with me."[b]

Prison Dreams.—What we imagine in our fetters. 1. Christ's brow girt about with rare praise. 2. Christ's people compassing and companying us in costliest service. 3. A new life of bounty and blessing—when we get out. II. How far do our dreamings come true? Before peril and after; under conviction, and after conversion; sick room, and active service. III. The duty of fidelity to prison vows and lessons.—W. B. Haynes.

The Lord My Portion.—It is observable that in the courts of kings, children and ruder people are much taken with pictures and rich shows, and feed their fancies with the sight of rich hangings and fine things; but the grave statesman passeth by such things as not worthy taking notice of—his business is with the king. Thus it is that, in this world, most men stay in the outer rooms, and admire the low things of the world, and look upon them as pieces of much excellence; but the spiritually-minded man looketh over all these things that are here below—his business is with God. Let them dote upon the world that are in love with it: whom hath he in heaven but God? And there is none upon earth that he desireth beside Him.—Spencer.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-THIRD.

1—4. (1) righteousness, that side of Divine justice which is turned towards good men; hence it comes to mean "beneficence."[a] The appeal is based entirely upon the attributes of the Divine character. (2) be justified, pass safely through a strict Divine judgment.[b] (3) enemy, etc., the Psalmist means that persecution and affliction had brought him the true knowledge of himself, and had deeply humbled him.[c] in darkness, of a deep sense of sin. have been long dead, who can never return to this world. The "poet seems to himself like one buried alive for ever." (4) overwhelmed, as Ps. cxlii. 3. desolate, amazed, perplexed.[d] Polychr., "my spirit within me is wrapped in gloom my heart grows numb in my bosom."

5, 6. (5) meditate, as Ps. lxxvii. 10—12. work .. hands, Ps. xliv. 1. "The mourner seeks consolation in the consideration of God's works of former ages." (6) stretch forth, in attitude of supplication.[e] thirsteth, Polychr., "Like an exhausted land my soul thirsts for Thee." "He makes his very need a chariot wherewith to mount up to God."[f]

David's Method.—I. He gathered materials; facts and evidence concerning God: "I remember." II. He thought out his subject and arranged his matter: "I meditate." III. He discoursed thereon, and was brought nearer to God: "I muse"—discourse. IV. Let us close by viewing all this as an example for preachers and others.—W. B. Haynes.

Meditation.—In order to meditate we must call to remembrance the things we have learned, and we must seek to store our minds with new and fresh truths. But neither of these is meditation itself. To remember a truth or fact is not to ponder it. In the one case we simply possess the truth, in the other we use it. A passage remembered is so much food laid up in a storehouse; a passage meditated is so much food eaten and incorporated with ourselves. Memory is the casket which holds the jewels; meditation is that which brings them forth, and arranges them upon the person, and sets out both to the best advantage. Meditation on you make trial in the exercise of trust in God, mountains of difficulties will vanish as you approach them, and help will be given that you never expected. —Smiles.

[b] "The righteous will crown themselves with a garland of joy, on account of the success of my cause."—Wordsworth.

"Write six ciphers in a line, and they amount to nothing. Put the figure one before them and they amount to a million. All human talents and possessions are but ciphers until you put the name of Jesus at the head of them. Then they make their owner a millionaire for heaven. —T. L. Cuyler.

author, — unknown; date later exile.

A contrite supplication.

[a] Comp. 1 Jno. 1. 9.

[b] Job ix. 32, xv. 14, 15; Ro. iii. 20; Ga. ii. 16.

[c] "A consciousness of guilt and of deserved punishment seems to lie at the root of the Psalmist's prayer, and to prompt his supplication for forgiveness." —Spk. Com.

[d] "Seeks to comprehend the mystery of its sufferings, and is ever beaten back upon itself in its perplexity." —Perowne.

[e] "As the weary child stretches forth its hands to its mother, that on her bosom it may be hushed to rest." —Perowne.

[f] "He declares his earnestness by a goodly similitude, comparing his soul to a drought divine things makes them really profitable to us. A man may run through a picture gallery so as to see every painting it contains, and to derive from the sight a certain amount of pleasure, but he alone profits by such an exhibition who pauses and studies each worthy work of art, and gathers ideas from it which enrich his mind, or learns lessons from it which refine his taste, or which may guide his own efforts after excellence in art. "It is the settling of milk," says an old writer, "that makes it turn to cream, and it is the settling of truth in the mind that makes it turn to spiritual nutriment."—W. L. Alexander.

7—9. (7) hear me, evidently meaning, answer me. faileth, with weary watching and waiting. lest, etc., Ps. xxviii. 1. (8) cause . . hear, Ps. xc. 14. in the morning, the Heb. fig. for early, soon, speedily. know the way, "either the course that I should take under my difficult circumstances, or 'the way of thy commandments.' "—Cheyne; Ps. xxv. 8, cxlii. 3. (9) I flee, etc., lit. to Thee have I concealed or hidden; prob. meaning, "in Thee have I hidden myself, i. e. found a refuge, or hiding-place."[a]

Listening for Lovingkindness.—I. Where to listen. At the gates of Scripture; in the halls of meditation; nigh the footsteps of Jesus. II. When to listen. "In the morning;" as early and as often as possible. III How to listen. In trustful dependence: "Cause me to hear thy lovingkindness in the morning, for in Thee do I trust." IV. Why to listen. To "know the way wherein I should walk."—W. B. Haynes.

Need of Guidance.—The whole valley is surrounded by ranges of regal crags; but the mountain of the Gemmi, apparently absolutely inaccessible, is the last point to which you would turn for an outlet. A side gorge that sweeps up to the glaciers and snowy pyramids flashing upon you in the opposite direction is the route which you suppose your guide is going to take; and visions of pedestrians perilously scaling icy precipices, or struggling up to the middle through ridges of snow, begin to surround you, as the prospect of your own experience in this day's expedition. So convinced was I that the path must go in that direction, that I took a short cut, which I conceived would bring me again into the mule path at a point under the glaciers; but after scaling precipices and getting lost in a wood of firs in the valley, I was glad to rejoin my friend with the guide, and to clamber on in pure ignorance and wonder. . . . Now what a striking symbol is this of things that sometime take place in our spiritual pilgrimage. We are often brought to a stand, hedged up and hemmed in by the providence of God so that there seems no way out. A man is sometimes thrown into difficulties in which he sits down beginning to despair, and says to himself, "Well, this time it is all over with me;" like Sterne's starling, or, worse, like Bunyan's man in the cage, he says, "I cannot get out." Then when God has drawn him from all self-confidence and self-resource, a door opens in the wall and he rises up, and walks at liberty, praising God.—Geo. B. Cheever.

10—12. (10) thy will, thy good pleasure. spirit is good,[a] or let Thy good spirit lead me, etc. land of uprightness, lit. in a level land, where there need be no fear of stumbling.[b] "The geographical designation is applied here in a spiritual sense." (11) Quicken me, Ps. lxxi. 20. (12) of thy mercy, R. V., "in thy lovingkindness." cut off, etc.,[c] it is worthy of note that the Psalmist does not take the work of vengeance into his own hands, but carries his fear of his enemies wholly to God in prayer. thy servant, therefore may plead Thy protection and defence.

Obedience to the Will of God (vs. 10).—Three states of feeling are exhibited in David's need of Divine instruction and help in the fulfillment of the Divine will. I. Aspiration revealed. 1. Obedience is superior to knowledge; 2. Knowledge alone is positively criminal. II. Deficiency acknowledged. 1. As to the knowledge of God's will in the particular circumstances of life; 2. Of the hindrances to the performances of God's will; 3. As to the practical skill of doing the will of God. III. Desire expressed. Seek to be taught obedience—1. In the particular circumstances of life; 2. In dealing with hindrances; 3. In its active fulfillment.—G. Bainton.

Conforming to the Will of God.—If a man lay a crooked stick upon ground: for in extreme droughts we see the ground chap as though it opened its mouth to look for drink from Heaven." — Calvin.

Ps. xlii. 1, 2, cxxiii. 2, cxxx. 6.

"A well-written life is almost as rare as a well-spent one." — Carlyle.

[a] Rashi, Aben Ezra, etc., render this sentence, "I have hidden (my trouble from others, revealing it) to Thee," i. e. "For Thee have I reserved it."

"From some sins there is no safety but in flight. Our French school-book represented Mentor as saying to his pupil in the court of Calypso, "Fly-, Telemaque; there remains no other mode of conquest but by flight!" "Flee youthful lusts;" they are not to be wrestled with, but fled from. Flight being thus needful, whither shall we flee but to our God? Who will so surely welcome, so securely defend, so permanently entertain?" —Spurgeon.

[a] Ne. ix. 20; Ps. li. 10.

[b] Ps. xxvii. 11.

[c] "The Psalmist pleads God's loving-kindness or mercy as the ground of his prayer, or his conviction, that God will destroy his enemies. This is not the language of a revengeful and bloodthirsty spirit." — Spk. Com.

"We have companions in joy; sorrow we have to face by ourselves. Unless we have Jesus with us in the darkness, we have no one."—Exp. B.

"He lives long that lives well; and time misspent is not lived, but lost.—Fuller.

an even level ground, the stick and ground ill suit together, but the fault is in the stick; and in such a case, a man must not strive to bring the even ground to the crooked stick, but bow the crooked stick even with the ground. So is it between God's will and ours, there is a discrepancy and jarring betwixt them; but where is the fault? or, rather, where is it not? Not in the will of God, but in our crooked and corrupt affections.—Augustine. God's Leading.—Man by nature is as a cripple and blind, he cannot go upright unless he be led by a superior spirit; yea, he must be carried as an eagle carrieth her little ones, or as a mother her tender child. Think not that we can step one right step to heaven but by the conduct and convoy of God's Holy Spirit. Miserable are those who go without his conduction.—Archibald Symson.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOURTH.

author and date uncertain.

A song of confidence in God, as God of victory and social prosperity.

1, 2. (1) my strength, lit. my rock,[d] One of David's most familiar figures. teacheth .. fight,[e] these expressions are eminently suited to David. See his thanksgiving song, 2 Sa. xxii. (2) My goodness, i. e. He who shows goodness or lovingkindness to me.[f] Cheyne, "my castle." my deliverer, the heaping together of epithets is not superfluous, but designed to confirm and strengthen faith. my people, better, peoples, nations;[g] omitting "my."

d Ps. xviii. 2, 46.

e Ps. xliv. 3.

f Ps. lix. 10, 17; Jonah ii. 8.

g Is. xlv. 1.

"If thou hast strength, 'twas Heaven that strength bestowed;
For know, vain man! thy valor is from God."—Homer.

"A little child was taken by her father to see and hear the famous George Whitefield. A deep impression was made upon her heart. She was taken ill the next day, and, when she was dying, said, 'Let me go to Mr. Whitefield's God!' "

Inspiring Aspects of the Divine Being.—I. As the Author of human skill. II. As the Protector of human life. A protection which is—1. Unchangeable; 2. Enduring; 3. Inviolable; 4. Ever available. III. As the source of human authority. IV. As the object of human trust. V. As the Supreme Good of human life. VI. As the Recipient of human praise. 1. Gratitude urges to this; 2. Reason urges to this; 3. This is blessed.—Hom. Com.

My High Tower.—Such towers were erected on mountains, on rocks, or on the walls of a city, and were regarded as safe places mainly because they were inaccessible. So the old castles in Europe,—as that at Heidelberg, and generally those along the Rhine,—were built on lofty places, and in such positions as not to be easily accessible.—Albert Barnes. My Shield.—The Hebrew word signifies, not the huge shield which was carried by an armor-bearer, but the handy target with which heroes entered into hand-to-hand conflicts. A warrior took it with him when he used his bow or his sword. It was often made of metal, but still was portable, and useful, and was made to serve as an ornament, being brightened or anointed with oil. David had made abundant use of the Lord, his God, from day to day, in battles many and murderous.—C. H. Spurgeon.

3, 4. (3) what is man, Ps. viii. 4. The Heb. word used here is Adam. son of man, Heb. Enosh, man in his feebleness: the son of frail mortal man."[a] It enhances our estimate of God's goodness to consider the insignificance and unworthiness of the creatures on whom He bestows it." (4) Man .. vanity, "earth-born man is like unto a breath."—Cheyne; Ps. xxxix. 5, 6. shadow, the evening shadow which in the E. lengthens and passes very quickly.[b] a "Literally, the vs. runs, 'Jehovah, what is man, that Thou shouldst know him, the son of frail man that Thou shouldst take him into consideration?' "—Jennings and Lowe.

b Job viii. 9, xiv. 2; Ps. cii. 11, cix. 23.

What is Man? (vs. 3).—I. What was man as he came from the hands of his Creator? 1. Rational; 2. Responsible; 3. Immortal; 4. Holy and happy. II. What is a man in his present condition? 1. Fallen; 2. Guilty; 3. Sinful; 4. Miserable and helpless in his misery. III. What is man when he has believed in Christ? 1. He is restored to a right relation to God; 2. He is restored to a right disposition towards God; 3. He enjoys the influences of the Holy Spirit; 4. He is in process of preparation for the heavenly world. IV. What shall man be when he is admitted into heaven? 1. Free from sin and sorrow; 2. Advanced to the perfection of his nature; 3. Associated with angels; 4. Near to his Saviour and his God.—G. Brooks.

" 'Let us make man in our image.' Such is man's height, and depth, and breadth, and mystery. He has not come from one principle or distinction of the Divine nature, but out of all principles. Man is the image of Man a Temple in Ruins.—That God hath withdrawn Himself, and left this His temple desolate, we have many sad and plain proofs before us. The stately ruins are visible to every eye, that bear in their front, yet extant, their doleful inscription—"Here God once dwelt." Enough appears of the admirable frame and structure of the soul of man to show the Divine presence did sometime reside in it; more than enough of vicious deformity to complain He is now retired and gone. The lamps are extinct, the altar overturned, the light and love are now vanished, which did the one shine with so heavenly brightness, the other burn with so pious fervor. The faded glory, the darkness, the disorder, the impurity, the decayed state in all respects of this temple, too plainly show the great inhabitant is gone.—J. Howe.

5—8. (5) Bow, etc., comp. the prayer here with the thanksgiving of 2 Sa. xxii. 8—18. Here begins the direct prayer for the overthrow of his enemies. The Psalmist longs for a theophany, a coming of God to judgment.—Perowne. touch, etc., Ps. civ. 32.[c] (6) Cast forth, lit. "lighten lightning." arrows, poetical fig. for the lightning. destroy, R. V., "discomfit." (7) rid, R. V., "rescue;" a peculiar Aramaic word elsewhere used in the sense of opening wide, and always in connection with the mouth or the lip. strange children, R. V., "strangers;" hostile tribes surrounding the sacred nation. (8) right .. falsehood,[a] Polychr., "the grasp of whose hand is a lie;" an expression denoting faithlessness to a solemn covenant, the right hand being lifted up in the taking of an oath.

The Sins of the Tongue.—A bitter word dropped from our lips against a brother is like a pistol fired amongst mountains. The sharp report is caught up and intensified and echoed by rocks and caves, till it emulates the thunder. So a thoughtless, unkind word, in passing from mouth to mouth, receives progressive exaggerations, and, snowball-like, increases as it rolls. Gossip-mongers are persons who tear the bandages from social wounds, and prevent their healing: they are persons who bring flint and steel,, and acid and alkali together, and are justly chargeable with all the fire and ebullition. A whisper-word of slander is like that fox, with a firebrand tied to its tail, that Samson sent among the standing corn of the Philistines. It brings destruction into wide areas of peace and love. Evil-speaking is like a freezing wind, that seals up the sparkling waters and tender juices of flowers, and binds up the hearts of men in uncharitableness and bitterness of spirit, as the earth is bound up in the grip of winter.—F. W. Robertson.

9—11. (9) I will sing, a resolve made in full anticipation of victory. new song, Ps. xxxiii. 3, xl. 3. Song composed freshly for new mercies received. ten strings, R. V. omits "and an instrument;" i. e. it is a "psaltery of ten strings;" Ps. xxxiii. 2, xcii. 3. (10) salvation, etc., "there has always been a belief, especially in the East, that 'a divinity doth hedge a king.' "—Pul. Com. David, mentioned here generically for the line of Davidic kings. hurtful sword, lit. sword of evil.[b] (11) Rid me, etc., comp. vss. 7, 8.

For God's Ear.—I. The singer. A grateful heart. II. The song. Praiseful. New. III. The accompaniment: "Psaltery." Helps to devotion. Give God the best. IV. The auditor and object of the eulogium: "Thee, O God."—W. B. Haynes.

God the Supreme Ruler.—What a doctrine this for the kings and great men of the earth to remember! Could they be brought to feel and acknowledge it, they would not trust to the sagacity of their own councils, nor to the strength of their own arm; but would ever remember that the Most High is the ruler among nations, and that he putteth down one and raiseth up another according to the dictates of His own all-perfect will. Such remembrances as this would stain the pride of all human glory, and would lead men to feel that the Lord alone is to be exalted.—John Morison.

12—15. (12) That, etc., R. V., "When our sons shall be...; and our daughters...hewn after the fashion," etc. This figure marks the native strength and vigor and freedom of the youth of the land; also the polished gracefulness, the quiet beauty, of the maidens. They are like the exquisitely sculptured forms (the Caryatides) which adorned the corners of some magnificent hall or chamber of a palace.—Perowne. grown up,[a] or grown large. corner stones, corner pillars, sculptured pillars, abiding in the house and giving grace and strength to the interior. Some think the elaborately carved corners, or cornices, are meant. polished, Heb. cut, carved. Read, "cut to grace a palace." (13) all .. store, Heb. from kind to kind. streets, should be "pastures."[b] (14) That .. labour, R. V., "When our oxen are well laden." no breaking in, of hostile armies. nor the whole Deity. There is in him a sanctuary for the Father, for the Son, and for the Holy Ghost. 'We will make our abode with him.' "—J. Pulsford.

[c] Ex. xix. 18, xx. 18.

[a] Is. xliv. 20. "The pledge of the right hand, which used to be a witness of good faith, was violated by treachery and wickedness. " — Cicero. "For the mind there is no rest; but for the soul there is rest. It does not look around; it looks up, and knows God — knows as love can know, knows as trust can know. And that is the only satisfying knowledge." — Pul. Com.

[b] "The allusion may be to the destructiveness of the sword, or, it may be to the badness of the cause in which the sword from which the Psalmist prays for deliverance was drawn." — Spk. Com. "Ferdinand, king of Aragon, sending his son against the Florentines, thus bespake him: Believe me son, victories are not gotten by art or subtlety, but given of God." — John Trapp.

[a] If a gentleman is to grow up he must grow like a tree: there must be nothing between him and Heaven." — Archd. Hare.

[b] The root meaning of the word used is 'places outside the city.' " — Perowne. "The last verse sums up all the preceding picture of growth, pros-going out, or sallying against besiegers. Polychr., "There is no murder nor manslaughter, and in our streets no loud outcry." no complaining, R. V., "outcry," as of a besieged city. (15) Happy, etc., that people to whom God graciously grants temporal safety and prosperity.[c] "The acme of Israel's good fortune consists in this, that it has chosen to be the people, whose God is the Lord."—Delitzsch.

Verses 12—14.—Most commentators regard these vss. as a fragment from an earlier writer. The previous vss., too, are full of echoes from earlier Pss. (Pss. 8, 33, 104, etc., and especially Ps. 18.

True Happiness.—Coleridge, the poet, in a letter written a fortnight before his death, addressed to his god-child, says:—"On the eve of my departure, I declare to you, that health is a great blessing; competence, obtained by honorable industry, a great blessing; and a great blessing it is to have kind, faithful, and loving friends and relatives; but that the greatest blessing, as it is the most ennobling of all privileges, is to be indeed a Christian."—Whitecross.

The Happy Nation.—

Thrice happy nation, where with look benign
Thine aspect bends; beneath thy smile divine
The fields are with increasing harvests crown'd,
The flocks grow fast, and plenty reigns around,
Nor sire, nor infant son, black death shall crave,
Till ripe with age they drop into the grave;
Nor fell suspicion, nor relentless care,
Nor peace-destroying discord enter there,
But friends and brothers, wives and sisters, join
The feast in concord and in love divine.—Callimachus.

perity, and tranquility, and traces it to the guardian care and blessing of Jehovah. The psalmist may seem to have been setting too much store by outward prosperity. His last word not only points to the one Source of it, but sets high above the material consequences of God's favor, joyous as these are, that favor itself, as the climax of human blessedness." —Maclaren.

[c] De. xxxiii. 27, 29.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIFTH.

author, — unknown: date, after the restoration.

Praise of the all-bountiful King.

The last of the alphabetical Psalms.

1—3. (1) O king, the real King of the nation of Israel; all its governors were but princes under Jehovah, the great King. ever and ever, "in this devotion to the ever-living King he forgets his own mortality—this impulse of the soul towards the praising of the God, to whom the soul owes its origin, is a practical proof of a life after death."—Delitzsch. Comp. Ps. xxx. 12, xxxiv. 1.[d] (2) Every day, each new day finding a new occasion, and new reasons. (3) greatly, R. V., "highly." to be praised, Ps. xlviii. 1. unsearchable, "it is so abyssmally deep, that no searching reaches its reason or ground;" comp. Is. xl. 28; Ro. xi. 33.

[d] "The heart lifted up to God, and full of the thoughts of God, can no more conceive that its praise should cease, than that God Himself should cease to be." — Perowne. God is King in verity; others are called kings in vanity. " — Martin Geier.

The Te Deum.—The tradition about the Te Deum is that it was first sung by Ambrose and Augustine, through inspiration, when, in 387, they were together at Milan. The truth is that this hymn had its origin in a responsive Christian song which Ambrose introduced into the West from the Eastern Church. It was a morning Psalm of praise, and began, "Every day I will bless Thee, and praise Thy name for ever and ever." This 145th Psalm may be looked on as having the germ of the widespread Christian hymn, and as being itself the Te Deum of the Old Testament. The Jews were accustomed to say that he who could pray this Psalm from the heart three times daily, was preparing himself best for the praise of the world to come.—Ker.

"Then God is to be blessed and praised in dark as well as bright days." — Johannes Paulus Palanterius.

4—7. (4) One .. another, lit. generation to generation. (5) speak, or meditate upon. De Wette says, "rehearse in poetry." (6) declare, or rehearse each one of them. (7) abundantly utter,[a] pour forth as from a fountain. sing, loudly, joyfully. righteousness, i. e. "God's acting in inviolable accordance with His counsel and the order of His salvation."

The Antiphon.—I. To praise God is a personal duty: "I will." II. Its right performance will excite others to engage in it: "And men shall." III. The accompaniment of others in praise will re-act upon ourselves. "And I will;" "And they shall abundantly," etc. IV. Such praise widens and expands as it rolls along. Beginning with God's majesty and works, it extends to His acts, greatness, goodness, and righteousness.—C. A. Davis.

[a] Comp. Da. iv. 37, vi. 26, 27.

Thy Greatness.—All men are enamored of greatness. Then they

"Some men make complaint, that it is a great misfortune to die before our time. I would ask what time? Is it that of Nature? But she, indeed, has lent us life, as we do a sum of money, only no certain day is fixed for payment. What reason then to must seek it in God, and get it from God. David did both. All history shows the creature aspiring after this glory. Ahasuerus, Astyages, Cyrus, Cambyses, Nebuchadnezzar, were all called "the great." Alexander the Great, when he came to the Ganges, ordered his statue to be made of more than life size, that posterity might believe him to have been of nobler stature. In Christ alone does man attain the greatness his heart yearns for—the glory of perfect goodness.—Thomas Le Blanc.

8, 9. (8) gracious, Ex. xxxiv. 6, 7. great mercy, great in mercy. "The real will of God makes for graciousness, which stoops down sympathetically, and for compassion, which rich in help and consolation espouses the cause of the sinner; wrath is only the background of His nature, which He reluctantly and after long waiting lets loose against those, who repulse His great grace."—Delitzsch; Ps. ciii. 8. (9) all his works, Ps. ciii. 22. Reference is to the "entirety of things created."

Yielding to Mercy.—I heard once a story from a soldier, who, with his company, had laid siege against a fort, that so long as the besieged were persuaded their foes would show them no favor, they fought like madmen; but when they saw one of their fellows taken and received to favor, they all came tumbling down from their fortress and delivered themselves into their enemies' hands. I am persuaded, did men believe there is grace and willingness in the heart of Christ to save sinners, as the word imports there is, they would come tumbling into His arms; but Satan has blinded their minds that they cannot see this thing.—Bunyan.

10—13. (10) saints, or beloved ones;[a] Cheyne, "thy loving ones." (12) mighty acts, acts indicating august and Divine power. They so confess, that the glorious majesty of Jehovah's kingdom may become the property of humanity. (13) everlasting kingdom, or kingdom running on through all the ages. There is no beginning and passing to God's kingdom: "it is eternal periphery of temporal history; it is also its eternal purport wh. is gradually unfolding and working itself out."

The Glory of Christ's Kingdom (vs. 11).—The glory of Christ's kingdom is manifested—I. In its origin. II. In the manner and spirit of its administration. III. In the character of its subjects. IV. In the privileges attached to it. Apply:—1. Pray and labor for its advancement; 2. Press into it.—R. Hall.

An Everlasting Kingdom.—High up over the door of the old mosque in Damascus, which was once a Christian church, but for twelve centuries has ranked among the holiest of the Mahomedan sanctuaries, are inscribed these memorable words: "Thy kingdom, O Christ, is an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations." Though the name of Christ has been regularly blasphemed, and the disciples of Christ regularly cursed for twelve hundred years within it, the inscription has, nevertheless, remained unimpaired by time, and undisturbed by man. It was unknown during the long reign of Mohamedan intolerance and oppression; but when religious liberty was partially restored, and the missionaries were enabled to establish a Christian church in that city, it was again brought to light, encouraging them in their work of faith and labor of love.—John Bate.

14—17. (14) upholdeth, etc., His providential care is as minute and precise as it is extensive and glorious.[b] (15) wait, looking, watching with expectation. (16) thine hand, represented as holding the supply of every creature's need. (17) holy,[c] better, merciful; R. V., "gracious."

Comprehensiveness of Divine Provision (vs. 15).—Man and beast dependent on the Divine care. God's provision for the world is—I. Universal in its extent: "the eyes of all." II. Suitable in its supply: "due season." III. Communicated with infinite ease: "openest Thine hand." IV. Contributes to the satisfaction of its recipients: "and satisfieth, etc."—J. B. Dodd.

Care of Providence.—Socrates, one of the sages of Greece, who in the night of paganism longed for light, spoke one day as he sat among his disciples of the overruling providence of the Deity, which, being omnipresent, did hear and see everything, taking care of all creatures; and that we should always feel and recognize this more, the more we honored and revered the Supreme Being. In the emotion of his heart, the wise man alluded to a parable from the poems of the incomparable Homer: "Jupiter has two casks placed at the entrance of his palace, filled with the gifts he bestows upon mortals, one with blessings, the other with misfortunes. He to whom he gives a mixture of both sorts sometimes falls into misery, sometimes enjoys happiness; but he to whom he gives only out of the cask of misfortunes is the object of derision, pursued by cruel famine, and wanders over the face of the earth, despised by gods and men."—Plutarch.

[a] Ps. xvi. 10.

Voltaire said, "In twenty years Christianity will be no more. My single hand shall destroy the edifice it took twelve apotles to rear." Some years after his death, his very printing press was employed in printing New Testaments, and thus spreading abroad the Gospel. Gibbon, "with solemn sneer," devoted his gorgeous history to sarcasm upon Christ and His followers. His estate is now in the hands of one who devotes large sums to the propagation of the very truth Gibbon labored to sap.

[b] Wherein is the conspicuous excellence of this kingdom seen? Not in the symbols of earthly pride and power, but in gracious condescension to the fallen and the crushed, in a gracious care which provides for the wants of every living thing." — Perowne.

[c] Re. xv. 3, 4. "A wicked man's prayer is sick of the plague, and God will not come near him. The loadstone loseth its virtue when it is bespread with garlic. Prayer is the key of heaven, but the wards must be answerable, or it will not open. God will not hear us if we will not hear Him. He will not be gracious to us if we will not be holy. He will not be merciful to us if we will not be righteous. He will not be favorable to us if we will not be faithful. He will not be pitiful to us if we will not be penitent. He will not be loving to us if we will not be loyal. He will not be kind to us if we will not be kindly affectioned. He will not be good to us if we will not be godly. He will not be bountiful to us if we will not be thankful. He will not be liberal to us if we will not be liberal. He will not be forgiving to us if we will not be forgiving. He will not be merciful to us if we will not be merciful. He will not be gracious to us if we will not be gracious. He will not be holy to us if we will not be holy."

lick; so doth prayer when it is polluted with sin." — T. Watson.

"In agony nature is no atheist, the mind which knows not where to fly, flies to God."—Hannah More.

mer, likening Divine Providence to a mother, who, with gentle and unseen hand, fans the flies from her sleeping child. Among his disciples was Critias, the traitor, who afterwards condemned him to death. He laughed at the comparison, for he thought it ignoble and common. Therefore he laughed and mocked at it in his heart. However, Socrates observed it, and understood his thoughts. He turned to him, and said: "Dost thou not feel, my dear Critias, how nearly allied the human in its simplicity is to the Divine, and how the former must raise us to the latter?" Thus he spoke. Critias departed with an angry heart; but Socrates continued to instruct the other disciples. When Socrates was sentenced to death by the malice of Critias and condemned to drink the poisoned cup, the tyrant remembered the words and the parable of the sage, and he came to him and said deridingly: "Well, Socrates, will the gods even now protect thee from the flies?" But Socrates smiled, and said: "The gods, Critias, now lead me to rest after my day's work is done. How could I still think of the flies?"—F. A. Krummacher.

18—21. (18) nigh, so both able and ready to meet every occasion of need. in truth, i. e. sincerely. "Mere formal prayer is useless, does not lessen the distance between God and man, rather augments it." (19) fulfil the desire, we know that such expressions are not to be taken absolutely; God answers according to His own wise and beneficent will. (20) will he destroy, or better, he destroys, is accustomed to destroy. The judgments of God aid the confidence of His servants in Him. (21) holy name,[a] Ps. xxxiii. 21, ciii. 1, cv. 3.

Nearness of God.—The nearness or remoteness of a friend is very material and considerable in our troubles, distresses, wants, dangers, etc. I have such a friend and he would help me, but he lives so far off; and I have another friend that has a great love for me, that is able to counsel me, and to speak a word in season for me, and that in my distress would stand close to me, but he is so remote. I have a special friend, that did he know how things stand with me would make my burden his, and my wants his, and my sorrows his; but he is in a far country, he is at the Indies, and I may be undone before I can hear from him. But it is not thus with you, O Christians! who have a God so nigh unto you, who have the signal presence of God in the midst of you, yea, who have a God always standing by you.—Thomas Brooks.

[a] Re. v. 13.

"I respect the man who knows distinctly what he wishes. The greater part of all the mischief in the world arises from the fact that men do not sufficiently understand their own aims. They have undertaken to build a tower, and spend no more labor on the foundation than would be necessary to erect a hut."—Goethe.

"Like our shadows, our wishes lengthen as our sun declines."—Young.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SIXTH.

author,—unknown: date, prob. Maccabaean.

A call to trust wholly in God.

1—4. (1) Praise, better, Hallelujah, the term characteristic of Psalms cxlvi.—cl. each begins and ends with the same expression. O my soul, Ps. ciii. 22.[a] (2) sing praises, or play upon an instrument.[b] have any being, lit. while I yet (am).[c] (3) princes, the inability to render assistance, not the capriciousness of earthly potentates, is mainly in view.[d] no help, or power to save. "Confidence in human aid of any kind is forbidden." (4) returneth, etc., Ge. ii. 7. thoughts, or purposes. So weak is he, and not to be depended upon.

Ceaseless Praise.—George Carpenter, the Bavarian martyr, being desired by some godly brethren, that when he was burning in the fire he would give them some sign of his constancy, answered, "Let this be a sure sign unto you of my faith and perseverance in the truth, that so long as I am able to hold open my mouth, or to whisper, I will never cease to praise God, and to profess His truth;" the which also he did, saith mine author; and so did many other martyrs besides.—John Trapp.

Put not Your Trust in Princes.—Shakespeare puts this sentiment into Wolsey's mouth:—

> "O how wretched
> Is that poor man that hangs on princes' favor!
> There is, betwixt that smile we do aspire to,
> That sweet aspect of princes, and their ruin,
> More pangs and fears than wars and women have:
> And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer, > Never to hope again."

[a] "As a fit prelude to these Psalms of praise the Psalmist attunes his own soul to that work of praise in which he summons all creation to join."—Spk. Com.

[b] Ps. xxxiii. 2, xcviii. 5, 6, cxlix. 3.

[c] "His life shall be a thanksgiving unto the power that made him."
—Perowne.

[d] Ps. cvii. 40, cxviii. 9. A good remark is made as to the authorship of particular psalms: "When we discern in a letter the well-known hand of a friend, we are

5—7. (5) God of Jacob, declared in special revelation to Jacob,[e] in general revelation shown as Creator of heaven and earth, etc. hope, etc., a striking contrast bet. such a hope, and that in man who so quickly passes away; Je. xvii. 7; Ps. xxxiii. 12. (6) Which made, etc., comp. Ac. iv. 24. keepeth truth, is faithful. Men easily become of a different mind and do not keep their word: He, however, is the One that keepeth truth, inasmuch as He unchangeably sees to it that His promises are fulfilled.—Delitzsch. To this attribute prominence is given.[f] "From the omnipotence of God the Psalmist passes to His faithfulness, then to His righteousness, and then to His bounteousness and graciousness."—Jennings and Lowe. (7) looseth, with prob. reference to release fr. Bab. captivity.[g] Vss. 7—9 picture God's character as a ruler.

The Blessedness of Trusting in God (vs. 5).—How exalted the frame of the Psalmist's mind at the time he penned these words. We shall first —I. Confirm his testimony. 1. However numerous and powerful his enemies, he can never be overcome; 2. However enlarged his expectations he can never be disappointed. II. Commend it to your especial attention. 1. Seek to know the character of Jehovah as here drawn; 2. Seek to obtain an interest in Him as your God; 3. Make use of Him for all the ends for which He has given Himself to you.—Simeon.

Trust in God.—I was once goaded by a poor Irish papist to try it, who told me that if a priest would but give him a drop of holy water, and make a circle with it around a field full of wild beasts, they would not hurt him. I retired, reflecting, what a fool I am that I cannot put such trust in my God as this poor man puts in his priest and a drop of holy water! And I resolved to try what "the name of the God of Jacob" would do, having the Father's fixed decrees, the Son's unalterable responsibility, and the Spirit's invincible grace and operation around me. I tried it and felt my confidence brighten. O brethren, get encircled with covenant engagements, and covenant blood, and covenant grace, and covenant promises, and covenant securities; then will "the Lord hear you in the time of trouble, and the name of the God of Jacob will defend you." —Joseph Irons.

8—10. (8) openeth, etc., comp. Is. xlii. 7. Reference may be either to physical helplessness, or spiritual want of discernment.[h] (9) strangers, etc., in this vs. three great examples of natural defencelessness are taken, strangers, widow, fatherless.[a] relieveth, R. V., "upholdeth," sets upright. upside down, Polychr., "leads to ruin." This is done in the wise ordering of Div. Providence. (10) reign, or shall be king.

Counting God Out.—A striking illustration of the folly of counting God out of one's plans for life is given in the course of William M. Tweed. Here was a man who sought wealth and power, and who for a time seemed successful in their pursuit. Apparently he did not propose to obey God or to live for a life to come. What he wanted was worldly prosperity. He thought he had it. He went to Congress. He gathered his millions. He controlled the material interests of the metropolis of his country. He openly defied public sentiment and courts of justice in the prosecution of his plans. He was a brilliant and therefore a dangerous example of successful villainy. But the promise of prosperity for the life which now is, is only to the godly. As William M. Tweed lay dying in a prison-house in the city he once ruled, his confession of bitter disappointment was, "My life has been a failure in everything. There is nothing I am proud of." If any young man wants to come to an end like this, the way to it is simple and plain. "The great God that formed all things both rewardeth the fool, and rewardeth transgressors." "The way of the wicked he turneth upside down."—S. S. Times.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SEVENTH.

author,—unknown: date,—prob. Maccabaean.

1—6. (1) This verse might perhaps be better rendered: "Praise ye Jah, for he is good; sing unto our God, for He is lovely; comely is the hymn of praise."—Perowne. praise is comely, "sweet and beautiful," Ps. xxxiii. 1. (2) build up, as at the return from captivity.[b] outcasts, better, exiles; those thrust out. (3) wounds, lit. pains. (4) telleth,[c] or appor-

Praise to the Restorer of Jerusalem.

[e] "It is a characteristic of these Pss. to proclaim to all nations which worshipped idols, that 'the God of Jacob,' 'the God of Zion,' is the Creator and Governor of all things; and to make an appeal to all nations to turn to Him."—Wordsworth.

[f] "This is, in fact, the central thought of the Psalm. For on this ground beyond all others is God the object of trust. He is true, and His word is truth, and that word He keeps not for a time, but for ever."—Perowne.

[g] Ps. lxviii. 6.

[h] The several works of mercy enumerated in these verses were combined in the personal ministry of our Lord.

[a] Ps. lxviii. 5; Ja. i. 27.

"To trust in fleeting power is madness; to trust in the Eternal King is wisdom and blessedness, and in some sense makes him who trusts a sharer in the eternity of the God in whom is his hope, and from whom is his help."—Exp. B.

"No friendly voice speaks comfort to her soul, nor soft-eyed pity drops a melting tear." —Robert Glynne.

[b] Ps. cxxii. 3.

[c] Is. xl. 26—29.

not solicitous about the pen with which it was written."—Ker.

tioneth a number. This is a proof of His omniscience and omnipotence, and so of His ability to help His people. by names,[d] R. V., "He giveth them all their names;" the sign of intimate and familiar knowledge, as of a shepherd over his flock. (5) is infinite, or "there is no number;" no numbering of it; is incalculable, i. e. not to be measured by single facts (the sands of thought, to apply cxxxix. 18), or even by the more complete results of human reasoning. Vaster therefore than the stars.—Cheyne; Ps. cxlv. 3. (6) lifteth up, setteth up, establisheth. meek, i. e. afflicted, Ps. xxii. 26.

The Excellence of Praise to God.—I. The praise of God is excellent in itself. II. The praise of God is excellent in its reasons. 1. His relation to His Church; 2. His relation to His troubled souls; 3. His relation to heavenly hosts; 4. His retributive relation to men.—Hom. Com.

Jerusalem.—

Jerusalem! Jerusalem! the blessing lingers yet
On the city of the chosen, where the Sabbath seal was set;
And though her sons are scattered, and her daughters weep apart,
While desolation, like a pall, weighs down each faithful heart;
As the plain beside the waters, as the cedar on the hills,
She shall rise in strength and beauty when the Lord Jehovah wills:
He has promised her protection, and the holy pledge is good,
'Tis whispered through the olive groves, and murmured by the flood,
As in the Sabbath stillness the Jordan's flow is heard,
And by the Sabbath breezes the hoary trees are stirred.—Mrs. Hale.

7—11. (7) Sing, lit. answer, as in the responses of a liturgical service: "answer one another." (8) upon the mountains, where man does not plough or sow seeds. (9) giveth, etc., as Job xxxviii. 41.[a] which cry, when they cry. (10) of the horse, with reference to its use in battle: as the strength of Egypt lay in its horses and chariots, this fig. is used generally for "carnal security."[b] legs of a man, i. e. his strength and swiftness. (11) hope in, wait for His mercy.

The Providence and Pleasure of God.—I. The providence of God. 1. Presiding over the elements; 2. Creating vegetation; 3. Providing for the wants of His creatures. II. The pleasure of God. 1. It is not in those who trust in their own resources; 2. It is in those who reverence and trust Him. III. The praise of God. 1. A response for Divine favors; 2. An expression of gratitude for Divine favors.—Hom. Com.

His Beneficence.—It would be a terrible thing, indeed, for all created beings if almighty power were under the control of malevolence, or even of selfishness. We see what happens when exceptional human power is directed by unscrupulousness; we see what suffering, what desolation is the result. We are so familiar with the thought of God's goodness that we are not much affected by it; but we ought to be profoundly stirred by the truth that omnipotence, exercised everywhere in God's vast domain, through every sphere, is put forth to feed, to clothe, to shelter, to help, to relieve, to brighten, to bless.—Pul. Com.

12—16. (12) Praise, here "praise aloud." (13) strengthened, the wall was complete, and the gates fixed. Poss. this Ps. was prepared for thanksgiving service on the completion of the work.[c] (14) peace, comp. Is. lx. 17. finest of the wheat, lit. fat of the wheat:[d] Ps. lxxxi. 16. (15) runneth, the word being figuratively treated as if it was a messenger. His commands in the natural world are promptly obeyed. (16) snow like wool, snow-flakes like flocks of wool covering the fields.[e]

Snow.—"The snow-flake," as Professor Tyndall strikingly says, "leads back to the sun"—so intimately related are all things to each other in this wonderful universe. It leads further and higher still—even to Him who is our sun and shield, the light and heat of all creation. The whole vast realm of winter, with its strange phenomena, is but the breath of God—the Creative Word—as it were, congealed against the blue transparency of space, like the marvelous frost-work on a window-pane. The Psalmist had not the shadow of a doubt that God formed and sent the annual miracle of snow, as He had formed and sent the daily miracle of manna in the desert. It was a common-place thing; it was a natural, ordinary occurrence; but it had the Divine sign upon it, and it showed forth the glory and goodness of God as strikingly as the most wonder-

[d] Jno. x. 3.

"There is no heaven, either in this world, or the world to come, for people who do not praise God. If you do not enter into the spirit and worship of heaven, how should the spirit and joy of heaven enter into you?" — John Pulsford.

It was a fine reply that a pupil of the Deaf and Dumb Institution of Paris made to the following question, put by a gentleman visiting it. "What is eternity?" "It is the lifetime of the Almighty!"

[a] Ps. civ. 27, 28; Lu. xii. 24. The references to Job throughout this Ps. are numerous.

[b] "In all those things to which the God-estranged self-confidence of man so readily clings, God has no delight and no pleasure." —Delitzsch.

Ps. xx. 7, xxxiii. 16, 17; Pr. xxi. 31; Ho. i. 7.

"It must be a prospect pleasing to God to see His creation forever beautifying in His eyes, and drawing nearer to Him by greater degrees of resemblance." — Addison.

[c] Neh. vii. 3.

[d] For orig. promise of plenty, see De. xxxii. 13, 14.

[e] "He wraps the earth in snow as in a warm white woolen garment, and scatters the frost so that the trees, etc., appear as if powdered with ashes blown about by the wind."—Jennings and Lowe. "That all Creation must involuntarily praise

ful supernatural event in his nation's history. When God would impress Job with a sense of His power, it was not to some of His miraculous, but to some of His ordinary works that He appealed. And when the Psalmist would praise God for the preservation of Israel and the restoration of Jerusalem—as he does in this Psalm—it is not to the wonderful miraculous events with which the history of Israel abounded that he directs attention, but to the common events of Providence and the ordinary appearances and processes of nature.—Hugh Macmillan.

17—20. (17) ice, i. e. hail. morsels,[f] Polychr., "crumbs," i. e. in profusion as men feed birds. (18) melteth them, the waters frozen by the cold.[g] (19) his word, better, words: His lively "oracles." "God's works in nature are for all men; but there is a special privilege belonging to His chosen people." (20) not dealt so, De. iv. 7, 32—41.[h]

Electing Grace Inspires the Heart with Praise.—I. God's love has chosen us. Hallelujah. II. God has intrusted us with His truth. Hallelujah. III. God has made us almoners of His bounty. Hallelujah. IV. God through us is to save the world. Hallelujah.—W. B. Haynes.

Winters in Palestine.—The wintry season was sometimes very severe in Judæa and Palestine; usually lasted about six weeks; though sometimes intermingled with casual mitigations. Severe about Jerusalem—having both hail and snow. But when the sky is agitated by those tempestuous winds called Levanters, the cold is so piercing, the conflict so great of hail, ice, snow, and rain, that many of the poor people and their cattle perish. And it is dreadful to be at the mercy of armed bands at those times. An Oriental, describing a defeated army near Ascalon, says: "In haste they threw away their armor and clothes, but soon sunk under the cold, together with want of food, slippery and rugged roads, which were everywhere furrowed and broken up by torrents, that they were taken captives in the woods and on the mountains, and threw themselves into the hands of their enemies rather than perish." How welcome, then, the sudden and unexpected change in the text! "He causeth His wind," etc.—Hom. Com.

f Job xxxvii. 10.

g "Israel in the captivity had been ice-bound, like ships of Arctic voyagers in the Polar Sea; but God sent forth the vernal breeze of His love, and the water flowed, the ice melted, and they were released." —Wordsworth.

h He. iv. 1, 2. "Those who know the value of human life know the importance of a year, a day, and even an hour.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-EIGHTH.

author,— unknown: date, prob. Maccabaean.

1—6. (1) from the heavens, or, O ye of the heavens: including both things and beings. heights, the regions lifted up. (2) angels, conceived as attending on God in heaven. hosts, the heavenly bodies, described in the next verse. (3) stars of light, the light of the stars was the chief thing noticed. What the stars really are was, and is still, a mystery. (4) heavens of heavens, denoting the boundless depths of the heavens.[a] waters, "the storehouses of the rain." From their first to their last page, the Scriptures acknowledge the existence of celestial waters, to which the rain-waters stand related as a finger-post pointing upwards.—Delitzsch; Ge. i. 7. (5) commanded, Ps. xxxiii. 6. (6) decree, etc., Job xxviii. 26.[b] pass, R. V., "pass away." or, better, "wh. they (the celestial bodies and beings) cannot transgress."

God's Praise in the Heavens.—I. The praises of God by heavenly beings. 1. Voluntary; 2. Constant; 3. Thorough. II. The praise of God by heavenly bodies. Because—1. Created by Him; 2. Sustained by Him; 3. Governed by Him. III. The interest of godly men in God's praise in the heavens.—Hom. Com.

Music.—Music has been called the speech of angels. I will go further and call it the speech of God Himself. Without words it is wonderful—blessed—one of God's best gifts to men. But in singing you have both the wonders together, music and words. Why is there music in heaven? Because in music there is no self-will. It goes on certain laws and rules which man did not make, but has only found out. Some of us may not be able to make music with our voices; but we can make it with our hearts, and join in the angels' song this day, if not with our lips, yet in our lives. Christmas has always been a day of songs, of carols, and of hymns; and so let it be for ever. For on Christmas Day, most of all days (if I may talk of eternal things according to the laws of time) was a De. x. 14; 1 Ki. viii. 27.

A l l creatures called to praise God.

b "God has engraven a law on all His works in nature wh. regulates their mutual relations, and none of them transgresses it." — Spk. Com.

"A line of praises is worth a leaf of prayer; and an hour of praises is worth a day of fasting and mourning." —J. Livingston.

"God the Supreme was depicted by the ancients holding in his hand a wreath of stars, to show the double conception, that they both obey and adorn him."

manifested on earth the everlasting music which was in heaven.—Charles Kingsley.

7—10. (7) The call to praise Jehovah now turns to the earth, as the second great division of created things. dragons, general term for any large water-animals.[a] all deeps, contents of deep places, or seas. (8) Fire, i. e. lightning. "Refers perhaps to the sublime storms in mountain regions, in which the lightning seems like falling masses of fire, and the clouds around the summits like the smoke of a burning mountain."—Cheyne. vapours, fogs and mists. stormy wind, "all these natural phenomena are messengers and servants of God;" Ps. cvii. 25. (9) fruitful trees, i. e. fruit trees, as distinguished from forest trees. cedars, the king, and type of forest trees. (10) flying fowl, Heb. birds of wing.

Stormy Winds.—Cannon Liddon preached in St. Paul's on Sunday afternoon, December 23, 1883, and took for his text Ps. cxlviii. 8, "Stormy wind fulfilling His word." He spoke of the Divine use of destructive forces. I. In the physical world we see wind and storm fulfilling God's word. 1. The Bible occasionally lifts the veil, and shows us how destructive forces of Nature have been the servants of God. 2. Modern history illustrates this vividly. II. In the human, spiritual, and moral world, we find new and rich application of the words of the text. 1. In the State we see the storm of invasion and the storm of revolution fulfilling God's word. 2. In the Church we see the storm of persecution and the storm of controversy fulfilling God's word. 3. In the experience of individual life we see outward troubles, and inward storms of religious doubts fulfilling God's word.—The Contemp. Pulpit.

11—14. (11) Kings, etc., beginning with the noblest and gathering up all classes. (13) excellent, R. V., "exalted." (14) horn, the sign of dignity, prosperity, and pre-eminence. near unto him, so the subject of gracious and peculiar interest. De. iv. 7.

A People Near to God (vs. 14).—They are near to Him—I, Because they are reconciled to Him by faith in Christ. II. Because they live in habitual communion with Him. III. Because they seek conformity to Him. IV. Because they enjoy His protection. V. Because they shall be with Him for ever.—G. Brooks.

Music.—On Thursday evening, March 29th, 1883, for above an hour all who had occasion to use the telephone in Chicago found it vibrating to musical tones. Private and public telephones, and even the police and fire-alarm instruments, were alike affected. The source of the music was a mystery until the following day, when it was learned that a telegraph wire, which passes near most of the telephone wires, was connected with the harmonic system, that tunes were being played over it, and that the telephone wires took up the sounds by induction. If one wire carrying sweet sounds from place to place could so affect another wire by simply being near it, how ought Christians in communication with their Father in heaven, to affect all with whom they come in contact in the world! The Divine music of love and gentleness in their lives should be a blessing to society.—The Pulpit Treasury. Influence of Joy.—There are souls in the world who have the gift of finding joy everywhere, and of leaving it behind them when they go. Joy gushes from under their fingers like jets of light. Their influence is an inevitable gladdening of the heart. It seems as if a shadow of God's own gift had passed upon them. They give light without meaning to shine. These bright hearts have a great work to do for God.—Faber.

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-NINTH.

author,— unknown: date, prob. Maccabaean.

Subject, zeal for the cause of Jehovah.

1—4. (1) new song, "as expressive of all the new hopes and joys of a new era, a new spring of the nation, a new youth of the Church bursting forth into a new life."—Perowne; comp. Ps. xxxiii. 3. (2) made him, constituted him a people. their king, i. e. Jehovah whether a Davidic king occupied the throne as his representative or not. (3) in the dance, or with the pipe. timbrel, Ex. xv. 20. (4) beautify, or make glorious. meek, prob. here, the afflicted or oppressed; Polychr., "He adorns the wretched with victory."

"The ancients thought there was an ethereal and lofty ocean in which the worlds floated like ships in a sea." — Thomas Le Blanc.

a "Sea monsters, mentioned first because at the bottom of the scale in creation."
—Perowne.

Ps. lxxiv. 13.

"What voices have the hills! How solemn the sounds of the mountains from their sublime solitudes! The mountains thunder, and the hills re-echo; but they speak peace and send down plenty to the vales in running rivulets."
—Thomas Le Blanc.

A poor man who had been a follower of Jesus about twelve months thus spoke of the advantage he had derived from religion since he had embraced it; "This year I have had a good crop on my little piece of land; I have got a fat pig in my sty, and some money in my pocket; last year this time I had nothing; the whole went to the public-house. I know religion is a good thing for body as well as soul."

"Praise is the rent we owe to God; and the larger the farm, the greater the rent."—Bowes.

"Meekness not only gives great peace of mind, but often adds a lustre to the countenance. We

The Lord's Pleasure in His People (vs. 4).—I. The people. 1. Have a special relation to God; 2. Are regenerated and sanctified by His spirit; 3. Conformed to His image; 4. Zealous for His glory. II. The pleasure God has in them. 1. In their persons; 2. Their welfare; 3. Their services; 4. Their graces; 5. Their fellowship.—G. Brooks.

Cheerfulness.—Give us, oh, give us the man who sings at his work! Be his occupation what it may, he is equal to any of those who follow the same pursuit in silent sullenness. He will do more in the same time—he will do it better—he will persevere longer. One is scarcely sensible of fatigue whilst he marches to music. The very stars are said to make harmony as they revolve in their spheres. Wondrous is the strength of cheerfulness, altogether past calculation its powers of endurance. Efforts to be permanently useful must be uniformly joyous—a spiritual sunshine—graceful from very gladness—beautiful because bright.—Thomas Carlyle.

5—9. (5) joyful in glory, i. e. in the glory or beauty wh. God confers upon them. upon their beds, the place for soliloquy;[b] "where before, in the loneliness of night, they consumed themselves with grief for their shame." (6) sword, see Ne. iv. 17, 18. "A revival of the old military spirit of the nation." (7) heathen, R. V., "nations." (8) bind, etc., the reference is prob. rather prophetical, applying to the moral subduing of the nations under the power of the Gospel, than having regard to further national conquests. the judgment written, prob. ref. to the "judgment of extermination pronounced against the old inhabitants of Canaan." this honour, better, He, Jehovah, is an honor to all His saints.[c] He is the glorious object of their praise.

Saintly Joy.—I. The state to which God has lifted the saints: "glory," in contrast with sin, reproach, affliction. II. The emotion which accordingly befits the saints: "be joyful." III. The utterance of that emotion incumbent on the saints: "sing aloud."—C. A. Davis.

b Ho. vii. 14.

c Or it may mean, this honor, the work of subjecting heathen nations.

"Here joy enters into us, there we enter into joy; the joys we have here are from heaven; the joys that we shall have with Christ are without measure and without mixture."—T. Watson.

"Those who have been adorned with Jehovah's salvation have the subjugation of the world to God's rule committed to them."

PSALM THE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH.

1, 2. (1) sanctuary, where those that love Him are met together. firmament, etc., the heavens, where His might and majesty are displayed. (2) for .. acts, in the recital of such acts as the Exodus, restoration from Bab., etc. excellent greatness, the abundance of His greatness.

Hallelujah!—Mr. John Janeway, on his death-bed, said, "Come, help me with praises, all is too little: come, help me, O ye glorious and mighty angels, who are so well skilled in this heavenly work of praise. Praise Him, all ye creatures upon the earth; let everything that hath being help me to praise Him. Hallelujah, hallelujah, hallelujah! Praise is now my work, and I shall be engaged in that sweet employment for ever."—Whitecross.

3—6. (3) trumpet, cornet. (4) timbrel, tambourine. organs, or "pipes." (5) cymbals, instruments which they clanged together. high sounding, Polychr., "crashing." (6) everything, lit. all the breath: the entirety of animate creatures.

The Duty of Praising God (vs. 6).—Be it known—I. That God deserves all imaginable praise from His creatures. II. There is not a thing that breathes which has not abundant reason to praise Him. 1. Those who are yet in heathen darkness; 2. Those who enjoy the light of revelation; 3. Those who are brought to saving knowledge of Christ. III. The more we abound in this blessed exercise the more exalted will our happiness be.—Simeon.

"Praise ye the Lord."—Praise God with a strong faith; praise him with holy love and delight; praise him with an entire confidence in Christ; praise him with a believing triumph over the powers of darkness; praise him with an earnest desire towards him, and a full satisfaction in him; praise him by a universal respect to all his commands; praise him by a cheerful submission to all his disposals; praise him by rejoicing in his love, and solacing yourselves in his great goodness; praise him by promoting the interests of the kingdom of his grace; praise him by a lively hope and expectation of the kingdom of his glory.—Matthew Henry.

only read of three in Scripture whose faces shone remarkably — viz., Christ, Moses, and Stephen — and they were eminent for meekness." — Matthew Henry.

author, etc.,— as prev. three Psalms.

The general Hallelujah of animated creation.

"It is a great deal better to be a joyful Christian than a happy Christian, because the happiness of a happy Christian depends upon what happens to him, but joy does not depend upon what happens to us, or upon our surroundings."—Chapman.

"While others call the wondrous Lord by partial names that utter some one side of his wondrousness, to us he has but one name—Saviour. He is that and that alone, and all besides only as it is wrapped up in that." — Phillips Brooks.

THE BOOK OF PROVERBS.

739

Introduction.

The Book of Proverbs is evidently not the work of a single author. According to the book itself certain verses (xxiv. 23–34) are the "sayings of the wise." Ch. xxx. is ascribed to Agur and ch. xxxi. to King Lemuel. Study of the language and style of the different portions of the book and of the social conditions reflected in them has led most scholars to the opinion that it was compiled long after Solomon's day, and that some unnamed author had much to do with putting it into its present form. "The opening words, then, of the book — 'The Proverbs of Solomon the son of David, King of Israel' — are not to be taken as an assertion that all which follows flowed from Solomon's pen, but rather as a general description and keynote of the subject of the treatise.

"The main body of Proverbs is the collection which begins at chap. x., 'The Proverbs of Solomon,' and ends at xxii. 16. This collection has certain distinct features which mark it off from all that precedes and from all that follows. It is, strictly speaking, a collection of proverbs, that is of brief, pointed sayings,— sometimes containing a similitude, but more generally consisting of a single antithetical moral sentiment,— such as spring into existence and pass current in every society of men. As the form is the same in all, so the general drift of their teaching is quite uniform; the morality inculcated is of no very lofty type; the motives for right conduct are mainly prudential: 'Be good, and you will prosper; be wicked, and you will suffer," is the sum of the whole. A few scattered precepts occur which seem to touch a higher level and to breathe a more spiritual air." We see in these chapters the reflection of a period of "comparative simplicity and purity, when the main industry was that of tilling the soil, when the family life was pure, and when the king was still worthy of respect. The whole collection seems to date from the earlier and happier times of the monarchy.

"To this collection is added an appendix (xxii. 17–xxiv. 22), which opens with an exhortation addressed by the teacher to his pupil." The sayings indicate a time of growing luxury, when the poor are oppressed. Another brief appendix follows (xxiv. 23–34) and then "we pass on to an entirely new collection, ch. xxv.–xxix., which was made, we are told, in the literary circle at the court of Hezekiah, two hundred and fifty years or thereabouts after the time of Solomon. In this collection there is no uniformity of structure such as distinguished the proverbs of the first collection. The social condition reflected in these chapters is not very attractive; it is clear that the people have had experience of a bad ruler (xxix. 2); we seem to have hints of the many troubled experiences through which the monarchy of Israel passed — the divided rule, the injustice, the incapacity, the oppression (xxviii. 2, 3, 12, 15, 16, 28).

"The book closes with three quite distinct passages, which can only be regarded as appendices (xxx.; xxxi. 1–9; xxxi. 10–31). It is impossible to say when or how these curious and interesting additions were made to our book, but scholars have generally regarded them as the product of the exile, if not the post-exile period. Now the two collections, which have been described, with their several appendices, were at some favorable point in religious history, possibly in those happy days of Josiah when the Deuteronomic Law was newly promulgated to the joyful nation, brought together, and, as we should say now, edited, with an original introduction by an author who, unknown to us by name, is among the greatest and noblest of Biblical writers. The first nine chapters of the book, which form the introduction to the whole, strike a far higher note, appeal to nobler conceptions, and are couched in a much loftier style than the book itself. The writer bases his moral teaching on Divine authority rather than on the utilitarian basis which prevails in most of the proverbs. Writing in a time when the temptations to a lawless and sensual life were strong, appealing to the wealthier and more cultured youth of the nation, he proceeds in sweet and earnest discourse to woo his readers from the paths of vice into the Temple of Wisdom and Virtue. In the wonderful passage which introduces Wisdom appealing to the sons of men, on the ground of the part which she plays in the Creation and by the throne of God, we recognize the voice of a prophet — a prophet, too, who holds one of the highest places in the line of those who foretold the coming of our Lord." — Expositor's Bible.

Synopsis.

(According to Angus.)

Part I. — A connected discourse on the value and attainment of true wisdom.....i.–ix.

Part II. — Proverbs, strictly so called, expressed with much force and simplicity.. .x.–xxii. 16.

Part III. — Contains several renewed admonitions on the study of wisdom.....xxii. 17–xxiv.

Part IV. — Proverbs selected by the men of Hezekiah; by those, that is, whom he employed to restore the service of the Jewish Church.....xxv.–xxix.

Part V. — The wise instructions of Agur to his pupils Ithiel and Ucal, and lessons addressed to Lemuel by his mother, chiefly enigmatical....xxx.–xxxi. 9.
A picture of female excellence, xxxi. 9–31.

(According to Horne.)

Part I. — The proem or exordium.....i.–ix.

Part II. — For the use of persons who have advanced from youth to manhood.....x.–xxii. 16.

Part III. — Principally relating to rich men and nobles; a miscellaneous collection.....xxii. 17–xxiv.

Part IV. — A posthumous appendix, xxv.–xxxi.

(According to Litton.)

Part I. — An exhortation to wisdom..i.–ix.

Part II. — Disconnected moral maxims, x.–xxii. 17.

Part III. — Observations on wisdom, xxii. 17–xxiv.

Part IV. — Separate maxims....xxv.–xxix.

Part V. — The supplement.....xxx.–xxxi.

(According to Zöckler.)

Part I. — Introductory.
1. Group of admonitory discourses, i. 8–iii. 35.
2. Group of admonitory discourses, iv. 1–vii. 27.
3. Group of admonitory discourses, viii. 1–ix. 18.

Part II. — Original Nucleus of the Collection. Genuine Proverbs of Solomon.
1. Difference between the pious and ungodly..... ....x.–xv.
2. Exhortations to obedience, etc., xvi.–xxii.

Part III. — Additions Made Before Hezekiah's Day to the genuine Proverbs of Solomon, which form the nucleus of the collection.
1. Addition.....xxii. 17–xxiv. 22.
2. Addition... .....xxiv. 23, 24.

Part IV. — Gleanings By the Men of Hezekiah.
1. Admonition to the fear of God, etc., xxv.
Various warnings.....xxvi.–xxix.

Part V. — The Supplements.
1. Words of Agur.....xxx.
2. Words of Lemuel, etc......xxxi.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

1—4. (1) proverbs, root of Heb. word sigs. either to rule or to resemble: so of these Provs. some are maxims, and others parables; and not proverbs in merely the current and popular sense. Solomon,[a] though he did not compose all, was the dominant spirit among the wise men of his age, some of whose sayings are here incorporated with his own. king . . Israel, this describes Solomon. (2) know[b], become acquainted with. wisdom, an appreciation of what God requires of us, and what we conversely owe to God: this, in its widest sense, the truest wisdom. instruction, admonition; moral training and discipline. perceive, discern, spiritual insight. (3) receive, into the heart as principles of holy living. the . . wisdom, R. V., "wise dealing." justice, R. V., "righteousness," or right walking in relation to God. judgment, justice. equity, what is right and reasonable towards man: integrity. (4) subtilty, R. V., marg. "prudence;" skilfulness in discriminating betw. truth and error, right and wrong. simple, open, i. e. to external impressions, hence easily misled. to . . man, this bk. pre-eminently one for youth.

A great teacher and true learner (vss. 1–6). — In these six verses we have—I. A great teacher. 1. His history, the son of a great man, the king of a great people; 2. His lessons, their form; 3. His design, mental and moral culture. II. A true learner. 1. A wise man; 2. Attentive; 3. Improving.— Thomas.

Proverbs. — One of the missionaries was working up into practical use a large collection of national proverbs gathered during many years of extended travel, and I subjoin a few, which especially struck me, either by their quaint force or their resemblance to our own wise saws. For instance, the well-known warning not to look a gift horse in the mouth, has its equivalent in Badaga, one of the Indian tongues, "If any one offers you a buffalo, do not ask if she gives milk;" and the Malayali rendering of "A burnt child dreads the fire," is identical with the corresponding French proverb, "A scalded cat fears cold water," while the Hindu version is very picturesque and characteristic, "He whose father was killed by a bear is afraid of a black stump." Again, we say, "If you send an ass on its travels it will not come back a horse," which in Tamil runs, "You may decorate an ass, but that will not make it a horse;" and another dialect expresses nearly the same idea by the sententious adage, "A donkey may grow, but he will never be an elephant." The European proverbs that "No man is a hero to his valet de chambre," and that "Familiarity breeds contempt," are tersely and picturesquely combined in the Tamil adage, "The temple cat does not fear the idol." The Malayalis reprove a boaster who glories over the unfortunate, with the pithy remark, "Any one can leap a fallen tree;" and their proverb, "Running up and down the boat does not bring one sooner to land," is a keen rebuke to those who chafe and fret under circumstances of forced inaction; while the sacred warning not to cast pearls before swine is aptly paraphrased by the question, "What is the use of reading the Vedas to a wild buffalo?" A few more Tamil sayings seem well worthy of notice. "The tears of the oppressed are sharp swords," reads like a sentence from the Proverbs of Solomon; and "The flower out of reach is dedicated to God," is surely a most graceful statement of the futility of day dreams of service and sacrifice in the pathless future. "The ant, measured by its own hand, is eight spans long," expresses with superior elegance and force the gist of more than one English proverb; and "A black cow may give white milk," is an adage admirable for terseness and point, even if doubtful in morality. There is much shrewdness in the Servian proverbs, "Speak the truth, but come away quickly after," and "When an old dog barks, then see what the matter is;" and volumes of truth and beauty are summed up in the simple saying, "The sun goes over unclean places, but is not defiled." Of how many bright and holy lives spent in labor among vice and misery might this proverb be taken as the fittest motto! Russian proverbs present a remarkable combination of sound common sense, deep religious feeling, and pithy, almost coarse expression. A few taken almost at random will illustrate all three. "Measure your cloth ten times, for you can only cut it once." "A fool can cast a stone into the sea, but a hundred wise men cannot get it out." "If you knew where you would fall, you could put down straw." "Pray to God, but row towards shore." "With God go over the sea; without God cross not the threshold." "A mother's prayer saves from the depths of the sea." "Fear not the rich man's frowns; fear the a 1 Ki. iii. 12; iv. 29, 32; Ecc. xii. 9, 10.

"Proverbs can be handed from one to another like coins. A truth that is worth uttering is worth remembering." — Pul. Com.

b Ps. cxix. 98–100; 2 Ti. iii. 15–17; 1 Th. v. 21; Ps. xvii. 4.

"The Bible is not given to teach us philosophy, but religion; not to show us the way to science, but the way to holiness and heaven. Notwithstanding, therefore, the extent and variety of Solomon's knowledge in botany, in natural history, and other departments of science, we have in preservation none whatever of his discoveries or his speculations on such subjects." — Wardlaw.

Proverbs: "The wit of one man, and the wisdom of many." — Earl Russell. "Remnants which, on account of their shortness and correctness, have been saved out of the wreck and ruins of ancient philosophy." — Aristotle. "Short sentences, into which, as in rules, the ancients have compressed life." — Agricola, "Well-known and well-used dicta, framed in a somewhat out-of-the-way form or fashion." — Erasmus. "Edge tools of speech, which cut and penetrate the knots of business and affairs." — Bacon.

"How much more doth it concern us to be hearers ere we offer to be teachers of others. He gathers that hears, he spends that teacheth. If we spend before we gather we shall soon prove bankrupts."—Bp. Hall.

beggar's tears." "Love me when I am black, when I am white every one will love me." "We cannot go to church for the mud, but we may get to the tavern." "No need to plant fools, they grow of themselves."—Overland, Inland and Upland.

[a] Ma. xiii. 11, 16; Jo. ii. 22; Ac. viii. 27–39; Ac. xiii. 7; 1 Co. iii. 6.

[b] Ph. iii. 12; Pr. ix. 9; Ex. xviii. 17–24; 1 Co. iii. 18.

[c] Ps. cxix. 18, 33, 34; 1 Co. ii. 9, 10; He. xiii. 9.

[d] Lit. helmsmanship, fr. root = cord, i. e. rope of a rudder.

"Dark sayings are often like roots, which lie a long time in the earth before their juices begin to move and their inner life seeks to express itself in stem, and leaf, and blossom, and fruit."—Peop. Bib.

5, 6. (5) wise . . hear,[a] R. V., "That the wise man may;" i. e. increase yet more his wisdom. and . . learning,[b] that wh. one receives fr. a teacher: doctrine, knowl. and . . understanding,[c] i. e. he who has widened his knowledge by exercising discernment. shall . . counsels,[d] i. e. may learn the art, and attain the power of ruling. (6) understand, etc., "the climax of the definition of wisdom."—Stanley. interpretation, R. V., "a figure;" a riddle, knotty saying wh. calls for interpretation. dark sayings, enigmas.

Proverbs (vs. 6).—I. Abundant in all languages. II. As a rule spring from the people. III. Marked by great diversity of form. IV. Since so popular, natural that the Spirit should use them. V. Those of this book all grave and good.—Arnot.

Proverbs.—Hear the Hindu: he, too, has his book of proverbs. He says, "The sugar-cane is sweeter knot after knot." What a Bible upon the development of character is there! "The sugar-cane is sweeter knot after knot:" the further it grows, the more it grows; the more perfectly it is developed, the sweeter it becomes. It needs no great sagacity to see the practical applications of so beautiful a fact in nature. The one application that may be fixed upon is this, that men as they grow older should grow sweeter. If we are growing bitterer as we grow older I know not who planted us; God can hardly be held responsible for such an irony; but if we are growing sweeter, gentler, purer, fuller of the love that would redeem the world, God is in us of a truth; whether we belong to any sect or no sect, we belong to God.—Peop. Bib.

holiness the right path to knowledge

7. fear . . Lord,[e] "the temper of mind wh. must be possessed by him who means to be profited."—Stuart. Reverential awe. is . . knowledge, the first and chief thing, in all true knowledge: without this holy fear no man can be wise. fools,[f] the hardened, the stupid, sinners who reject God's rule. despise,[g] as men puffed up with conceit. wisdom, piety, as the right rule of life, and end of study. instruction, of age, holiness, experience, as herein proffered.

The root of knowledge (vs. 7).—I. Show the advantage of knowledge, even of worldly knowledge; especially of the higher knowledge, of the way of salvation. II. Show that the first step in this higher knowledge is the fear of the Lord. He who fears God will study the best things, and study them well.

Two hard students.—In the early part of the reign of King William III., the University of Edinburgh had at the same time, two bright ornaments, Dr. Rule, M. D., and Mr. Campbell, Professor of Divinity. Dr. Rule was also an acceptable and tried minister. The lodging-rooms of these two eminent men stood so that the windows were opposite to each other, though at some distance. Dr. Rule used to sit up late at his studies, and it was Professor Campbell's custom to rise very early in the morning; so that many times the doctor's candle would not be put out by the time Mr. Campbell's was lighted. The one, their friends used to call the evening star; and the other, the morning star. They lived together in great love, and a most intimate friendship subsisted between them till death. The doctor died but a little time before Mr. Campbell. When the tidings came to Mr. Campbell that the doctor was departed, he was deeply impressed. He presently recovered himself, and said, "that the evening star was gone down, and the morning star would soon disappear."—R. T. S.—The fear of the Lord.—There are two kinds of fear; one full of suspicious watchfulness, of anxious apprehension, of trepidation, terror and dismay; the other such as can dwell in the same heart with confidence and love, and is but another form of reverence. Filial fear of God is a duty; slavish and servile dread of Him is a sin. Filial fear shrinks from sin, servile fear only from the smart of punishment. Filial fear keeps men from departing from the living God; servile fear drives them from Him, even as it impelled our first parents to hide themselves among the trees when they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden. By filial fear men are made like the Man Christ Jesus, upon whom rested "the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord;" by servile fear they may be scared from [e] Job xxviii. 28; Ps. cxi. 10; Ecc. xii. 13; He. xii. 28, 29.

[f] Ge. iv. 6–8; 1 Sa. ii. 12; 1 Ki. xii. 13.

[g] Ps. xxxvi. 1; Je. viii. 9.

"It is to be noted that 'the fear of the Lord' is only indicated as 'the beginning of wisdom.' A further education is needed, and is provided for by the increasing fullness and graciousness of Christian revelation."—People's Bib.

"It hardly entered into the mind of a Hebrew thinker to conceive that 'fear of the Lord' might pass into full, wholehearted, and perfect love. And yet it may be shown that this was the change effected when Christ was of God 'made unto us Wisdom;' it is not that the 'fear,' or reverence, beiniquity, as the wolf from the sheepfold by the shepherd's gun, but it does no more to make them holy than the fright does to destroy the wolf's ferocity. Filial fear animates us to avoid whatever would be offensive to our Heavenly Father, and, if the expression may be allowed, to consult His feelings and desires; but servile fear, as it springs from selfishness, causes us only to care for ourselves and at best makes us not better, but only a little more prudent than the devil. — R. A. Bertram.

8, 9. (8) son,[a] the reader is addressed with parental kindness and authority. instruction, disciplinary education. father,[b] obedience to a father the finest model of subordination in patriarchal times. forsake, reject or neglect as puerile. law, R. V., marg. "teaching." (9) they, being obeyed. ornament, garland, R. V., "chaplet." grace, gracefulness: i. e. a beautiful adornment. and . . neck, emblem of authority gained by learning and obedience; "insignia of office and honor were usually displayed by some conspicuous ornament on the neck." — Stuart.

Filial love a blossom of beauty (vs. 9). — I. God the Author of the family constitution. II. Intended the parent to rule in the world of home. III. The moral beauty of children found in obedience to these Divinely appointed home-rulers.

My mother's Bible. — On one of the shelves in my library, surrounded by volumes of all kinds, on various subjects and in various languages, stands an old book, in its plain covering of brown paper, unprepossessing to the eye, and apparently out of place among the more pretentious volumes that stand by its side. To the eye of a stranger it has certainly neither beauty nor comeliness. Its covers are worn; its leaves marred by long use; its pages, once white, have become yellow with age; yet, old and worn as it is, to me it is the most beautiful and most valuable book on my shelves. No other awakens such associations, or so appeals to all that is best and noblest within me. It is, or rather it was, my mother's Bible — companion of her best and holiest hours, source of her unspeakable joy and consolation. From it she derived the principles of a truly Christian life and character. It was the light to her feet and the lamp to her path. It was constantly by her side; and, as her steps tottered in the advancing pilgrimage of life, and her eyes grew dim with age, more and more precious to her became the well-worn pages. One morning, just as the stars were fading into the dawn of the coming Sabbath, the aged pilgrim passed on beyond the stars and beyond the morning, and entered into the rest of the eternal Sabbath — to look upon the face of Him of whom the law and the prophets had spoken, and whom not having seen she had loved. And now no legacy is to me more precious than that old Bible. Years have passed; but it stands there on its shelf, eloquent as ever, witness of a beautiful life that is finished, and a silent monitor to the living. — Haven.

10. sinners, ungodly in general: but esp. habitual and abandoned sinners. entice,[c] make repeated attempts at persuasion. consent . . not,[d] afford thou no entrance. Open not thy heart to their friendship, nor thy mind to their plausible suggestions. This and the following vss. indicate a state of society in wh. civil authority was weak and bands of robbers committed deeds of violence.

A father's warning (vs. 10). — I. The enticers of youth. 1. From within; 2. From without. II. The enticements. 1. Pleasant; 2. Alluring; 3. Deceitful; 4. Dangerous. III. The prescription. 1. Blunt refusal; 2. Obstinate resistance. — Wythe.

A child tempted to disobedience. — A boy was once tempted by his companions to pluck some ripe cherries from a tree which his father had forbidden him to touch. "You need not be afraid," said they, "for if your father should find out that you had taken them, he is so kind, that he would not hurt you." "For that very reason," replied the boy, "I ought not to touch them; for though my father may not hurt me, my disobedience would hurt my father." — One false step. — A boy who was a scholar in one of the Sunday schools in Leeds was on his way to school, when he was accosted by some others, who invited him to join them in a walk. At first he refused, then vacillated, then consented. They sauntered into the principal street of the town: then into a yard, climbed upon a wall, and found themselves within reach of the window of a warehouse, which, on trial, they found unfastened. Without reflecting observe parental instruction

a Ge. xxii. 9; He. xi. 23; 1 Sa. i. 28; 1 K. iv. 29, 30.

b Ep. vi. 2; Co. iii. 20.

"As letters graven in the body of a tree, they grow up with the tree, and the fruit of the tree grows up with the tree, and therefore the twigs break not with the greatness of the weight of it; because they grow up together." — Gibbs.

"Be very vigilant over thy child. While he is a tender twig, straighten him; whilst he is a new vessel, season him; such as thou makest him, such commonly shalt thou find him. Let his first lesson be obedience, and his second shall be what thou wilt. Give him education in good letters, to the utmost of thy ability and his capacity. Season his youth with the love of his Creator, and make the fear of his God the beginning of his knowledge." — Quarles.

c Ge. iii. 6; 1 K. xiii. 15-19, 24; 1 K. xxii. 4; 2 Ch. xxiv. 17, 18; Ga. i. 6, 7; iii. 1.

d Ge. xxxix. 9, 10; 1 K. xxii. 13, 14; Ii. 9, 10; Ac. viii. 18, 20; Ma. vi. 3-10.

"We can best keep out sin, not by bare expulsion of the spirit of evil, leaving the soul empty, swept, and garnished, and therefore ready for the advent of worse sins, but by filling our thoughts and affections with pure and worthy objects, by overcoming evil with good."—Peop. Bib.

"It is of vast moment to be 'just right' when starting. At Preston, at Malines, at many such places, the railway lines go gently asunder; so fine is the angle that at first the paths are almost parallel, and it seems of small moment which you select. But a little further on one of them turns a corner, or drives into a tunnel, and now that the speed is full the angle opens up, and at the rate of a mile a minute the divided convoy flies asunder."—J. Hamilton.

on the consequences, some of them opened the window and got in, leaving the Sunday scholar to keep watch on the wall. They ransacked the place until they came to a desk, which by some means they opened, and abstracted a sum of money. This they divided, giving to their companion a share of it. Unknown to them, their motions had been observed, and their object suspected; and very quickly the police had them all in safe custody.

Enticing sins.—There is said to have been kept in the halls of the Inquisition a beauteous statue of a virgin; the painter's tenderest strokes of art had been expended to give loveliness to the face, and the sculptor's utmost skill had been enlisted to add charm to charm in the rounded molding of form and limb. The white arms were undraped and extended wide, as though to embrace; the eye and lip, and the whole attitude were full of winning invitation; and the professing penitent was led into this fair presence, and commanded to advance and embrace the figure. As soon as he drew near to meet that bending neck and stooping smile, the fair white arms encircled him, not with the caress of love, but with the vice-like clutch of vengeance and the bosom opened, and the lips expanded, and a hundred gleaming knives shot from the virgin figure, transfixing the victim with a hundred scarlet stabs; the parted lips pushed forth a barbed tongue, and showed fanged teeth to lacerate and tear—in short, the beauty was transformed into a beast, the fairy form became an armory of poignards whose every charm concealed a dagger, and whose every grace was death. And so it is with sin.—Mursell.

a "Comp. mocking question of the tempter concerning Job (i. 9). "Doth Job fear God for nought?" "Sinners are essentially hypocrites. They dare not show their true characters to their fellow-men. Were they to do so, instead of enjoying social fellowship and patronage, they would be shunned as monsters. Hence they always work under mask, and love the dark."—David Thomas.

11—14. (11) If . . say, if, for example, their enticement take this form. Come, become one of our fraternity. let . . blood, i. e. bloodshed, murder. for . . cause,[a] not offering the excuse of even private revenge: "innocence is fruitless, as to exempting fr. the attack of such assassins."—Stuart. (12) Let us, etc., the sudden and effective destruction of the victims, as if the earth were to gape open and destroy men alive. grave, R. V., "sheol." whole, i. e. in the fulness of their strength. (13) We . . substance, enticement to crime through profit: many riches are to be obtained. we . . spoil, i. e. booty, prey. (14) Cast . . us, "you shall equally with others cast lots for your share of the booty."—Delitzsch.

The tempter.—He is always existing in every state of society, and not hard to find. There are human beings who have come to adopt evil as a trade, and, not content with practising it themselves, must have help and sympathy in their work, and turn recruiting-sergeants for the devil. The beautiful laws of our being assert themselves amidst all the perversion of depraved choice. Crime, like sorrow, is lonely, and craves partnership. Remorse would soothe itself by fixing the like sting in the bosoms of others. And the criminal, constantly on his defence against society, learns to acquire an allurement of manner which is not the least of his dangerous qualities. The warning to youth against "enticing sinners" of both sexes can never be obsolete. Beware of persons of "peculiarly fascinating manners." What is it that fascinates? Generally it will be found to be some species of flattery, overt or concealed, attacking the weak point of the tempted ones. The warning may be so far generalized into "Beware of the flatterer." Flattery is at the bottom of most temptation.—E. Johnson.

b "The devil doth not know the hearts of men, but he may feel their pulse, know their temper, and so accordingly can apply himself that way the tide of a man's constitution runs, that way the wind of temptation blows. Satan tempts the ambitious man with a crown, the sanguine man with beauty, the covetous man with a wedge of gold."—An Old Writer.

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of truth with falsehood, for the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight, Parts the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right,
And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light.
—Lowell.

c Isa. lix. 7; Ro. iii. 15.

15, 16. (15) walk not, comp. Ps. i. 1. refrain, "resist the very first solicitations to evil."—Pul. Com. path,[b] the beaten byway not so public as the highway. (16) run, the sign of their eagerness. evil, of all sorts, wh. in the end is sure to become evil unto themselves. shed blood,[c] see vs. 11, and comp. vs. 18.

Evil companionship.—Mr. Jay gives, in his Reminiscences, the following mournful account of a young man, the only son of his predecessor at Bath. He had good abilities, and seemed much inclined to become truly religious; but he "became acquainted with some sceptical or as, by a patent of their own, they call themselves, free-thinking young men: gave up the house of God and the Sabbath. Swimming on a Sunday, for amusement and experiment, he caught a chill, which brought on consumption. This for months gave him warning, and space for repentance; but it is to be feared this grace of God was in vain. During his gradual decline he refused all intercourse with pious friends or ministers, and when his good nurse entreated him to call me in, as I lived close by, and there had been such an intimacy between us, he frowned and rebuked her, and ordered her to mind her own business. On the last day of his life, unasked, I ventured into his dying chamber. He was sensible, but exclaimed, 'O Voltaire! Voltaire!' He then raised himself up in the bed, and, wringing his hands, again exclaimed, 'O that young man! I said, 'My dear sir, what young man?' With a countenance indescribable he answered, 'I will not tell you.' What have I seen in a long ministry of the dire effects of evil associates and licentious publications!"

"Those are marked for ruin that are deaf to reproof and good counsel."

"It is an argument of a wicked man but to company with the wicked. We judge evil accompanyings to be next to evil deeds." —Jermin.

Shall these feet of mine, delaying,
Still in ways of sin be found,
Braving snares, and madly straying,
On the world's bewitching ground?
No, I was not born to trifle
Life away in dreams or sin;
No, I must not, dare not, stifle Longings such as these within. — Horatius Bonar.

"The end of learning is to know God, and out of that knowledge to love and imitate Him"

17—19. (17) Surely . . bird, "strictly speaking, the first proverb in the book," viz., when the net is so evident that the bird sees it, he will not go in: and the schemes of these tempters are so evidently a dangerous trap that you cannot be silly enough to be caught.[a] bird, lit. master of a wing. (18) own blood,[b] those robbers who are laying wait for the property and lives of others, are really, if they but knew it, preparing destruction for themselves; it is, as if they were laying wait for their own blood; this is the unexpected but appropriate issue of their plottings. (19) so, i. e. deceitful, ruinous. ways, manner of life and its results. greedy of gain,[c] and so strives to gain it unlawfully. of the owners, better, of him that gets it in possession. It becomes a fatal curse to him, 1 Tim. vi. 10.

Moral traps (vs. 17).—I. Sin lays traps for souls. Net made of sensuality, avarice, ambition, etc. II. These traps are laid in secrecy. Sin works insidiously — takes advantage of ignorance, etc. III. These traps must be exposed. This the work of the true teacher.— Thomas.

"Greedy of gain."— More of us than we are willing to believe are kept from entire surrender to Jesus Christ by money and worldly possessions; and many professing Christians are kept shriveled and weak and joyless because they love their wealth more than their Lord. When ballast is thrown out the balloon shoots up. A general unlading of the "thick clay" which weighs down the Christian life of England and of America, would let thousands soar to heights which they will never reach as long as they love money and what it buys as much as they do. No man enters into life who does not count all things but loss, and die to them all that he may follow Christ.— Alex. Maclaren.

Money-getting has well been called unhealthy when it impoverishes the mind, or dries up the sources of the spiritual life; when it extinguishes the sense of beauty, and makes one indifferent to the wonders of nature and art; when it blunts the moral sense, and confuses the distinction between right and wrong, virtue and vice; when it stifles religious impulse, and blots all thoughts of God from the soul.— O. S. Marden.

a "The sense of the proverb is, — the wicked, who think themselves shrewd and wise, are more silly and foolish than even the birds of the air which flit over their heads. The birds flee from the net which is spread in their sight, but the wicked spread a net for themselves and are taken thereby."— Wordsworth.

b Ps. vii. 14-16.

c Ha. ii. 9; 1 Ti. vi. 9, 10.

"The voice of the mother who thinks that her children are in danger rings upon the ear with no uncertain, theatrical sound."

"God has to deal with His human children who are in danger, and therefore He speaks with earnestness when He says, 'Do thyself no harm.'" — Preach. Com.

20, 21. (20) Wisdom, Heb. chocmah, fr. chacam, to judge, decide. We may express the ideas of the word by the terms intelligent piety,[d] that wisdom of which the "fear of the Lord" is the beginning. without, out of doors. uttereth her voice, "the instrumentality wh. wisdom uses in her public preaching are the prophets and teachers."— Pul. Com. streets, or open squares, the usual resorts of men.[e] (21) place of concourse, lit. where confusion is; the hum of crowded market-places. openings of the gates, R. V., "entering in" where the city magistrates held their courts,[f] and other business was done.

Wisdom's voice (vss. 20-29).—I. An awakening appeal. 1. By whom it is made; 2. The place in which it is addressed; 3. The manner in which it is delivered: 4. The persons to whom it is applied. II. An important exhortation.

d The personification of abstract qualities is an efficient mode of producing impression and conveying instruction, esp. to the young.

e "Wisdom goes where all public matters go, to the great squares and places of business." —Miller.

f Ru. iv. 1, 2.

1. The subject to which this exhortation refers — turn in repentance, with full purpose of heart, without delay; 2. The inducement to do this. III. A solemn denunciation. 1. Its procuring cause; 2. Its terrific nature — aggravating consideration.

Wisdom. — Perhaps some wide law of association connecting the purity and serenity of wisdom with the idea of womanhood, determines the feminine form of the personification. Not in solitude, but in the haunts of men, through sages, lawgivers, and teachers, and yet more through life and its experiences, she preaches to mankind. Something of the same kind was present, we may believe, to Socrates when he said that the fields and the trees taught him nothing, but that he found the wisdom he was seeking in his converse with the men whom he met as he walked in the streets and agora of Athens. — Plumptre.

"She need not be ashamed of her teaching, bec. she is a true friend of the people."—Otto Zöckler.

"Scorners love scorning. The habit grows by indulgence. It becomes a second nature."—Arnot.

22, 23. (22) Discourse of wisdom to end of chapter; "one of the noblest specimens of sacred eloquence." simple,[a] or ignorant; those who, being unthoughtful and frivolous, are easily drawn aside by temptation. scorners, who ridicule as well as neglect truth and goodness; sneering at sacred things. fools, those who are malignant and obdurate. (23) Turn you, the physical movement that illus. the moral act of repentance.[b] at, "toward," so as to notice; or "because of." reproof, but not reproof only: it is immediately connected with promises and offers of grace. spirit,[c] "energizing influence." my words, precepts, secrets, comp. Joel ii. 28; Ac. ii. 17.

a "The three classes are addressed in a graduated scale. 'Simple,' open, fatally open to evil; then the 'scorners,' mocking at all good; lastly the 'fools' in the darker sense of the word, hardened, obstinate, perverse, hating the knowledge they have rejected."—Spk. Com.

b Eze. xxxiii. 11; Isa. lv. 7.

c "I offer to you both My word outwardly to your ears, and a plentiful measure of My spirit to make that word effectual to you."—Bp Hall.

"When we turn at His reproof, He will pour out His spirit; when He pours out His spirit, we will turn at His reproof: blessed circle for the saints to reason in."—Arnot.

Sinners admonished (vs. 23). — I. The reproofs He administers. 1. By the Scriptures; 2. By ministers; 3. By conscience; 4. By Providence. II. The submission He requires. We are to return — 1. With penitent hearts; 2. Believing minds; 3. Fervent devotion; 4. Prompt obedience. III. The encouragement He imparts. 1. A convincing Spirit; 2. Quickening Spirit; 3. Comforting Spirit; 4. Sanctifying Spirit. — Eta.

The risks of sin. — Some years since a vessel lay becalmed on a smooth sea in the vicinity of an iceberg. In full view, the mountain mass of frozen splendor rose before the passengers of the vessel, its towers and pinnacles glittering in the sunlight, and clothed in the enchanting and varied colors of the rainbow. A party on board the vessel resolved to climb the steep sides of the iceberg, and spend the day in a picnic on the summit. The novelty and attraction of the hazardous enterprise blinded them to the danger, and they left the vessel, ascended the steep mountain of ice, spread their table on the summit, and enjoyed their dance of pleasure on the surface of the frosty marble. Nothing obscured their security or marred their enjoyment. Their sport was finished and they made their way down to the water level and embarked. But scarcely had they reached a safe distance before the loud crash of the crumbling mass was heard. The scene of their gaiety was covered with the huge fragments of the falling pinnacles, and the giant iceberg rolled over with a shock that sent a thrill of awe and terror to the breast of every spectator. Not one of that gay party could ever be induced to try that rash experiment again. — Hom. Cycl.

24, 25. (24) Because, etc., there seems to be an interval of silence, during wh. Wisdom waits to see if any would heed her. None accept, so her voice of pleading is changed for one of judgment.[d] refused, to stop in your wilful ways, and give heed to me. stretched . . hand, the fig. for earnestness in beseeching,[e] or "a forensic gesture to arrest attention." (25) set at naught, rejected. would none of, lit. were not willing or inclined to it.

d Comp. Isa. lxv. 12; lxvi. 4; Je. vii. 13, 14; Eze. viii. 18.

e Job xl. 13; Ps. lxviii. 31; lxxxviii. 9; Rom. x. 21.

Judgment follows disobedience (vss. 24–26). — I. A merciful visitation. 1. Call; 2. Entreaty; 3. Counsel; 4. Reproof. II. Just complaint. 1. Neglect; 2. Refusal; 3. Scorn. III. An awful warning. 1. God's laws are unchangeable; 2. He has plainly declared them; 3. He is clear of the sinner's blood. — Whythe.

"Scratch the green rind of a sapling, or only twist it in the soil, and a scarred or crooked oak will tell of the act for centuries to come. How forcibly does this figure teach the necessity of giving right tendencies to the minds and hearts of the young!"—Abp. Leighton.

Misimproved privileges. — It is related of Jeine, the chief of one of the South Sea Islands, who had offered no small amount of opposition to the introduction of Christianity, that during a sickness which terminated in his death, he manifested more mental distress than is usually seen in a heathen. He often expressed a wish that "he had died ten years before." And why? The light of life and love had been shining around him, but he had opposed its entrance into his heart, and its power over his people. And now, having loved darkness, in darkness of soul, stung by an upbraiding conscience, he must die. — Gill.

26, 27. (26) laugh, etc.,[a] comp. Ps. ii. 4. The words "laugh," with "mock," depict the most contemptuous indignation. calamity, crushing misfortune. fear cometh, i. e. that wh. caused you fear. (27) desolation, or a storm suddenly sweeping down on you; fig. drawn fr. nature.[b] whirlwind, moving with fatal rapidity and overwhelming power. anguish, at an intolerable yet hopeless lot.

Advice of a dying father. — A gentleman called his sons around his dying bed, and gave them the following relation: "When I was a youth, the Spirit strove with me, and seemed to say, 'Seek religion now;' but Satan suggested the necessity of waiting till I grew up, because it was incompatible with youthful amusement. So I resolved I would wait till I grew up to be a man. I did so, and was then reminded of my promise to seek religion; but Satan again advised me to wait till middle age, for business and a young family demanded all my attention. 'Yes,' I said, 'I will do so; I will wait till middle age.' I did so; my serious impressions left me for some years. They were again renewed; conscience reminded me of my promises; the Spirit said, 'Seek religion now;' but then I had less time than ever. Satan advised my waiting till I was old; then my children would be settled in business, and I should have nothing else to do; I could then give an undivided attention to it. I listened to his suggestion, and the Spirit ceased to strive with me. I have lived to be old; but now I have no desire as formerly to attend to the concerns of my soul; my heart is hardened. I have resisted and quenched the Spirit; now there is no hope. Already I feel a hell within, the beginning of an eternal misery. I feel the gnawings of that worm that never dies. Take warning from my miserable end; seek religion now; let nothing tempt you to put off this important concern." Then in the greatest agonies he expired.

28—31. (28) not answer, though the call be ever so earnest.[c] early, in the usual sense of earnestly; R. V., "diligently." not find me, though God's gracious promise is, "They that seek Me early shall find Me." (29) For, etc., this verse distinctly gives the reason for the severity wh. appears to be so strange. It lies in the nature of the human soul that the rejection of appeals to repentance hardens and sears. did not choose, i. e. desire and seek. fear of the Lord, wh. is first step of the true wisdom. (30) would none, did not want my counsel. despised, rejected with scorn. (31) eat . . way, reap as they sowed: find out to their surprise what is the true fruitage of rebellion and sin.[d] filled, i. e. satiated.

Logical result of sin. — If men will not plough the earth, or cast in the seed, or take advantage of the opportunities created by the sun, in harvest they shall beg, and in winter they shall be desolate. Does any one complain of the arbitrariness of the course of nature? Do not men instantly sit in judgment upon those who have allowed the seasons to pass by without availing themselves of the opportunities offered? Instantly the spirit of criticism arises and declares that nature has been outraged, that law has been dishonored, and that only suffering can follow. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God; it is also a fearful thing to fall into the hands of neglected nature. The divine economy of the universe is one. A sacred unity binds together all worlds, all laws, all souls, all destinies. Surely he is a scorner and a fool who undertakes to live a life apart from that economy, and who supposes that, having detached himself from the central power, he can create a rival throne, and sway with success a competitive sceptre. "Turn ye, turn ye, why will ye die?" — J. Parker.

32, 33. (32) turning away, instead of, as they should, turning towards Wisdom. The term is used in grave irony. prosperity, better, the carelessness, false security. R. V., marg. "careless ease." "The easy-going indifference to higher truths is that wh. destroys." (33) dwell safely, lit. in confidence.[e] quiet from fear, R. V., "without fear," etc., as illus. by the wise man who built on the rock.[f]

Prosperity. — 1. Let those to whom God has denied prosperity cheerfully accept their lowliness. In their humble position they are comparatively safe. They live where many arrows of destruction do not fly. 2. Let those who have attained prosperity ever recognize that the post of honor and of power is the place of danger, and that they need peculiar grace from God that they may not fall. 3. Let those who are being injured by their prosperity beware lest they go down fast to utter and irretrievable ruin. — Clarkson.

a "The scorn and derision with wh. men look on pride and malice, baffled and put to shame, has something that answers to it in the Divine judgment." - Spk Com.

b Comp. Mat. vii. 26, 27.

"You cannot paint an angel upon light; so mercy could not be represented — mercy could not be, unless there were judgment without mercy, a ground of deep darkness lying beneath, to sustain and reveal it." — Arnot.

As at the Rom. siege of Jerusalem, desolation suddenly came on heedless Jews.

c Comp. Lu. xvi. 24–31.

d Isa. iii. 10; Eze. xi. 21; Ro. vi. 21; Ga. vi. 7, 8.

"'The fruit of their own way' is a very mixed metaphor, but means what the sinner wins to himself by the advance he makes upon his path." — Miller.

If sinners cast not away their sins for God's sake, God will cast them away for their sins' sake.

"Not outward prosperity, but the temper which it too often produces; the easy-going indifference to higher truths is that which destroys." — Plumptre.

e De. xii. 10.

f Matt. vii. 24, 25.

"His ark is pitched within and without; tossed, it may be, but not drowned: shaken, but not shivered." — Trapp.

"The Roman censors took such a distaste to the son of Africanus for his unworthy life that they drew from his finger the ring on which the image of his father was engraved. Because he had so greatly fallen off from his father's character they would not, they said, allow him to wear in a ring the likeness of a parent whose image he did not bear in his mind or heart. The children of Jesus, even the youngest, should strive to be like Him."

So long as man honestly desires God's service he may find peace and rest. — If at any time it is in our heart to obey the voice of the All-wise, to lend an attentive ear to the Divine counsel, we may reckon on His grace and favor. Happy the heart that heeds the voice of Wisdom! Others may be rocked and tossed on the heaving billows of care and anxiety, of alarm and dread; but he, "dwelling in the secret place of the Most High," hiding in the Rock of His salvation, shall "dwell safely, and be quiet from fear of evil." God will hide him in His pavilion; he will "rest in the Lord." Let no man think that the best treasures of thought are scattered prodigally on the surface of life for swine to trample under foot. They lie deep, and must often be sought with toil and anguish of soul. Yet to the honest seeker after light, if only he follow the Light of the world, it will surely dawn, though for a season

> 'The intellectual power, through words and things, > Went sounding on, a dim and perilous way."— Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

1—5. (1) receive my words, simply, take them, listen and attend to them; words of reproof, counsel and promise; "the first thing in a sincere disciple." —Stuart. hide . . thee, as in a store, or treasury.[a] (2) incline thine ear, or, so as to point thine ears towards: sharpen or prick thine ear, like an animal.[b] Dispose thyself earnestly to attend to Div. truth. apply, or bend. understanding, i. e. the discrimination bet. what is right and wrong. (3) criest after, the sign of importunate earnestness. knowledge, Heb. binah, discernment.[c] liftest, as if to eagerly shout. (4) silver, or money,[d] wh. engages the unwearying, unrelaxing toil of men. hid treasures, i. e. concealed in the earth. (5) fear, not terror but reverence. The right sentiment to entertain towards God, and the right knowledge of Him to apprehend.

The course of the wisdom-seeker. —1. His search for life-giving truth must be characterized by readiness to receive. He must be wholly different in spirit from those who are disinclined to learn. 2. But there must not only be readiness: there should be eagerness to receive. He must "incline his ear" (vs. 2). 3. Beyond this, there must be carefulness to retain. The student must not let his mind be a sieve through which knowledge passes and from which it is readily lost. 4. Further, there must be perseverance in the search. He must "apply his heart to understanding" (vs. 2). 5. And there must also be enthusiasm in the endeavor vss. 3, 4). With the untiring energy and inexhaustible ardor with which men toil for silver or dig for the buried treasure, should the soul strive after the high end to which God is calling it. —Pul. Com.

Treasure trove. — The allusion to searching for wisdom as for hid treasures points to a custom in Eastern countries. In consequence of the great insecurity in life and property the habit was to hide treasure in the earth. Frequently the owner might die without pointing out to any one the place where he had concealed his treasures. Consequently, the habit of seeking for such hidden things grew up in the East, and became a source of great profit to those who were successful in its cultivation. It would seem as if God had purposely hidden both wisdom and understanding in order that the energy of man might be developed in searching for them.— Peop. Bib.

6, 7. (6) Lord . . wisdom,[e] but they must be in right attitude of mind and heart to whom He gives it. out of his mouth, not by unknown agencies, but by rational instructions; i. e. by his words. (7) sound wisdom, in the sense of healthy, nourishing, and confirming. buckler, defending us with the efficiency of a skilfully used shield. Heb. maghen, a frequent word in the Psalms.[f] walk uprightly, walkers of innocence; whose behavior is sound, R. V., "walk in integrity."

Good men and their God (vss. 6–9.)— I. The description of men — righteous, walking uprightly, His saints. II. The God of good men. 1. As to what He is to creation generally; 2. As to what He is to the good specially. (1) He provides for their instruction; (2) He superintends their career; (3) He protects them from their enemies. — Thomas.

The Lord a buckler. — That is to say, He protects those who walk in His ways, and He preserveth the way of His saints, literally of "His ardent wor-a Pr. vii. 1; Ps. cxix. 11.

---

The reception and retention of Div. truths are both indicated in the terms of this verse.

b "The ear must be turned away from the sounds of earthly pleasure, the din of worldliness, and the voice of human speculation, and must listen attentively to communications from the spiritual and eternal." — D. Thomas.

c Pr. i. 2; xvi. 16.

d Mat. xiii. 44; Lu. xv. 8.

Job xxviii. 12–20.

"The man who finds a treasure he had not sought has the joy of surprise; he who has searched and striven, the joy of success."

"We ought to glory in nothing, because we have nothing of our own." — Cyprian.

e 1 K. iii. 9, 12; Ja. i. 5; iii. 17.

f Ps. iii. 10; vii. 10, etc.

"Somewhere thou livest and hast need of Him;
Somewhere thy soul sees higher heights to climb;
And somewhere still there may be valleys dim
That thou must pass to reach the hills sublime."
—Julia C. R. Dorr.

shipers." This term was used of the tribe of Levi because of their zeal in God's service. The word saint implies dedication to God, and being set apart to the love and service of Christ. The doctrine of the text is that God is evermore on the side of those who are righteous, or upright, or holy. They represent Him upon the earth, and as His chosen children they are dear to Him, and on them the light first shines which is to fall downward upon the rest of the world, as the light of the morning first strikes the mountains and then passes downward into the valleys and chases away all darkness. — Peop. Bib.

8, 9. (8) paths of judgment, or justice; "here by the substitution of the abstract for the concrete expression, 'paths of the just,' and therefore essentially synonymous with the 'way of his saints' in the second clause." — Otto Zöckler. "God defends the right way, and those in it." saints, not the absolutely holy, but the devout and God-fearing;[a] those "called with a holy calling." (9) righteousness, etc., all parts of man's duty to God and to man. Jno. vii. 17. every good path, the whole good track.[b] "Every pursuit in wh. good may be found." — Stuart.

God the source of wisdom. — Some of the courtiers of the Emperor Sigismund, having no taste for learning, inquired why he so honored and respected men of low birth on account of their science. The emperor replied, "In one day I can confer knighthood or nobility on many, in years I cannot bestow genius on one. Wise and learned men are created by God only. No advantage of education, no favorable combination of circumstances can produce talents where the Father of spirits hath not dropped the seeds of them in the souls which he hath made." — Whitecross.

10—12. (10) entereth,[c] as vs. 2; R. V., "shall enter," i. e. take up permanent residence. pleasant, so as not to be forcibly sought, but willingly, as for personal gratification. (11) Discretion, or reflection. understanding, or discernment. (12) way of the evil, from either accompanying or following them in their wilful and wicked paths. froward things, perverse, deceptive things.

The antidote to temptation. — I. We need an antidote to temptation. It is not enough to trust to our own spiritual health to throw off the poison. The tempter can choose the moment of his attack. The mine may be suddenly sprung, and we may be lost before we have fully realized the situation. II. The antidote to temptation must be some form of positive good. Fire is quenched by water, not by opposing flames. Evil must be overcome with good. The way to keep sin out of the heart is to fill the heart with pure thoughts and affections till there is no room for anything else. III. True wisdom is the surest antidote to temptation. Christ, the Wisdom of God, dwelling in our hearts, is the great security against temptation. — Pul. Com.

A good man's last words. — Mr. Benn, of Highgate, had long been the subject of a severe affliction, which at length terminated his valuable life before he had, to human appearance, reached its meridian. The evening before his departure he desired all his children to come into his chamber, and placing them around his dying bed, thus addressed them: "You all know that I am soon going to be removed from this world to a better; and I trust that you are walking the same road, and will soon follow me. You all know the road; great pains have been taken to show it to you. Where is it to be found?" The children all instantly replied, "In the Bible." The dying parent proceeded: "Keep hold of that chain; it will never mislead you. When you are in doubt whether this or that be right, ask your Bible; see if your Saviour would have done so." Addressing the elder children, he said: "Remember you are to teach the younger; tell them all we have taught you, and try to make it a pleasure." To his eldest son he observed: "When you go into the world, and are exposed to persons who perhaps will ridicule the Saviour's name and the Bible, do not listen to them. Seek that society which will help you to practise your Bible; this book will provide comfort for you when friends forsake you. Every other comfort in this world has its drawback and is transitory. When you are in pain or suffering, write upon it, 'The road to heaven.'" — R. T. S.

13—15. (13) paths of uprightness, figured by a straight line, and bright with the smile of God's favor; level paths. darkness, "to reject deliberately the light of knowl. and to work wickedness."[d] — Pul. Com. (14) for-

Paulinus, when he was told that the Goths had sacked Nola, and plundered him of all that he had, lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, "Lord, Thou knowest where I have laid up my treasure!"

a Comp. Ps. lxxxv. 8; cxlviii. 14; cxlix. 9.

b "Track for a wheel. The Christian's path is a rut, or definite tracking."—Miller.

"He preserveth the way of His saints both from being drawn out of that way, and from all evil while they walk in it."—Jackson.

c "The heart is here, as always, named as the centre and organic basis of the entire life of the soul, as the seat of desire, and the starting point for all personal self-determination. The soul, on the contrary, appears as the aggregate and sum total of all the impulses and efforts of the inner man. The former designates the living centre, the latter the totality of the personal life of man."—Otto Zöckler.

"A speculative knowledge is like that of the Queen of Sheba at a distance; an experimental is like her sight of the order and glory of Solomon's court, that left no more spirit in her."—Charnock.

"For our actions let His Word be our guide, and for the events of things and all that concern us, let His good pleasure and wise disposing be our will. Let us give up the rudder of our life into His hand to be steered by Him."—Abp. Leighton.

d Ro. xiii. 12; Eph. v. 11; 1 Th. v. 5.

wardness, etc., lit. the perverseness of evil: their own perversity and that of others like themselves. (15) crooked,[a] in contrast with the "level" of vs. 13. R. V., "Who are crooked in their ways;" ref. to deceitful and fraudulent conduct. froward, a term wh. may be represented by our familiar "wayward."

Wickedness and wisdom (vss. 10–22). — I. Wickedness. 1. Its nature — speech corrupt, habit corrupt, heart corrupt, influence corrupt; 2. Doom of wickedness — destruction, extirpation. II. Wisdom — 1. Guards the innocent; 2. Delivers the fallen. — Thomas.

Early memories. — Mr. Abbott relates, in his Mother at Home, that some time ago a gentleman in one of the most populous cities of America was going to attend a seamen's meeting in the Mariners' chapel. Directly opposite that place there was a sailors' boarding-house. In the doorway sat a hardy weather-beaten sailor, with arms folded, and puffing a cigar, watching the people as they gradually assembled for worship. The gentleman walked up to him and said, "Well, my friend, won't you go with us to the meeting?" "No," said the sailor bluntly. The gentleman, who, from the appearance of the man, was prepared for a repulse, mildly replied, "You look, my friend, as though you had seen hard days. Have you a mother?" The sailor raised his head, looked earnestly in the gentleman's face, and made no reply. The gentleman, however, continued: "Suppose your mother were here now, what advice would she give you?" The tears rushed into the eyes of the poor sailor; he tried for a moment to conceal them, but could not; and hastily brushing them away with the back of his rough hand, rose and said, with a voice almost inarticulate through emotion, "I'll go to the meeting." He crossed the street, entered the door of the chapel, and took his seat with the assembled congregation.

16, 17. (16) strange woman,[a] a woman who has made herself like the heathen, by breaking loose from the purities and duties of the family. flattereth, and so overcometh the unsophisticated and inexperienced. Lit. smooths her words. (17) guide . . youth, perhaps referring to her husband, whom in her willfulness she had left. covenant, etc., the marriage cov. entered into in the presence of God, wh. required strict purity of life.

Perils in the deep (vss. 12–19). — The dangers are delineated here in exact order, continuous succession, and increasing power. I. The way of the evil. II. Speaking froward things. III. Leaving the paths of righteousness. IV. Walking in the ways of darkness. V. Rejoicing to do evil. VI. Delight in the frowardness of the wicked. — Arnot.

Temptation. — Gaze not on beauty too much, lest it blast thee; nor too long, lest it blind thee; nor too near, lest it burn thee. If thou like it, it deceives thee; if thou love it, it disturbs thee; if thou hunt after it, it destroys thee. If virtue accompany it, it is the heart's paradise; if vice associate it, it is the soul's purgatory. It is the wise man's bonfire, and the fool's furnace. — Quarles.

18, 19. (18) inclineth, sinks down to. R. V., marg. "she sinketh down unto death, wh. is her house." She is lost to every interest of virtue and goodness. dead, "the shades." This may intimate the certain fate of all who yield to her flatteries.[b] Her house is a Hades, where are the shades of those who have perished by her blandishments. (19) return again, their fate is irrevocable; like death, this is "a bourne fr. wh. no traveler returns." neither . . life, there is no resurrection to life and purity.

Evil company. — Some insects take their colors from the leaves they feed upon, so our characters will receive a tinge from the books we read and the conversations we listen to. He who means to be a good painter will be sure to draw after the most excellent copies, and guide every stroke of his pencil by the better pattern that he lays before him; so he who desires that the table of his life may be fair, will be careful to propose the best examples, and will never be content till he equals or excels them. As physicians often order their patients into the country for salubrity of air, so we ought to avoid every place the moral atmosphere of which is polluted by evil example. A desert is better than a debauched companion; for the wildness of the place is but uncheerful, whilst the wildness of bad persons is infectious. "I had a good education at school," a criminal once said, "but it was the education of the streets that ruined me."

---

a "The way of sin is labyrinthian and rough, as well as dark." — D. Thomas.

"The light stands in the way of their wicked ways as the angel did in Balaam's way to his sin." — Trapp.

"Better is the sorrow of him that suffereth evil than the jollity of him that doeth evil, saith St. Augustine." — Trapp.

"Principles are like the rails on which the train runs, keeping it in a direct course and facilitating its speed." — Pul. Com.

"O Trojan, son of Anchyses, easy is the path that leads to hell. But to retrace one's steps, and escape to the upper regions, this is a work, this is a task." — Virgil.

"Wisdom is the talent of buying virtuous pleasures at the cheapest rate." — Fielding.

"Death is here twice mentioned to show that it is a double death, a temporal death, and an eternal death, to which she bringeth men." — Jermin.

"Example is a living law, whose sway men more than all the written laws obey." — Sedley.

b "Everything dies under the influence of (sensual) wickedness, — self-respect, spiritual sensibility, mental freedom, the freshness, the vigor, and the beauty of life." — D. Thomas.

"That which is dyed with many dippings is ingrain, and can very hardly be washed out." — J. Taylor.

"It is not enough to shun the evil way, unless men walk in the good way."

20—22. (20) That, etc., the advice and warning are given that the youth may, at the outset of his life, be wisely guided in his choice of friends. (21) dwell, settle,[a] permanently rest. Change is the attendant on all wickedness, stability attends all goodness. perfect, men of integrity. (22) cut off, by sudden calamity, as the proper fruitage of their wrong-doing. transgressors, R. V., "they that deal treacherously." rooted out,[b] exterminated.

Influence of example.— Mr. Brainerd informs us, that when among the American Indians, he stopped at a place where there was a great number, and offered to instruct them in the truths of Christianity. "Why," said one of them, "should you desire the Indians to become Christians, seeing the Christians are so much worse than the Indians! The Christians lie, steal and drink worse than the Indians. They first taught the Indians to be drunk. They steal to so great a degree, that their rulers are obliged to hang them for it; and even that is not enough to deter others from the practice. But none of the Indians were ever hanged for stealing; and yet they do not steal half so much. We will not consent, therefore, to become Christians, lest we should be as bad as they. We will live as our fathers lived, and go where our fathers are, when we die." Notwithstanding that Mr. B. did all he could to explain to them that these were not Christians in heart, and that he did not want them to become such as these, he could not prevail on them to accept his doctrine, but left them, mortified at the thought that the wickedness of some who professed Christianity should produce such prejudices.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

1, 2. (1) forget not, this counsel involves the duty of making effort to remember, frequently recalling, and using well all aids to keep it in mind.[c] my law, or my teaching,[d] which is contained in the following verses. "Divine revelation has all the attributes of a law — publicity, authority, practicability." keep, or watch over, as one does who guards a vineyard. commandments, the particular precepts contained in the general law. (2) length of days, the sign of Div. favor then so greatly desired,[e] and promised as one of the chief blessings attending obedience. long life, Heb. years of life. with the emphasis on life, life in its fullest sense, prosperous and happy. peace, "internal and external contentment and tranquillity of mind," arising from prosperity; peace has always been the foremost word in Heb. benedictions.

The philosophy of health and peace (vss. 1, 2).— I. Obedience to moral law is a condition of physical health. 1. Physical health requires obedience to the Divine laws of our being; 2. Obedience to the Divine laws involves the study of them; 3. A hearty agreement with the Divine will is essential to secure the study of His laws. II. Obedience to moral law a condition of spiritual peace. Peace requires two things. 1. The inward harmony of the soul's powers; 2. The sense of the Divine favor.— Thomas.

Long life.— No one thinks of measuring life only by days and years. To live long with the constant feeling that life is not worth living, or to live long with the constant apprehension of death, must be counted as a small and empty life. Now, it is the chief blessedness in the lot of the children of light that each day is a full, rich day, unmarred by recollections, unshadowed by apprehensions. Each day is distinctly worth living; it has its own exquisite lessons of cloud or sunshine, its own beautiful revelations of love, and pity, and hope. Time does not hang heavily on the hands, nor yet is its hurried flight a cause of vain regret; for it has accomplished that for which it was sent, and by staying longer could not accomplish more. And if, after all, God has appointed but a few years for His child's earthly life, that is not to be regretted; the only ground for sorrow would be to live longer than His wise love had decreed. "If God thy death desires," as St. Genest says to Adrian in Rotrou's tragedy, "life has been long enow."— R. F. Horton.

3, 4. (3) mercy and truth, R. V., marg. "kindness and truth;" these when predicted of man, indicate the highest standard of moral conduct towards his neighbor. "The two elements of a morally perfect character." bind . . neck,[f] like a charm or talisman; but better far than any such. "The neck is, in Sol.'s writings, the organ and symbol of obedience." write . . heart, so as to govern your very motives and feelings. table, or tablet, Je. xvii. 1;

[a] "To dwell in the land is the highest blessing for the whole people of Israel and for individual men." — Spk. Com.

Ex. xx. 12; Le. xxv. 18; xxvi. 5; Ps. xxxvii. 29.

[b] Job. xviii. 16–18.

"There is a knowledge that plays round the head, like lightning on a mountain's summit, that leaves no trace behind; and there is a knowledge that, like the fertilizing stream, penetrates into the very recesses of the heart, and issues forth in all the fruits of holiness, of love, and peace, and joy for evermore." —Barton Bouchier.

[c] "Looked at as a book for the education of the young, we may see in each section a 'counsel' to be learned and remembered, day by day, so as to form a habit of mind by the frequent recurrence of the same impressions." — Spk. Com.

[d] "My directions: the orig. term alludes to throwing out the hand, as if to guide a passenger in his way."—Miller.

[e] Ps. xxi. 4; xci. 16.

"The longer distance a pure river runs through a country, the greater the amount of blessings which it diffuses on its way to the ocean. The longer a man of 'mercy and truth' lives, the more he is enabled to bless his fellow-creatures. A long life gives a man time to attain great knowledge of God, and thus enables him to glorify Him upon the earth." — Preacher's Com.

[f] "Like the totaphoth, or fillets prescribed by the Law (Ex. xiii. 16)." —Wordsworth.

2 Cor. iii. 3. (4) good understanding, R. V., marg. "good repute;" [a] not as marg., good success. in . . man, i. e. in the judgment of.

Present blessings.— We are accustomed to dwell on the promised joys of the future world as if godliness had no promise of the life which now is, and in so doing we take all life and color from those expected blessings. The true view seems to be, The way of wisdom, the path of the upright, is so full of joy, so crowned with peace; the life of the children of the kingdom is so wisely and bountifully provided for; the inevitable pains and troubles which fall to their share are so transformed; that from this present good we can infer a future better, gathering hints and promises of what we shall be from the realized felicity of what we are.— R. F. Horton.

5, 6. (5) Trust, man, being a dependent creature, must trust some one; they alone are truly wise whose trust is in the Lord.[b] all thine heart, or wholly, without letting any confidences in things spoil the trust in God. own understanding,[c] as if you had no need of a Divine helper. (6) acknowledge him, or recognize; have regard to Him and His will. "Recognize Him as the unconditional controller over all thy willing and doing." and he, the "he" is emphatic; God Himself covenants to lead. direct, make them straight, even, and prosperous.

The condition of Divine guidance.—1. Self-surrender. "Lean not to thine own understanding." 2. Whole-hearted faith. "Trust in God with all thine heart." Every thought, affection, and desire must be given over to His direction. The more completely we trust the more surely will God guide us. (3) Active faith. God guides, but we must follow His directions. It is vain for us to pray for a Divine leading unless we consent to follow the directions indicated to us. — Pul. Com.

A deist confounded. — A deist, on a visit to his friends, among other topics of conversation, enlarged considerably on the sufficiency of reason, separate from Divine assistance, to guide us to happiness. To whom the relative present, who was a farmer, made the following reply: "Cousin, when you were about fourteen years of age, you were bound apprentice to your trade, and having served the appointed time, you soon became a master, and have now continued in business about twelve years. I wish to know whether you could not prosecute your trade at this time to greater advantage than when you first embarked in it as a master?" The tradesman admitted that his experience in business was of considerable value to him; but asked, what relation that had to the present topic of discourse. The farmer answered: "You were come to the perfect use of your reason, and had been for a long time taught how to manage your trade: and if, therefore, your reason without experience was insufficient to preserve you from many errors, in so plain and easy a business as yours, how can you imagine that it should be sufficient, without Divine assistance, to guide you to heaven?" The deist was confounded. — Cheever.

7, 8. (7) wise . . eyes,[d] i. e. shun self-sufficiency. Pr. xxvii. 2; Ro. xii. 16. fear, etc., the fear of God makes us sensitive to what is evil, and helps us to shun it, whatsoever form it may take. (8) health, or, as marg., medicine. navel, as the centre of the body put for the whole body. marrow, refreshing or moistening.[e] bones, the bodily framework.

Self-conceit (vs. 7). — I. It involves self-ignorance. Let the wisest think — 1. Of his knowledge in comparison with what is to be known; 2. In comparison with what ought to be known. II. It obstructs mental improvement. 1. This requires an earnest seeking for knowledge; 2. And this requires a deep sense of the necessity of knowledge. III. It destroys social influence. The elements of social power are intelligence, generosity, truthfulness, humility. — Thomas.— Health to the virtuous. — Sickness of body may be the portion of the best of men or women. Some are born to suffer, until they die and pass to the blessed country where the inhabitant will never say, "I am sick." But the constant tendency of piety and its invariable accompaniment, morality, is to give (1) health and strength of bodily frame; the pure blood, the clear eye, the strong muscle, the steady nerve, the "green old age." It regularly gives (2) an active mind; and it necessarily imparts (3) a soul that is "in health" (3 John 2). The man who fears God and departs from evil is the man who is fitted and is likely to have the largest show of vigorous, robust, healthy life in all its forms. — Pul. Com.

[a] Ge. xxxix. 2—4; Lu. ii. 52.

"No man or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, gentle, pure, and good without the world being better for it, without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of that goodness."—Phillips Brooks.

[b] Isa xxvi. 4.

[c] "Many might have attained wisdom, had they not thought they had already attained it"—Seneca.

"The fundamental principle of all religion is an entire self-commitment to the grace and truth of God, with the abandonment of every attempt to attain blessedness by one's own strength or wisdom."—Otto Zöckler.

Ps. xxxvii. 3; cxviii. 8, 9; Je. ix. 24.

"Our prayer should be not so much that God should guide us safely, as that He should show us His way." "The character must be known, and, being known, must be loved, if there is to be a lasting confidence. We shall not lean with much weight where we do not love. The trust of a Christian will be in proportion to his love to his Lord."—Preacher's Com.

[d] "There is not a greater enemy to the power of religion, and the fear of God in the heart, than conceitedness of our own wisdom."—Matt. Henry.

[e] "There is, prob., a reference to the local applications used by the surgery of the period as means of healing."—Spk. Com.

The highest point of wisdom is to be wise against ourselves.

Conceit natural to humanity. — Little localized powers and little narrow streaks of specialized knowledge are things men are very apt to be conceited about. Nature is very wise; but for this encouraging principle how many small talents and little accomplishments would be neglected! Talk about conceit as much as you like, it is to human character what salt is to the ocean; it keeps it sweet and renders it endurable. Say rather it is like the natural unguent of the sea-fowl's plumage, which enables him to shed the rain that falls on him and the wave in which he dips. When one has had all the conceit taken out of him, when he has lost all his illusions, his feathers will soon soak through, and he will fly no more. . . . I say that conceit is just as natural a thing to human minds as a centre is to a circle. But little-minded people's thoughts move in such small circles that five minutes' conversation gives you an arc long enough to determine their whole curve. An arc in the movement of a large intellect does not differ sensibly from a straight line. — Holmes.

"As the sun melts the hoar-frost from the windows and leaves a clear medium for the rays of the sun to enter the chamber, so the contact of God with the human soul will melt away the self-esteem which shut Him out."— Preacher's Com.

"Good, the more communicated, more abundant grows." — Milton.

9, 10. (9) Honour, etc., by making the prescribed free-will and thank offerings.[a] More generally, recognize God's hand in all temporal blessings, and be thankful to Him. substance, or capital, stock. increase, the revenue derived from it. (10) barns, or storehouses of various kinds. presses, or winevats, into which the produce of the vineyards and oliveyards would be carried. burst out, R. V., "shall overflow."

Trade morality. — The Rev. John Parkhurst, the author of the Hebrew and Greek lexicons, having a tenant who fell behind in the payment of his rent, which was £500 per annum, it was represented to his landlord that it was owing to his being overrented. A new valuation being made, it was agreed that, for the future, the rent should be not more than £450. Mr. Parkhurst justly inferring that if the farm was then too dear, it must necessarily have always been too dear, unasked, and of his own accord, immediately struck off £50 from the commencement of the lease; and instantly refunded all that he had previously received more than £450 per annum. — Whitecross.

a Ex. xxii. 29; De. xxvi. 2; Mal. iii. 10.

"God will not have the dregs that are squeezed out by pressure poured into His treasury. He loveth a cheerful giver." — Arnot.

"Enjoy the blessings of this day, if God sends them, and the evil bear patiently and sweetly; for this day only is ours; we are dead to yesterday, and are not born to-morrow." — Jeremy Taylor.

We give Thee but Thine own, Whate'er the gift may be;
All that we have is Thine alone,
A trust, O Lord, from Thee. — Day's Psalter.

11, 12. (11) despise not, shrink not from;[b] sometimes affliction must come even to one who loves God. be weary, or loathe, abhor. his correction, R. V., "reproof," wh. is always paternal, and the means to gracious ends. (12) whom . . correcteth,[c] He. xii. 5–8. delighteth,[d] love making the father strong to bless the child with needed corrections.[e]

God's fatherly love shown in chastening. — 1. God must be angry with us for our sin. For love can be angry, nay, sometimes must be. 2. If God chastens in love, it is for our own good. Strong love aims at the highest welfare, even though this involve misunderstandings and temporary estrangement. 3. God's paternal relation with us is the ground of his chastening in love. Hence we may take the chastening as a proof of the love and fatherhood of God. — Pul. Com.

The chastening of the Lord. — The shadow falls everywhere; summer has its shadow as well as winter. A survey of human society will show the observer that "chastening" seems to be unequally distributed. The eyes of the wicked stand out with fatness, they have more than heart could wish; while many a godly man is tottering under an intolerable burden, or smarting with anguish which he cannot express. How is this? The divine sculptor is using a sharp chisel; the heavenly Father is employing a heavy rod; the severe refiner sits over a glowing furnace. Thus "chastening" is taken out of the heart-chilling region of atheism, and set down in the midst of the very household of God. There is a "chastening" that hath on it no superscription; but there is also a chastening which is written within and without by the finger divine. — Peop. Bib.

b Job v. 17.

c "From this passage it appears that every Jewish child was taught to acknowledge another Father in heaven chastising him, even as he had been chastised by his earthly father." — Spk. Com.

d "For whom Jehovah loves He corrects, and, as a father, does the son a favor," so Miller trans. the passage.

e Comp. He. ii. 10; v. 8, 9.

"God's strokes are better than Satan's kiss and love; God smites for life; Satan caresses for death." — Egard.

13, 14. (13) Happy, better, blessed.[f] wisdom, or goodness, the true wisdom. getteth, Heb. draweth out, from God's stores of truth, and the experiences of life. Draws out, as metals by digging. (14) merchandise, traffic in it.[g] Some prefer the word "accumulation," gain, "produce thereof."

f O the blessedness of the man! as Ps. i. 1.

g There appears here an evident allusion to the new commerce of Sol.'s time with Ophir, etc.

fine gold, the technical word used for the native gold, in the nugget or the dust.

Spiritual merchandise (vs. 14). — I. The trade. 1. The assets, capital, stock; 2. The receipts, present joys, promises; 3. The liabilities, obligations; 4. The accounts, books, correspondence. II. Its advantages. 1. The losses, indolence, negligence, timidity; 2. The profits, large, sure, enduring. III. Its requisites. 1. Promptness; 2. Perseverance; 3. Regularity; 4. Attention.—Whythe.

A poor man's wisdom. — An old man, of very acute physiognomy, answering to the name of Jacob Wilmot, was brought before the Police Court. His clothes looked as if they might have been bought second-hand in his youthful prime, for they had suffered more from the rubs of the world than the proprietor himself. "What business?" "None; I'm a traveler." "A vagabond, perhaps?" "You are not far from wrong; travelers and vagabonds are about the same thing. The difference is that the latter travel without money, and the former without brains." "Where have you traveled?" "All over the Continent." "For what purpose?" "Observation." "What have you observed?" "A little to commend, much to censure, and very much to laugh at." "Humph! what do you commend?" "A handsome woman that will stay at home, an eloquent preacher that will preach short sermons, a good writer that will not write too much, and a fool that has sense enough to hold his tongue." "What do you censure?" "A man who marries a girl for her fine clothing, a youth who studies law or medicine while he has got the use of his hands, and the people who elect a drunkard to office." "What do you laugh at?" "I laugh at a man who expects his position to command that respect which his personal qualities and qualifications do not merit." He was dismissed. — Haven.

"The Gospel mentions not riches, honors, beauty, pleasures; it passes these over in silence, which yet the Old Testament everywhere makes promise of. They were then children, and God pleased them with the promise of these toys and rattles as taking with them. But in the Gospel He has shown us He has provided some better things for us; things spiritual and heavenly."—Goodwin.

15, 16. (15) rubies, Heb. peninim, prob. pearls. all . . desire, lit. all thy delights, "all thy jewels." — Stuart. (16) in . . hand,[a] she is valuable in herself, and also in the things that she brings with her, 1 Ki. iii. 11–13.

Length of days in the hand of wisdom (vs. 16). — I. It is not a uniform experience that a man lives long who lives well; such a rule would not be suitable to the present dispensation. II. It is true that all wickedness acts as a shortener of life, and all goodness as its lengthener; but other elements enter, and complicate the result, and slightly veil the interior law. Take as an illustration, drunkenness, which is selected by the agents of assurance societies for their calculations. Other sins, if human eyes could trace them, would give the same results. — Arnot.

Eternity. — St. Augustine telleth us that length of days is eternity, for whatsoever hath an end is short: but riches and honor, which by men are esteemed good things, they are in the left hand. It is not forbidden thee to enjoy the good things of this life, but do not put that in the right hand which should be in the left; do not prefer temporal things before eternal. Let us use the left hand for a time, but desire the right hand for eternity.—Jermin.

[a] "The right hand in the Bible everywhere means one's highest instrumentality or agency." — Miller.

"One grain of grace is far beyond all the gold of Ophir, and one hour's enjoyment of God to be much preferred before all the King of Spain's annual entradoes. 'Let me be put to any pain, any loss, so I get my Jesus,' said Ignatius." — Trapp.

17. ways,[b] properly highways, main roads. The ways along wh. she will lead those who devote themselves to her. pleasantness, "all the enjoyments and entertainments of sense are not comparable to the pleasure wh. gracious souls have in common with God and doing good." — Henry. paths, bypaths, smaller side roads. peace,[c] such as may ensure peace: "she brings tranquillity and serenity and blessedness."

Connection between holiness and happiness (vs. 17). — I. State the nature of holiness: it is the work of the Holy Spirit; involves change of heart and life. II. Consider the certain connection between holiness and happiness. 1. It is established by the deductions of reason: 2. Also in the Holy Scriptures; 3. Founded on experience. III. The reflection which this subject awakens. Learn how false are the estimates which the ungodly form of religion when they represent it as unfriendly to happiness. — Gilbert.

Peace through wisdom. — Other sources of gratification are to be found, but some of them do not carry the sanction of conscience; some of them are out of the reach of the lowly; others are only open to the learned or the favored; most, if not all of them, are short-lived, and become of less worth as they are more frequently employed The wisdom which comes from God and which leads to him, which makes the human spirit the friend and follower of the Son of God, brings a "peace which passes all understanding," the "peace of God," and "joys which through all time abide."—Clarkson.

[b] "Her ways are the ways of chastity, justice, truthfulness, holy affections, benevolent activities, and communings with the great God, and from these pleasure must inevitably spring." — D. Thomas.

[c] Matt. xi. 29, 30.

"Both the way and the end to which the way leads is peace. There are many ways in the world pleasant but not safe; others safe but not pleasant." —Fausset.

18. tree of life,[a] as Ge. ii. 9; iii. 22; Re. ii. 7; xxii. 2. Personification of Wisdom as a fruitful tree giving nourishment and immortality. But the former personification of Wisdom as a queen remains in the verse, and it is the queen, not the tree, on wh. we are to gain and keep our hold.

Happiness of wisdom. — To know the secret of the Lord, to walk in this world not guideless, but led by the Lord of life, to approach death itself not fearful, but in the hands of that Infinite Love for whom death does not exist, surely this is worth more than the gold and precious stones which belong only to the earth and are earthy. This wisdom is laden with riches which cannot be computed in earthly treasures; "she is a tree of life to them that lay hold upon her: and happy is every one that retaineth her." The creation itself, in its vast and infinite perfections, with all its æonian changes, and all the mysterious ministries which order its details and maintain its activities, comes from that same wisdom which controls the right human life. The man, therefore, who is led in the ways of wisdom, trusting wholly to God, is in harmony with that great universe of which he forms an intelligent part: he may lie down without being afraid; he may walk securely without stumbling; no sudden fear can assail him; all the creatures of God are his sisters and his brothers; even Sister Death, as St. Francis used to say, is a familiar and a friend to him. — R. F. Horton.

The sympathy of wisdom.—

Some there are,
By their good works exalted, lofty minds
And meditative, authors of delight
And happiness, which to the end of time
Will live, and spread, and kindle; minds like these,
In childhood, from this solitary being,
This helpless wanderer, have perchance received (A thing more precious far than all that books Or the solicitudes of love can do!)
That first mild touch of sympathy and thought,
In which they found their kindred with a world Where want and sorrow were. — Wordsworth.

19, 20. (19) The Lord, the wise man now turns attention fr. what wisdom is to man, and shows how it is related to God. founded, or created. Advancing knowledge of the earth's crust, and history, should deeply impress on us the wonderful wisdom of God in arranging it for the abode of man.[b] established, or prepared, set firm. (20) depths, comp. Ge. i. 7; vii. 11. The expression may well refer to the great geological changes. But some understand it of "the fertilization of the earth by streams and fountains wh. burst forth from the interior of the earth." clouds . . dew,[c] this is not a strictly scientific statement, as the dew is formed by the condensation of the atmosphere. But we familiarly speak of the "falling dew." Dew is of exceeding value in hot countries to fertilize the earth.

Wisdom the source and sovereign of worlds (vs. 19). — These words give us two ideas of the universe. I. That it is organized by wisdom. This opposed — 1. To the eternity of the universe; 2. To the contingent origin of the universe. II. That it is organized by one Being. 1. The unity of the universe shows this; 2. The Word of God declares this. — Thomas.

The dew. — If clouds are necessary to produce rain, sunshine is an essential to the formation of dew. A dewy morning only follows a day whose sun has well warmed up the earth. It is necessary that the heat should readily radiate into the surrounding atmosphere by night. When the surface of the earth thus cools down more rapidly than the incumbent air about it, and when the air is saturated with moisture, then, by the contact of temperatures, the air becomes unable to retain its moisture, and yields its sprays and vapors to be shaped by a natural law, the same which rounded the world out of chaos and orbed the universe, and then what was invisible becomes visible in drops of settling dew. So, whenever dew is seen to fall, there must first have been a flowing down of sunshine in the day, and then a responsive current of warmth uprising in the night toward the region whence it came. The earth receives and yet returns the heat the heavens gave, and as if to reward such gratitude the dew descends to refresh and gladden its beseeching and thankful breast. So, when people's hearts are hard, and dry, and desolate, it may be because

[a] "As the tree of life in Paradise, which was a sign of God's favor, or the tree which sweetened the waters of Marah, or the tree seen in the Revelation, or any living or good tree which bringeth forth fruit whereby men live." —Muffet.

Nobody giving any attention to old Diogenes while discoursing of virtue and philosophy, he fell to singing a funny song; and multitudes crowded to hear him "Ye gods!" he said, "how much more is folly admired than wisdom!"

"A rooted habit becomes a governing principle. Every lust we entertain deals with us as Delilah did with Samson: not only robs us of our strength, but leaves us fast bound."—Tillotson.

[b] "We are raised by science to an understanding of the infinite wisdom and goodness which the Creator has displayed in all His works."—Lord Brougham.

[c] Job. xxxvi. 27, 28.

"The wisdom of God is reflected in nature. All our knowledge is just the reflection of this wisdom; it is thinking into the thoughts of God; thus it is a communion with Him. Spiritual knowledge brings us nearest to God, who is Spirit. Christ as the incarnate 'Word,' by whom all things were made, and the Wisdom of God, is our Mediator, and unites us to God." — Pul. Com.

The gem cannot be polished without friction, nor man perfected without adversity.

they lack responsiveness to heaven's gifts — for want of gratitude for the light and privilege which have shone upon them all their days. — Clark.

21, 22. (21) them, i. e. the things already said, or the wisdom and discretion of the second clause. depart . . eyes, keep them, by never letting them be out of sight. Watch them as you would priceless jewels. (22) life, or health, vitality, vigor. soul, man's inner life. grace, or like a gracious ornament.[a] Religious principles give a refinement and gracefulness to character. neck, man's external life.

Fidelity to principle (vss. 21–26). — The advantages connected with fidelity to the ethics of godliness are here sketched, and they are — I. Life. II. Ornament. III. Safety. IV. Courage. — Thomas.

Jealousy of wisdom. — We have had to expend energy in securing wisdom, and we have to expend equal energy in retaining her, for she is jealous of neglect; yea, she will fly away from the mind that does not offer her the hospitality of its whole capacity. There must be no rival affections; wisdom must dominate everything, bringing all other idols and affinities within the action of its own supreme will. Thus we are not called upon to be mere idolators of wisdom, but to keep it in the heart, with the distinct view of reproducing it in an obedient and pure life. Thus wisdom does not imprison the heart in a palace of luxury and self-indulgence, but constrains the heart to give forth, to put to practical test, every counsel that has been learned in the spiritual school. Wisdom rightly used is increased in amount and energy. "Wisdom is a defense, and money is a defense: but the excellency of knowledge is, that wisdom giveth life to them that have it." — J. Parker.

23, 24. (23) not stumble, so far from falling, you shall not even stumble." (24) liest down, etc., comp. Ps. iii. 5.[c] afraid, bec. you will have no consequences of sin to be afraid of. sweet, as is that of the innocent child.

Ninth Earl of Argyle.—On the very day on which he was to die, he dined with appetite, conversed with gayety at table, and, after his last meal, lay down, in order that his body and mind might be in full vigor when he should mount the scaffold. At this time one of the Lords of the Council came to the castle with a message from his brethren, and demanded admittance to the earl. It was answered that the earl was asleep. The Privy Councillor thought that this was a subterfuge, and insisted on entering. The door of the cell was softly opened, and there lay Argyle on the bed, sleeping, in his irons, the placid sleep of infancy. The conscience of the renegade smote him. He turned away, sick at heart, ran out of the castle, and took refuge in the dwelling of a lady of his family, who lived hard by. There he flung himself upon a couch, and gave himself up to an agony of remorse and shame. His kinswoman, alarmed by his looks and groans, thought that he had been taken with sudden illness, and begged him to drink a cup of sack. "No, no," he said, "that will do me no good." She prayed him to tell her what had disturbed him. "I have been," he said, "to Argyle's prison. I have seen him within an hour of eternity sleeping as sweetly as ever man did. But as for me——."—Macaulay.

25, 26. (25) sudden fear, unexpected calamity may come, but the godly man need have no fear in such times. desolation, etc.,[d] in this Bk. of Prov. sudden calamity is regarded as a usual mode of Div. judgment on the wicked. (26) thy confidence, the thought of "Him who keepeth Israel" shall comfort you and bring you peace. being taken, in a trap, or by any concealed danger.

Confidence in God the true safeguard from temptation (vs. 26). — I. Do not say God is your confidence, if He be only your dread. II. There is a trust which only the unreconciled experience. III. Confidence in God is not to be attained by a wish whenever you please. IV. True confidence has a power for good on the life. — Arnot.

Tempting danger. — Whilst King William, at a battle in Flanders, was giving orders in the thickest of the fight, he saw, to his surprise, among his staff one Michael Godfrey, a merchant of London, and deputy governor of the Bank of England, who had thus exposed himself in order to gratify his curiosity. The king, riding up to him, said, "Sir, you ought not to run these hazards; you are not a soldier; you can be of no use here." "Sire," answered Godfrey, "I run no more hazard than your majesty." "Not so," said William; "I am here where it is my duty to be, and I may, without presump-

a Pr. i. 9.

"Most certainly that superior wisdom which corrects, reproves, and informs man against his own inclination, can be no part of himself."—Fénélon.

"That which is inward shall have an outward expression. He who abounds in prayer shall have a light upon his face, which other men will see, and know that the glory was not kindled by human hands."—Parker.

b "Thou shalt ever go under a double guard, the 'peace of God' within thee, and the 'power of God' without thee."—Trapp.

c Le. xxvi. 6; Ps. iv. 8.

"His sleep is sweetest who when he is awake, doth sweetly sleep in a neglect of worldly crosses or contentments."—Jermin.

"When wisdom and innocency, like Castor and Pollux, appear together they presage the soul's happiness."—J. Watson.

d Pr. i. 27; Ps. lxxiii. 19.

"Come sleep, O sleep! the certain knot of peace, the baiting-place of wit, the balm of woe; the poor man's wealth, the prisoner's release, the impartial judge between the high and low."—Sir Philip Sydney.

"So safe will all thy ways be that to fear will be a sin."—Plumptre.

"O God, I have made an ill use of Thy mercies, if I tion, commit my life to God's keeping; but you —." The sentence needed no completion, for at that very moment a cannon-ball laid Godfrey lifeless at the king's feet. He had been wise had he restricted himself to the ways of his calling and duty. — Spurgeon.

27—29. (27) Withhold, the godly man need have only one anxiety, that of "doing good," all the good he can. Due, not as having business claims, but the claims wh. belong ever to the suffering and the needy.[a] (28) say not, comp. Jas. ii. 15, 16, v. 4. "Promptly fulfill all obligations both of justice and charity." neighbour, companion, friend. (29) devise, plan and put in practice. securely, without care or suspicion. Not for a moment thinking you have evil designs. So do not abuse confidence.

Marshal Turenne. — The celebrated Marshal Turenne observed in his army an officer of distinguished birth but very ill-mounted. He invited him to dinner, and, when the repast was over, took him aside and said to him in the kindest manner, "I have a favor to ask of you, sir; you may find it difficult to grant, but I trust you will not refuse your general. I am old," continued he, "and even a little infirm, and spirited horses fatigue me; I have seen you have one on which I think I should be more at my ease; and if I were not afraid to ask so great a sacrifice, I would propose that you should give it to me." The officer replied by a profound bow, and went immediately for his horse, which he led into Turenne's stable. The next day the general sent him one of the best and handsomest horses in the army.— Whitecross.— Beneficence. If Christians had really asked God to guide them, meaning what they said, would all the rich be found in districts together, while all the poor are left to perish in other districts apart? If Christians had really accepted God's direction, would they be living in princely luxury while the heathen world is crying for the bread of life? would they be spending their strength on personal aims while the guidance of social and political affairs is left in the hands of the self-interested? would they be giving such a fragment of their wealth to the direct service of the Kingdom of God? — Exp. Bib.

30. Strive not, either in private contention or public litigation. without cause, or to no purpose. The litigious spirit is unsuitable to the good and godly man. It leads men to make occasions of quarrel when really there are none.

Strife. — Look at strife in two aspects. I. As a principal inherent in the soul. II. As a principle liable to perversion. — Thomas.

Contention. — Two learned physicians and a plain, honest countryman, happening to meet at an inn, sat down to dinner together. A dispute presently arose between the two doctors on the nature of ailment, which proceeded to such a height, and was carried on with so much fury, that it spoiled their meal, and they parted extremely indisposed. The countryman, in the meantime, who understood not the cause, though he heard the quarrel, fell heartily to his meat, gave thanks to God, digested it well, returned in the strength of it to his honest labor, and at evening received his wages. "Is there not sometimes," adds Bishop Horne, "as much difference between the polemical and the practical Christian?" — Whitecross.

31, 32. (31) Envy not, "do not anxiously covet the booty wh. men of violence acquire."[b] — Stuart. oppressor,[c] man of mischief, or rapacious man. (32) froward, or one bent out of right ways; R. V., "perverse." secret, "confidential intercourse;" R. V., marg., "friendship." Ps. xxv. 14. righteous, better, the straightforward, upright.

The oppressor (vs. 31). — I. His character is not to be envied. 1. Because envy is in itself an evil; 2. Because there is nothing in the oppressor to be desired. II. His conduct is not to be followed.— Thomas.

The secret of the Lord. — When a few years have been passed in humble dependence on God, it is then possible to look back and see with astonishing clearness how real and decisive the leadings of the Spirit have been. There were moments when two alternatives were present, and we were tempted to decide on the strength of our own understanding; but thanks be to His name, we committed it to Him. We stepped forward then in the darkness; we deserted the way which seemed most attractive, and entered the narrow path which was shrouded in mist. We knew He was leading us, but we could not see. Now we see, and we cannot speak our praise. Our life, we find, is all a have not learnt to be content with Thy corrections." —Bp. Hall.

[a] Prob. it expresses, in this bold form of speech, the great Scriptural thought that the so-called possession of wealth is but a stewardship: that the true owners of what we call our own are those to whom, with it, we may do good." — Spk. Com.

"He gives twice to one in need who gives at once." — Publius Syrus.

"A slow-footed favor is a favor without favor." — Grotius.

"The benefit is thankless wh. sticks long bet. the hands of the giver." — Seneca.

If God afflict you, let not impatience add to the affliction.

"Quietness before God is one of the most difficult of Christian graces; to sit where He places us, to be what He would have us to be, and as long as He pleases." — Cecil.

"This world would be a world of peace if men were all peace-makers." — John Ruskin.

[b] Ps. lxxiii. 3.

[c] "The good old rule sufficeth them, the simple plan, that they should take who have the power and they should keep who can." — W. Wordsworth.

"God will scorn them, and lay them open to the scorn of the world." — Mat. Henry.

plan of God, and He conceals it from us, as if on purpose to evoke our trust, and to secure that close and personal communion which the uncertainty renders necessary.— Exp. Bib.

33, 34. (33) The curse, "the infliction of temporal misfortunes ending with the 'cutting off' of the wicked."— Pul. Com. in the house, abiding constantly with them. "God is angry with the wicked every day." habitation, though it be but a cottage or a tent. (34) scorneth,[a] Jas. iv. 6; 1 Pe. v. 5. God precisely meets man, adapting His dealings with him to man's disposition. scorners, who scoff at the precepts of God. lowly, who are willing to receive Div. instructions.[b]

God in the house.— A Scottish laborer went to work for a wealthy farmer. It was regarded as something of a favor to be employed by him, as he was a prompt and liberal paymaster, and was held by his neighbors to be a very superior farmer. But the laborer soon left the farmer's employ. "I'm told you've left farmer R.," said a neighbor. "Yes, I have," was the reply. "Was the work too hard for you?" "There was nothing to complain of on that score." "What then? Were the wages too low?" "No." "Why did you leave?" "There was no roof on the house." And he went on his way, leaving his questioner to ponder on the strange answer he had given. The Scotchman's meaning may be found in the saying of an old writer, who affirms that a dwelling in which prayer is not offered up to God daily is like a house without a roof, in which there cannot be either peace, safety, or comfort.— Hom. Cyc.

35. wise, made wise by heeding the teachings of the true Wisdom. glory,[c] a comprehensive term for all honor and good. promotion of, or exalteth. fools, who are wicked more than foolish. "Shame is the nobility conferred on fools."— Müntinghe. "Fools are elevated like the light dust, and then are swept away."— Stuart.

The rewards of wisdom and folly (vs. 35). — I. Distinguish the two characters. II. Declare their proper award. III. The effect of wisdom on our condition in the eternal world. There the conduct of all will be rightly appreciated; then wisdom and folly will appear in their true light. Recommend— 1. A retrospect of your past lives; 2. A prospective view of futurity.— Simeon.

Massillon. — Massillon, an eminent French preacher, in the first sermon he ever delivered, found, upon his getting into the pulpit, the whole audience in a disposition no way favorable to his intentions; their nods, whispers, or drowsy behavior, showed him that there was no great profit to be expected from his sowing in a soil so barren. However, he soon changed the disposition of the audience by his manner of beginning. "If," said he, "a cause the most important that could be conceived were to be tried at the bar before qualified judges; if this cause interested ourselves in particular; if the eyes of the whole kingdom were fixed upon the event; if the most eminent counsel were employed on both sides: and if we had heard from our infancy of this undetermined trial, would you not all sit with due attention and warm expectation to the pleadings on both sides? Would not all your hopes and fears be suspended upon the final decision? And yet, let me tell you, you have this moment a cause of much greater importance before you; a cause where not one nation but all the world are spectators; tried not before a fallible tribunal, but before the awful throne of Heaven; where not your temporal and transitory interests are the subjects of debate, but your eternal happiness or misery; where the cause is still undetermined; but, perhaps the very moment I am speaking may fix the irrevocable decree that shall last forever; and yet, notwithstanding all this, you can hardly sit with patience to hear the tidings of salvation. I plead the cause of Heaven, and yet I am scarcely attended to."— R. T. S.

"Well may we think our substance due where we owe ourselves."—Bp. Hall.

a Ps. xviii. 26.

b "Humility is both a grace and vessel to receive grace."—Trapp.

"He and he only possesses the earth as he goes toward heaven, who is humble and cheerful, and content with what his good God has allotted him: who has no turbulent, repining, vexatious thoughts that he deserves better; nor is vexed when he sees others possessed of more honor or more riches than his wise God has allotted for his share." — Izaak Walton.

c Da. xii. 2, 3.

"As is our character so are we before God and His universe, and so will be our destiny in the great hereafter."—D. Thomas.

"You shall have him ever inquiring into the estates of his equals and betters, wherein he is not more desirous to hear all, than loth to hear anything overgood; and if just report relate aught better than he would, he redoubles the question, as being hard to believe what he likes not. Whom he dares not openly backbite, nor wound with a direct censure, he strikes smoothly with an over-cold praise."— Bp. Hall.

"They shall be promoted, indeed, but their exaltation shall be like that of Haman, who was exalted when he was hung upon a gallows fifty cubits high."—Lawson.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

1, 2. (1) ye children, the pupils or hearers of the teacher of wisdom are so called in affectionate earnestness. The expression suggests that the counsels are urged with a paternal authority.[d] of a father, who had been a son, and knew, by happy experience, the value of parental instruction and discipline.[e] understanding, spiritual discernment of that which is right and d Comp. Ps. xxxiv. 11; 1 Th. ii. 11; 1 Jno. ii. 12, 13, 18.

e "The author designs to represent himself as a son, good. (2) good doctrine, oral teaching received by me, which I hand over to you. He received the substance of it from his father. law, or practical directions for the guidance of his life.

A religious home (vss. 1–4). — I. The love of a religious home. 1. Natural love; 2. Spiritual love. II. The training of a religious home. The teaching was — 1. Worth retaining; 2. Practical; 3. Quickening. III. The influence of a religious home. For this, two reasons. 1. The susceptibility of childhood; 2. The potency of parental affection. — Thomas.

A father's instruction. — Do not venture upon great sea voyages without proper instruments and without being taught how to use them. So in life. Be enriched with doctrine or wisdom, and cultivate that tender filial spirit which gratefully yields itself to direction. It is at once wise and lovely for youth to consult the aged, and to avail themselves of accumulated experience. Any other spirit is vain, self-conceited, frivolous, and unworthy. Why should the father be anxious to instruct and direct the son? Because he has seen more of life — more of its mystery, its peril, its tragedy; therefore his heart yearns to preserve the young from danger. The father's position is one of moral dignity and supreme benevolence. Having suffered himself, he would save his children from pain. — Exp. Bib.

3, 4. father's son, specially favored son. tender, in sense of gentle, docile. only beloved, or the darling of my mother, so receiving her special care.[a] R. V., marg. "an only one." (4) sight, estimation. live, i. e. thou shalt enjoy a long and peaceful life.

Filial recollections (vss. 3, 4). — I. Of a father's care. II. Of a mother's tenderness. III. Of early parental instruction. IV. How do we regard these things now? V. All this care, tenderness, and instruction are for our advantage. VI. Our present treatment of parents will embitter or gladden future recollections.

Maternal influence. — I look back to the period when I stood on the side of a river, a broad river, about to shake hands with a beloved mother, and hear a long farewell. I still think that I hear her pleading; I still think that I hear that gentle voice saying, "O my son! make me happy by promising me a promise." I still think I see the tears trickling over her venerable cheeks, which I saw again only a few weeks ago, when I bade her a last earthly farewell. I still think I see that venerable form pleading with a naughty son, when he refused to promise that he would read the Word of God every morning and every evening. When I look back to that period (and all my feelings are still the same), I see the spot where we stood; I still imagine I hear the tones of her voice, though now her lips tremble with age when she speaks; I still think I see her countenance brightening up, when I said, "Yes, mother, I shall do what you wish." In obedience to that promise, I read the Word of God, and God poured out His spirit from on high. My dark heart was enlightened; I saw the Saviour — that Saviour that died for me; and from that day to the present, I have lived in the faith of the Gospel. — Moffat.

5, 6. (5) Get,[b] as a permanent possession, a ruling principle. understanding, discretion to choose between the right and the wrong, discernment. forget not, according to the fixedness of the attention will be the safe holding in memory. neither decline, turn not back from. Temptations to turn from the principles established in a pious youth-time are sure to come. (6) Forsake her not, Wisdom is here personified as a queen. She represents the "chief good" for man[c] (ch. iii. 13–18). preserve thee, like a watchman. She stands sentry over us.

Get wisdom. — 1. Because of the excellency of it. Things of high birth are excellent. This wisdom is from above (James iii. 17). Things rare are precious. True wisdom is not found in many. 2. Because of the pleasure of it. No content in the world like that wisdom gives. 3. Because of the profit of it. Every trade will tell you that wisdom thrives, and folly beggars men. So in spiritual things. 4. Because of the necessity of it, which is the strongest argument. Without it die, nay be damned. — Francis Taylor.

Avoiding temptation. — It is said that a Quaker, having to engage a coachman, was anxious to secure a competent and trusty person. Three candidates presented themselves, and the same question was put to each. "Friend, how near canst thou drive to the edge of a precipice without upsetting the coach?"

and the object of his father's counsels and warnings. The aim was to present the example of the one son before the many sons."—Otto Zöckler.

"If a man falls overboard from the deck of a vessel, he will not remain long at the level of his first fall. If he is not rescued he will sink to such a depth as will be out of all comparison with it. He will go lower and lower till his body finds the bottom of the ocean." — Preachers' Com.

a "Noteworthy is the prominence given to the mothers' share in training the child. Among the Israelites and Egyptians alone, of the nations of the whole world, was the son's reverence for the mother placed side by side with that which he owed to his father."— Spk. Com.

"The home is the most potent institution in the world. Parental roofs are more influential institutions than cathedrals. 'The old arm chair' where parents sat is mightier to me than any pulpits ever have been or ever will be."— David Thomas.

For the term only comp. Ge. xxii. 2, 12; Jno. i. 3; Eph. i. 6.

b "Lit. buy. An imitation of the exclamation of a merchant who is offering his wares."—Umbreit.

c "The 'chief good for man' must be intellectual, or adapted to the higher and nobler part of our nature; attainable by all of whatever sex, age or mental conformation; unimpaired by distribution; independent of the circumstances of time or place; incapable of participation to excess; composed essentially of the same elements as the good to be enjoyed in a future state."—Quoted by D. Thomas.

"Within a foot," was the reply of the first. "Within an inch," was the reply of the second. The third, who was the successful candidate, answered, "I always endeavor to keep as far off from a precipice as possible." The moral is plain.

7—9. (7) Wisdom . . thing, lit. as the height of wisdom get wisdom.—Miller. thy getting, "if it cost thee all thy wealth get wisdom." understanding, here as usual in the sense of practical discernment. (8) Exalt her, set her high in thine esteem. Extol her as thy greatest good.[a] promote thee, responding by doing for thee what it is in thine heart and effort to do for her.[b] embrace her, as a loved and trusted wife, with fond affection. (9) an ornament, ch. i. 9. deliver, or compass thee with, for thy protection. Wisdom shall be to thee beauty and strength.

a The LXX. render "place thou stakes about her," to lift her up as if she were a tree.

b Comp. Gal. vi. 8.

The principal thing (vs. 7).—I. What this wisdom is not—mere knowledge, scientific, metaphysical, etc. Many have this kind of knowledge who are not wise unto salvation. II. What it is—religion in the broad and personal sense. Fear of the Lord the beginning of wisdom. III. Why the principal thing—1. We may have all else and not be saved; 2. We may have none else but this, and then shall be saved; 3. It is the principal thing in life, death and forever.

"Make religion thy business, other things do by the bye. As Cæsar, swimming through the waters to escape his enemies, carried his books in his hand above them, but lost his robe."—Trapp.

Wisdom.—Knowledge is the treasure of the mind, but discretion is the key to it, without which it is useless. There are no such safeguards as virtue and wisdom. The one secures the soul, the other the estate and body. "Fortune first fools the man she means to foil." She dares not, she cannot hurt us while we continue wise. Discretion sways the stars and fate. The witty Horace says:

> "In short, the wise is only less than Jove, > Rich, free, and glorious; nay, a king above
> All earthly kings."

Wisdom is of two kinds; there are those who are deemed wise, and those who are really such; viz., those who are wise "after the flesh," and those who are wise "after the Spirit."

Sin can no more be without folly than fire without dryness or water without moisture. It is folly that opens the door and lets it into the heart and retains it there.

10—12. (10) life, the word here used is a plural, i. e. life in the abstract. shall be many, multiplied. (11) led thee, caused thee to tread, referring to childhood. Now that youth was come, the wise man was anxious that his son should go willingly in the way in which childhood's steps had been led. right paths, or "paths of loveliness," or righteousness. (12) not to be straitened, there shall be ample room; in thy life-journey the path shall be clear and open, and obstacles shall disappear.[c] runnest, in thy times of activity or haste.

c Ps. xviii. 36; xci. 11.

The truth of God secures safety.—The follower of Divine wisdom will not stumble. 1. He will not run in the way of danger. The narrow path is the safe path. There are gins and snares in the broad road. 2. God will remove the greatest impediments out of his path. He is in the King's highway. God is with His people while they are treading the path of righteousness, and He will prepare their way for them. 3. There will be light to see the difficulties of the way. God's truth is a lamp to guide us over such difficulties. With the light of heavenly wisdom we safely pass them. 4. There will be help at hand. Christ is with His people on their pilgrimage.—Pul. Com.

"On the great highway of life the only free traveler is he who is spiritually wise. Others are so burdened and fettered that there is no spring of liberty in their steps."—Dav. Thomas.

Men are running after wisdom; none find it but those who find Christ.

13. Take fast hold, strictly, "fasten, and do not let slack."[d] Hold the lesson of wisdom with a firm and unrelaxing tenacity. keep her, or keep watch over her. thy life, exactly, "she is herself thy life," i. e. wisdom is the bestower of long life.

d "One rough grapple is not enough. Wisdom glides away, if we give time to the arch deceiver."—Miller.

Hold fast (vs. 13).—I. To what? Instruction, i. e. in the truth that makes wise to salvation—heavenly wisdom. II. When? At once—more especially in the time of youth. Youth the time for learning, books, trade, etc. III. How? With desperate earnestness, firm grasp; continue holding, by prayer, thought, etc. IV. Why? She is thy life. 1. She will bless thy present life; 2. Save thee to life eternal.

Pr. lii. 18.

Remember, Christian soul, that thou hast this day, and every day of thy life, "God to glorify, a soul to save, heaven to gain, eternity to prepare for, passions to Taking fast hold.—Often a ship's crew at sea are obliged suddenly to betake themselves to their boats, and abandon the sinking ship. Such a case was recently reported of an American whale-ship in the South Seas. The huge leviathan of the deep, wounded by the art of man, ran out the distance of a mile by way of getting a run-race, and thence came on with incredible velocity against the devoted ship. She began to fill, . . . the word was given. All hands went to work, and soon all the seaworthy boats were loaded to the gunwale with the prime necessaries of life. The deck was now nearly level with the water, and the boats shoved off for safety. After they had pulled a hundred yards away, two resolute men leaped from one of the boats into the sea, and made towards the ship. They disappear down a hatchway. In a minute they emerge again, bearing something in their hands. As they leap into the water the ship goes down; the men are separated from each other and their burden in the whirlpool that gathers over the sinking hull. They do not seem to consult their own safety. They remain in that dangerous eddy until they grasp again the object which they had carried over the ship's side. Holding it fast, they are seen at length bearing away to their comrades in the boat. What do these strong swimmers carry, for they seem to value it more than life? It is the compass! It had been left behind, and was remembered almost too late. Now they have taken fast hold of it, and will not let it go. Whatever they lose, they will at all hazards keep it, for "it is their life." When shall we see souls, shipwrecked on the sea of time, take and keep such hold of the truth as it is in Jesus?—Arnot.

14—15. (14) Enter not, avoid the very entrances and beginnings of evil ways. go not, or walk not; a word that indicates the bold, arrogant walk of the presumptuous. evil men, the godless, the habitually wicked, as ch. i. 10–19.[a] (15) Avoid it, abhor it as one well instructed in its way, and not enticed by attractive appearances. turn from it, so as to free thyself from its fascination, to get as far as possible away fr. it.

Curiosity a temptation to sin (vss. 14, 15). — Curiosity strangely moves us to disobedience, in order that we may have experience of the pleasure of disobedience. If Satan can get us to sin once, he can easily make us sin twice or thrice, till at length we are taken captive at his will. The great thing in religion is to set off well — to flee temptation. 1. Because it is hardly possible to delay our flight without rendering flight impossible: 2. Familiarity with evil thoughts must be the consequence of allowing them to be present with us, even if we do not admit them into our heart; 3. Sinning once makes continuance in sin easy; 4. This leads to spiritual slavery. —Newman.

Running from sin. — A little girl in the days when the conversion of children was not the subject of as much prayer as now, applied for membership in a Baptist church. "Were you a sinner," asked an old deacon, "before this change of which you now speak?" "Yes, sir," she replied. "Well, are you now a sinner!" "Yes, sir; I feel I am a greater sinner than ever." "Then what change is there in you?" "I don't quite know how to explain it," she said; "but I used to be a sinner running after sin, and now I hope I am a sinner running from sin." They received her, and for years she was a bright and shining light, and now she lives where there is no sin to run from. — Anec. Illus. of O. T. Test.

16, 17. (16) sleep, etc., strong figure to express the excited zeal of sinners in doing evil.[b] cause . . fall, R. V., "have done mischief." (17) eat . . violence, their food has been obtained by dishonesty and violence,[c] comp. Job xv. 16.

Living for sin (vss. 16–17). — We have here a sad description of the desperately wicked — I. Finding his joy in life in ill-doing. II. In causing the ruin of others. III. Living on ill-gotten gains. Few of the ungodly reach to this height of wickedness suddenly; they began by consorting with the wicked, and hence their final character.

The godless home. — The unfortunate child whose infancy was passed in the midst of baleful example, whose heart received no instruction from parents' lips, grows up like one stumbling in the dark, and the darkness deepens as he advances. There is the old ingrained vice which comes out again and again after every attempted reformation; there is the old unhallowed set of the thoughts and the tastes. It is all like the damp in the walls of an ill-built house. In dry weather there are only the stains, but those stains are the prophecy of what will be again when the wet weather returns. — Exp. Bib.

18. just, the man who ever seeks to do right: not the "justified" man of the New Test. shining light, of the morning. shineth, brightens, clears, subdue, death perhaps to suffer, and judgment to undergo."

"'Tis not yet too late; seize Wisdom ere she seizes thee."—Young.

"I called upon God and the Spirit of Wisdom came to me. I preferred her before sceptres and thrones, and esteemed riches nothing in comparison of her. Neither compared I unto her any precious stone, because all gold, in respect of her, is as a little sand; and silver shall be counted as clay to her. I loved her above health and beauty, and chose to have her instead of light: for the light that cometh from her never goeth out."—Wisdom of Solomon.

a Ps. i. 1.

"Venture not into the company of those that are infected with the plague, no, not though thou think thyself guarded with an antidote."—Matt. Henry.

"If the child's heart is surrendered to God, and molded by heavenly wisdom, the man will walk securely; an instinctive aversion will lead them to decline the way of the wicked."—Exp. Bib.

b "The fearful stage of debasement, when the tendency to sin is like the craving for stimulants, as a condition without which there can be no repose."—Spk. Com.

c Comp. De. xvi. 3; Ps. cxxvii. 2; Am. ii. 8.

Another interpretation is suggested, "They eat wickedness as bread, and drink violence as wine."

Comp. Job xv. 16; xxxiv. 7.

or grows, on to the noontide fullness.[a] more and more, ever advancing and increasing. perfect day, i. e. high noon. "The path of the just is, by an extremely beautiful image, likened to the light at dawn, which goes on increasing in brightness and intensity as the day advances, until at length it reaches its meridian splendor and glory."

A shining light. — 1. It has all the great leading characteristics suggested by light, viz., truth, purity, joy, life. 2. It is open to the day. They that do evil love the darkness that hides their deeds. Goodness fears no exposure. 3. It is bright with reflected Divine light. Christ shines on the soul, and it brightens under His love as the dark hills and darker valleys take on the colors of life before the rising sun. 4. It is always giving out light around it. It is a shining light, a glistening light. The true Christian is a light of the world. — Pul. Com.

The path of the just. — Many a man has sadly failed and clouded, if he has not totally darkened, the close of his life history; because he was not just, he lacked courage to defend the truth against obloquy. Erasmus, who might have been a star of the Reformation, was but a comet, because he was too timid to place himself beside Luther and other champions of Protestantism. Far different was the career of such a man as John Huss. In his boyhood we see the small but glowing spark, which could prompt him to thrust his hand into the flames, when he had been reading a martyr's life, to see how far he himself could endure. We do not wonder that on his way to the stake, Huss could calmly smile as he witnessed the burning of his books; and when fastened thereto, sing a Bohemian hymn, until his voice was stifled by the smoke. A blind man may have a full belief in the brilliancy of a daylight he cannot behold, and the course of Christian life is at times similar. As Sir H. Vane wrote to his wife not long before his execution, "This dark night and black shade which God hath drawn over us may be, for aught we know, the ground color of some beautiful piece that He is not exposing to the light."

Growth. —

Upward the soul forever turns her eyes;
The next hour always shames the hour before;
One beauty, at its highest, prophesies
That by whose side it shall seem mean and poor.
No Godlike thing knows aught of less and less,
But widens to the boundless perfectness. — J. R. Lowell.

19. as darkness, "a perpetual sunset." Comp. Job iii. 6; x. 22, thick darkness; midnight gloom. know . . stumble,[b] "they do not know wickedness as wickedness, nor do they apprehend the destruction wh. it involves." — Pul. Com.

The way of the wicked (vs. 19). — It is in every point the converse of that which has just been sketched. 1. It is his own way: not God's way, not the way in which he was destined to walk. 2. It is a way of darkness, because it is a way of blindness. Blindness puts a man in the dark, and, being in the dark, he has only the experience that springs from darkness. It follows of necessity that such a path is one of danger. 3. Like the path of the just, it is a progressive path. No man stands still in it. The darkness thickens as the blindness increases, and the blindness grows the longer men refuse to "come to the light." 4. It is a path which is destructive to others. As the good man, by walking in God's path, blesses his fellow-creatures as well as himself, so the wicked man, in his path of darkness, is a curse to others as well as himself. — Preacher's Com.

The improvident traveler. — A certain traveler, who had a distance to go, one part of his road leading through green fields, and the other through a tangled road of brambles and thorns, made great preparations for the first part of his journey. He dressed himself in light and gay clothes, and put a nosegay in his bosom, and taking a light, slender cane in his hand, nimbly proceeded on his way along the beaten path across the green meadows. The sun shone in the skies, and on went the traveler, comfortably, pleasantly, and delightfully. After a while, the road became rugged, and, by the time night drew on, the traveler was in a pitiable plight. His provisions were exhausted; his clothes wet through, and partly torn from his back by the briars; his flowers were faded, and, weary as he was, his slender cane would not bear his weight; a stream of water was before him, and darkness around him. "Alas!" said he, smiting his breast, "I am hungry, and have no food;

---

[a] "The Orient light of dawn, wh. goes forth and shines to the steadfast day." — Wordsworth.

"That grows and brightens even to the establishing of the 'day,' alluding to the supposed stationary position of the sun at noon." — Otto Zöckler

"Very rarely, indeed, do we receive any good gift out of the spiritual treasures of our God, in ripe completeness at the first. It would be as difficult to put a full-grown grace into the soul as to transplant a full-grown tree." — Sarah F. Smiley.

"The top of one summit forever becomes the foot of another."

Comp. fig. in 2 Sa. xxiii. 4.

"The saint, on to all eternity, is to be the ever-ripening man." — Phillips Brooks.

"The wise and active conquer difficulties by daring to attempt them." — Rowe.

[b] 1 Sa. ii. 9; Job xviii. 5, 6, 18; xxiv. 13; Is. lix. 10; Jno. iii. 19; xi. 10; xii. 35, 36.

"All sin and wickedness in man's spirit hath the central force and energy of hell in it, and is perpetually pressing down towards it as towards its own place. True godliness is a winged thing, and travels, bears itself upwards on its own wings, soaring aloft towards God." — Old Author, quoted by Thomas.

"It is a traveler's tale which tells that the Indian spiders weave webs so strong that men are sometimes imprisoned by them; but it is no fable that from the gossamer threads of ungodly thoughts, and slender trans-wet to the skin, and have no dry clothes; weary, and have no staff to rest on; I have a stream to cross, and here is no boat; I am bewildered, and have no guide; it is dark, and I have no lantern. Fool that I am!—why did I not provide for the end of my journey, as well as the beginning?" Time is hastening away. We are all travelers. Life is the beginning, death the end of our journey.

20—22. (20) My son, some think that in the prev. vss. the wise man has been repeating the instructions he received fr. his father, and that in the 20th vs. he begins again his own counsels to his son. incline, etc., as vs. 10. (21) not depart, or escape by being neglected.[a] keep them, in the inmost recesses, i. e. with internal affection. (22) health, marg. medicine or healing. This they become, as they preserve the young man from the vices destructive of health.

Divine principles (vss. 20–22).—I. The method of gaining them. There must be—1. The attentive ear; 2. The steadfast look; 3. The enshrining heart. II. The blessedness of having them. 1. They are life; 2. Health—health of all kinds.—Thomas.

God's law in the heart.—"And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes." (Deut. vi. 6, 8.) Amongst the Jews there was a sad propensity to take the latter injunction literally and externally. Hypocrites and formalists satisfied themselves with having little scraps of the law written on parchment, and worn as frontlets on the forehead. But this was a delusion. The laws of God are never rightly "before the eyes" unless they are "in the heart." The meaning of the former clause of the verse is, that the commandments of God should be kept constantly in view as the guides of the whole conduct. And this will be the case when they are kept "in the midst of the heart."—Wardlaw.

23—24. (23) Keep, or keep watch, and guard. heart, regarded as the central citadel.[b] all diligence, "above all keeping." "The heart, as the chief object of moral watchfulness, is plainly nothing but the conscience, the moral consciousness of man."—Zöckler. issues of life,[c] fig. from the fountains and wells of the East, wh. were watched over with jealous care. Moral conduct is conditioned by the state of the heart. (24) froward mouth, crookedness of mouth, crafty deception. perverse, or swerving; i. e. wh. utter falsehood.

How the heart is to be kept.—1. Pure. Let us see that the heart above all things is cleansed from sin and kept holy. By faith in Christ and the indwelling of the Divine Spirit, the heart can be cleansed and preserved in purity. 2. True. The Christian is to be a servant of God. Let him be loyal—frank, too, and ingenous and simple. 3. Tender. There is much in the world to harden them. Let us seek to have them soft to receive Divine influences and to feel human compassions. Keep the heart thus by watchfulness, by self-control, by prayer, above all by entrusting it to the keeping of God. "My son, give me thy heart."—Pul. Com.

Keeping the heart.—The heart is a lamp, which the High and Holy One has entrusted to our care: keep it well trimmed then, keep it with all diligence: let it not resemble those of the foolish virgins, who took no oil with them: but rather look unto God for fresh supplies of His grace.—The heart is a ship; keep it with all diligence. Look to the hull and the rudder, the masts, the sails, and the rigging. Have an eye to the crew, and take especial care what merchandise you put aboard; mind that you have plenty of ballast, and that you carry not too much sail. Mind that you have a heavenly Pilot at the helm. Be prepared for storms.—The heart is a temple. Have a care that you keep it with all diligence: keep it pure and undefiled. Let the ark of the covenant be found within it. Let your prayers be set forth as incense, and the lifting up of your hands as the evening sacrifice. Dedicate the temple of your hearts to the Lord of lords and King of kings, and use all diligence in seeking that it may be filled with His glory.—The heart is a besieged city, and liable to attacks on all sides. While you defend one part, keep a good look-out on the other; while you build up the bastion here, let not the gateway be left defenseless there. Be alive! be diligent! post your sentinels! have a watchword! take care whom you let in, and whom you allow to go out. Muster your troops, and see that there be no traitors among them. You gressions, come at length dark convictions and habits which hold men in most cruel bondage."—Hom. Com.

[a] "'Let them not be withdrawn.'"—Bertheau.

Pr. iii. 8.

"Still he calls for attention. It fares with many of us as with little children, who, though saying their lessons, must needs look off to see the feather that flies by them."—Trapp.

"Men of wit and parts need never be driven to indirect courses."—Ottway.

"Many think it great to have a strong, determined will. Few think it greater to have none."

[b] "Regard the heart as the very citadel and acropolis of thy being. The importance of keeping the heart is shown in the fact that the Heb. word (leb) heart occurs in the Bk. of Prov. ninety times."—Wordsworth.

[c] "All vital principles are lodged there (in the heart), and only such as are good and holy will give you pleasure. The exercises of religion will be pleasant when they are natural and flow easily out of their own fountains."—J. Howe.

"Guard thy heart as the great central 'guard-post,' and no out station will be cut off."—Miller.

"No action will be considered as blameless unless the 'will was so;' for by the will the act was dictated."—Seneca.

"I wish you would change my heart," said the chief Sekomi to Livingstone. "Give me medicine to change it, for it is proud, proud and angry, angry always." — Harper.

"A life of integrity requires attention to heart, eyes, speech, conduct." — Fausset.

"He who reigns within himself, and rules passions, desires, and fears, is more than a king."—Milton.

"When the Word of God enters the heart, it will banish all pollution from the tongue." Lawson.

have plenty to do, and plenty to attend to; keep, then, your heart with all diligence. — Old Humphrey.

25—27. (25) right on, the fig. for pursuing a direct and straightforward course. The restless, wandering eye leads to evil, and shows that there is no fixedness of purpose. (26) Ponder, or well consider, R. V., marg. "weigh carefully." "Make smooth each foot-planting." — Miller. established, marg. "ordered aright." (27) Turn not, De. v. 32. Avoid all by-paths.

The eyes. — The eye is one of the chief gateways of knowledge. According to the objects on which we fix it, the class of our knowledge will be determined. It is the guide in our actions. Now, it is requisite that the Christian have: 1. A straight and "single" sight (see Matt. vi. 22), looking only at the truth, with no stray glances at the innumerable deceptions of low self-interest. 2. A long sight, looking at the end of the race — the Celestial City, neither allured by the fascinations of Vanity Vair nor distracted by the horrors of the Valley of the Shadow of Death. 3. An upward gaze fixed on God and Christ rather than on worldly loss or gain. — Pul. Com.

Beginning well. — It is of vast moment to be "just right" when starting. At Preston, at Malines, at many such places, the railway lines go gently asunder; so fine is the angle that at first the paths are almost parallel, and it seems of small moment which you select. But a little further on one of them turns a corner, or drives into a tunnel, and now that the speed is full the angle opens up, and at the rate of a mile a minute the divided convoy flies asunder. One passenger is on the way to Italy, another to the swamps of Holland; one will step out in London, the other in view of the Irish Channel. — Hamilton.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

1, 2. (1) my wisdom,[a] learnt by actual, and poss. dear, experience. bow, or "incline." (2) regard discretion, or, maintain a wise, prudential consideration; a circumspect demeanor.[b] lips, etc., lit. "and thy lips shall keep," etc. Thou shall have the prompt, wise answer, at thy tongue's end, whenever temptation comes.

True wisdom. — Study hard and search diligently and deeply, and that with unwearied patience and delight. Unpleasant studies tire and seldom prosper. Slight running thoughts accomplish little. If any man think that the Spirit is given to save us the labor of hard and long studies the wise man hath spent so many chapters in calling them to dig, ay, search, labor, wait for wisdom, that if that will not undeceive them I cannot. They may as well say that God's blessing is to save the husbandman the labor of ploughing and sowing, and that the Spirit is given to save men the labor of learning to read the Bible, or to hear it, or to think of it, or to pray to God. Whereas the Spirit is given us to provoke and enable us to study hard, and read, and hear and pray hard, and to prosper us herein. — Baxter.

3, 4. (3) strange woman,[c] "either as being of foreign extraction or as being the wife of another man;" ch. ii. 16. — Pul. Com. drop . . honey comb, drop sweetness, or what seems to be sweetness; distil honey. smoother than oil, and therefore insinuating and persuasive. But her enticing promises are deceitful. (4) her end,[d] i. e. the ultimate consequences brought about by her. When the gloss is removed the real thing is bitter and ruinous. wormwood, De. xxix. 18. "Your tongues are placed in honey and your speech is milk; your hearts are besmeared with gall and sharp vinegar." — Terence. two-edged sword, lit. as a sword of edges.

Results of sin. — The laborer can hope to reap a harvest only of the same nature as the seed he has sown. Pleasures, human consolations, indulgencies of sense, the satisfactions of our own wills, are the seeds of all those miseries, which attain the full expansion of their deadly fruits in hell. But, on the contrary, whilst the indulgence of an evil nature yields these unhappy fruits, a spiritual submission, for Christ's sake, to crosses, to humiliations, self-denials and contradictions, are those seeds which bear their full and blessed fruits of holiness and happiness in the world to come. — M. de St. Marthe.

5, 6. (5) go down, and so lead her votaries down. hell,[e] Sheol, not here Gehenna. Sheol equals Hades, the lower world, the place of departed spirits;

[a] "The connection of wisdom and understanding is frequent; the first denotes the use of wise means for wise ends; the other the exercise of a proper discrimination in their discovery." —Fausset.

[b] "The wise man's lectures are not designed to fill our heads with notions, with matters of nice speculation, or doubtful disputation, but to guide us in the government of ourselves, that we may act prudently, so as becomes us, and so as will be for our true interest."—Matt. Henry.

[c] "The following description has been regarded by ancient expositors as having a double sense. 1. As a portrait of a harlot, especially one of foreign extraction; and 2. As being a representation of the allurements of unsound doctrine and corrupt worship." — Wordsworth.

[d] Ps. xxxvii. 37, 38; lxxiii. 17.

[e] "Take hold on hell, as if to pull it swiftly and sud-but here, significantly, the place of those dying unblessed. (6) Trans. "she walks not in the path of life, her ways fluctuate, she knows not," descriptive of the singularly fatuous conduct of "the strange woman." — Pul. Com.

Realism.— Holiness describes the ways of sin in detail to create a horror and a hatred of them; she describes exactly what is within the tempting doors, — all the glamor, all the softness, all the luxury, all the unhallowed raptures, — and shows distinctly how these chambers are on the incline of death, in order that curiosity, the mother of prurience, may be stifled, and the unwary may be content to remove his way far from the temptress, and to come not nigh the door of her house. But this, it may be said, is the plea urged by a certain school of modern realism in art. Yes, but to counteract vice by depicting it is so hazardous a venture that none can do it successfully who is not fortified in virtue himself, and constantly led, directed, and restrained by the Holy Spirit of God. Just in this point lies the great difference between the realism of the Bible and the realism of the French novel. In the first the didactic purpose is at once declared, and the writer moves with swift precision through the fascinating scene, to lift the curtain and show death beyond; in the last the motive is left doubtful, and the writer moves slowly, observantly, even gloatingly, through the abomination and the filth, without any clear conception of the Divine Eye which watches, or of the Divine Voice which condemns. — Exp. Bib.

7—9. (7) ye children, R. V., "my sons." Comp. my son, vs. 1. This advice concerns all young men, not the one son only. It is invaluable advice for all. (8) Remove, etc., avoid the very approaches of her allurements. "Let thy way in life be far off from her." not nigh, avoid the very scenes of temptation. (9) honour, the bloom or splendor of youth. thy years, i. e. the best, most valuable years. cruel, the cruel one; such the temptress is sure to become in the end. Zöckler suggests: "the husband of the adulteress who will deal mercilessly towards the paramour of his wife."

"Loss of years." — He will "give his years to the cruel, his strength to the stranger." The loss of youthful strength and energy is the loss of years, the youth becomes old before he is a man. The vessel or the mansion that is charred by fire before it is completed presents a strange contrast. The newness and freshness of the walls or the timbers that have escaped make the destruction of the rest more lamentable. The building has been marred just upon the verge of completion, the ship has been spoiled when she was all but ready for the voyage. It is sad to see an old tree blasted by the lightning, but it is a greater misfortune when the tree is in its prime, when it is laden with fruit about to come to perfection. But these are faint shadows of the sad spectacle which is presented by a youth who has become prematurely old by unlawful indulgence before he has reached his prime. He is unfit to battle with the sea of life at the very time when he ought to be setting out on his voyage. He falls short of fulfilling the demands of God and man at the moment when he ought to be bringing forth abundant fruit. Surely such a consciousness must be as bitter waters to the spirit.—Hom. Com.

10, 11. wealth, marg. "strength:" but equivalent to property, possessions, the results of the putting forth of strength. Comp. the prodigal, who "wasted his substance with riotous living." The goods and business of the sensual man are soon "sold up," his earthly prospects are ruined through his bad companions and self-indulgent ways. labours, "painful toil."— Stuart. (11) mourn, etc., R. V., marg. "groom" in an agony of remorse. Eccl. vii. 26. flesh, etc., sensual vices being productive of miserable and shameful diseases.

The doom of the libertine (vs. 10, 11).— I. Waste of wealth. It is spent to garnish the house of sin; is so much taken from home scenes, and legitimate pleasures, and benevolence. II. Waste of health. Note the corruption of licentious nations, as the Turks, etc. III. Waste of tears. Mourning at the last is too late for proving the repentance to be genuine.

Come not nigh her (vs. 8).— He that is farthest from fire is safest from the burning of it; he that is most remote from the way and course of the river is in less danger from the overflowing of it. It argues too much mind to be in the house, for anyone to come near the door of it. It is more safe not to be in danger of perishing, than being in danger not to perish. Chrysostom, speaking of Joseph, saith, "It doth not seem so wonderful to me, that the denly upon the sinner." — Matt. Henry.

"Possession of hell is taken by the wicked before they come into it; the devil giveth them that when he by wickedness possesseth their hearts." — Jermin.

"Strong figs. of misery are these; but not too strong. The horrid memories, the self-remorse, the ruined health and reputation, the blasted hopes,— what misery are these!" — Dav. Thomas.

The licentious never love; and when even levity preponderates, there is seldom any pure and ardent passion.

"'Tis beauty that doth oft make women proud; 'tis virtue that doth make them most admired; 'tis modesty that makes them seem divine!" — Shakespeare.

Ro. vi. 23.

A British nobleman, seeing his nephew leaving a house of ill-fame, said to him, "Do not be ashamed to come out of that place; rather, in future, be ashamed to go in."

"There is not a single thing that hinders the reception and supremacy of the truth within us that will not become a thorn to pierce us."—W. O. Lilley.

"A benighted Chilian came to a Protestant missionary with an offer to sell his soul, saying that he wanted to use the money to set himself up in business. The thought shocks us; but how about the man in this country who selects the kind of business that ensures the barter of his soul?" —C. E. World.

three children in the furnace overcame the fire, as that Joseph, being indeed in a more grievous furnace than that of Babylon, came forth untouched."—Jermin.

12—14. (12) And say, in the language of bitter and hopeless remorse. How, i. e. in what an inexcusable way. (13) not obeyed, warnings that after a while are seen to have been full of wisdom and full of love. (14) all evil,[a] the fact wh. the ruined youth laments is not his hypocrisy; but the extent and boldness of his sins. midst . . assembly, he has not been restrained by the fact that his sin was generally known.

The sinner's retrospect (vss. 12, 13). — I. The sinner's retrospect. Two classes of men. 1. Those who feel some painful consequences of their past conduct; 2. Those who are sensible that they have not answered the great ends of life. II. The sinner's alternative. We must either attend to the voice of instruction in the Gospel, or carry remorse into eternity. Advice: 1. Endeavor to view everything in the light of eternity; 2. Spend each day as you will wish you had spent it in the future. — Simeon.

Hated instruction. — "During my residence in India," says one, "I frequently visited a British soldier, who was under sentence of death, for having, when half intoxicated, wantonly shot a black man. In some of my visits to the jail, a number of other prisoners came and sat down with this man, to listen to a word of exhortation. In one instance I spoke to them particularly on the desirableness of studying the Bible. — 'Have any of you a Bible?' I inquired; they answered, 'No.' 'Have any of you ever possessed a Bible?'— a pause ensued. At last the murderer broke silence, and amidst sobs and tears confessed that he once had a Bible; 'But O,' said he, 'I sold it for drink. It was the companion of my youth. I brought it with me from my native land, and have since sold it for drink! O, If I had listened to my Bible, I should not have been here.'" — Anec. on Old Test.

15—17. (15) own cistern, seek thy satisfaction within thy circles of pure family relationships.[b] running waters, which flow freshly into the cistern.[c] "Only the natural fountain-head can pour forth purling waters, living, fresh, cool for drinking." (16) thy fountains, fig. for thy children. Or more prob. the verse should be made interrogative, and read thus, "Shall thy streams flow abroad as water-brooks in the streets?" i. e. confine thyself to thy wife. (17) only thine own, R. V., "for thyself alone."

Images of wifehood. — The wife is described: 1. As a spring, and as a cistern. Property in a spring or well was highly, even sacredly esteemed. Hence a peculiar force in the comparison. The wife is the husband's peculiar delight and property; the source of pleasures of every kind and degree; the fruitful origin of the family; 2. As "wife of one's youth." One to whom the flower of youth and manhood has been devoted. Her image, in this case, is associated with the sunniest scenes of experience; 3. As a "lovely hind, or charming gazelle." A favorite Oriental comparison, and embodied in the names Tabitha and Dorcas, which denote "gazelle." There are numberless uses of the figure in Arabian and Persian poets. The beautiful liquid eye, delicate head, graceful carriage of the creature, all point the simile. Nothing can surpass, as a husband's description of a true wife, Wordsworth's exquisite stanza beginning —

> "She was a phantom of delight,
> When first she gleam'd upon my sight;
> A creature not too bright or good
> For human nature's daily food;
> For transient sorrows, simple wiles,
> Praise, blame, love, kisses, tears, and smiles."
>
> — Preacher's Com.

18, 19. (18) be blessed, in offspring and in family prosperities attending conjugal fidelity.[d] rejoice, in her society. (19) hind . . roe,[e] the most tender, gentle, and beautiful creatures of the East. ravished, lit. intoxicated, i. e. fully satisfied.

Meaning of wife. — And now let us see whether the word wife has not a lesson. It literally means a weaver. The wife is the person who weaves. Before our great cotton and cloth factories arose, one of the principal employments in every house was the fabrication of clothing: every family made its

---

"When a young man starts out to 'see life,' he may see death instead." — J. E Pounds.

a "The public scandal of the sin is brought in as its last aggravating feature." — Spk Com.

"The sun, powerful as it is, cannot discover what is at the bottom of a muddy pool, so God cannot be revealed to a sinful, muddy, depraved heart." — Thomas Jones.

"The Nazarites, who might drink no wine, were also forbidden to cut grapes whereof wine is made; so we must not only avoid sin in itself, but also the causes and occasions thereof, amongst which is bad company."—Spencer.

b "The wife is appropriately compared with a fountain . . . In antiquity, and esp. in the East, the possession of a spring was regarded as a great and even sacred thing. Thus the mother of Sarah is compared to a well-spring." Is. li. 1. — Umbreit.

c "Do not steal water from others, as the strange woman entices thee to do."—Wordsworth.

"It is folly to believe that one can faithfully love, who does not love faithfulness."—Sir Philip Sidney.

"To get rid of laziness is civilization, to get rid of selfishness is Christianity."

d "Tender, well-regulated domestic affection is the best defense against the vagrant desires of unlawful passions." — Dav. Thomas.

e "In the whole circle of Arab. and Persian poety, the own. The wool was spun into thread by the girls, who were therefore called spinsters; the thread was woven into cloth by their mother, who, accordingly, was called the weaver, or the wife; and another remnant of this old truth we discover in the word heirloom, applied to any old piece of furniture which has come down to us from our ancestors, and which, though it may be a chair or bed, shows that a loom was once a most important article in every house. Thus the word wife means weaver; and as Trench well remarks, "in the word itself is wrapped up a hint of earnest, in-door, stay-at-home occupations, as being fitted for her who bears this name."

20, 21. (20) strange woman, the harlot, who will entice both to sensuality and profligacy. (21) before . . Lord,[a] taking the highest ground of persuasion. Not merely for prudential reasons, but in the "fear of the Lord," we should live chastely, soberly, and godly. The Lord observes and weighs all our actions.

God the all-seeing Judge.—"Before Jehovah's eyes are man's paths, and all his tracks he surveys." I. Cynical proverbs concerning secrecy are condemned, such as "What the eye sees not, the heart does not grieve over," "Never mind so long as you are not found out." II. Nothing is really secret or unknown. We are naked and open to the eyes of Him with whom we have to do. The whisper, the inarticulate thought, will come back one day in thunder.—Johnson.

Indulgence of passions.— As in individuals, so in nations, unbridled indulgence of the passions must produce, and does produce, frivolity, effeminacy, slavery to the appetite of the moment; a brutalized and reckless temper, before which prudence, energy, national feeling, any and every feeling which is not centred in self, perishes utterly. The old French noblesse gave a proof of this law which will last as a warning beacon to the end of time. The Spanish population of America, I am told, gives now a fearful proof of this same terrible penalty. Has not Italy proved it likewise for centuries past? It must be so. For what national life is grounded on, is the development of, the life of the family. And where the root is corrupt the tree must be corrupt likewise. — Kingsley. — Keeping the heart. — Nothing but unceasing watchfulness can keep the heart in harmony with God's heart. It was a stormy, boisterous night. The dark clouds hung over us, and the wind came with tenfold fury. The sea rolled in mountains, and the proud ship seemed but a toy amid those tremendous billows. Far up on the mast, on the look-out, the sailor was heard to cry, "An iceberg on the starboard-bow!" "An iceberg on the larboard-bow!" The deck-officer called to the helmsman, "Port the helm steadily!" and the sailors at the wheel heard and obeyed. The officers were roused, for there was danger on board to three hundred precious souls. The captain spent a sleepless night, pacing the deck or cabin. Gigantic icebergs were coming against the vessel, and eternal vigilance was the price of our safety in that northern sea. And so it is all through human life. How grand is he who keeps his heart! Fortunes may depart, loved ones pass away, but blessed the man or woman who keeps the heart of the Lord Jesus Christ.

22, 23. (22) iniquities, etc., illus. in Saul, Ahithophel, Haman, etc.[b] cords of his sins, the sins constantly indulged become at last enslaving cords, as is seen in the case of the drunkard.[c] (23) without instruction,[d] i. e. without having gained it. Or better, "for lack of correction." The wicked man has had instruction offered, but has refused to receive it. go astray, as if he were drunk. We may trans. "stagger to ruin."

The cords that bind the sinner are spun out of his own sins. — Satan does not need to build any massive prison walls, or to call upon Vulcan to forge fetters for his captives. He has but to leave them to themselves, and their own misdeeds will shut them in, as the rank new growth of a tropical forest encloses the rotting trunks of the older trees, from the seed of which it sprang. 1. This results from the force of habit. All conduct tends to become permanent. The way wears into ruts. Men become entangled in their own past. 2. This is confirmed by wilful disregard of saving influences. If the sinner repented and called for deliverance, he might be saved from the fearful bondage of his sins. But proudly choosing to continue on his own course, he has consented to the tightening of the cords that bind him.— Pul. Com.— Victory over self. — A man that is born a conqueror over his own corruptions and over himself, is greater than ever was the greatest conqueror; and it is antelope and the gazelle are the chosen images of beauty — lithe of limb, graceful in motion, dark and lustrous of eye, fleet and strong, they served with equal fitness for the masculine and feminine types of it."—Spk. Com.

a Job xxxi. 4; Pr. xv. 3; Jer. xvi. 17. "The Evil One often gets into a home, and the neighbors do not find it out for a long time; but just as soon as Jesus Christ comes in, everybody knows it."

A father said to his son, who was at a Sabbath school, and had attended to what he heard there, "Carry this parcel to such a place." "It is Sabbath," replied the other. "Put it in your pocket," replied the father. "God can see in my pocket," answered the child.

"He who hath many friends, hath none."—Aristotle.

b "Habit hath so vast a prevalence over the human mind that there is scarce anything too strange or too strong to be asserted of it The story of the miser, who from long accustoming to cheat others, came at last to cheat himself, and with great delight and triumph picked his own pocket of a guinea to convey to his hoard, is not impossible or improbable."—Fielding.

c "Secrecy is the study and hope of the wicked. A sinner's chief labor is to hide his sin; and his labor is all lost. Sin becomes the instrument of punishing sinners — retribution in the system of nature, set in motion by the act of sin."—Arnot.

d Job iv. 21.

